The Interior, of Chicago, and Westminster, of Philadelphia, will merge in the near future, forming a great weekly to be known as The Continent. It will be published in Chicago, but editorial and business offices will also be maintained in New York and Philadelphia. It will be a Presbyterian periodical. Zion's Herald expresses the hope that it will in reality be a religious journal and not merely so in name, as are some of our most widely circulated and influential publications.

Speaking of the influence of Methodism in the commonwealth where Mormonism has had its seat of power, the Salt Lake Tribune says: "The Methodist Church has been a tower of strength for the right in Utah. It lit one of the earliest torches of liberty, and has been the constant foe of immorality, of lawlessness and of vice from the first." This is the new role for the followers of Wesley. They have been in the vanguard of every crusade for moral reform in the English-speaking world for over a hundred years.

A movement looking to the union of Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists has been under way in South Africa, but it is now announced that the Wesleyans have declared against the amalgamation, giving as a reason that they are indissolubly united with the mother Church in Great Britain. We confess that this straying off of Methodists into these conglomerate folds now forming does not much appeal to us as a thing over which to rejoice. It may be a wise leading of Providence, but that remains to be seen.

Commenting on Bishop Morrison's presidency over the Western Virginia Conference, the Central Methodist Advocate of the 15th inst. said: "Previous to the Conference he visited as many as ten points within its territory, thus making himself acquainted with the field and the men needed for it. In the chair he was business-like and impartial, and the work was dispatched smoothly and rapidly, yet without undue haste. Having held not less than seventy Annual Conferences, he is perfectly at home as a presiding officer and knows when to speak, as well as when others ought to speak. Resolutions highly commending the service rendered by the Bishop were adopted by the body."

"WHO BLUNDERED?"

Dear Dr. Meek: I have read with interest your debate with Mr. E. R. Bingham in the columns of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and I will take this opportunity for saying that I have followed your brief editorial career with very great pleasure and satisfaction. It is very fortunate for our Church that she has so capable and fearless an advocate in the present emergency. "Lay bare thine arm; stretch forth thy rod," that was Stonewall's way. And your utterances on purely religious subjects have impressed me even more, if possible, than the ability you display as a polemic.

I have no wish to enter the controversy between you and Mr. Bingham, but, having written the news article published by the Commercial Appeal which Dr. Mann and Mr. Bingham criticised and you kindly apologized for, I desire space in which to say that it is neither properly subject to the criticism which has been made nor does it demand apology which you were good enough to make.

The Commercial Appeal did not "blunder." It was not "victimized" even, as you charitably suggest. I had ample authority for what I wrote; and I still believe that my informant stated the exact truth as to the pending purpose. But there followed a combination of the Discipline which failed to disclose any specific statute bearing on the case—an offense had been committed with no law to cover it. Bishop Hendrix, it seems, following the advice of Davy Crockett, had looked before he leaped into the arms of open rebellion. But has the matter been finally dismissed? I think not. I do not doubt that you have heard it discussed on many occasions. I have. Have not leading men among us seriously suggested the calling of an extra session of the General Conference for this very purpose? Does any one harbor a doubt that the next session of that body will take a look at the matter? and that it will frame laws to which a Bishop will be as amenable as a circuit rider? It has not been thought necessary to legislate along this line heretofore; it seems. How long will our Bishops be permitted to exercise their present very exceptional powers, surrounded on every side by the spirit of democracy, if they are to be above all law? Mind you, I am a high-churchman, and do not wish to see our Episcopacy shorn of the least particle of its authority.

And why, may I ask, should Bishop Hendrix be shown such consideration as is demanded? Not once in his entire episcopal career has he set the example, so far as I have been able to discover. Was he not severely reprimanded by the Committee on Episcopacy at Asheville at this very point? If I were to enter my full mind on the subject, I should feel obliged to say that he is now reaping a crop of his own sowing—the fruitful harvest of a long career in which he has shown little of the tenderness toward others that is now asked for him. Is it lese-majesty for a newspaper to print current news obtained from respectable sources simply because it is unpalatable to a man who chances to occupy an exalted station and his partisans? The secular newspaper press is, by no means, infallible, and comes very far short of the glory of God, but it is not of small value in keeping churchmen ever from giving free rein to those impulses that find a home in every human heart.

Bishop Hendrix' ability and the value of his past services to the Church are distinctly recognized. I think that no one wishes to detract from them or to withhold any due meed of praise. It is equally clear to those who have kept the run of things that he has made a sad miscalculation of his power as a popular leader. This role he has only recently essayed to play. It was not natural to him, but an effort has been made to thrust him forward as a substitute for the princely Galloway. But alas! the bonnie Prince Charlie's remarkable judgment and matchless democratic spirit could not be bequeathed. They were interred with his bones, and vain have been the attempts to wield his excalibur or to conjure with his great name.

It seems to me that those who have undertaken a defense of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust have assumed quite a large contract. If one should place in parallel columns what the members of that Board and their apologists have said and done at different stages of this proceeding, it would present a surprise to say the least of it. In the light of these, their formal actions should occasion no astonishment. And what can one say of the contrast between Bishop Hendrix' carefully prepared statement of what the minority of the committee on credentials reported to the Board of Trust and what that report actually was, ipsisima verba, as published in the article of Dr. Bradfield?

I reported the last General Conference for the Commercial Appeal, and you are well aware that I received a great deal more information than I reported; for at your urgent request I suppressed much that I might have published, and I would have done so but for you. The Commercial Appeal did not go to the expense of sending me to Asheville to send them a record of the formal votes of the General Conference—they could have secured all such matters from the Associated Press. I was sent there to interpret the news as it emerged from every source, so that its readers could know what was going on from day to day. The formal actions of such a body are the least part of its news.

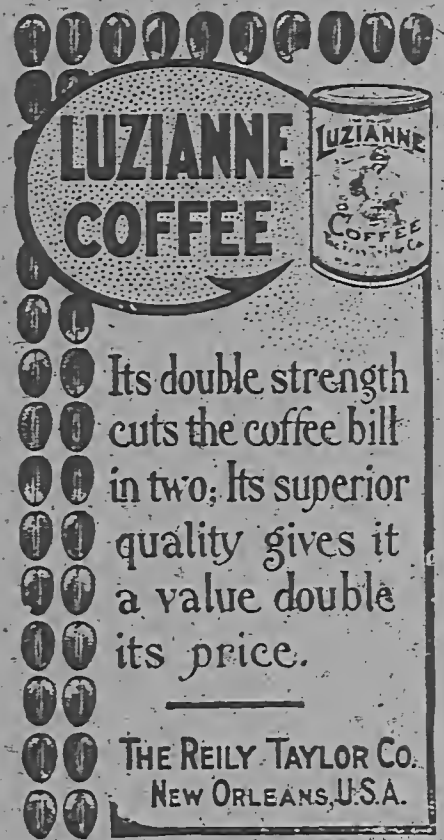

And I was charged, by some with making partisan reports. For that I care nothing, but it sounds not a little amusing in the light of subsequent events. I shall say nothing of the compliments I have received from preachers and laymen on my report. If I had published that Hoss was a highwayman and Hendrix a saint, that "Hoss had a hot-box" and Hendrix a halo, that DuBose was a Matt Quay and Kirkland the second incarnation, I suppose that my critics would have presented me with a loving cup.

I am not in the least disposed to conceal the fact that I am a Hoss man, out and out. If Methodism has produced a greater or a better man, he has escaped my notice. And, conceding the ability of the present administration of Vanderbilt University, and admitting its greatness as an institution of learning, I shall be greatly obliged if some one will point out to me one of its output that may be compared with A. W. Wilson, W. A. Candler, E. E. Hoss, Collins Denny, W. B. Murrah, or many others that I might without trouble mention, most of them the product of "little Methodist Colleges" and the grace of God.

During the past eight years it has been my pleasure to handle the news of our Church through the columns of the Commercial Appeal, and I have found the preachers and laymen in its territory to be a goodly company. I leave them with regret, but the wheel of fortune in its revolution has deposited me in Montgomery, Ala., where I am associated with the Montgomery Advertiser, and I will be most happy to be allowed to serve both them and you in my new relation whenever it is possible for me to do so.

The cotton industry is increasing in Russia. In 1909 the yield was 398,000,000 pounds, and the crop of this year will probably be still larger. That country also manufactures a considerable amount of the fleecy staple.

Socialism is said to be steadily growing in Germany. Their organ, Vorwaerts, reports that the party now has a registered membership of 720,000, an increase of 13 per cent during the past year. Within the past twelve months they have also gained seven seats in the Reichstag.

In August, 1909, the amount of corn exported from New Orleans was 68,544 bushels, valued at $56,205. During the same month this year the amount was 933,449 bushels, with a valuation of $645,358. This striking increase is said to be in part due to the growth of diversified agriculture among the farmers of the South.

The United States and England are leading in a movement to hold a conference with a view to restricting the manufacture of, and trade in, opium in the Orient as far as is possible. This is a most commendable undertaking, and it is to be hoped that it will promptly take definite shape. No date has yet been fixed for the gathering.

The University of Mexico was formally dedicated last week, President Diaz presiding over the opening exercises. Representatives of the following American institutions of learning were present: Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Columbia, Johns-Hopkins, Syracuse University, and the State Universities of Texas, California, and Pennsylvania. The ceremonies are said to have been of unusual interest.

The last Legislature of Mississippi appropriated for educational purposes $4,046,357.87. It appropriated for all other purposes $3,721,457.80. Thus it will be seen that 53.4 per cent of all the public appropriations made was to promote the cause of education. And the Magnolia State has every reason to be proud of her institutions of learning. They easily rank with the best to be found in the South.

Mr. David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, has declared himself in favor of an Anglo-American alliance. Speaking of the influence of such a fraternal union between the two great English-speaking nations, Mr. George said: "It would be an insurance corporation against international anarchy, international brigandage, and international lawlessness in any part of the world."

A public meeting was recently held in Monrovia, Liberia, in which resolutions were adopted thanking the United States for the valuable assistance rendered during the late crisis through which that Republic is now said to have successfully passed. According to report, the declaration is made that but for the aid of our Government the little country could not have escaped dismemberment by the powers of Europe.

The cholera is reported to be abating in infectiousness and fatality both in Russia and Italy. In the former country, in particular, the ravages of the disease have been fearful. The reports now in possession of the sanitary bureau show 182,327 cases, with 83,613 deaths. It is estimated that full and accurate figures would prove that not less than 100,000 have fallen victims to the plague. As a destroyer of human life, invisible germs are worse than the serried ranks of war.

The University of Cambridge has taken over the control and copyright of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and will publish a new and complete edition about the end of the present year. This Eleventh Edition, which has been eight years in preparation, entirely supersedes preceding editions, and is a wholly fresh and original survey of all existing knowledge in every field of human thought, research and achievement. It will be comprised in 28 quarto volumes, of which the last will be devoted to a full and comprehensive index.

Gold is now the standard money of nearly all of the civilized nations of the earth, but as a circulating medium it is not as popular as either silver or paper. The little gold dollar, once quite familiar, is now almost never seen, and it is said that the other gold coins are also playing a dwindling part in our expanding commerce. Indeed, it is stated that the Treasury Department has recommended that the coinage of gold be stopped, and that the metal be made into bars of standard fineness against which paper certificates may be issued. Two reasons are given for not desiring to continue the gold coins in circulation: one is that being soft they quickly become worn and depreciated in value, and the other is that in the settlement of trade balances many of them go abroad and are melted into bars, which are generally preferred by other nations. Thus, in our dealings with foreign powers converting the bullion into money is wholly a work of supererogation.

President Taft will recommend to Congress in his December message the speedy and adequate fortification of the Panama Canal. He will suggest an appropriation of $2,000,000 with which to begin this work. We think this conclusion of our Chief Executive is eminently wise. We do not have going to war with any nation in it can be possibly avoided, but we do not think that the advocacy of peace should go so far as to insist that our country shall be left in a defenseless condition. The best safeguard against trouble with other powers is a manifest readiness to meet any situation which may arise.

The Gresham High School of Marion, Ga., declined to allow Miss May Ling Soong, a young Chinese girl, to matriculate as a student a few days since. She had gone there to attend the Wesleyan Female College, at which institution her sister graduated last June, but was found deficient in some studies, and it was suggested that she prepare herself for a college course in the High School, which refused to receive her as a pupil. The school authorities claimed that under the law they were powerless to enroll any student not belonging to the Caucasian race. It strikes us that this is carrying race prejudice rather too far.

Mr. Thomas Day, of this city, who died on September 18, in his will made many generous bequests to charity, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $100,000. He gave to New Orleans $1,500 to be expended as follows: $1,500 for improvements in Audubon Park; $1,500 for the lower City Park; $1,500 for the Fisk Free Library. He also set apart $30,000 for the establishment upon a site to be provided by the municipality of a normal school to be named for him. Nearly every benevolent institution in the city was remembered in gifts varying from $500 to $2,000. Mr. Day was born in Virginia, but came to New Orleans when a boy. He rapidly succeeded in business and became widely known as a cotton merchant. He belonged to the Army of Northern Virginia and made a gallant soldier. His age was seventy-one, and he had been in failing health for several months.

The commonplace things are God's best gifts, but we are in the habit of overlooking their true value. The hen running about the farmyard seems quite an insignificant creature, but in reality she is one of the nation's most important assets. The poultry products marketed in the United States during the year 1909 are reported to have aggregated $600,000,000, and when to this is added the estimated value of such products consumed by the producers themselves, the total poultry output of the country is computed to have been worth $2,160,000,000. The total lumber sales in the United States last year footed up $500,000,000; the value of our entire grain crop was $37,000,000; that of the cotton crop $400,000,000, and of the swine industry about half a billion dollars. According to these figures, which we have taken from the Nashville Tennessean, the chicken is king. So long as they keep up this record, the hen has a right to cackle and the rooster to crow.

THE CANADIAN GENERAL CONFERENCE.

By H. M. DuBose, D.D.

The quadrennial session of the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada just concluded in the city of Victoria, B. C., was a notable event both in the social and religious life of the Dominion. The fact that conditions in Western Canada made such a gathering within its limits possible is itself significant. But it is impossible for an American who has not been over the ground to understand the magical growth during the past few years of the three westernmost Canadian provinces, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. Vancouver, at the western end of the Frozen Valley, and now one of the great cities of the Continent, was not on the map thirty years ago, its site being occupied by a fishers' village. Victoria, an older town, was until recently chiefly a place of residence, attracting nearly altogether Scottish and English families by reason of its most enjoyable climate, the summers being long and delightfully cool, and the Japanese Ocean current, sweeping both shores of Vancouver Island upon which it is situated, abating what would otherwise be the rigors of a Northern winter, and making that season also agreeable. Through the need and stimulating conditions produced by a growing commerce and an unprecedented immigration, Victoria is becoming itself a center of enterprise and life. It is Canada's outer port on the sea voyage to Japan and the farther Orient. Here are the public buildings of the Province of British Columbia, the most important of which is the Parliament House, which is truly a work of architectural perfection. Indeed, I recall having seen on the Continent but two public buildings which appear to me to embody so perfectly the lines and perfections of classic architecture. These are the Congressional Library at Washington and the State Capitol of Mississippi, the latter of which seems to me to be the perfect realization of an ideal in stone. To these I have been inclined to add the courthouse and post office building at Nashville, which has been for years the object of first and admiration to the intelligent public.

In the Victoria Memorial Church, a fine stone structure, much in appearance like our University Church in Georgetown, Tex., the General Conference was convened on Aug. 31, and continued in session for fifteen days.

I reached the beautiful island coasted on Aug. 29, as the principal messenger from the Methodist Church of the South, was invited to fill the Metropolitan pulpit on the following Sabbath. On Wednesday, the 21st, at the evening hour, the brethren accorded to my formal fraternal greetings in most cordial and brotherly hearing. The Canadian church had a great admiration for our Church and expressed their desire to make its message felt at home, in which effort they admirably succeeded.

Religiously, the recently adjourned Conference was chiefly notable through its favorable and almost unanimous action in recognizing and holding for possible future adoption a plan of union with the Presbyterian and Congregational bodies of the Dominion. This union has not been consummated, as appears to be understood in some quarters, "as is only in process." It may for come in this generation; indeed, it is my judgment that it hardly will. But the action shows the drift of catholic sentiment in that growing and important, English-speaking country.

Other matters of interest coming before the Conference were the so-called "theological question"—that is, an issue concerning the authority of the Church over the doctrinal views of professors and teachers in its theological schools; the amendment question, the pastoral time limit, and the reinforcement of the General Superintendency. In the matter of theology the Conference showed itself tolerant but orthodox.

The amendment question was stripped of particular rules and pursued much the same basis as with us. The pastoral term limit was, by a decisive majority, left unchanged. Two General Superintendents were elected, one for a term of eight years and one for a term of four years. The venerable Dr. Albert Carman was elected, or rather re-elected, to fill the first and longer term; his associate in the four-year term being Dr. S. D. Chown, the great reform leader of the Dominion.

The Canadians in their General Conference work are impressive, alert, and amazingly expeditious. The whole Methodist world will watch the union movement with interest, and naturally with no little concern. If one is tempted to doubt the wisdom of the policy upon which the Canadian Methodists are proceeding, he can neither discount nor question the lofty catholic purpose which has prompted the laying down by them of a basis of Christian union.—Midland Methodist.

MISSISSIPPI A. AND M. COLLEGE.

The Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College began its thirtieth annual session Wednesday, Sept. 21st, under the most splendid and encouraging omens of success. With a full corps of teachers, among whom were some of the South's most eminent men in their particular line of profession, and in the presence of 742 matriculated students from all parts of the State and the Union, together with a large number of visitors from town and other parts of the State, Mr. C. P. J. Mooney, editor of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, delivered a most helpful and inspiring address, the keynote of which was the necessity of laying deep and broad the right kind of foundation in order to the development of enduring character. And it was most inspiring, Mr. Editor, to note as coming from a layman the clear and unmistakable call of faith in God and in the eternal verities of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as essential to the building of any enduring character. With the master strokes of one who knows, the speaker demolished the straw defense of the so-called higher critic and with words that will linger long in the minds of his hearers, he called all back to the beaten and tried paths of the fathers and to the foundation upon which they have built so well. With the exception of that part of his address in which he spoke of the need of skilled agriculturists and mechanics in this day of new things, the speaker's address was very much like an old-time Methodist camp meeting sermon, where our worthy fathers in the ministry called the people to repentance and faith as the only and acceptable way of approach to God in Christ Jesus.

Since the opening day, the attendance has reached 900, and still they come. W. E. M. BROGAN.

AFFAIRS AT GRENADA COLLEGE.

Judged by any standard, Grenada College has had a great opening. The faculty were all in place on the opening day and have taken up their work with an enthusiasm that is bound to succeed. I am proud of the cultivated Christian women who are my associates here. The trustees were represented by their honored president and several members, and pledged the college all possible support. The people of Grenada are heartily loyal, and filled the chapel at the opening exercises.

I wish every Methodist in North Mississippi could look in on our student body. They are the finest girls in the State, which is to say the finest in the world. A few of the former students have been detained by illness, but have asked that their rooms be held. When those thus registered arrive, we shall be full to our limit, the attendance being already in excess of the enrollment of last year.

Allow me to thank the Advocate and all the friends who have made this success possible. A greater Grenada College is a dream that must find realization in the near future. We must have buildings and equipment for the larger patronage which is sure to be ours. The administration of my predecessor, Mr. Clifton, was especially notable for the raise in the curriculum. We dare not make it higher till our public school standards are raised, as we are already beyond all but the very best trained students. What we need is to provide room for the two hundred girls who will knock for admission here inside of two years from to-day.

With loving greetings to our patrons and friends, Cordially, J. R. COUNTESS, President.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE OPENING.

The Port Gibson Female College opened its 71st session Friday morning, Sept. 16th, at 11 o'clock with impressive exercises. The songs were sung by the college choir, led by Miss Bell, the vocal teacher.

The opening address was delivered by the Rev. R. L. Benn, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this place. He spoke to the girls in a most scholarly manner and in a happy vein; he enjoined upon them the conservation of time, saying that it is as essential as the cultivation of other talents.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, presiding elder of the Vicksburg District and president of the board of trustees, gave an amusing as well as a very instructive address. Both of the speakers dwelt with emphasis upon the meaning and import of the word economy.

Mr. Hawkins, president of the college, supplemented these addresses with timely words of counsel.

The opening was quite auspicious, both because of the beautiful weather and the large number of new students.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Miss Florine Levy, of the class of 1910, addressed the students in the chapel, giving in the most charming manner a description of her recent tour through Europe. Brilliantly she narrated her visit to London, Paris, Munich and Oberammergau. While listening to her glowing words, you felt almost as if you stood in Westminster Abbey among the historic dead of all the ages; as if you sailed by the Rhine beholding the castled, vine-clad borders; at Versailles, you saw, in fancy, the beautiful, ill-fated Marie Antoinette; and at the Passion Play you were awed by the mystery of Christ's death, crucifixion and ascension.

The opening sermon was delivered Sunday morning, Sept. 19th, by Rev. J. L. Neill, in the Methodist Church to the largest congregation that has assembled in Port Gibson in a long time, the students of the two schools, Port Gibson Female College and Chamberlain-Hunt Academy, in unusually large numbers, and the usual attendance from town taxing the splendid auditorium of the Church to its utmost.

The sermon on "I am debtor" was strong and helpful, and thoroughly enjoyed. In the afternoon, Revs. J. L. Neill and M. M. Black assisted the students in religious service in the college chapel; and at night Rev. R. L. Benn preached a good sermon to the student bodies at the Presbyterian Church.

The attendance of boarding and local students is much larger than last session, and a competent faculty of fifteen teachers and officers is busy organizing and starting off the work of the session.

TRAINING SCHOOL OPENS WELL.

The Methodist Training School for Christian Workers, located in Nashville, Tenn., has just opened with most promising prospects. The students are anticipating a profitable and pleasing session of study, investigation and practical work in the several departments.

The returning students and the large number of new students were very much gratified on finding so many improvements in school buildings and furnishings which will greatly facilitate the work to be accomplished. A large, airy, well lighted library with commodious shelves, is a continual delight, and we also have a conveniently furnished kitchen and enlarged dining hall, both of which were greatly needed. A new classroom has been provided, which is contributing to the convenience and comfort of all.

The student body has been increased by many new students from all over our Southland who, responding to the call for trained workers, have entered earnestly upon their studies in preparing for the great fields of work that lie out before them.

The class in kindergarten teacher-training is much larger than last year, and the work is progressing splendidly under the efficient instruction of Miss Kate Hackney, the director of this department. One of the most helpful courses is that of Domestic Science, which affords both theory and practice. Mrs. T. E. Julian has charge of this department.

Dr. Hammond, formerly of the Educational Board of the Church, has been elected teacher of Theology and Church History and is a great addition to the school.

The department of Biblical Literature, under Dr. Corwin, and the department of Sociology, under Prof. A. M. Trawick, Jr., have lost none of their interest, and from these two sources great inspiration is being derived for the work to be done.

There is everywhere felt the spirit of harmony, co-operation and a united purpose to labor for the establishment of the kingdom of God. Some are preparing for trained nurses, some for Bible teachers, others for deaconesses; for city missionaries, foreign missionaries, kindergarten teachers at home and abroad.

The field is larger, the call for trained workers, filled with the Spirit of God, is great and urgent. "Pray ye that the Lord of the harvest may send forth more laborers into his vineyard that the Gospel of Jesus Christ may be made known to all the world."

THE VETERANS' MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

Some years ago a Ministerial Association was organized in Missouri, embracing the three Conferences in that State. This was accomplished mainly through the efforts of Rev. W. S. Woodward, now of Smydor, Okla. All superannuates and supernumeraries, and those who have been forty years or more in the traveling connection may be members. This Association has been pleasant and profitable, many lines of work being found available. The Association meets at the different Conferences by rote.

We propose such an organization for the two Conferences in Mississippi; the first to be held at 3 o'clock p. m. on the first day of the North Mississippi Conference at Sardis. Besides organizing and sketching some plan of work, we may have a sermon by one of the veterans. We have sent cards to the older brethren of the two Conferences, and would be glad to hear from the brethren, and receive suggestions in regard to this movement.

The last and greatest wonder of the gospel is, that the great Model does not leave us to copy Him at a distance, but actually enters our souls and remodels us. And faith is only the closing of the soul with Christ, by which this living Redeemer, with His self-sacrificing and yet victorious spirit, becomes ours.—Augustus H. Strong.

SOME WORDS TO LOUISIANA WORKERS.

My Dear Friends: As the seasons come and go we realize how swiftly the moments are flying. Vacation time is over, and the fall comes as a challenge summoning us back to home and work. To me, this summer sojourn in Mount Vernon has become very pleasant and restful; not only in the companionship of my own loved ones, but in the many congenial friendships formed here—the hearty welcome to its Christian fellowship in the churches.

Chester Hill Church is fortunate in having for its pastor Dr. H. H. Beatty's, than whom there is no more scholarly, consecrated Christian gentleman, nor one more beloved by his people. It was my good fortune two weeks ago to hear Dr. B. M. Tingle, pastor of the Methodist Church in Rome, Italy, and also president of the American Methodist College there. His sermon on "Star-Nests" selected from a verse in Obadiah: "Set thy nest among the stars," was unique and forcible. His prediction of a "star government" among the nations, binding them together in common brotherhood as the stars are held together in the heavens, was very suggestive. I recalled the recent great Missionary Conference in Edinburgh, where, it is said, "side by side sat the dark native of India, the brown inhabitant of China and Japan, the coal-black delegate from Africa, and the white men and women from Europe and America," working in a unity, based not on creed, but on love and loyalty to the living Lord.

There is much to please the eye and interest the lover of history and romance in and around Mount Vernon. A short ride on the cars, and we are in the country of Washington Irving, where not long since it was my good fortune to be, on a bright day, with a dear young friend, Miss Watson, of this city. Of course, we sought out, first, the haunts made so familiar by his pen—the bridge of the Headless Horseman, the quaint old Philips Manor House, where, it is said, the Dutch maiden, Katrina Van Tassel, lived at the time of the memorable supper; the old church and the cemetery near by, in which the great author sleeps his last sleep, his grave being marked by a plain white stone; and last, but not least, a drive out to "Sunnyside," Irving's old home, on the sloping banks of the Hudson River. There is always a charm belonging to the houses where famous people have lived, and we noted with pleasure the surroundings here. The genial personality of the writer, expressed in the bright, wholesome thoughts embodied in his books, seemed in unison with the place—the old vine-covered houses, the smooth, grassy lawn, and sparkling river.

A further pleasure awaited us, as we drove through the beautiful grounds around the home of Helen Gould. There are many handsome homes in Irvington, but none more attractive to strangers than this one—not only because of its artistic beauty, but because of its owner, whose generous good-will and broad philanthropy have helped to bring hope into so many hard lives. As we noted the beds of blooming flowers, the trees and shrubs, and winding walks, we could not but think of the kind heart that prompted the bringing of little children and their hard-working mothers from New York's teeming East Side to spend a while every summer in such a place as this, in God's out-of-doors, in the blessed sunshine.

Not far from the public road, in Tarrytown, stands a monument to the unfortunate Andre, and near by the one erected to his captors—these and the Battle Monument in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery all recall the stirring days of the Revolution, when "liberty or death" was the watchword.

I would like to tell you of many other interesting places, especially of a visit to the old mansion in Van Courtlandt Park, where Washington once had his headquarters, and which is filled with relics of the old regime, but time and space are limited.

In closing, let me remind you that only five and a half months of our fiscal year remain in which to carry forward the year's work. Remember the special effort to gain new members this quarter, and work and pray for the coming Week of Prayer, Oct. 3-9. Let us earnestly pray that this year may be the best we have spent together as workers in the Master's vineyard, and that it may be a year crowned with the richest blessings of God to all of us!

Yours, with love,

MRS. E. R. KENNEDY.

By Mildred Tate Wells.

If you have anything to do
That will help you on the way
To build true a character,
Get about it while you may,
Now—to-day.

Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.
Wise are they whose every niche
Of to-day is filled.
If you have anything to say
That will make the sunshine bright
Thro' the shadows for another,
Say it, for soon comes the night,
Use the light.

As we walk along the way
Of the Present—which is ours,
We can make the lives around us
Blossom out with flowers.
If you have kind deeds to do,
Do them while to-day is new.
If you leave them for to-morrow
Others may lose what's their due,
So may you.

When another day is given
Its work will be given, too.
If the now is left completed
There'll be plenty still to do.
Give a glad hand to your neighbor,
Smiles to all who pass your way,
Love and cheer to the discouraged,
Freely give while 'tis to-day.
Don't delay.

Build from glory on to glory,
With blocks filled by the Most High.
Then life structures, when all finished,
Will shine in the Bye and Bye.

A HEROINE OF THE TROLLEY

By Helen A. Hawley.

"Let Bobby go with me—please mother," Harriet pleaded. "It's such a pleasant day; it'll be just lovely on the trolley. Aunt Mary says I never bring Bobby now—she said that the last time I was out there."

"You'll take good care of him?" Mrs. Anderson asked, as mothers do, though she knew her daughter was trustworthy.

"Bobby wants to go," the younger heir of the house announced.

"Of course, he does," Mrs. Anderson smiled. "when didn't a small boy want to go? But will Bobby be a good boy and mind sister?"

"Yes, mamma, I will," Bobby promised.

Every Saturday, if the weather was fine, it was a settled thing that Harriet should go out to her aunt's who lived five miles in the country, and on very rare occasions she took the little four-year-old brother with her. Harriet would soon be ten, and she was really very motherly, as a girl is apt to be who has a brother somewhat younger than herself. Every morning she washed his face, and brushed his hair, and buttoned his clothing. "Mother's Helper," Mrs. Anderson called her.

It was one of those charming days when the open trolley car was a delight, and the children took their seats in high spirits. After a few minutes of threading the intricate city tracks, they were speeding along through the wide country. "What a little, little while it took to go over the five miles!" Harriet was always tempted to wish they were ten. Then what a good time they had at Aunt Mary's, with the barn to visit, the new bossy calf to stroke, and the wee chickens to count. Surely nobody in all the world made such delicious cookies as Aunt Mary did.

At the end of the day Aunt Mary walked down the slope with them, at the foot of which ran the trolley line, and let Bobby himself signal the motorman.

Going home, Bobby insisted on taking an outer seat of the open car. He was a self-willed little lad, and rather than make a scene, Harriet consented.

"Hold on tight," she whispered. Then she put her arm around him for protection, but that didn't accord with Master Bobby's idea of manliness, and he squirmed out of it. So they whirled on and on, and were once more within the city limits, where tracks crossed and became tangled in what seemed confusion to the uninstructed.

Their car stopped to take on a passenger; then it started with a jerk, and Bobby, who had been so busy looking that he forgot to hold fast, tumbled off, rolling onto the next track.

And coming down the next track, all at once, was another car.

It hardly seemed that Harriet took time to realize what had happened, for with a flying leap she went after her brother, she caught his coat, she drew him to the narrow space between the tracks, and threw herself down full length on top of him, covering him with her own body, and hugging her skirts close to her side, as the threatening car passed over the spot where Bobby had lighted, and came to a standstill. Their own car stopped also.

Women turned their faces away, fearing what they might see. Men hurried off to help, but to the joyful surprise of all, the girl and the boy rose to their feet, unharmed, except that Bobby was crying from fright, and the palm of a few scratches of gravel on his hands.

"What presence of mind in a child!" How could you do it?" "How came you to think of it?" Such words as these were showered on Harriet, as after placing Bobby in a safe seat, she sat down again, somewhat pale, but quite composed.

"The minute I saw him fall," she said quietly, "I asked our Father to help me save him. And you know," she looked up smiling, "it doesn't take a second to think a prayer when you're in a real hurry, and it doesn't take a second for our Father to do it, because he can hear our thoughts."

"No," in reply to another question, "I wasn't a bit afraid—there wasn't time. Now it's over, I'm just a little afraid—not much, though. Yes, I knew our Father'd help. My mother says that's what fathers are for, and of course, our Father can do more than any other can."

"This is our crossing," Harriet grasped Bobby's hand; the boy was subdued and submissive enough now. So, without sprang to help them off safely, and more than one stalwart man wiped his eyes and went on his way, feeling that he should never forget the little girl's confident assertion, "He can hear our thoughts," and more than one questioned if he could say it as gladly as did the small heroine of the trolley, because to be glad our Heavenly Father can hear our thoughts, depends on what kind of thoughts they are.—Helen A. Hawley, in The Young Christian Soldier.

A WORD CONCERNING OUR CHURCH EXTENSION WORK.

The recent General Conference made a few changes in the law and duties of the Conference Church Extension Boards. To some of these I deem it proper to call the attention of all those who desire help from this Board.

Quite a number of pastors have written to me for application blanks. I have tried to respond to every call. If any one has failed to receive one in answer to his request, please write again.

You will note on the application that under question eleven provision is made for a donation and a loan, both which has not been the case in applications to the Conference Board heretofore. In anticipation of this action by the General Conference, our Mississippi Conference Board decided at the last annual meeting to set apart 25 per cent of the collections for 1910, as a loan fund. See the minutes of the Annual Conference, page 55.

That means that we will have approximately $1,500 for donations and $500 for loans this coming December. Now, if you are in a growing community and need temporary assistance, apply for a loan rather than a donation, for if we can succeed in building up a large Conference Loan Fund it will mean much to the church building work in the years to come.

Now, a word concerning parsonage building. The General Conference transferred this work from the Woman's Home Mission Society to the Church Extension Board. An assessment of fifty thousand dollars was placed upon the church to make care of that work, which is one-fifth of the total amount placed upon the Church for church and parsonage building. That action will raise our assessment from $5,000 for this year, to $7,500 for next year. And it will be December, 1911, before we will have an money to appropriate for parsonages. Now this additional assessment is supposed to care for the parsonage work as well as it was cared for by the Woman's Home Mission Society; but in the case of the Mississippi Conference it will not do it. Unless we pay a much larger per cent of the assessment than we of late years we will not be able to care for the parsonage work. The Mississippi Conference approved a plan to raise $1,000 for parsonage building last year, and he failed in the recent past. The Woman's Home Mission Society of this Conference has been doing a noble work in the past, but it is not possible for them to do it all, which is why we have a special fund for parsonage building.

Let us all join in a prayer for the pastors to be able to do their work, and for the church to be able to do its work. Let us all join in a prayer for the church to be able to do its work, and for the church to be able to do its work.

L. E. ALFORD,
Secretary, Church Extension Board, Miss. Conf.

There is only one way to get rich, and that is to be rich in the spirit of the world. What is it that makes a man rich? It is not money, but it is not success, or power, or anything else. It is the love of God, and the love of his children, and the love of the world, which you receive your portion. Then the world may turn its face from you, but nothing will deprive you of peace.—Fenton.

WORKING FOR THE MASTER.

The great commission, though delivered primarily to the eleven apostles, was designed to have application to all Christians. The Master's plan is that every disciple shall be a propagandist; that all who have experienced the blessing of salvation shall aid in speeding the gospel on its widening way, and giving to others the same glorious hope and joy. The three thousand souls converted on the day of Pentecost were probably not brought into the kingdom as a result of Peter's memorable sermon alone, but by the united prayers and efforts of the one hundred and twenty who were "of one accord." In more than one parable the Master strongly impressed the great importance of activity and fidelity in service. In his remarkably graphic picture of the judgment day, with the king sitting upon the throne of his glory, with the holy angels grouped around him, and before him the convoked nations of the earth, he represents "not having done" the work appointed for his followers as being ample justification for sending those on his left hand "away into everlasting punishment." Paul also preached with tremendous earnestness the doctrine of abounding in good works. Throughout his epistles the summons to aggressive toil in behalf of the cause of Christ rings like a clarion call. He exhorted Timothy "to stir up the gift" that was in him, and to the Galatians he wrote, "Let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. As we therefore have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." The glory of primitive Christianity lay in the fact that the whole Church was aflame with passionate earnestness and that the thrilling story of redeeming love was upon every lip. This was the secret of its marvelous power and is the explanation of its unparalleled march of conquest.

So to-day one of the supreme needs of the various religious denominations is for more of their membership to enlist in the stupendous task of carrying forward the standard of the Cross. The lifters in our congregations are few; the leaners are many. Larger concert of effort and a more intense and abiding enthusiasm are what we must have, if we are to meet successfully the problems of our time and win worthy triumphs for our Lord. Surely the Christian has enough to incite him to diligence and heroic effort. Some of the reasons why he should strenuously bestir himself are as follows:

1. Satan works. His activity is world-wide and unceasing. He carries his warfare into every human soul. The effects of his blighting influence are perceptible wherever man has gone. The Church needs to be up and doing as the generations come, because almost ere we are aware he has weakened the faith, poisoned the mind, and corrupted the heart of youth. While the disciples sleep, the enemy sows the tares and frightful is the harvest that follows. If the world is ever saved, it must be largely saved in childhood. Every day that one persists in sin the less susceptible is he to the gospel call; hence, the necessity of working with the utmost possible dispatch to rescue the lost everywhere.

2. Death works. As Horace tells us, he knocks with impartial foot at the palace of the rich and the cottage of the poor. He claims all times and places for his own. He not only revels in the field of battle and glories in the fury of the earthquake, but he is everywhere. He floats in the atmosphere, rides upon the wave, visits the haunts of trade, and frequents the place of festivity. He comes in the bright hours of the morning, at the sultry noontide, in the mellow glow of eve, and in the stillness and darkness of the night. He comes in the springtime when the flowers open in beauty to greet the returning sun, in the dreamy summer, in the frosty autumn, and in the gloomy, dismal winter. And he makes no distinctions with reference to age, as Longfellow has said:

There is a reaper whose name is death,
And with his sickle keen.
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between.

Each passing day heralds many into their eternal home—into the abode of the blest or the realm of "outer darkness." Life is probation—opportunity—and we should not waste a single precious moment. Those whom we might save to-day, may be gone hence to-morrow, or our own eyes may be closed in the dreamless sleep. Weighty, indeed, are the words of the wise man: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest."

3. The certainty of reward. None who toil for Christ ever toil in vain. The recompense is absolutely certain. Much of it comes in the present life. Earth's highest attainable happiness is the joy of Christian service. The conscience approves; the heart glows with the sweet realization of the divine presence, and victorious love casts out all anxious fears and forebodings. Activity brings spiritual health and promotes growth toward Christian perfection. It lifts one toward the heights, where he can see more of God, and the light from above falls with increasing splendor about his feet. And then there will come the triumph of the last great day, when, in the presence of that innumerable host that no man can number, the Master will speak approving words and the loyal disciple, who wrought in fidelity, will be given the lustrous crown of the faithful and enter into the joy of his Lord.

A MILITANT CHRISTIANITY NEEDED.

There is an idea abroad that he is most religious who is most complacent and tolerant in dealing with wrong-doing. So widespread is this notion, that no matter what evil is done, no matter what outrages are perpetrated, if one is to be accounted spiritual after the present-day conception, he must look calmly on and utter no word of protest. Scarcely any view could be more erroneous than this. The noblest type of Christianity is not that which perpetually flies the flag of truce. The spirit of compromise is the great weakness of the Church to-day. The ambition to please rather than to save is the unmaking of many a minister. The hope of humanity lies not in a negative, but in a positive, aggressive righteousness. The greatest thing about Theodore Roosevelt is not so much in the views which he holds (they are shared by others), as in the fact that he fights successfully to put them into operation. The capacity to feel moral indignation when right is trampled under foot is an attestation of noble character. As Dr. B. M. Palmer has said, the more robust and sinewy one's moral nature is, the more these generous resentments against evil will flame forth. Weak, indeed, is he in the finer, richer elements of manhood who can see the helpless crushed, or injustice done, and lift no arm to strike in their defense.

The following interesting passage from the pen of Rev. S. A. Nettles, the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, bears pertinently on this point:

"But true love works through gentleness, may be the retort. Was our Savior lacking in love for the divine and the best human in the Scribes and Pharisees while pouring out upon them the most scathing and terrible denunciation known to human experience? Had he no love for Peter when he denounced as a snare of Satan that one's well meant though fearfully mistaken protest? Is severe punishment of the child evidence of the absence of the parent's love? Is the skilled surgeon's zeal for life-saving more sluggish because with firmness and dispatch he presses the knife home to the most vital organs of his patient? Can there be the truest and fullest vision of the prophet without at the same time the keenest realization of wrong and sin, and without an impelling call to denounce them as they are? The age of materialism in Israel called for the spirit and method of the Hebrew prophet, as much for the fearless and frank delineator and denouncer of evil as for preacher of righteousness—each and both."

"We have been impelled to these reflections by the following stanzas from a recent poem by Charles M. Sheldon, on 'God's Angry Men':"

God has His use for angry men,
Like him, who in the cruel Pharaoh's land,
Slew the Egyptian, in a rage, and then Buried his body in the desert sand.

God give us angry men in every age,
Men with indignant souls at sight of wrong,
Men whose whole being glows with righteous rage,
Men who are strong for those who need the strong.

And pity those soft youth this nation rears,
Who never strike a blow for human need!
Those puny souls that live behind their fears,
And grow more puny, fed on lust and greed.

A SUNDAY IN FRANKLIN.

It was our great pleasure to spend last Sunday in Franklin, La., where the Rev. C. C. Weir is pastor. When we arrived on Saturday afternoon the heavy clouds hung low and the rain was descending in torrents. There was little promise of the bright and beautiful Sabbath which followed. A fair congregation was present at the 11 o'clock service, and a considerably larger one at the evening hour. Good attention was given us as we tried to lay out the Word and say something that would help to establish the Master's Kingdom. We were not a little impressed with Brother Weir's interesting flock. The house of worship is a plank structure, somewhat modern, and spacious enough doubtless to meet all present demands. It was built under the direction of Rev. W. W. Drake, who was pastor there some ten or twelve years ago. The membership of the church numbers about two hundred, and the Sunday school of which Mr. Robert E. Brumby is the efficient superintendent, has a total enrollment in all departments of considerably more than that number. The Epworth League has twenty members, and there is talk of making an addition to the church which will provide for that organization a parlor and an attractive reading room. The president of the League is Miss Belle Roberts, who is much interested in the promotion of its progress and prosperity. The official board is composed of a solid body of men, who are among the leading citizens of the community. Its president is Mr. R. E. Miling; the vice-president, Dr. T. F. Frere, and the secretary is Mr. R. E. Brumby. Brother Weir is in his second year in the charge, and marked success is attending his labors. Though he has not yet held a meeting, he has had since Conference twenty-three additions, nineteen of them joining on profession of faith. We heard the pastor's name mentioned only in terms of praise, which argues well both for him and the people. The parsonage is a neat and comfortable cottage, with a spacious stretch of green in every direction. Its present occupants are domestic and believe in having things around them. When we looked at the beautiful Jersey breasting on the grass, the magnificent poniz horse with silken hair in the barn, and the fine harred Plymouth Rock chickens chasing about the yard, not a little feeling of envy was awakened in our bosom and the call of the country was strong upon us.

Franklin is the county seat of St. Mary's Parish, the political center of Louisiana. It is the home of Senator Murphy J. Foster, and Governor J. Y. Sanders, the two most influential public men in the State. Here also resided Senator Don Caffery, who served conspicuously in the United States Senate for years and whose fame as an orator was national. He died in 1906 greatly lamented by the people who have erected a beautiful monument to his memory in the courthouse yard, crowned with a striking statue of the dead statesman. The courthouse is an imposing structure, which is said to have cost $125,000. We count it a privilege to have worshiped with the Methodists of Franklin and to have seen the things of interest in their historic town, which has passed the century of its age the present year.

A BISHOP'S STORY.

We are indebted to the Western Christian Advocate of Cincinnati for the following good story which Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is said to tell on himself: "He was holding one of the colored Conferences of the South when, on calling the roll of the superannuates, one aged brother arose and began to pay personal tribute to the presiding officer. 'Bishop,' he said, 'I've seen several big men a-sittin' in that chair you's occ'pin'. I've seen Bishop Simpson in that chair, an' I've seen Bishop Andrews in that chair, an' I've seen Bishop Warren in that chair. But in my humble judgment, not one of them nobilities filled that chair with any more credit an' glory than you's doin' right now.' But just as Bishop McDowell was swelling with pride and self-congratulation, the good old veteran added as he was sitting down, 'But I's gittin' mighty ol' now and my frien's tell me my judgment ain't as good as it once was.'"

A WORD FOR THE CHURCH PAPER.

The Christian Guardian, of Toronto, Canada, gives the following account of an address delivered in the interest of the church paper before the General Conference of Canadian Methodism by Dr. F. D. Bovard, fraternal messenger of the Methodist Episcopal Church and editor of the California Christian Advocate.

"Dr. Bovard spoke a strong word as to the value of the church paper to its constituency. He believed that the Church should legislate that everyone should buy and read the paper published by his church, and that we should have a paragraph in our Discipline that asks of every member, 'Will you diligently read and meditate upon the columns of our paper?' the necessary answer being, 'I will do so, the Lord being my helper.' Of course, the insinuation that divine help would be needed for this task brought down the house.

From this it would seem that the problem of circulating our periodical literature is continent-wide. Everywhere it seems to be difficult to get the church paper into the homes of the people. And yet nothing is worse needed. Our membership will never be characterized by an intelligent loyalty and an abiding enthusiasm until they learn what is going on in the religious world. A knowledge of what is being undertaken and accomplished by the Church will alone awaken them and enlist them in the general work. A wider outlook is the best cure for lethargy and illiberality. But let us not become discouraged. It takes "line upon line, and precept upon precept" to make people see that they need to interest themselves in the current affairs of Zion, as well as to teach them spiritual truth. Let us see that the matter is kept before them.

PERSONAL.

Rev. C. C. Weir, of Franklin, La., and Rev. A. E. Vaughan, of Lafayette, will exchange pulpits next Sunday.

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Buena Vista, Miss., has been quite busy holding meetings since July 30th. Both in his own charge and when assisting the brethren his labors have been greatly blessed. He is with Rev. J. T. Poe at Mantee this week.

In a kindly letter to the Advocate office, Mrs. G. R. Lemon, of Slaughter, La., expresses a high appreciation of the Advocate and an interest in its success. We are grateful for the encouragement given us by so many of our patrons.

At the residence of the bride's father at Pelahatchie, Miss., on September 18th, Mr. Daniel J. Hogue, of Jackson, Miss., and Miss Mary Bernard Earl were united in marriage, the Rev. C. M. McDonald officiating. We wish the happy couple a long and useful life and heaven's choicest blessings.

Writing from Arcadia, La., on the 17th inst, Rev. R. O. Weir says: "Our meeting closed on the night of the 8th inst. It did the church much good. There were two additions and five family altars erected. Brother Harbin did some excellent preaching. He is good help. Our new church is a gem of beauty."

A correspondent in a position to know writes: "Rev. W. J. Dawson, our pastor at Pelahatchie, Miss., is doing faithful work. A good preacher, and a faithful pastor, he gives us two Sundays in the month, morning and night, and on one of these he preaches at Lindsey Chapel several miles away at 3 p. m., doing all this with comparative ease."

Rev. W. B. Jones, of the Seashore District, is pleased with the progress of the work under his supervision. He writes appreciatively of his co-laborers and speaks of them as "a faithful company." He reports that Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, our pastor at Biloxi, has not been well of late, and that he has been recuperating at Cooper's Well and in Meridian.

We acknowledge the reception of an invitation to the marriage of Miss Virginia Louise Haney, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. John P. Haney, to Mr. Amos Kent Freiler, in the Methodist Church at Ponchatoula, La., at high noon on Thursday, October the 6th. The Advocate extends hearty congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. G. G. Yeager, of Merrill, Miss., reports a gracious meeting at Cross Roads, in which the preaching was most efficiently done by Rev. G. W. Huff. Quite a number joined the Church, and many who had grown cold spiritually came back to Christ. Brother Yeager says, "Our church at that place seems made anew."

Rev. R. O. Brown is having large success on the Amory and Nettleton charge. Rev. E. B. Ramsey assisted him in his meeting at the latter place, and Rev. L. A. McKeown at the former, where the revival resulted in 25 accessions and a general quickening of the church. Brother Brown has had 68 additions during the year, and his finances are in full up to date.

The Methodist Sunday school at Tupelo held an interesting Rally Day Service on September 18th, at which Miss E. Kilpatrick, of Corinth, made a most entertaining and helpful address. Miss Kilpatrick is widely known as the teacher of the famous young men's Bible class at Corinth, and was one of the speakers at the late World's Sunday School Convention in Washington.

Rev. Robert Taylor, an honored superannuate of the Memphis Conference who is eighty-eight years old, occupied the pulpit of the First Methodist Church at Greenville, Miss., last Sunday, and preached an interesting and helpful sermon. He is in that city visiting his son, Mr. Edmund Taylor, who is manager of the Geyer Company, and one of the foremost business men of Mississippi.

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, the stirring presiding elder of the Newton District, in a personal note, makes the following observation upon the status of the work in his diocese: "The outlook is encouraging. All of the pastors are faithful and a degree of success attends their labors. Most of them have had revival meetings which have been fruitful of conversions and accessions to the Church."

Rev. W. M. Young, the energetic presiding elder of the Sardis District, writes optimistically of the work in that territory. Among other things he says, "Brother Wendel has accomplished a great thing in building a beautiful church at Horn Lake, which Bishop Murrah will dedicate on October 2. Considering the whole situation, I have not known a finer piece of generalship in church building."

Rev. W. G. Harbin continues to abound in labors as the weeks pass. He has lately held successful meetings at Arcadia, La., and Lucedale, Miss., and is now with Dr. A. F. Watkins in a revival at Hattiesburg. Brother Harbin is a brilliant preacher and an evangelist of unusual power. He is also an active friend of the Advocate, who secures subscribers for it wherever he goes. We are grateful for his many acts of kindness.

We were grieved to learn of the death, after a lingering illness, of Lois, the little daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Stormont, of Black Hawk, Miss. She was five years old and their only child. The remains were carried to Moorsville, Miss., for interment. Brother and Sister Stormont have the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends in this sad hour of bereavement. May God graciously sustain and comfort them!

We regret to learn that Dr. I. W. Cooper has recently been indisposed, but are pleased to know that he is able to be about his work again. Whitworth College under his capable administration is enjoying large prosperity. The enrollment last week was 200, and every department is in excellent condition. Dr. Cooper has presented the Board of Trustees with $3,000 worth of improvements above those called for in his contract with them.

During the past two weeks we have received nice lists of subscriptions and renewals from the following brethren: Rev. R. H. Wynn, Monroe, La.; Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, Vaughan, Miss.; Rev. R. J. S. Worley, Marshville, Miss.; Rev. W. G. Harbin, Haynesville, La.; Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, Zachary, La.; Rev. B. E. Meigs, Oak Ridge, Miss.; Rev. J. R. Wilson, Kilmichael, Miss. Several others have sent in one or two subscriptions. We thank our friends for looking after the interests of the Advocate.

The Mansfield Journal speaks approvingly of the Sunday School Institute conducted there a few days since. Among the speakers who made a favorable impression were the Rev. W. H. Coleman, superintendent of the Adult Department of the State work; Rev. George D. Booth, superintendent of the Teacher Training Department, and Rev. W. S. Slack, superintendent of the Mission Department. These institutes are creating much interest where they are being held.

In a letter concerning other matters, a few days since, Mrs. A. H. Peques, of Columbus, Miss., speaks in terms of appreciation of her pastor, the Rev. T. W. Lewis. He well deserves the good things said of him. He is serving his second term in the Queen City of the Tom Beckbee, having wrought there a full quadrupling and having been returned after a brief interval of only four years. His undiminished popularity under these conditions marks him as a most unusual man.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, the progressive pastor of the Second Methodist Church of New Orleans, has issued a neat folder announcing a series of sermons which he will preach to his congregation under the subjects "The Modern Church," and "The Home of To-Day." He will deliver five discourses upon each of these topics. He began the series last Sunday morning, discussing "What God, through the Church, Proposes to do for Humanity." An Epworth League service was conducted at the evening hour and the installation of officers took place.

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, of Starkville, Miss., under date of Sept. 23rd writes: "Professor Marvin Gieger, formerly Assistant Professor of Chemistry at the Mississippi A. & M. College and a staunch Methodist and member of our local congregation, leaves to-day for the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia where he will do post graduate work in agricultural chemistry, a line in which he has attained more than ordinary eminence. The Methodism of Starkville is distinctly the looser in having to sever its official relation with this worthy Christian gentleman. The prayers and best wishes of our people will follow him into his new field."

Rev. J. A. Randolph, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is a chaplain in the United States Army, passed through the city last Monday night en route to Fort McPherson, Atlanta, where he will be stationed for some time. Brother Randolph is just back from the Philippines, and when he reaches Atlanta, will have completed a journey of 12,000 miles. He came by Dallas, Texas, to see his family, who temporarily are residing there. We were pleased to see this faithful servant of the Master looking so well and to find him so genial and cheerful in spirit. He made many particular inquiries about his Conference comrades and church affairs in Mississippi.

In company with the Rev. Marneale Rennum, a French missionary of this city, Dr. W. L. Haven, Corresponding Secretary of the American Bible Society, honored us with a call last Tuesday. Dr. Haven is a son of Bishop Gilbert Haven, of the Northern Church, and a Methodist of confectional reputation. He is in this section to look after the interests of the Southwestern Agency of the American Society, which covers Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas. This agency is now without a man to manage it, the Rev. Glenn Flynn, having resigned to re-enter the pastorate and Dr. Haven is on the lookout for an agent to succeed him. We were pleased to see these brethren.

We are indebted to our worthy pastor at Starkville, Miss., Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, for the following interesting news item: "Rev. A. H. Shannon, whom the readers of the Advocate will remember as a former member of the Mississippi Conference, and who is an A. B. graduate of Millsaps College and an A. B., A. M. and B. D. graduate of Vanderbilt, has been elected Assistant Professor of English in the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College at Starkville. Brother Shannon brings to the performance of the duties of his professorship a preparation and training that will render his services invaluable to the institution that is so fortunate to secure him. He also adds weight to the body of splendid laymen that make up the Methodist forces of our town and college."

The Waycross Journal (Georgia) of the 23rd inst. contains an account of the much deplored death of Mr. E. P. Peabody, a most worthy citizen of that town. He and his wife and two younger children went driving on the morning of September 19th, having hired a horse from the livery stable. The shaft of the buggy broke and frightened the horse, which began kicking to free himself. In trying to protect the children, Mr. Peabody was struck by the hoofs of the animal, and from the injuries sustained, died on Wednesday, the 21st. He was prominent in business affairs, and was widely known as a church worker. He was an official of the First Methodist Church of that city, and had been both secretary and president of the South Georgia Epworth League Conference. Mr. Peabody was a brother of Mr. D. P. Peabody, of New Orleans.

The Picayune of the 20th inst. contained the following dispatch from Mansfield, La.: "Dr. W. L. Weber, president of the Mansfield Female College, is quite ill at a local sanitarium, due to a return of serious stomach trouble, which compelled him last year to resign as president of Centenary College at Shreveport. Dr. Weber, who is a son-in-law of Bishop Wilson, of Maryland, is one of the best-known educators of the South, having been connected with several leading institutions." The many friends of President Weber will be grieved to hear of the recurrence of the malady, which in the past has given him so much trouble. We trust that the attack will not prove to be of long duration, and that he will soon be able to resume his duties at the college. At present the work of administration is being attended to by Professor H. N. Harrison.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, writing from West Point on Sept. 3rd, says: "As had been previously announced, Bishop McCoy came here last Tuesday to spend the remainder of the week and was expected to occupy the pulpit daily until Sunday night. He was unwell, however, when he arrived, and after preaching two sermons to the delight of the people, he thought it necessary to return to Birmingham to resume a special treatment which he had been undergoing before leaving home. This was a great disappointment to the pastor and people at West Point, as well as to the visiting brethren from the surrounding charges. We greatly regret to be informed of the Bishop's indisposition. In his itinerary through North Mississippi he has been rendering a needed service and awakening much interest and enthusiasm. We trust that his illness will be of brief duration, and that he will be able to meet his other engagements within the bounds of that Conference, of which he has generously made quite a number."

PHILIP WERLEIN, LTD.

In printing the advertisement of this popular music house in our issue of last week there occurred an error in the following paragraph:

"The person sending in the 'nearest' correct answer will receive the first prize. Person sending the next 'nearest' correct answer will receive the second prize. The person sending in the third 'nearest' correct answer will receive the third prize, and so on." The word "nearest" in the above paragraph, in each instance, should have been "nearest." The advertisement is repeated this week, and will be found on page 13. The Werlein Music House is a reliable concern, having been established sixty-eight years. Their present location is 505-7-9 Canal Street, New Orleans, La.

Mrs. SUSAN J. WEBB was born in Alabama, April 27, 1837, the first child of Britain R. and Mary Potter Webb. The mother died before reaching middle age and the father removed a few years later with his two little girls to Pontotoc County, Miss.; in 1861 he died at Jackson while serving as Secretary of State, and the children were brought up by their devoted and faithful stepmother, Mrs. Martha Givens Webb. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. I. W. Reed, assisted by Rev. W. H. Huntley, pastor of the Methodist Church at Gloster.

The subject of this notice was soundly converted when quite a young woman and became a member of Cherry Creek Baptist Church in Pontotoc County. She was baptized by Rev. Martin Ball, of precious memory, and shouted the praises of God on the occasion. In the late 50's she was assistant to her father in his school. May 6, 1866, she was happily married to William Y. Webb, of Amite County, Miss.; lived at Liberty, the county seat, until 1885, and then removed to Gloster, Miss., where she spent the rest of her life. Since about 1895 she had suffered from severe bodily affliction, which kept her indoors almost continuously. On the evening of Aug. 24, 1910, she underwent a surgical operation at Natchez, and the shock proving too great for her enfeebled condition, she passed away quietly the next morning at five o'clock.

A life extending beyond three-score and ten is, from the fact itself, never without interest to one's fellow-men; but when one's long career is marked throughout by active benevolence of a disinterested sort, it possesses a value impossible of computation. Thus it is with Mrs. Susan J. Webb.

The actuating principle of this good woman's life was love, which showed itself in a manifold way. Her home was the abode of peace because love reigned there. To her husband home was the sweetest, most hallowed spot on earth because its keeper, his chief joy and his crown, lavished upon him the wealth of her tenderest affections. Her devotion to him was known of all in their community and was almost proverbial. Someone said on the day after the funeral: "Death has now brought to an end a honeymoon of forty-four years."

She loved the Church of God. The Baptist congregations at Liberty and Gloster numbered few if any members who were more zealously active in Christian work than she was until her disability came on. Her husband being a Methodist, she loved his Church as if it were her own and presiding elders, preachers and laymen of "Uncle Billy's" faith have for more than a generation gratefully recognized the generous expression of "Aunt Susan's." At Gloster she organized the Ladies' Aid Societies in Baptist and Methodist Churches and rendered effective service in both.

She followed consistently the Biblical exhortations to distribute to the necessity of saints, exercise hospitality without grudging, and not to neglect the stranger. No hunger-pinched wanderer, no wretched beggar of any sort ever went away from her door unrelieved, for she was zealous in such cases not by considerations of expediency, but by compassion. She maintained the kindest relations with her servants—all negroes—who always understood that they were not merely hir-lings of Miss Susan, but also objects of her solicitude.

Children she had not, but she has performed a mother's part toward children and grandchildren of her sister, whom death claimed nearly thirty years ago. Some of these owe their rearing, education and instruction in piety to their uncle and aunt, and all, without exception, have received from them substantial aid and religious counsel.

Her closing years were characterized by a more intimate communion with God. Her time was largely taken up with reading the Scriptures, with meditation and prayer. Friends who came almost every day to see her found her conversation tending more and more toward the strictly spiritual type, her soul filled with the peace that passeth understanding. She had reached that degree of serenity which so befits the evening of the Christian's life. There were still cares, indeed; however, they rested but lightly upon the age-bent shoulders, nor did they becloud the sainted brow. Her last uttered word was spoken to her heart-broken husband and consisted of the injunction, "Pray." Soon the tired eyes closed and the faithful wife, the orphan's comforter and mankind's friend had entered that "sleep from which none ever wake to weep."

Verily, "she hath done what she could."

A NEPHEW.

MARTHA ANN PHILLIPS "Mac," as she was called by relatives and familiar friends, was born in Monroe County, Georgia, Nov. 2nd, 1831, and died at her home in Homer, La., August 13, 1910. She was married to Joe M. White, Dec. 10, 1847. They lived in Sumpter County, Ga., until Dec., 1858, when they came to make their home in Claiborne Parish, La., settling near Haynesville, where Brother White was a successful planter, until he removed to Homer in 1882. Sister White joined the Church in 1859, and was a faithful member, regularly attending both the preaching services and the Sunday School; visiting, comforting and nursing the sick, and living a beautiful life of Christian influence in her home. The Lord blessed Brother and Sister White with seven children, four of whom preceded the mother to the realm beyond. Brother White, in speaking to me of his loneliness after sixty-three years of sweet association with such a faithful companion, also mentioned the children who had come to bless the earthly home and then went from it forever, and he said, "I think they are all saved." The three surviving children are Sister G. G. Gill, and Brother C. P. White, both of Homer, La., and Brother E. R. White, of Oklahoma. We have every reason to believe, yea to know, that as Sister White's last day of earth gently faded away, it was for her the beginning of the eternal glories of heaven's perennial day. When the battles of life are all fought and its trials and triumphs in this earthly sphere are all over, then we shall meet her in the eternal city of our God.

Her pastor, W. H. COLEMAN.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions drafted by the Ladies' Aid Society of Main Street Church, Biloxi, Miss., at their first meeting held after the decease of their beloved sister, Mrs. MARY THOMPSON.

On the 20th of July, 1910, in Winchester, Va., whither she had gone, accompanied by her husband and children to spend the summer, the sweet spirit of Mrs. Mary Thompson was released from earthly suffering and borne by ministering angels to her eternal home. To her devoted and sorely bereaved family our hearts go out in tender and loving sympathy, honoring her life and lamenting her death. Be it Resolved:

First, That the Ladies' Aid Society of Main Street Church, of Biloxi, do hereby express our deep sorrow in the loss of our sister and friend.

Second, That we extend our sincerest sympathy to her family in this dark hour of bereavement.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy be placed on the minutes of the Ladies' Aid Society.

Signed by: Mrs. Laura S. Jackson, chairman; Mrs. Ada H. Carroll, Mrs. Ophelia S. Bolton, committee.

SOME IMPORTANT MATTERS.

Dear Brethren of the Baton Rouge District: You will find in to-day's issue of this paper, the appointments for the fourth round for the Baton Rouge District. I take the liberty of requesting the preachers of the Baton Rouge District to give especial attention to Questions 9, 14, 16, 18, and 29, of the Quarterly Conference questions. The only permanent record we have of these things is found in the Quarterly Conference reports, and if they are omitted or incomplete, there is no record at hand for same, except in the ensuing minutes of the Annual Conference, which are not accessible at all times to the official members of the Church.

Please give prayerful and earnest attention to the selection of the boards of stewards, remembering that they are to be discreet men and should be men of solid piety. If such men can be found within the bounds of the charge, please have your men selected with care and ready for nomination. Also select your Sunday school superintendents with reference to the requirements of the discipline. Please let every question in the fourth round be fully and properly answered, giving especial attention to Question 29.

As to the matter of Conference assessments for benevolent purposes, let every effort be put forth to meet these assessments. The raising of the Conference assessments is committed largely to the pastor. Let every preacher in the Baton Rouge District put forth all his efforts in raising the Conference assessments, and let every record show as large a pro rata paid on Conference assessments as has been paid for ministerial support.

Your brother, C. C. MILLER.

Gold Spectacles Free

Don't Send Me One Cent

when you answer this announcement, as I am going to distribute at least one hundred thousand sets of the Dr. Haux wonderful "Perfect Vision" Spectacles to genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearers in the next few weeks on one easy, simple condition.

I want you to thoroughly try them on your own eyes, no matter how weak they may be; read the finest print in your bible even by the dim firelight; thread the smallest-eyed needle you can get hold of and put them to any test you like in your own home in any way you please.

Then after you have become absolutely and positively convinced that they are really and truly the softest, clearest and best-fitting glasses you have ever had on your eyes, you can keep the $2.00 pair forever without one cent of cost, and by showing them around to your neighbors and friends, and speak a good word for them everywhere at every opportunity.

Won't you help me introduce the wonderful Dr. Haux "Perfect Vision" Spectacles in your locality, on one easy, simple condition?

If you are a genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearer (no children need apply) and want to do me this favor, write me at once and just say: "Dear Doctor: Mail me your Perfect Home Eye Tester, absolutely free of charge, also full particulars of your handsome $10-karat (gold) Spectacle Offer," and address me personally and I will give your letter my own personal attention. A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardul, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardul. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Alfred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardul, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped, I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardul has done for Mrs. Alfred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

Tidings from the Field

From the Seashore District:

Dear Brother Meek: Please say in the Advocate that we will have in this district a laymen's meeting on Sunday afternoon at the following camp meetings: Palmer Creek, Sunday Oct. 2; Salem, Sunday Oct. 9; New Prospect, Sunday Oct. 23; and we are desirous of having as many laymen as can come. Hon. C. H. Wood, of Moss Point, District Lay-Leader, will be present and have charge of the services. Others will also speak.

In looking back over the district, I am glad to say that the Lord has greatly blessed us this year with gracious revivals—many conversions and additions to the church. The boll weevil has invaded this territory, and has even reached the Gulf. My neighbor has about a dozen stalks of cotton in his garden, right on the beach, and they have not even spared that. Not only that; but they have even invaded the sanctum of the writer. On two successive nights one came in and perched himself on the hand of an "elder." But the elder pronounced a few anathemas upon them and each one found his last resting place in the gehenna of a Rayo lamp.

W. B. JONES, P. E.

Caledonia, Miss.:

We have just finished our revivals on the Columbus Circuit. We have been in revival work almost continuously at home and with neighboring pastors since the second Sunday in July. We wound up this week at Murrah's Chapel, assisted by Brother J. T. Murrah, who did some as excellent preaching as it has been my privilege to hear in a long time. Brother Murrah is a natural orator; was at his home church, among his boyhood friends, and was fired with the Spirit. So you know that he gave us some great sermons. Brother T. W. Lewis did the preaching at Piney Grove after Monday. It is useless to say that we had some fine preaching there. He handled sin and sinners without gloves. Then dear old Dr. Weir ("as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove") came to us at Andrews' Chapel, and with his logic and ripe Christian experience, gave us a spiritual uplift that will not be forgotten when he is in heaven. Brother R. P. Neblett assisted at New Hope and Mt. Pleasant, and with his pathos and deeply spiritual sermons, captivated his hearers and organized a Sunday school where there had been none for years. He also stimulated the school at the other appointment to greater usefulness. At Caledonia we met with some opposition, but with Brother E. Lin Egger to do the preaching, we soon gained the victory and organized a church. There had been an effort some years ago to organize a Methodist Church here, but by some means it failed. We organized with 57 members, 8 coming in on profession of faith, and the rest from other churches. Before the meeting closed we had a proposition on foot to build a church. We now have the material on the ground and the carpenters are building the neatest church to be found in these parts. We have paid almost all of our assessments for Home and Foreign Missions, and fully expect to make a full report at Conference. We have not done as well by our Conference organ as we should, but we are going to make a renewed effort to put the paper in every home where it is not going, and get renewals from all who have not renewed. Mr. Editor, we heartily appreciate the excellent paper you are giving us, and the manly and courageous stand you have taken for the Church.—W. R. Goudelock, P. C.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

Old age, after all, is not a thing to be looked forward to with fear and trembling, as the majority of us are inclined to do; that is, if old age is to deal as leniently with us as it has with Mrs. Francis F. Bowers, of Laneville, Texas.

While Mrs. Bowers is a remarkable woman, and unusually well preserved, there is no reason why every body should not be equally so. Mrs. Bowers is now in her seventieth year, is the mother of eleven children, the oldest being fifty odd years of age and the youngest thirty. She does all of her own house work, washing and ironing, works her own garden, and flowers and attends to her chickens; can sew with a fine needle without glasses and walks three miles a day.

Mrs. Bowers attributes her present remarkable good health to the use of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and justly so, because it is the very best blood purifier in the world to-day, and has been for the past thirty years. W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron makes pure blood, invigorates the nerves, restores all organs to normal health, insures proper digestion, creates a hearty appetite, is laxative in its effects and can be had from your druggist in 50c and $1.00 size bottles.

Get a $1.00 bottle of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and if you can't see any improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of it, return the remainder to your druggist, and he will refund your money on the whole bottle. If your druggist can't supply you, send his name and $1.00 to the W. H. Bull Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo., and they will send you a bottle direct with the same guarantee of results.

FOURTH QUARTER. LESSON 1. OCT. 2. THE WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS

Matthew xxv. 1-13

1 Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.
2 And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.
3 They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them.
4 But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.
5 While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.
6 And at midnight there was a cry made, Hold, the bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him.

7 Then all those virgins arose, and to trim their lamps.
8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.
9 But the wise answered saying, Not so; there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.
10 And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut.
11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.
12 But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.
13 Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not. (Luke xii. 40.)

1. Constant Preparedness.

A spirit of constant watchfulness and expectancy of Christ's coming is continually enjoined in the New Testament. Christ's oft-repeated "Watch ye, therefore," several of the parables, including that of the Householder, the Servants' Watching, and the parable of the Ten Virgins which we study to-day, all are in emphasis upon the importance of this spirit maintained in Christ's disciples unto the end of the world. So deeply were the early Christians impressed with the imminence of Christ's coming that the second Epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians was written to counteract a strong tendency to carry this to the extreme of neglecting attention to the everyday business of life. In the early centuries, too, the Easter services were protracted till midnight, that the people might be assembled if Christ should come, it being supposed that "at midnight" the cry would be heard.

But though this duty of watchfulness is certainly impressed by Christ and the Apostles, and though it is most wholesome for us ever to remember "If I should die before I wake," or that Christ may come at any moment, yet we believe a closer study of the parable of the Ten Virgins, which we consider to-day, will reveal the fact that its emphasis is not so much upon watchfulness or expectancy as upon preparedness. Both the wise and foolish virgins slept, but the wise were ready, and it was right for them to sleep; the foolish were not ready, and it was folly for them to sleep. So, we would suggest that the Golden Text of the parable is not "Watch ye therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour," but rather "And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut." The lesson is not so much that of watchfulness as that of constant preparedness, which justifies even a repose in confidence of readiness. The lesson is: Keep the life so clean, the record so clear, that there may be no need of a hurried and impossible preparation at the last moment; and whoever fails to live thus, and puts off until some future time that preparation for meeting God which is consciously not yet made is shown by the parable to be numbered with the foolish virgins, to be almost as surely at last shut out.

2. The Essential Preparation.

But though to be always ready, so that in quietness and confidence we can look with joy for the coming of our Lord, is the first and central lesson of our parable, another vital one is therein contained, and follows naturally. What is the essential preparation which all must make if they would be ready for the Bridegroom at his coming? This inquiry the rest of the parable very clearly and impressively answers. And the text which brings to us this message reads: "But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

Preparation does not consist then in merely having lamps, the outward forms of religion—church membership, a respectable character, a mental apprehension of the creed or the doctrines of one church or another. All this, which is merely outward in religion, commentators agree is symbolized by the lamps which the foolish virgins took with them as well as the wise.

Nor does the fact of a religious experience in times past, some happy day when Jesus washed one's sins away, constitute this preparedness, though we would in no wise underrate the value and importance of this. The foolish virgins had evidently known something of the grace of God; they had had oil in their lamps, but the sad fact stared them in the face, "Our lamps are gone out." They had neglected that grace, and had lost it—a sad possibility with us also. If we fail to cultivate our spiritual lives, absorbed in other things, we may lose that even which we had, our lamps may go out—and we may fall from grace. Certainly on this point our Methodist teaching is sure. Watch, therefore!

Wherein, then, does preparedness consist? Plainly, the answer of the parable is, in having oil in our lamps, the grace of God in our hearts, his Holy Spirit cleansing them from sin, and giving conscious peace and assurance. Nothing less than an inner experience of God's saving grace will avail, which means sincere service divinely accepted.

But how and where may this be obtained? Only from God, through prayer and an earnest seeking of him. The foolish virgins could not obtain from the wise; man cannot obtain grace from man, he can only point as did they to the source and say, "Go, buy for yourselves." The Bridegroom still tarries. He has purposely left it uncertain when he will come. Opportunity is yet ours: God grant that none of us may "To the mercy of a moment leave the vast concerns of an eternal scene."

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 2, 1910.

THE UNIVERSAL KINGDOM AND PEACE.

Micah iv, 1-3; Rev. xi, 15.

Our first reference to-day is from Micah, another of the minor prophets. Micah was a contemporary of Isaiah, although his ministry does not begin as early. His message is primarily to Judah, although incidentally he speaks to Samaria also. "However divided, the two nations are regarded as one people." The prophecy is full of the most solemn warnings of coming doom, warnings which display the faithfulness of God, and which as it seems to us would have touched the hearts of any nation. It only indicates the moral deafness and deadness of stubborn sinners, until it seems that nothing will move them. Shall we not grow alarmed for portions of our own land in which the most faithful work has been done, in which the most earnest voices have cried out, and the most pathetic appeals have been made, and yet all indifferent and sinful and hard? With the fourth chapter, however, the prophet begins a beautiful picture of the ultimate coming of God's kingdom, which came as a consolation to the faithful of God's people. There are two elements in this picture which form the basis of our lesson to-day, elements which in our day we can the better appreciate.

The first of these is the universality of God's kingdom. "And many nations shall come and say, 'Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord.' And he shall judge among many people, and shall rebuke strong nations afar off." It seems to us that if the old Jewish people had not had their eyes blinded, blinded by visions of a material kingdom and visions of all other nations being subject to them, then they could have seen God's picture of a world-wide kingdom in which all men were to be God's children. From our point of view, however, let us stop just here and rejoice in our visions at the hastening of God's plans. We know truly that nation after nation is becoming Christ's, and we are seeing in our day China and Corea and Japan added to the list of peoples that say "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord."

The kingdom is coming, O tell ye the story,
God's banners exalted shall be;
The earth shall be full of his knowledge and glory,
As the waters cover the sea!

Just now, for Bishop Lambuth in Africa and for Bishop Hoss visiting our corps of workers in the Orient, let us pray, asking for a hastening of his kingdom and for "tidings from afar" that shall thrill the heart of the church everywhere. The New Testament recognition of the universal kingdom is too familiar to need reference to. As we review this subject to-day, let the thought of the oneness of the human race—a great brotherhood—come clearly into our hearts and let our compassion go out to all men everywhere, remembering "They shall come from the East and from the West and from the North and from the South and shall sit down together in the kingdom of God along with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob."

The second element in this picture is that of peace. Significant is it to us that the words the angels sang on that first morning were, "On earth, peace, good-will toward men!" and that among the closing words of our Lord were these, "My peace I give unto you, my peace I leave with you!" Significant that our Lord should be called "The Prince of Peace." Let us ask what sort of peace may we expect in this kingdom? First, not peace between right and wrong. There must never be peace between them and we must never say peace for "there is no peace."

Secondly, not peace between truth and error. It is mere sentimentality to talk about making peace with people who teach "strange doctrines." Jesus must have had reference to the struggle between good and evil or between truth and error when he said, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword."

Thirdly, it is individual peace with God. "Justified by faith we have peace with God through Christ." (Rom. v, 1). Read also Phil. iv, 7, to see the extent of that peace—a peace the world never gave, and which the world cannot take away.

Fourthly, what we might call social and commercial peace, the peace that comes from a loving recognition of the rights and needs of everybody else. Let us pray in our own neighborhoods for the religion that makes all the doctors and merchants and neighbors in happy peace and love with each other.

Fifthly, peace between the nations of the world. Read again our first reference to-day. Let the vision of swords beat into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks appear to us not as just a figure but as a possibility, yea a hastening probability for which we hope and pray.

AN IMPORTANT CONSULTATION.

A CALL
For a Joint Meeting of the Three Methodist Commissions on the Union of Methodists in America.
Whereas, The General Conference
of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Baltimore, Md., in May, 1908, instructed their Commissioners on Federation to confer with such other branches of Methodism as they may believe are sympathetic concerning federation or organic union, as in the judgment of the Churches respectively may be most desirable; and

Whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, held in Pittsburgh, Pa., in May, 1908, appointed a Commission for the purpose of meeting with a like commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of other Methodist Churches in this country, to promote and complete so far as may be possible the reunion of Methodists in America; and

Whereas, The General Conference
of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in Asheville, N. C., in May, 1910, directed their Commissioners on Federation to further, as far as is consistent and practicable, a closer relation between their Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Protestant Church, and other Methodist bodies; therefore

We, the Chairmen, respectively, of the Commissions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Methodist Protestant Church, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, do hereby unite in a call for a joint meeting of our Commissions to assemble in Baltimore, Md., on Wednesday, the thirtieth day of November, 1910, for the purpose of prayer, deliberation and counsel upon the important matter committed to us. And we also join in an earnest appeal to the Methodist people we represent to unite with us in prayer to God for his blessing of illumination and guidance upon those who are to meet in this Conference.

the world. It contains no ingredient that your own family doctor would not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on dragging the body, but tones the body and cures its disorders with the remedies nature intended to tone and cure the body when that power was given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now. If you are not well, if your body is not acting as it should, if you are not getting the natural and normal tone, this is what Bodi-Tone is for. It is the only food that will help you to live a full and active life. Bodi-Tone is the only food that will give you the strength and energy you need to live a full and active life. It is the only food that is truly a food.

It Is Proven

The curative powers of Bodi-Tone have been amply proven by one hundred of cures. It has been tested in thousands of cases, covering a great variety of ailments in both sexes at every age. Over one hundred thousand people have used it during the past year. Persons suffering from Rheumatism, Stomach trouble, Kidney, Liver and Bladder Ailments, Uric Acid Disorders, Bowel Complaints, Female Troubles, Blood and Skin Affections, Dropsy, Piles, Catarrh, Anemia, Sleeplessness, LaGrippe, Pains, General Weakness and Nervous Breakdown, have tested Bodi-Tone and proven its value in such disorders. Their experiences have proven beyond a shadow of doubt that the Bodi-Tone plan of eating all the body is a right plan that helps to cure these and other disorders, that it is a real and a nature. Many who have for years been in poor health and have tried doctors and most of the prominent medicines, have written us that a lot of Bodi-Tone did more good than all the others combined. Write to-day for a $1.00 box on trial and see what it will do for you. Don't send a penny. Just ask for a dollar box on trial. Address as follows:

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of The Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating work of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the inspiring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations,' by Dr. R. A. McKim in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., is as unconventional as her distinguished father-in-law and is astounding San Francisco by her simplicity. Although Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt live on fashionable Pacific Avenue and have California millionaires for neighbors, their home is a modest cottage, and Mrs. Roosevelt is her own gardener. Every evening she and her husband care for their front lawn and flowers. Mrs. Roosevelt personally drags the rubber hose across the lawn and waters her flowers with great care. Theodore, Jr., is assistant gardener, but the young mistress of the household does most of the work herself and has shown great skill in producing beautiful plants and flowers.

While Chinamen and Japanese labor in the pretentious Italian gardens of the wealthy neighbors of the Roosevelts, the young couple apparently find great pleasure in looking after their own modest lawn. Mrs. Roosevelt, who was Eleanor Alexander before her marriage, is heiress to a great fortune and is probably more wealthy now than many of her extremely fashionable neighbors who are masters of millions recently wrested from western mines.—Nashville Tennessean.

HITCH YOUR WAGON TO A STAR.

There is no expression in the English language that smacks more of idealism than Emerson's epigram, "Hitch your wagon to a star," and the way in which it originated is interesting. It appears that many years before the Civil War there was a famous trotting stallion named American Star, belonging to one Seely. The offspring of this horse became scattered through New England and New York because they were the best roadsters in the country and every farmer desired to have one.

It soon became well understood that in order to stand well in the respect of the community a farmer must drive nothing else, and later on it became a subject of banter among the rural folk. If one farmer passed another on the road he would look back over his shoulder and shout, "Why don't you hitch your wagon to a star?"

Emerson heard the remark many times, and in his lecture on "American Civilization," at the Smithsonian Institution in 1862, he used it for the first time, advising mankind in general to aim high and "Hitch your wagon to a star," thus converting a common incident into a figurative allusion which has been of service to writers and orators the world over.—The Daily States.

LIFE SACRIFICED TO FALSE BELIEF.

Refusing to submit to surgical or medical treatment although suffering from appendicitis, Ole Christensen, a young candy-maker, who had been attended for several days before his admission to the hospital by Christian Scientists, died recently in the North Hudson Hospital, Union Hill, N. J.

Christensen, who was twenty years old, boarded at No. 112 Fifth Street, Union Hill. He was taken ill several days ago and called in Christian Science healers from New York, who treated him until Saturday morning, when the sick man's friends insisted that he be taken to the hospital.

There the doctors told him that only an immediate operation could save him, but he refused to submit to one and insisted that he be taken back home. The superintendent would not allow this, explaining that he would probably die on the way in the ambulance.

Every effort was made to induce Christensen to allow at least medical treatment to ease his pain, but he would not listen, insisting that Christian Science alone would help him.—World.

FOLLOWING CHRIST.

I believe that persecuted ones have more blessedness than any other saints. There were never such sweet revelations of the love of Christ in Scotland as when the Covenanters met in the mosses and on the hillsides. No sermons ever seemed to be so sweet as those which were preached when Claverhouse's dragoons were out, and the minister read his text by the lightning's flash. The saints never sang so sweetly as when they let loose those wild bird notes among the heathen. The flock of slaughter, the people of God that were hunted down by the foe, these were they who saw the Lord. "I warrant you that in Lambeth Palace there were happier hearts in the Lollard's dungeon than there were in the archbishop's hall." Down there where men have lain to rot, as did Bunyan in Bedford jail, there have been more dreams of heaven, and more visions of celestial things, than in the courts of princes. The Lord Jesus loves to reveal himself to those of his saints who dare take the bleak side of the hill with him. If you are willing to follow him when the wind blows in your teeth, and the snowflakes come thickly till you are almost blinded, and if you can say, "Through floods and flames, if Jesus lead, I'll follow where he goes," you shall have such unveilings of his love to your soul as shall make you forget the sneers of men and the sufferings of the flesh. God shall make you triumph in all places.—C. H. Spurgeon.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try it.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. L. W. Blosser, 201 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

The perfect sound reproduction which established the supremacy of lies in the point of contact between the Phonograph and Record—the sapphire reproducing point.

This is the point that conveys the sound from the Record to the audience. And right here is the secret of the perfect lifelike tone of the Edison instead of a metallic nasal tone. There is no scratching, no harshness and practically no wear on either the reproducing point or the Record.

That is why Edison Records retain their sweet musical tones for years. That is why your Edison Phonograph is an investment that brings a lifetime of enjoyment.

There is an Edison Phonograph at whatever price you wish to pay, from the Gem at $12.50 to the Amberola at $200.00.

Every Edison Phonograph of every type plays both the regular Edison Standard Records, which render every kind of selection of the usual length, and Edison Amberol Records, which play twice as long, rendering all longer selections as originally meant to be played. The Edison is the instrument that gives you the very best of all kinds of entertainment in your own home.

THE MANLY MAN.

"The world has room for the manly man, with the spirit of manly cheer;
The world delights in the man who smiles when his eyes keep back the tear;
It loves the man who, when things go wrong, can take his place and stand
With his face to the fight and his eyes to the light, and toil with a willing hand:
The manly man is the country's need, and the moment's need, forsooth,
With a heart that beats to the pulsing tread of the ill-fated leagues of truth;
The world is his and it waits for him, and it leaps to hear the ring
Of the blow he strikes and the wheels he turns and the hammers he dares to swing;
It likes the forward look in his face, the poise of his noble head,
And the onward lunge of his tireless will and the sweep of his dauntless tread!
Hurrah for the manly man who comes with sunlight on his face,
And the strength to do and the will to dare and the courage to find his place!
The world delights in the manly man, and the weak and evil flee,
When the manly man goes forth to hold his own on land or sea!"

LET US RETURN UNTO THE LORD OUR GOD.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

The General Conference held at Asheville, N. C., last May sounded a revival note, calling the Church to renewed zeal in the work of saving souls and to a higher level in its own spiritual life. No action taken by the body was more important than this; for the spiritual interests of the Church are its supreme interests, all else being secondary and instrumental to this great object. It cannot be emphasized too strongly or urged too ardently.

But how shall the revival of religion for which the Conference called be brought to pass? Just as all other revivals of the past have been secured.

No revival has ever come from seeking a revival, but from seeking God. In the Scriptures men are nowhere exhorted to seek religion, or to seek a revival of religion; but they are called to turn to God.

It is quite easy to deify a revival as Israel deified the brazen serpent, which had to be pulverized in order to arrest their subtle idolatry of it. As a means of leading them to God the brazen serpent in the days of Moses was honored of heaven in a blessed healing; but when in the days of Hezekiah it obstructed the way to God, the pious king broke it in pieces and called it "Nehushtan"—i. e., "a piece of brass" (2 Kings xviii, 4).

Some may desire a revival in order to enjoy a gushing emotionalism. This gratification of their sensibilities they may secure without seeking and finding God, as thousands have secured it before through pathetic appeals, moving songs, and manipulating evangelists. But this debauching of the emotions leaves the spiritual nature more subtly selfish than before. It is a sort of burning of strange fire on God's altar which grieves the Holy Spirit and dishonors our Lord.

Others desire a revival in order to secure better popular morality; they desire a movement that will make the masses behave in a more orderly and decent fashion. These would use the Infinite God and ever-blessed Father as a police officer to make men walk circumspectly. They talk much of what they call "an ethical revival."

If we seek a revival in any such spirit, we shall fail, and will deserve to fail. We must lose sight of everything else but God, and seek him with all our hearts. We must feel that with him we can spare all else and that without him we should be undone, although we possessed all else. "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee," must be the fervent cry of all our souls.

Before the people will seek God they must be caused to feel their need of him. The saddest fact in these parched times is that there is among us little sense of the want of God. The people are rich and prosperous; they feel that they are able to take care of themselves. Providence is obsolete and prayer superfluous when men make for themselves a providence out of the "much goods" which they have laid up for many years. Co-operative with this dethronement of God by mammonism is the conspiring spirit of rationalism, which finds its merces in the second causes and deifies Law as the giver of every good and perfect gift. It prates of the "subjective value of prayer," and with interrogative derision asks: "What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?" (Job xxi, 15).

How can a revival come to pass when clerical rationalism in the pulpit confirms the atheism of lay mammonism in the pew? How shall the people be brought to feel their need of God by a minister who feels that he can get along without him?

And this leads to the statement that all the great revivals of the past have begun in a small group of revived preachers. The revival we need must also begin with the ministry. The blighting breath of godlessness may wither the life of a preacher quite as easily as it blasts the piety of a layman; and it is to be feared that we have much worldliness in the pulpit—perhaps it might be justly said that we have a good deal of worldly preaching. There are many who have succumbed to the spirit of the times while professing to proclaim the gospel of the eternities. There is a "super-calendered" clericalism that prides itself on being "up-to-date." For the rich and well-to-do, it offers soothing potions, and for the redemption of the poor and forlorn it relies upon a plate of soup and a "free dispensary." It knows but two prescriptions of religious value, viz., culture for the classes and coddling for the masses. It assumes that the prosperous need only to be pleased and the poor need only to be fed. The upper classes it would save by taste, and the lower classes by tating. That any class needs personal communion with the Spirit and fellowship with God the Father and Jesus Christ his Son, is a meaningless notion that finds no place in their minds. This type of preacher needs a revival, but without repentance he can do nothing to bring a revival.

There is a worldly evangelism which also must be got rid of—men who go about the land in the spirit of Gehazi, making revenue from religious gratitude, holding meetings for a price and selling song books for a royalty. This sort of thing was never heard of since the days of Simon Magnus until within the last twenty-five years. Luther and his contemporaries would have raged against it had it appeared in their day, the Wesleys would have scorched it with righteous rebukes, and Moody spurned it. It can draw crowds, stir excitement, agreeably affect men and women of shallow emotions; but it cannot bring souls to feel their need of God, nor lead them to the Savior.

These, and many other pagan things like them, must be put away, and the Lord must be sanctified in our hearts. These insurgent times must be brought into subjection to the living God. Vast treasure is in our hands; it must not be used for treasonable assaults on the kingdom of heaven. A proud intellectualism vaunts itself among us; by the uncarnal weapons of a potent spiritual ministry its strongholds must be pulled down, and every imagination and every thought and every high thing that exalteth itself against God must be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Brought very nigh to us is a benighted and bewildered heathen world, lying in darkness. It must be brought to Christ, or its speedy irruption will imperil Christendom. Never in the history of the world was a great, masterful, definite, spiritual gospel more needed. Some are questioning whether our Lord and his gospel are equal to such a situation. Can he put all these enemies under his feet? Yea, and thousands more, if his servants rely upon his power and keep close to his side.

O, my brethren, let us come to him for a new baptism of power from on high. "New books" are good, but new life is better. We could get a vast deal out of our old books if we only believed half the truth which they contain. "Advanced thought" is good, especially if it is advancing in the right direction; but advanced godliness is better. Growth in grace outranks an accumulation of academic degrees. Growth in grace clarifies and invigorates the mind. Some men have drifted into Arctic seas, and are mistaking the lines of the aurora of the North for the beams of the rising sun; they must head about soon, or their adventurous voyage will be lost in frozen seas. Let all of us set our sails toward the South, that we may meet the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings.

Without God we perish, both preachers and people. In the midst of our desolating material prosperity, which is in truth spiritual adversity, if we seek the Lord God of Israel he will be found of us, and he will turn again our captivity as the streams in the South.—Midland Methodist.

THE BIBLE IN OUR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D. D.

For some time "my heart has been inditing a good matter," and could I have claimed the "pen of a ready writer," this would have been before you for editorial consideration ere this.

During the summer just closing, we have, through the press, from the pulpits, before Chautauqua assemblies and divinity schools, read and heard much concerning the religious education of our young people. In a recent issue of Harper's Weekly, under the caption, "The Bible in the Schools," we have a decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois "against the reading of the Bible, the singing of hymns and the recital of the Lord's Prayer in the public schools." This decision was given in response to a petition of the Roman Catholics in the town of Winchester of that State. Right tersely does the editor say, "One of the great unsolved problems of the country is the religious education of the children who go to the public schools."

Were this a question which concerned Illinois alone, it might not be of such moment; but, to the contrary, it is the question in every section of our great country. Acting upon this momentous fact, the Roman Catholic Church establishes its parochial schools wherever possible; thus, in the mind of this scribe, setting a worthy example to the Protestant churches throughout the land. One or two sermons a year on Christian education, and thirty minutes on Sunday mornings of hasty and often poorly prepared instruction in the Sunday School, is about all that our young people among the masses are receiving of religious and Bible instruction. As a pastor, I have always answered to roll call in the Sunday School, and it has fallen to my lot to teach the class of some absent teacher many times. It has been the rarest instance in which I have found a class of any grade that had any general knowledge of the Bible or of the doctrines of the great Church in which they were being reared. Young men and young women, well grounded in the branches of an English education, who could easily secure a first grade certificate for one of our public schools, were totally incompetent to teach a class in the Sunday School with which they had been connected from their infancy. Young people who tell you of Alexander and his conquests, of Caesar and his wars, of Napoleon and his marvelous successes, could tell nothing of Joshua, of David or of Nehemiah. The history of Greece and of Rome, of England and of France, had found place in their education; but the history of Palestine—that most interesting of all countries—was practically an incognito. The conquests of our Pilgrim Fathers and their hardships in the New World they could recount to satisfaction; but the forty years of trials in the wilderness, and the final settlement of the tribes in the land of Canaan, was to them a blank. Much they could tell of great scholars, of prominent statesmen and warriors, but little of Moses, the greatest legal mind the race has ever produced, or of David, one of its greatest generals and writers. They might write of the "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire," but not of the rise and fall of the Jewish Church, nor of the history of the Reformation under Martin Luther.

In the earlier days this training was done largely in the home; but the home has now, in a great measure, committed this to the Church, and the Church in turn has committed it to the Sunday School. How will that branch of our Church life meet the responsibility? This question is the inspiration of the demand for better literature, more commodious buildings and better equipped teachers. One of the greatest enterprises of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the past four years has been the endowment of the chair of Religious Pedagogy and Sunday Schools in Vanderbilt University. While this is pre-eminently a move in the right direction, it is obviously utterly inadequate to the needs of the Church with its 1,200,000 pupils and more than her one hundred thousand teachers. It is well to educate a generation of preachers who can fall in with, or of themselves devise, methods for the more successful training of our young people, but we cannot hope from this source to obtain the thousands of teachers now necessary to carry on the work of the Sunday Schools. If the figures of the statistician, that more than eighty per cent of our Church members come from the Sunday School, are true, do we not owe to this department of our Church work the best equipment and most thorough preparation? When it comes to competent teachers of men and women of good moral standing and religious integrity, there is practically no difference between the teaching forces in the State schools and the Church institutions. What then is to differentiate the Church college from the State universities? Evidently the atmosphere that surrounds it and the curriculum that distinguishes it.

On my desk there are not less than four catalogues from as many different colleges. An examination of the curricula suggests very little difference between the State school and the Church school. It is true in the one set we have no reference to the Bible as a textbook, and also that in the other the weekly "units" given to the "Book of books" means practically little more. A young man going from the pastorate of this writer to a Church college expressed his disappointment that so little attention was given to the study of the Bible in the institution. He was, doubtless, one of many.

Whether it shall be recognized in my, or your day, Mr. Editor, the time is not far, yea now is, when the Bible must be given a place along with other branches which constitute the curriculum of our Church institutions. This, at least, is my humble opinion.

ARE CHILDREN BORN SAVED?

By H. Walter Featherston, D.D.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B.D., in the Advocate of Aug. 4, approved by Dr. Sawyer in the Advocate of Aug. 25, says—on Matt. xix, 14: "Of those who are like children in their traits—in humility, in trustfulness, in teachableness, in obedience—of such is the kingdom of heaven."

I am surprised that Dr. Sawyer and Brother Lipscomb should thus hark back to the Calvinism—more truly, the Augustinianism—of the Dark Ages. Men who believed that "there are (non-elect) infants in hell a span long," or that if dying infants are of the elect, while many surviving ones are damned by divine decree, and those also who believe that a baby dying unbaptized goes to purgatory, consistently interpret this Scripture as these brethren have done; but true Arminians do not believe that interpretation. Our new Order for the baptism of infants says: "All men, though fallen in Adam, are born into this world in Christ the Redeemer, heirs of life eternal and subjects of the saving grace of the Holy Spirit," and the prayer is made, not that he be regenerated, but "that he may ever remain in the fellowship of God's holy Church, by faith," and that he "may ever remain in the number of thy faithful and elect children." This very passage in question is quoted in our Order as proof of the position taken in this matter.

Our Lord in this passage declares of infants, not child-like adults, but infants absolutely—"of such (as these which I now touch and bless) is the kingdom." He then ADDS a lesson about adults being child-like to be admitted. See Mark x, 15. In Matt. xviii, 3, he says: "Except ye turn and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom." Paul incidentally remarks of the children of a Christian: "Now are they holy" (1. Cor. vii, 14), meaning, "Now are they members of the mystic household of God."

Brother Lipscomb, passing from the Scripture, proceeds to philosophize thus: "The evidences of depravity—wilfulness, selfishness, anger—are all too apparent from the start, and if the kingdom above is to be made up of little children, transported as they are unchanged to heaven, there must be a great many jarring notes of discord there, and sorrow and crying will not be done away." What proves too much proves nothing. I might say with equal truth that the evidences of depravity—wilfulness, selfishness, anger—are all too apparent in the very best regenerated men and women to admit of such classification. I have heard men claim sanctification and declare that they were utterly free from tendencies to these things, but have never failed to find even in them "evidences" such as my Brother Lipscomb would array to prove that babies are unregenerate.

He further says: "We believe that the spirits of children dying in infancy are sanctified as well as saved through Christ's atonement." Has a dying baby more claim on God's love and grace than a living one? If so, why? and where is there in the Word of God any proof of it? Is death a regenerating agency?

The New Testament teaches that faith is the condition of salvation. Dr. J. R. Graves, the great immersionist, argued that it was, therefore the sole prerequisite to baptism, hence infants should not be baptized. The argument carried logically on would prove that all infants are damned. "He" that believeth not is damned. The truth is that adults were told to believe and be saved because their unbelief had separated them from Christ. But nowhere in the Word of God is it said that infants are to be classed with adult sinners, sharing their condemnation for no fault of their own. Christ died for babies, for living babies, and until they can exercise faith no faith is required or can be required; but they are saved, "are born into this world in Christ the Redeemer, heirs of life eternal and subjects of the saving grace of the Holy Spirit"—they are born regenerate—sinners, i. e., depraved by nature, but regenerate by grace—fallen by nature, saved by grace—babies by the grace of him who loved little children and died for them, are "his lambs," are verily Christians and not reprobates.

This may not be the faith of the Calvinistic church, but it is the teaching of Methodism and the New Testament.

A TRIP TO CHINA GROVE AND ELSE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

The fourth Sunday in July I preached in Norfield, morning and evening, to good congregations. I was pastor there fifteen years ago, during which time we built the first and only Methodist Church ever built there. Early Monday morning I boarded the southbound train on the I. C. railroad, changed cars at Fernwood, and went to Tylertown. Here I met Brother T. H. King, the pastor at Tylertown, who had charge of me for a few days. I soon learned that Sister King was a good cook. A bountiful breakfast was served in due time. I thought the fried chicken (Methodist preachers' dish) equal to any I ever ate, and I have been eating fried chicken for more than seventy years. Am not tired of it yet. Sister King has the "Indian game" chicken. If all of them taste as good as that one did to me, I am surprised that all good women do not get and raise the "Indian game."

After breakfast, Brother King and I got into his buggy and in less than two hours time we were at "China Grove" Church, eight or ten miles north of Tylertown. Of course, I soon felt at home. We found the hill pretty well covered with people and horses, etc. A large crowd of old friends and former parishioners greeted us on our arrival. I was pastor there thirty-six years ago; held a successful meeting there in 1874, during which time fifty joined the church. While waiting for the preaching hour, I said to the crowd that surrounded me, "I was born near here 74 years ago; joined the church here 64 years ago; preached my first sermon here 54 years ago." "Don't know about that," said cousin John Conerly; "I was here and heard you. Don't think it was much preach." He was right; not much preach; yet I made my first effort at preaching 54 years ago there at China Grove.

China Grove is a beautiful place. They have a beautiful church, built about, or just before, the beginning of the War between the States, at a cost of $3,000 or $3,500. It has recently been repainted, so that it almost looks as well as it did fifty years ago. I was present at the dedication of the church long years ago. The name was changed at that time from China Grove to "Ralford's Chapel," but the name of the postoffice was China Grove, and the church still goes by that name. It was built principally by Rev. N. B. Ralford, a rich merchant and farmer who died in 1861. The church and grounds formerly belonged to one Ralph Stovall, a Baptist man; and China Grove was at that time a "Baptist Church." About ninety years ago one "Owen Conerly" came to this country from North Carolina, and bought out Mr. Stovall, church and all. Since that time it has been a Methodist Church.

Yes, it was here I gave my hand for membership in the Methodist Church, under the ministry of Rev. Willis H. Germany, M.D., 64 years ago. To me China Grove is a dear old spot. I was delighted when Brother King wrote me, inviting me to help in a meeting there. The meeting ran five days, and to some of us, it was an interesting time. I seldom, if ever, enjoyed preaching as well as I did during those days. The weather was hot, and I was tired from my day's work Sunday; yet the Lord was with me and helped me. But how sad I was at times as I looked over the congregation and noticed the absence of so many who stood by and helped in the "long ago"—Packwood, Conerlys, Reagan, Yarboros, Ratliffs, Omaras, Toneys, Bishop, Summers, Ball and others, most of whom have passed over the river. Yet the work is moving grandly on. Joe Packwood was steward 36 years ago; now his son is steward—a good one. B. W. Lewis was trustee then; now his son is steward. Wm. Ball was local preacher then. No local preacher there now.

N. B. Ralford was a noted local preacher 60 or 70 years ago at China Grove. He married the young and buried the dead. One of his favorite songs at a funeral was, "Shed not a tear o'er your friend's early bier." Another was, "Hail ye, sighing sons of sorrow, learn with me your certain doom." He impressed me when I was a boy as being a great preacher. He said on one occasion: "I have been telling people how to get to heaven; now I will tell you how to get rich." His text was, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." He said, among other things, "A man who has plenty to eat, plenty to wear, is out of debt, has something to spare to the poor—is a rich man."

Wm. Conerly was another man in that community, thirty-five years ago, who deserves special notice. He was a son of Owen Conerly, who owned China Grove ninety years ago. He was one of the purest and best men I ever knew, and no mistake—sweet, spritely, humble, meek, gentle, faithful, a good singer, and very powerful in prayer. When I was a young Christian he was helpful to me at times. When I was his pastor in 1872-3-4, he was the best help I had on the work. He was loved by nearly every one, saint and sinner. On one occasion during the Civil War, he was traveling on the train. The conductor mistook him for a man he had had some words with, and began to use some very rough language while talking to him. Brother Conerly looked up with surprise, but said nothing. A Mr. Finch, sitting near by, sprang to his feet, got between the two, and said: "You can't touch this man; he is next man to God Almighty." Yes, he was a grand, good man. When he died I was sent for to preach his funeral. I dearly loved Brother and Sister Conerly. He was the best help we had in the great revival at China Grove in 1874.

It was here H. M. Youngblood and J. B. Brown were holding a meeting fifty-five years ago, when the following incident took place: Brother Youngblood overheard a Mr. Fales say: "I am going to the altar to-night just to keep the meeting going." Brother Bowen said: "let him try it; I will fix him." Accordingly, Fales went up and knelt down. He was a large man, had a broad back. Bowen was soon astride him, pounding him on the shoulders with his fist, kicking him with his heels, saying as he did so, "You must pray, my brother; you must pray." Whether he prayed or not, I never learned, but he said afterwards he was going to whip that man Bowen if ever he met him again. Bowen heard of it and was really scared. Fales was a very large man, while Bowen was a small man. Brother Bowen told me of this incident years afterwards. He never got the thrashing.

Brother King, the pastor, is getting on nicely on the work. If I mistake not, Brother King is one of my spiritual children, and joined the Church under my ministry in 1879, at Adams' Camp Ground, nine miles west of Summit. A water mill, grist-saw and gin, and a blacksmith shop was about all there was at Tylertown 65 years ago. Now there is a large town, assuming "city airs," in some respects. There are two nice churches, Methodist and Baptist, a bank or two, quite a number of nice large stores, and two railroads running into it. It doesn't look like the same old place. The old water-mill is gone, the old blacksmith shop is gone, the old people are gone, but Tylertown is there to stay. The Methodist parsonage was located there years ago. It was formerly at China Grove. Brother King is nicely located in a good house. God bless him in his home and work. His people at China Grove showed their appreciation of my labors by handing me $39 before I left there. May the good Lord richly reward them.

LAY BAPTISM VERSUS APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

By Rev. W. T. Woodward.

II.

In 1633 there was another Church organized, the first of another class which obtained the denomination of Particular Baptists, and in the next century became the largest of the two. Let us look into the origin of this Church. "The first congregation of Independents, in 1616, had been gathered in London under the pastoral care of Henry Jacob, who was succeeded by John Lathrop. A number of this society came to reject infant baptism and were permitted to form a distinct Church, September 12, 1633, with Spillsbury for their pastor" (Armitage, Hist. Pap., p. 460).

This was six years before Roger Williams founded his Church, and twenty-five years after John Smyth started his. Who rebaptized John Spillsbury and his congregation? There seems to be no record of it whatever. Whether they proceeded like Smyth had done twenty-five years before, or like R. Williams did five years and a half later, is unknown, and as Dr. Cramp would say, "is of little consequence." Very likely, however, the congregation received immersion from Mr. Spillsbury, who had been immersed by some one who had been immersed by Thomas Helwys, who had been immersed by John Smyth, who had been baptized by himself. One of these three methods was adopted beyond question, for there was no other alternative; and no historian has ventured to suggest any other.

This Independent Church, out of which Mr. Spillsbury came, continued to lose members who went to the Baptists—William Kiffin and others in 1638, a greater number in 1641, and again in 1643, and finally the pastor, Henry Jessy, in 1645. Another Baptist Church or two were formed by the secession from this Independent Church, and that seemingly in an independent way—originating their own baptism. The splits and differences arose over the question of the communion, the mode of baptism and the subjects of baptism. Some of them believed and practiced infant baptism and others opposed it. (Armitage, History, Baptist, pp. 460-463.)

Henry Jessy was immersed by Hansard Knollys. This Hansard Knollys was really the foremost Baptist of the age, and he was truly a great man. He was born in Lincolnshire in 1598, before a Baptist Church was ever established. He was educated at Cambridge and was a thorough scholar. He was ordained to the priesthood in the Church of England. He went to America in 1638—the year R. Williams started his Church—but it does not appear that he and Williams ever met, nor was Knollys yet a Baptist. He served a Church in Dover, N. H., as pastor for a time, and returned to England in 1641, and became a very popular preacher in London. Soon after this he became a Baptist, more than likely it was while he was chaplain in Cromwell's army. We have no account of the exact time of the administration. However, he left the Baptists before he died.

It will be remembered that the first Church in Pennsylvania was organized at Cold Springs in 1684 by Thomas Dunlop, a preacher from Newport, R. I. Armitage says he was an Irish Baptist, and though he does not say so, he hints that he may have been a Baptist in Ireland. What of this stream from the Irish Baptists that makes part of the general current of American Baptist pedigree? Armitage says: "Probably the first Irish Baptist Church since the Reformation was formed in Dublin by Thomas Patience, assistant pastor to Kiffin in London. The date is not clear, but in 1653 a church was founded there." History of the Baptists, p. 571. Armitage says Kiffin was a member of Lathrop's Independent Church from which Spillsbury's Baptist Church seceded. Kiffin also came to Spillsbury in 1638. He withdrew from Spillsbury's Church and established another Baptist Church—the Devonshire Square Church—in 1653, and became its pastor (Armitage, p. 468). Therefore, Elias Keoch, the founder of Pennypeck Church, Pennsylvania, was baptized by Thomas Dunlop, who was possibly baptized by Thomas Patience, who was baptized by William Kiffin, who was baptized by John Spillsbury, who was baptized by one Thomas Morton, who was baptized by Thomas Helwys, who was baptized by John Smyth, who was baptized by himself—the John the Baptist of the English Baptists, as Ezekiel Holliman was the John the Baptist of the American Baptists. And here the pedigree runs into the water, where every Baptist preacher wants to go with you. You can trace very nearly every one of our Baptist brethren back to one of three men: E. Holliman, John Smyth, or John Spillsbury. No other baptism have they received than that administered by these self-constituted baptizers. How can it be authentic? If the first one was not rightly baptized, the second was not, hence two wrongs does not make one right.

One other article will close this series.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

IV.

John McLachlan, a native of Scotland, was presiding elder of the Washington District, including Richmond and Rocky Comfort, Mineral Springs and other charges adjacent, and at Brother McLachlan's suggestion Bishop Pierce appointed me to Mineral Springs. Nothing extraordinary occurred during the year. I was perhaps more crowded with work than usual. I had six regular appointments, and Prof. Martin, of the High School, lost his health two months before the close of the spring session, and through much persuasion, I took his place. About this time Mr. Wadley, editor of the town paper, persuaded me to sit on the tripod during his absence at the Press Convention. He was gone six weeks, and in that six weeks I saw every paper rolled out of the press and addressed to its proper place, and filled my place every school hour, and filled all of my appointments day and night on my circuit. After summer came on, I was very busy with revival work for several weeks. I had my protracted meetings, and there were three camp grounds in the county—one Cumberland Presbyterian and two Methodist. At Center Point, the different denominations in the vicinity and some outside people camped together, and notwithstanding the large numbers present, meals, lodging—everything was free. That was in September, 1880, and I have never known such great camp meetings since. The camps, or lodging rooms, were supplied with heaters, and everything to keep house with. The Lord seemed well pleased, good order and solemnity prevailed and I have known as many as forty bright professions reported in one night. There was an early fall that year. A snow fell in November that lay on the ground a week, and the breaking up was followed by a week of cloudy, misting weather, and as that was a black land country, we had as soft a spell of weather as I ever saw. In that soft time our Conference met in Prescott, only about forty miles, and wife and I went in my buggy. The trip was too bad to describe. We got to Prescott under difficulties, got our home, and attended church. No moonlight, no electric lights; thick, cloudy and misting rain. The unpaved streets were like butter. The vestibule was filled to repletion with hats, cloaks, and umbrellas galore. The latter got mixed and there were public announcements at almost every service respecting them. The business of the Conference moved right along. Large crowds attended day and night. On Thursday night our missionary secretary, Dr. A. W. Wilson, preached from "If we be beside ourselves it is to God, if we be sober, it is for your cause," etc. He read the text slowly and his voice was coarse and heavy, and for ten or fifteen minutes no interest much was manifested. It reminded me of a well loaded freight train moving out from a station. The movement is barely perceptible. The puffs of steam are heavy and infrequent. The outlook is unfavorable, but the puffs rapidly increase. The revolutions are rapid. The sparks fly, and the train jabs the earth as it thunders on its way. So the preacher's voice somehow reaches a higher key. The words come faster, great theological sparks and nuggets are evolved, great and original thoughts startle and bewilder the audience, and when people disperse the unanimous expression is, "The greatest sermon that I ever heard." An old local elder, a doctor of medicine whose name was Biggs, was present. He was an able preacher himself, and when asked what he thought of Dr. Wilson's sermon, replied: "Well, brethren, I must say that I never felt so small in my life. I do not think that I shall ever have the heart to try to preach again."

The next night C. F. Evans preached at the Methodist Church and Drs. H. R. Withers and A. R. Winfield were announced to speak on Temperance in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at the same hour. Dr. Evans being through, I walked across to the temperance meeting to see what I could. When I reached the door, it was standing full, and here came a young man and abruptly pushed his way out, and said as he passed, "That's all for effect." Quick as thought, some one replied: "It seems to have an effect on you." The house was crowded. Dr. Withers had finished and Winfield was in a good way. Some were laughing, some crying, and some clapping their hands, and cheering. H. R. Withers is a fine preacher and writer, but has been deaf for many years. A. R. Winfield was the most fluent speaker that I ever heard in the pulpit or on the rostrum, and his influence against the whiskey traffic will only be known in that great day. I am inexpressibly glad that I ever knew Dr. Winfield. I am sure that I am a much better man than I would otherwise have been. The appointments were read out on Monday night, and mine was the Arkansas River Mission. A lady sitting by wife said, when the appointment was announced, "Now you are going to the graveyard."

SARDIS DISTRICT NOTES.

The close of the third round on the Sardis District this year brings much experience, and the testimony of much work from the preachers of the district. Never before have I known the preachers of a district to do quite so much work in protracted meetings. All the meetings have been helpful, a few have been splendid revivals. The preachers on the stations deserve great praise for the ready and efficient help they have given the pastors in the country, and certainly their services to the country charges have been of immense value. These are S. A. Brown, W. N. Duncan, S. L. Pope, V. C. Curtis and J. W. Raper. They have certainly been loyal to the interests of the district, helping to solve the problem of the country. All the pastors have been intensely engaged. Brother Raper succeeded in getting Bishop McCoy to lift a large debt off of his Church at Byhalia and dedicate it. Brother Wendel has accomplished a great thing in building a beautiful church at Horn Lake. Considering the whole situation, I have not known a greater piece of generalship in church building. He is to have Bishop Murrain with him the first Sunday in October to dedicate this structure. The salaries are better up than usual and the preachers and people are hopeful of bringing up all assessments, but this will be a trying fall in this section. We were in a flood district, and a waterspout unparalleled in the memory of the people. On two trips to the country, I encountered more trouble from washed away bridges than in the whole of the twenty-five years that I have been in the ministry. But, all things considered, the district is in splendid shape, and the time from now on will be taken up in the work of bringing things to pass and getting ready for Conference here at Sardis, where we expect to have a great Conference under the presidency of Bishop J. H. McCoy.

Church News

Rev. George R. Stuart, the well-known evangelist, was scheduled to lecture at the Goodwyn Institute in Memphis on the evening of Oct. 1.

By request of the presiding elders of the Oklahoma Conference, Bishop Denny has announced that the session of that body will begin on Thursday, Nov. 10, instead of on Wednesday, Nov. 9.

The Texas State Sunday School Convention assembled in Houston on the 24th ult., and continued in session four days. It was a great gathering and many notable addresses by specialists were made.

Mrs. Frances Victoria Sankey, widow of the famous evangelist, died at her home in Brooklyn on Sept. 28, after a lingering illness. She was seventy-one years of age and had lived a beautiful Christian life.

The Nashville Tennessean states that Dr. H. M. DuBose preached an interesting and eloquent sermon at the Tulip Street Methodist Church in that city on Sept. 25. His theme was "The Power of Christ's Gospel."

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew met in Nashville, Tenn., on Sept. 28, with a large attendance. This organization of the Episcopal Church has for its aim the promotion of piety and religious activity among the young men of that denomination.

At the urgent request of the Board of Trustees, Rev. John R. Stewart, of the Tennessee Conference, has withdrawn his resignation and will continue as agent of the Superannuate Endowment Fund. His service in that capacity has given great satisfaction.

Union Theological Seminary (New York City) is now in its ninety-ninth session. The enrollment on the opening day was the largest in the history of the institution. This is a hopeful indication that the country is beginning to recover from a deficient ministerial supply, of which so much has been heard in late years.

The delay in the publication of the new Discipline is due to the fact that the General Conference made provision for it to be codified and annotated. This is a considerable task and it takes time to accomplish it. The advantage to be gained therefrom, however, will doubtless fully compensate for the tardy appearance of this most important book. Work hastily done, is seldom well done.

The Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America assembled in Cincinnati recently, with delegates present from all over the United States and from Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands. Among the matters to be considered are the questions of an open-pulpit canon and of having suffragan Bishops to assist in large dioceses and where the negro problem is embarrassing. It is also expected that several new Bishops will be chosen.

The last issue of the Methodist Review reprints Bishop Galloway's magnificent tribute to Jefferson Davis. The supply was exhausted and the demands for the number containing that notable discussion were so numerous and urgent that the editor decided to let the article reappear. This is well. Every intelligent Southerner should procure a copy of the Bishop's address and preserve it. It is of great historic value as well as a gem of rhetoric.

The Western Christian Advocate is authority for the statement that the Wesleyans of England, as well as the Northern Church in the United States, would be displeased to see our denomination assume the title of "The Methodist Church." The English Methodists themselves are said to be thinking somewhat of appropriating that name, which they claim they could do with more propriety, as they are the mother Methodism. The Western suggests that if we wish to get rid of the suffix, "South," the most available title for us would be "The Episcopal Methodist Church."

The conquest of Christianity in pagan lands is going steadily on. The Bible has found its way into 470 different tongues, and multitudes of the heathen are reading the story of the cross in their own language. A century ago there was no native Christian ministry in the foreign field; there are now about 93,000 active pastors and evangelists, and over a million communicant members. And at present they are reported to be coming into the native churches at the rate of three thousand a week. The man who prates about the failure of missions in this day is an ignoramus.

The star of Christianity in America, like the star of empire, is moving westward. An illustration of this is seen in an observation of the statistics of the Presbyterian Church. A few years back the largest churches of that denomination in the United States were Dr. John Hall's Fifth Avenue Church, in New York City, and Dr. Theodore Cuyler's Lafayette Avenue Church, in Brooklyn. But now the First Church of Seattle, Washington, is in the lead. It has 4,113 communicants, 544 of these coming in on profession of faith last year. The congregation raised for the various benevolences during 1909 about $21,000, and for its own expenses $62,544. The pastor of this magnificent flock is Dr. M. A. Matthews, who was stationed in Jackson, Tenn., a few years ago, and is well known in North Mississippi. And it is he who has built it up and made it what it is. While in the Volunteer State, Dr. Matthews was distinguished for his eloquence and intense and unflagging zeal. It pleases us to note that he has become one of the really great pastors in the Western Hemisphere.

THE FIRST ANGLICAN, AMERICAN AND METHODIST HYMN BOOK.

The study of the standard hymns of one's church is a means of spiritual and intellectual growth. We have known many people whose school privileges had been few, but who by Bible and hymn-book reading had learned to express themselves in good English, and had cultivated a taste for good reading. Young Christians find difficulty in leading in prayer in the social meeting of their church. Much private prayer will bring the spirit of prayer; much Bible and hymn-book reading will very greatly aid expression in testimony and public prayer. Many Christians have thoughts and emotions in meetings, which, if they could express them, would be of great spiritual profit to themselves and to their fellow worshipers. Herein as elsewhere, "All beginnings are difficult," and "Practice makes perfect." One must be content to falter and flutter at first, if needs be, in order to fit himself for this line of usefulness. Well do we remember our earliest attempts and even sufferings in taking up the real cross of public prayer and testimony. As we began to fill the mind with Bible and hymn-book our difficulty began to decrease.

A good "fad" for a young Christian—or even for one no longer young—is hymnology. From the newspapers, secular and religious, may be clipped and filed many a story of the influence of hymns on individuals and on congregations. Facts concerning the authors and the origin of hymns often appear. The circumstances under which a hymn was written often lights up the hymn with new meanings. A scrap-book made up of such clippings soon becomes valuable to its owner. Such a habit will lead the collector to the public library of his town, to see what books are there on hymnology. If a good library, he will there find Julian's Dictionary of Hymnology, which is the greatest storehouse, and doubtless will be for many years to come. This will become to the collector his chief book of reference. The smaller books, which we will not name, he will take out and read. He will soon want to own copies of some of these, and will constantly be adding to his store of useful and interesting information on the hymns of the church.

The first American hymn-book was also the first in the Anglican Church, and also the first Methodist hymn-book. The title-page of the fac simile reprint before me reads:

"Collections of Psalms and Hymns. Charles Town. Printed by Lewis Timothy. 1737."

The size is seven inches by five. It has seventy-four pages. The fac simile also has six pages of Preface, which gives the story of its loss for about a century, its discovery and reprinting. We are acquainted with the lucky finder, and the London old book-shop where he found it, and have kept track of it since, when the finder sold it back for a few pounds to the bookseller of whom he had bought it for a few shillings; then, when it was sold at auction, for twenty pounds, in 1894; then ten years later, 1904, when it was sold again at auction for one hundred and six pounds. It was then supposed to be the only copy in existence; but later we found a second copy in the Lenox branch of the Library of New York City, much to our great delight. Where should a copy of this American book be, if not in America? The book nowhere has in it the name of Wesley, yet undoubtedly it is his work. Only the title page is dated. There is no foreword. The other side of the title-page is blank, and on page three begin "Psalms and Hymns for Sundays."

In 1738, and in 1741, John Wesley issued two other volumes with the same title, save that "A" preceded "Collections" in these two volumes. Because of these two volumes confusion existed, and for nearly a hundred years the American Book was lost sight of, being confused with these two. But in the Bodleian Library at Oxford is John Wesley's own list of his books published up to the date of 1740. It includes "Collection of Psalms and Hymns, 1736." This list he prepared for a new edition of Wood's "Athenae Oxoniensis." Here was a puzzle. Did he mean to write 1738? The 1738 book seemed to say Yes. Research students agreed on this, until the discovery of this book, in 1882. But this title-page says "1737." As Wesley's list was made from memory, we conclude he had made a mistake, and that he should have written 1737. The recently discovered original manuscript diaries of John Wesley, so much written and talked of for two years past, prove that 1737 is the correct date of the publication of this book, which he began to prepare for the press in 1736.

The results of these priceless diaries are now given to the public by the Methodist Book Concern in "The Journal of John Wesley, Standard Edition," in six volumes, the first of which is just off the presses of England and America. This volume gives in detail his experiences in America, and among other things the origin of this historic hymn-book. From the fourteen references to this book we easily trace its evolution. John Wesley was an Anglican missionary. His church then had no hymn-book proper. It had the metrical Psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins, and of Tate and Brady. In George Hebert's "Temple," and Jeremy Taylor's "Golden Grove," etc., hymns were inserted. There was no church hymn-book. John Wesley was a singer, a constant singer, as his diaries show. He had heard the Moravians on his voyage and ashore in America sing hymns in their services. He began to prepare a hymn-book for his own meetings. He translated and adapted German hymns, a Spanish psalm, and a French hymn. He borrowed freely from Watts, Hebert, Austin and Hickes. He also borrowed from his father, and his brother Samuel, whose proof-sheets were sent to him from England to correct for the press. He had written hymns of his own, though the muse of his brother Charles had not yet been awakened. But of his own, only one stanza appears in this historic book. At first he did not intend to print, but to use the manuscript in his meetings. Before he printed he fitted these hymns on to individuals and meetings, just as Concord people say Emerson used to try his lectures on them before giving them to the greater public. Wesley's "society" meetings were held on Wednesdays and Fridays. The book is divided into, "Psalms and Hymns for Sunday," forty, on forty pages; "For Wednesday or Friday," twenty on eighteen pages; and "For Saturday," ten, on sixteen pages.

An entry in the newly-found diaries, for August 3, 1736, shows he was in Charlestown, and that at 8 a.m. he was "on business in town." Probably his business was with Lewis Timothy, printer and publisher, concerning the coming hymn-book. From this note he may have made four years later the list which gives 1736 as the date of its publication, instead of its proposal for publication. Saturday, August 14, records his reading the "Collection," then in manuscript to his friend and love, "Miss Sophy." On Monday, sixteenth, he reads it to Mrs. Colwell. December 18, 1736, finds him working on a "Scheme for Psalms." Ten from Watts begin this Collection. The next day he is working on a new section, "Scheme for Hymns," or "Hymn-Book"—spelled "Hym," also the twenty-first and twenty-second of December. January 18 to 20, 1737, we find him very busy on the new book. On Tuesday, April 12, 1737, he embarked for Charlestown, taking the manuscript with him. On the voyage three entries of his singing are made. On Thursday, April 16, 1737, the manuscript was delivered to Mr. Timothy, the printer and publisher, whose date on the title-page, "1737," we now know to be correct. On Monday, the eighteenth, he "corrected proof." This is the last entry concerning this book, which was not only the first Methodist, but also the first American hymn-book, and also the first hymn-book proper in the Anglican Church. To America belong these honors of origin.—W. H. Meredith, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Secular News and Comment

Any of our readers interested in Esperanto—the universal language—may procure a grammar pamphlet, free, by writing to the Amerika Esperantisto, of Chicago.

The Richmond Virginian announces that the Randolph-Macon Woman's College, at Lynchburg, has started the new session under the most flattering conditions.

It is reported that a Chicago firm will begin the reclamation of 40,000 acres of uncultivated land south of Franklin, La., in the near future. Much of this kind of work needs to be done in the Southern States.

There is talk of erecting a monument to the memory of the late Senator John Warwick Daniel in Lynchburg, Va., the city in which he resided. An orator, a statesman, a scholar, a great lawyer, an incorruptible patriot and a gallant Confederate soldier, he well deserved such a distinction. The recollection of such a man should never be allowed to pass from the public mind.

The value of unmanufactured cotton exported from the United States during the past eight months showed a decrease of $1,300,000 as compared with the same months of the preceding year. The value of American-made automobiles sent abroad during the same period was $8,300,000, a gain over 1909 of $3,200,000. In inventive ingenuity the people of the United States are easily first among the nations of the earth.

King Edward VII reigned in Great Britain for nine years, during which time the cost of maintaining his household was forty-two and a half million dollars. Monarchy is a most expensive thing, and the publication of these figures is said to have sprung the Labor Party to a new and vigorous attack upon it. Government of any kind is a mighty problem. The danger in an empire is oppression and burdensome taxation; in a republic the menace is the demagogue and the money power.

President Taft is said to be a total abstainer from intoxicants. He is reported to have made recently the following statement: "The ideal state, and that which we should work for, is prohibition, unquestionably. Even if some can take it or leave it alone, to quote a common phrase, nothing is gained by its moderate use; and the risk he incurs is at times imminent. I refuse to take such a risk. I do not drink." This is both sound philosophy and a good example.

The consumption of coffee is said to be on the increase throughout the world, the gain of 1909 over 1908 being 2-1-2 per cent. In the United States, 18,730,000 bags were consumed. Brazil produces nearly three-fourths of the total supply of this commodity. We have no wish to advocate coffee-drinking, but we are enough of a Louisianian to greatly prefer it to postum and all kindred concoctions, the compounds of which harp upon its evil effects to promote their own personal gain.

The growth of Birmingham, Ala., during the past decade has been most phenomenal. According to the census figures, which have just been announced, its present population is 132,685, a gain of 94,270 within the last ten years. This makes its percentage of increase 245.4—the largest of any city in the United States, as far as the census returns have been tabulated up to the present time. The North Alabama metropolis, with its abundance of iron and coal, bids fair to become a second Pittsburg.

A spirited contest for the office of United States Senator is now on in Kentucky. The Hon. Thomas H. Paynter aspires to succeed himself, and is being opposed by Congressman Ollie M. James and Mr. D. G. Park, a lawyer of Paducah. If Mississippi is the Indiana of the South politically, may not the Blue Grass State be called the Kansas of Dixie? At any rate, both are somewhat uncertain in matters political, and one of them is known as "the dark and bloody ground," and the other as "the bleeding" commonwealth.

Miss Marjorie Miller, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Walter Miller, of Tulane University, who was accidentally drowned in Alabama this summer, was buried a few days since in the Mexican Gulf. She had a passion for the sea, and is said to have often requested her mother, if she should die, to let her body rest beneath its murmuring waves. The parents did not have the heart to refuse this request after her tragic death. Miss Miller would have been a senior at Sophie Newcomb College this year, and her decease was the occasion of profound sorrow among a wide circle of friends.

The hobble skirt made its first appearance at the University of Minnesota a few days ago. It was bound just above the ankles by a band of velvet ribbon drawn so tight that the wearer could scarcely move. In addition to being stared at by all who saw her, the lady was ridiculed by the students and advised to go home. With a red face and angry tears she made for the car line, affirming that the young men were the rudest things she had ever seen and that she would never wear the dress again. All honor to these young gentlemen! That they have some sense of decency and propriety is much to their credit.

A kind of house party at the White House began on Sept. 26, and continued for a week. Upon invitation of the President, all of the cabinet officers took up quarters there that they might have the best possible opportunity for a thorough discussion of governmental affairs. It was thought that this was desirable after the long vacation of the summer, which scattered Mr. Taft's counsellors and interrupted their weekly conferences. From the disturbed appearance of things throughout the country, we do not doubt that these gentlemen need to put on their thinking caps, if they expect to keep their chieftain at the helm of the ship of State for a second quadrennium.

A bronze statue of Gen. Thomas Jonathan Jackson (the famous Stonewall) was unveiled on the State Capitol grounds at Charleston, W. Va., by the Daughters of the Confederacy, on Sept. 27. It is twenty feet high, and represents Gen. Jackson with one hand on his sword and the other grasping his field glasses. The ceremonies of the occasion were imposing, the parade being led by the "Stonewall Brigade" Band, of Staunton, Va., and a battalion of cadets of the Virginia Military Institute, where Gen. Jackson was an instructor before the Civil War. The West Virginians reflect credit upon themselves in honoring this stainless Christian gentleman and greatest of American soldiers.

Having become the financial center of the world, it is probable that America will also more and more become a center of literature and art. Mr. Pierpont Morgan has for some years been bringing to this side of the Atlantic European masterpieces in painting, and now Mr. Thomas F. Ryan, another New York millionaire, is actively reinforcing him in enriching our art galleries with the imported treasures of other countries. According to the secular press, the latter gentleman has announced his purpose to procure for the Metropolitan Museum of New York City a selection of the best works of Rodin, the greatest living French sculptor, and has set aside a million dollars to accomplish this task. It is said that the New York institution will provide an entire room for this exhibit.

All of the State educational institutions in Mississippi are now under the control of one board of trustees, consisting of seven members. Whether this is a wise arrangement, time and experience alone can tell. For our part, we entertain very grave doubts of the feasibility of such a scheme of management. At the meeting of this body at Oxford, in September, Greek letter fraternities were abolished at the University. This is the culmination of a fight which has been waged against secret fraternities at that institution for many years. That the board has reached a wise conclusion in this action, we are by no means convinced. We should not be surprised if the result is not to cause many of the most promising young men of the State to go elsewhere to be educated.

The reform element, led by Colonel Roosevelt, was in complete control of the Republican State convention, which met in New York on Sept. 27, and the "Old Guard," which had made war on Governor Hughes and the ex-president, was completely routed. Mr. Roosevelt acted as temporary chairman, and delivered a ringing address in advocacy of purity in politics. The permanent presiding officer of the convention was Senator Elihu Root. Mr. Henry L. Stimson, an able lawyer, who is forty-three years of age, and who won distinction by his aggressive prosecution of the sugar trust, was nominated for governor. The platform heartily endorsed the administration of President Taft, and declared for a general reformation in State affairs. It is said that Mr. Roosevelt will take the stump for the ticket.

NEW ORGANIZATION AT MAGNOLIA.

Under the leadership of Rev. H. B. Watkins and the inspiration of a visit from Miss Janie Watkins, the ladies of Magnolia have organized a Missionary Society of twenty-four members, with Mrs. L. L. Lampton corresponding secretary. We welcome this new organization and pray God's richest blessing upon them.

The treasurer's report for second quarter, 1910-11, is as follows:

Dues	$309.07
Pledge	265.76
Bible woman	23.00
For Miss Martin	8.50
Retirement fund	17.28
Conf. fund and minutes	32.68
Special donation for work in Korea	100.00

$756.29

The treasurer reports the pledge twenty-five dollars less than it was the second quarter last year. When we consider the fact that we have increased our pledge, this seems serious.

Let each member do her best to have at least three-fourths of the amount sent in by the beginning of the fourth quarter.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Natchitoches, La., was organized in April, 1910, by the district secretary, Mrs. E. G. Sewell. There were six members present. The enrollment now is seventeen, with the pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper, as an honorary member.

The workers are very enthusiastic and most of them take the Missionary Advocate.

The study for the past months has been with the workers in the foreign field, namely: China, Korea, Mexico, Brazil and Cuba. The study for next year, beginning with November, will be "Western Women in Eastern Lands."

On the third Tuesday in October (the 18th) there will be an open meeting of the Missionary Society at the pastor's. This will be a missionary quiz, and a good meeting is anticipated.

RINGING RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions adopted by the Farmville District Conference of the Virginia Annual Conference will doubtless prove interesting to many of our readers:

Whereas for three successive years the Methodists of Virginia, through their representatives in district and annual conferences assembled, have by overwhelming majorities called upon the trustees of Randolph-Macon College, as the representatives of said Methodists on the said board, to join with the conferences in a request to the proper civil authorities to secure such amendments to the Randolph-Macon charter as will give to the creator and the real owner of the institutions a voice in the selection of the trustees who are to represent the owner in the Randolph-Macon board; and

Whereas the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, composed of representative ministers and laymen from all over the Church, in view of the new and critical conditions that confront us in the educational field, has clearly defined the conditions which should be complied with in the selection of the trustees of the schools and colleges of our Church, and has strongly advised that our district and annual conferences shall request boards of trust to amend their charters in conformity with the action of the General Conference; and

Whereas the majority of the trustees of the Randolph-Macon board have refused to comply with the repeated requests of the district and annual conferences, and have also disregarded the recent action of the General Conference; and

Whereas the declaration of independence of denominational control on the part of the board, first announced in order to secure the Carnegie benefits, the apparent denial of the representative capacity of the board and the refusal of the board to accede to the wishes of district, Annual and General Conferences are regarded by many of our people as a violation of a great moral obligation to Virginia Methodism, as a distinct lowering of the moral ideals of sincerity and fair dealing, which should be set before the young people in the Randolph-Macon institutions, and as hurtful and continued disloyalty to the Church, which created the said board; and

Whereas this course has greatly impaired the confidence of many of our people in the management of the board, and has weakened the hold of the Randolph-Macon institutions upon their interest and affection; and

Whereas it is of vital importance to the welfare of our beloved Methodism that the interest of our people in our educational institutions shall not only be maintained, but shall also be strengthened, and to that end it is absolutely necessary that their rights in the government and control of said institutions shall be carefully safeguarded, and that their gifts of labor and money shall not be diverted from the intention of the givers; therefore, he it resolved:

First, That for the good of the Church in all its departments of work, there should be a speedy and final settlement of what is known as "the Randolph-Macon question," and we hereby petition the Annual Conference to adopt such plans at its coming session as will accomplish this result.

Second, That we believe a conference between the board of trustees of Randolph-Macon College and the Virginia Annual Conference at the session in November would be of great value in the accomplishment of this end; and to secure this result, we hereby request the various members of the Randolph-Macon Board to unite in signing a call for such special meeting, that there may be a full and final discussion at that time of the issues involved between the Conference and the board.

Third, That as loyal Methodists, we believe that the action taken with practical unanimity by the General Conference, the great impartial law-making body of our Church, should be accepted by all parties as the only possible basis for final settlement.

Fourth, That during the past three years, believing as we do that the Randolph-Macon institutions are the property of the Church, we have voted for increases in the assessment for the benefit of Randolph-Macon College, and have collected and paid the same as usual. But in the event there should not be a final settlement of the issues involved at the coming Conference, we request the Annual Conference, in laying the assessment for Randolph-Macon College, to make the payment of the same to the college treasurer conditional upon the loyal acceptance by the said trustees of the action taken by the General Conference, as we are unwilling to give any further support to work under the direction of a body of trustees who will disregard the action of the General Conference, and will persistently refuse to accede to the requests of the Virginia Methodists, which they were selected to represent.

Fifth, That we believe that any member of the Randolph-Macon Board who is unwilling to accept the action of the General Conference as final and is unwilling to accede to the request of the Annual Conference, which he was elected to represent, should immediately resign his place on the board of trustees and allow someone to be elected who will act as the representative of the Conference, and in the event there shall be any member of the said board who is unwilling to be bound by the action of the General Conference, and to accede to the request of the Annual Conference, we hereby request the Annual Conference to call for the resignation of such member or members in order that the views of the General and Annual Conferences may be properly presented on the Randolph-Macon Board.

Sixth, That this District Conference stands firmly by its oft-repeated declaration, that it is the duty of the Church to own and to control her own institution of learning, in which her children can receive thorough instruction under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost. We rejoice in the fact that the child of this district, the Blackstone Institute, is carrying on the work for which it was established to do, and is a striking proof of the success which can attend an institution owned and controlled by the Church.

Seventh, That we deeply regret that the board of trustees of the Vanderbilt University, which since the General Conference of 1898 has been the property of the entire Church, and for which an appeal is made by order of the General Conference in all our Churches on Children's Day, has refused to accept as final the action of the General Conference concerning the relation of the said university to the Church. Such disloyalty to the supreme authority of the Church by those high in her councils is not a local matter, but greatly concerns the entire Church, and we confidently look to the College of Bishops to maintain the rights of the Church as declared by the General Conference.

Eighth, That a copy of this paper be sent to every member of the Randolph-Macon Board, that they may know of the action taken and the request contained therein.

A DAY AT PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

If there was ever an ideal place for the location of a school for the higher education of the girls of our State it is undoubtedly the cultured little city of Port Gibson. We have a plant situated there which should be the pride (and it is of those who know anything of its work) of every Methodist of the Mississippi Conference. It is one of our oldest institutions. Many are the historic incidents connected with its long history. The past has been bright, but the future points to still brighter things.

The doors were opened for this session on the 14th of September, and I am told that the attendance on opening day was better than it has ever been before, more than seventy-five boarding pupils being present and more yet to come. It seems now that the boarding patronage will be over a hundred. These young girls are from all parts of our State, and some from Louisiana and Texas. After some little experience with the college life of our Southland, I must say that I have never been thrown with a student body that seemed to be more contented, with less confusion during the opening days, and with a stronger determination to do consistent work.

It was my pleasure to be on the campus from Saturday afternoon until Monday morning. I found the discipline rigid, but kind. Each member of the faculty seems to have a personal interest in every individual student, and in return I saw a strong love and respect from the student body toward every member of the faculty.

Especially was I impressed with the spiritual atmosphere which pervaded the campus. I attended the vesper meeting held every afternoon just at twilight. The students conduct this meeting themselves and it consists of songs, Bible reading, and prayer. It is indeed a spiritual feast to attend one of these meetings.

Too much praise cannot be given to Brother Hawkins, his good wife, and the consecrated faculty they have to assist them in putting this school where it stands to-day. The growth of the school shows that they are meeting the approval of our people, and I believe that they are meeting the approval of our God. May each year be better than the one that went before and from these walls come girls strong of body, strong of mind, and strong of spirit, who will go out into our land to strengthen the Church and the home by scattering sunshine and brightness wherever they go.

OPENING OF MERIDIAN COLLEGES.

The Meridian Male College and Meridian Woman's College opened their session under most auspicious circumstances. A large attendance of promising students from New England to California, from Chicago to Cuba, were present the opening day.

The buildings of both colleges have been renovated and improved; new opera chairs put in the auditorium, new pianos throughout the conservatory, and many other improvements made during vacation that greatly added to the already well-equipped plant.

The colleges were opened by revival services of eight days, as is the custom of these colleges, the preaching being done by the college pastor and professors. During this time quite a number of the students of both colleges were gloriously converted—a good beginning for a college year.

On the opening day Prof. Lord, the new pipe organ teacher from England, played two fine numbers on the great pipe organ recently erected in the college auditorium. After a song and prayer addresses were made by the presidents of the colleges, also by Mr. L. P. Brown, president of the Board of Trustees. The college pastor, Rev. Joseph H. Smith, followed with a few remarks explaining that the colleges stand for the churches, are undenominational and train their students to be loyal to their respective churches and go home to be better helpers to their pastors than ever before.

The presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Lewis, followed with an excellent address, heartily commending the work of the colleges. He said he had been to many college openings, but had never attended one so spiritual in his life.

Rev. G. S. Harmon, pastor of one of the Meridian churches, followed with a felicitous and unctuous address, which greatly interested the audience.

The new director of music was announced to the audience. He is a great master, having studied for ten years under the renowned De Kotski, court pianist of the Emperor of Germany, his favorite pupil, the only one to whom he ever gave a diploma.

The new art teacher, Miss Lucy Denham, of Mobile, graduate of Sophie Newcomb and for one year a teacher there, was introduced to the audience. She has had years of successful experience. The college is fortunate in getting these two new teachers, together with the pipe organ professor, which makes quite a strong addition to the faculty.

School work began with unusually bright prospects. These great colleges are growing in favor and in usefulness throughout the land. To God be all the glory.

NEW BOOKS.

Addresses of J. J. Carlisle, late President of Wofford College. Edited by his son, J. H. Carlisle, Jr. The State Company, Columbia, S. C., Publishers, 252 Pages.

Dr. Carlisle was a great educator and a distinguished Christian and citizen. As a layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he ranked with Chancellor Garland and a number of other strong men, who both before and since the civil war brought honor to the denomination to which they belonged. The present posthumous work consists of eighteen addresses made on various subjects by the famous "South Carolinian." They were delivered at different stages of his long and illustrious career, beginning with his graduating valedictory spoken at South Carolina College in 1844, and ending with an address to the finishing class at Wofford College in 1904. Among the more notable utterances contained in the book is his fraternal address to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in session at Cincinnati in May, 1880. Dr. Carlisle's speeches could scarcely be called brilliant; they are rather profound, solid, and instructive. It is well that this volume has been issued; it preserves much that should not be allowed to perish, and it deserves a wide circulation.

When Christ is the aim, every step of the way will prove a blessing.—Southern Churchman.

THE WISHING GIRL.

She wished she were a princess—
Or, better still, a queen;
She wished to see strange countries
That she had never seen.

She saw the wealthy ladies
And wished to take their place;
She wished for their fine jewels,
Their sarins and their lace.

She wished that all her duties
Were changed to "ay and fun,
Or that, by merely wishing,
Her duties could be done.

But strange, with all her wishing,
She never wished to be
The helpful and unselfish child
That others wished to see!

FABLE OF THE HORSESHOE.

Do you know the German fable about the horse-shoe? In the olden times, in a little village of Germany, a blacksmith was hard at work. The sound of the anvil attracted the attention of the Devil. He saw that the smith was making horseshoes, and thought it would be a good idea to get his own hoofs shod. So the Devil struck a bargain, and put up his foot.

The blacksmith saw with whom he was dealing, and nailed a red-hot shoe on, driving the nails square into the Devil's hoof. The Devil then paid him and left; but the honest blacksmith threw the money into the fire. He knew it would bring him bad luck.

Meanwhile, the Devil had walked some distance, and began to suffer the greatest torture from the shoes. The more he danced and kicked and swore the worse the things hurt him. Finally, after he had gone through the most fearful agony, he tore them off and threw them away. From that time forward, whenever he saw a horseshoe, he would run off, anxious only to get out of the way.

The German peasantry all believe this story to-day, and one can scarcely find a step or a barn door that hasn't a horseshoe nailed up.—The Presbyterian.

THE WIDENING CIRCLE.

There go the Andersons in their new automobile, said Augusta, as they sat on the vine-shaded piazza. "I'm crazy for a ride in a real auto, and I've never even set foot in one. People are selfish, and I don't suppose Maude Anderson will ever think of inviting me."

"Well," said her friend Mattie, "I don't suppose they realize what a great treat it would be to you or me." She hesitated a moment, then continued, boldly, "Just as you don't realize what an immense pleasure it would be to mamma if you would invite her some time when you are going for a long drive. Of course, I've been with you lots of times, Gustie; but I've wanted often to ask you to let mamma have my place sometimes. She never has anything but trolley rides, you know."

"Why, I never thought of it," said Augusta, promptly. "Why didn't you ask me before?" We've always had a horse, and have been so used to driving that I never thought it would be any special pleasure. Tell your mamma I'll call for her on Thursday, and we will take the prettiest ride I can find—where trolley cars won't take one."

When Mattie told her mother of the invitation that evening, Mrs. Loring's face lighted up. "Indeed, I should like it very much, Mattie; but wouldn't Augusta enjoy it more if you went instead?"

"No, mamma, she really wants you this time. I'm not invited at all," laughed Mattie. She had not told her mother of the conversation that had led to the invitation, and that the first suggestion of the drive had come from Mattie herself.

"It has been a long time," said Mrs. Loring, "since I have had anything more than a car ride."

"Dadé, thin," said Mrs. Murphy, who had just brought back the laundry, and had stopped a few minutes, at Mrs. Loring's invitation, to rest and enjoy the cool glass of lemonade that was very refreshing after her long walk. "It's meself would be glad to get a car ride now and then—way out to the parks with me little Maggie; but it's precious few pickies I can be sparing fer car-rides this summer."

Mrs. Loring and Mattie gave a quick glance at each other, as the same thought dashed through their minds. Had they not neglected a very simple means of giving pleasure to others? They could well afford the money to give Mrs. Murphy and her ten-year-old Maggie a refreshing car ride at times.

"Mrs. Murphy, when I have my pleasant carriage drive next Thursday, I'd like to think that you and Maggie are having an outing, too. You take those dinies and enjoy a good ride. It will give me real pleasure."

Wasn't Mrs. Loring good to give us this lovely ride?" said Maggie to her mother, as, in the very front seat of an electric car, they rode out to one of the beautiful parks the next Thursday afternoon.

"Yes, indeed," said Mrs. Murphy. "And it's meself was wishin' we could a brought Biddy Ryan's little lame Timmie along wid us. How he would a liked to see the green grass and the yaller buttercups."

Maggie puzzled over this for some time. She knew it cost money for car rides, and she knew her mother had none to spare. It was hard work sometimes to get enough to pay the landlord and to buy food. Before the ride was over, she had solved the problem.

"Mamma, I think Mrs. McCarthy would lend me her baby carriage, and I could wheel Timmie over to the square, where he could see the fountain and the grass and the trees, and it would be nice and cool. He wouldn't be very heavy if he is 'most five. Can I do it, mother?"

"Yes, dear, an' it's a good thought, darlin'," responded Mrs. Murphy.

So the deed of kindness was "passed along." And each one found it was in her power to give pleasure to others—to share what seemed a simple thing to her, but meant much to others less fortunate than herself.—Ida Kenniston, in the Circle.

"WORK DAY."

Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

Once more we call the attention of our people and preachers to the "Work Day" for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. This day to be observed, we trust, by every congregation in the Methodist Church in Louisiana, is next Saturday, October 8th, on which day it is requested of all our people and friends that the proceeds of one day's labor be given to the Orphanage. It is hoped that every child will seek something to do, and all who are not regularly employed will find something to do whereby some amount may be earned and given to the Orphanage. All laboring people, those who work for a salary, or those who run a business, will estimate the worth of the day's proceeds and give to the Orphanage.

It is hoped that appropriate services will be held in the churches at the Sunday-school hour, and that an opportunity will then be given for all to contribute their earnings. In addition, we trust that the preachers will all present this claim to their congregations at the regular service and give those who have not attended Sunday school an opportunity to contribute their part. Thus, with a combination of services and efforts, we hope that enough money will be realized to pay off the two notes that will come due on November 1st for $8,000.

If all our people will join in this effort it can be done. If one Church fails, that will afford excuse for many others, and we may fail to meet this obligation, and be compelled to continue our work in the hampered way that we have been compelled to do this year.

The time for us is critical. This effort will indicate the future support that we may expect from our people. At considerable cost we have sent literature to all our churches. We have put notices in the secular press of the State, we have repeatedly called attention to this effort in the Advocate, we have sent out ten thousand programs to the Sunday schools. Our people are thoroughly apprised of the needs of our Orphanage. If ever we are to expect help from our own people it is now, and we are depending on the Methodist folk to help us meet this heavy debt this fall.

In the name of homeless and destitute children we appeal to our people to rally to the only institution the Methodists of Louisiana have for this purpose in the State, and help us to save it by paying off the indebtedness that we are compelled to meet this fall.

HELP US NOW!

Let the preachers and Sunday School Superintendents send all moneys to my address, Lock Box 333, Ruston, La.

NINETEEN THOUSAND MISSIONARY COMMITTEES.

By Dr. C. F. Reld.

Few realize the far-reaching effect of the action taken by the General Conference at Asheville in regard to the Laymen's Missionary Movement. In point of authoritative recognition and provision for universal adoption of its methods, that action places the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the very van of the movement.

According to the legislation above indicated, Bishops holding the Annual Conferences will ask, "Who is elected Conference leader?" Presiding elders holding the District Conferences will ask, "Who is elected district leader?" and holding his Quarterly Conferences he will ask, "Who is elected Church leader?"

The preacher in charge in holding his Church Conferences will ask, "Who are the Missionary Committee?"

The Annual Conferences and most of the District Conferences will probably also elect vice leaders.

In the M. E. Church, South, we have forty-nine Annual Conferences, three hundred and six districts, nineteen thousand, one hundred and thirty-six Church organizations. The Church committees will usually be composed of from five to seven members, say an average of six. Therefore, the immediate effect of carrying out the requirements of our Discipline will be the election of at least 49 general officers, 306 staff officers, 19,136 line officers and the mobilizing of a vast army of 115,000 laymen, pledged to the great cause for which the Laymen's Missionary Movement stands. Now what do you think of that?

To this writer it appears that had the Laymen's Missionary Movement in our Church done no more than officially set to work so large a per cent of our membership with a purpose so Christ-like it would stand amply justified.

But many of our pastors will probably follow the wise example of Dr. A. M. Hughlett, of Parkersburg, W. Va., and enlist from twenty to fifty volunteers for the every member canvass, which will very largely increase our working force until we shall become a mighty, on-going, rejoicing and triumphant Church, making the waste places at home and abroad blossom as the rose.

The possibilities indicated above are inspiring, but after all, we remember that we are laymen, thoroughly imbued with an intense loyalty to our Bishops, our presiding elders and pastors. It is to them we look for initiative and guidance—without them we would not move, we cannot move effectively. We stand at "attention," and when from them the command "Forward March" comes ringing down the line, the music of the fife and drum will be heard throughout our borders.

Nothing is sweeter than love, nothing stronger, nothing higher, nothing broader, nothing better either in heaven or earth, because love is born of God, and, rising above all created things, can find its rest in him alone.—Thomas a Kempis.

LET METHODISM BE MAINTAINED.

One would think from what he reads and hears that the day of denominational disintegration is near at hand—that at no distant time sectarian lines will be wiped out, and all branches of the Protestant Church will come together in one grand organization. In Canada the Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists are seeking to unite, and down in South Africa the same denominations, with the Baptists added, are discussing the advisableness of merging into one fold. Mission boards are talking as if they might cease to operate independently and act in concert in their evangelistic movements, so that in pagan lands there would be no Methodists or Baptists or Presbyterians, but only Christians. Very beautiful is this dream of a reunited Christendom, but is it feasible or desirable? Under present conditions, we very seriously question it.

We believe in fraternity and federation in religious work, and we earnestly deprecate sectarian strife and wasteful competition, but we fear that a "gelatinous, creedless Christianity" would prove lacking in cohesiveness and evangelical spirit and enterprise. There are times when it is easy for people to agree because they have no definite convictions and feel little interest in what is going on. It is indifference, rather than oneness of sentiment, that brings them together. We should not be surprised if the movements toward union springing up in some quarters are due to a growing unconcern for the fundamental teachings of the gospel.

We are pleased to see the smaller bodies of Methodism merging and all of the followers of Wesley coming to a better understanding of each other. They are already one in doctrine, and we hold firmly to the view that they should at least co-operate sufficiently to do away with unwholesome rivalry in the same fields. But we doubt if it is wise to gather into one conglomerate fold people of variant and conflicting religious beliefs. With a membership made up partly of Baptists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists, what would the Methodist preacher do? Would he cease to emphasize the universality of the atonement and the freedom of the human will? Would he no longer refer to infant baptism or stress the witness of the Spirit? For our part, we want the glorious doctrines of Methodism to continue to be preached with unabated vigor and the Methodist Church to be perpetuated until the end of time. We make no apology for this sentiment. It is not because we are a bigot that we cherish this desire, but because we conscientiously believe that the teachings of Methodism are a correct interpretation of Biblical Christianity, and that they cannot be modified or surrendered without a distinct and far-reaching loss.

Nor do we take much to the idea of seeking to establish a single national Church in each heathen nation. We believe, of course, that in missionary work minor denominational differences should be done away with as far as possible, and that there are many enterprises in which the different churches may unite and heartily co-operate; but with the view that the distinguishing features of the several sects are developments of an entirely local character which transplanted Christianity may without difficulty discard, we do not at all agree. There is nothing geographical in the question as to whether or not the atonement is universal and all men may be saved. Such an issue must concern the disciples of Christ everywhere on the planet. Is the history of the Christian Church to be kept from these new converts to the faith? Are they not to know of its struggles and divisions and triumphs? Poor, indeed, would they be without this knowledge.

And what is there in the achievement of State churches anyway to make them desirable? Rome has been the national church in many countries and the results have been deplorable. The independent bodies in Great Britain to-day are more spiritual and active than the Established Church, and are steadily gaining in power and influence. Let us have a united and self-governing Methodism in every foreign land, but not a promiscuous organization which is one only in name and held together by artificial ties that must soon be torn asunder.

THE TRUE STANDARD OF RIGHT.

The air in Methodist circles has lately been filled with the preaching that whatever is legal is honest and right. The editor of the Advocate has more than once demurred to this affirmation, and has been taken to task therefor. We are pleased to note that two able and distinguished American citizens have recently incidentally indorsed our position. In his notable address at the Chicago banquet, from which Mr. Lorimer was excluded, Theodore Roosevelt said: "Public honesty is a mere sham if we limit the word 'honesty' to mere law honesty." And in his address at Clinton on September 29th Hon. C. H. Alexander, an eminent lawyer and candidate for the United States Senate in Mississippi, declared: "The law is not the measure of moral integrity, but the court of arbitration is found in the human breast." It is usually right to obey the human law, but not when it does violence to one's conscience and the obedience would result in inequity and injustice. Daniel disregarded the king's decree and went to prison rather than dishonor God. It is a modern revision of the young Hebrew's creed that rights, no matter how sacred, must be trampled under foot to meet Caesar's demands, without even seeking to have him vary them—that the statutes of a petty commonwealth should with the Christian take precedence over the moral law of the infinite Jehovah.

Nor does success determine what is morally proper. Right is often on the scaffold and wrong upon the throne. The tattered flag of the stars and bars went down forever on the fated field of Appomattox; did that mean that the principles for which the South stood were unsound and unworthy? And did Davis and Stephens display an improper spirit after the conflict when the one wrote his "Rise and Fall of the Confederacy" and the other his "War Between the States," to defend the justice of the Southern cause? And was it wrong in the South to appeal from the bloody arbitrament of arms, which had gone against her, to the loftier tribunal of public sentiment? Nay, it is to-day her proudest triumph that the civilized world has come to see that she stood upon the Constitution in the struggle, and that the principles for which her sons poured their blood were just and right. The fact that a cause is lost is not by any means proof that the contention in its behalf was wrong and without justification. Not until the infinite Judge mounts his throne in the sky will every contested issue receive proper adjudication and even-handed justice be meted out to each and all.

THE COMING OF THE BISHOPS.

On Thursday, October the 20th, the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will gather in this city in their semi-annual meeting. This conference of our Chief Pastors in the autumn is a new requirement, the last General Conference feeling that a spring meeting alone was insufficient to accomplish the best results for our growing work. The Bishops are in an important sense our leaders, and we doubt not that this second consultation in the fall, when most of the Annual Conferences are on the eve of being held, will prove highly beneficial. It will concentrate the attention of the entire Episcopal College upon the various problems of administration and procure concert of action when desirable. It is scarcely needful to say that the Methodists of New Orleans are pleased at the prospect of having these distinguished brethren among them. They count it an unusual honor and assure them that a hearty and enthusiastic welcome awaits them. A nobler body of men can nowhere be found, and nothing will be left undone to make their stay in the Crescent City thoroughly comfortable and pleasant. The occasion promises to be a profitable and memorable one.

AN INTERESTING OCCASION.

Millsaps College opened on September the 21st with three hundred students in attendance. The occasion was historic and of unusual interest, in that it marked the inauguration of the new president of the institution, Rev. David C. Hull. A large audience—many coming from a distance—gathered in the chapel for the opening exercises. On the rostrum were seated the Governor of the State, the Mayor of Jackson, a number of the trustees, and many prominent ministers. By a happy circumstance Bishop Murrah, who had thought he would be unavoidably detained elsewhere, was present to preside. Among those who made speeches were Governor Noel, Mayor Crowder, President J. C. Hardy, of the A. & M. College, Prof. J. N. Powers, State Superintendent of Education, Archdeacon Gordon Smeade, of the Episcopal Church, Rev. W. L.

Duren, of Tupelo, and Rev. N. B. Harmon, of Philadelphia, Miss. Bishop Murrah then introduced President Hull, whose eloquent and able utterance was the feature of the occasion. The Jackson Daily News gives the following account of his reception and inaugural address:

"Amidst a storm of applause, and paying a high compliment to his successor, Bishop Murrah then presented the new president, Dr. Hull, and it was several minutes before the enthusiasm subsided.

"The impression made by the new executive head of the institution was instantly favorable. He is a man somewhat below medium height, of stocky build, whose every movement suggests physical strength, while his face is that of a man of high character, deep learning, marked executive ability, and aggressive energy. His manner is that of a man who not only has confidence in himself, but can inspire confidence in others.

"And this favorable impression increased fourfold when Dr. Hull commenced to speak. His words came clear, crisp and well enunciated, falling from his lips with matchless diction and inspiring eloquence. Indeed, he is an orator far above the average in ability, and his address was in every respect the feature of the opening exercises.

"A clear, clean-cut and broad-minded policy for the government of the institution was announced by the new president. After expressing appreciation of the honor that had been conferred upon him, and indulging in the hope that he would prove at least in some measure a worthy successor of the great educator and gifted divine who had preceded him, and to the people of Jackson and the State generally for their cordial pledges of sympathy and support, he launched forth into a frank and straightforward talk to the student body, telling the young men that they will rise high or sink low, according as they use well or ill the opportunities presented by the college. Above all things else, he said, it is the purpose of Millsaps College to develop Christian manhood in Mississippi.

"At some length Dr. Hull told of the influences that have made Millsaps College a great institution. When he spoke of the spirit of Bishop Charles B. Galloway, whose splendid energies and eloquent tongue were the greatest creative force of the institution, the audience broke forth in a storm of applause, and similar enthusiasm followed a tribute to the beneficence of Major R. W. Millsaps, who had given more than all other agencies combined for the upbuilding of the institution.

"Bishop Murrah was paid a high tribute, and Dr. Hull then made an eloquent appeal for the development of the college spirit and the building up of Christian manhood within the student body. Throughout the address he held the audience spell-bound with his magnificent oratory, and it was the unanimous conclusion when he finished that the board of trustees had chosen wisely and well."

ADVOCATE DAY.

Sunday, October the 30th, has been chosen for "Advocate Day." Our special campaign for the Conference organ, which is now on, will close then. Let no friend of the Advocate defer work until the 30th, but secure renewals in his charge at the earliest moment possible. Delay is never wise, if it can possibly be avoided. But it is our desire that every preacher in Louisiana and Mississippi who has not been able to do so sooner shall make a special effort in behalf of the paper on the fifth Sunday in October. We sincerely trust that the claims of the Advocate will be presented from five hundred pulpits on that day. Brethren, we earnestly appeal to you to help us. Let our slogan from the red hills of Tennessee to the surfbeat of the Mexican Gulf be, "A greater Methodism and a greater Advocate."

IT DOES NOT COUNT.

Dr. W. C. Lovett, the capable editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, in referring to our statement that, according to the last report of the General Board of Education, Millsaps College, in point of endowment, stands next to Trinity among the colleges of Southern Methodism, says: "Wonder if the Board of Education and Dr. Meek forgot Emory, which has carried its endowment to half a million dollars, three hundred thousand dollars of which has been secured by subscriptions—most of it reduced to interest-bearing notes." Brother Lovett's statement furnishes its own explanation. The Board of Education does not take into consideration endowment funds which exist only on paper. Usually notes of that character are worth less than fifty cents on the dollar. Millsaps has some resources of that kind, but we do not count very strongly upon them. Our $300,000 is in hand, invested, and being handled by that consummate master of finance, Major R. W. Millsaps. And there is scarcely a doubt that, within less than a decade, our cash endowment will top the $500,000 mark. We do not mean to depreciate Emory—on the contrary, we are proud of its equipment and record. An institution that can produce such men as W. A. Candler, and a host of others, we might name, needs no further endorsement. But if our Georgia friends aspire to keep it abreast of Millsaps they must push it energetically along.

KEEP THE DATES IN MIND.

Saturday of this week will be Orphanage "Work Day" in Louisiana, and reports will be received in the churches on Sunday, the day following. We trust that every Methodist preacher and the entire laity of the State will co-operate in making the occasion one of interest and a marked financial success. Every consideration should prompt us to lend a hand to this worthy movement.

The Mississippi "Work Day" is Friday, October 14th, and rallies will be held in the churches on Sunday, the 16th. Do not forget the time. We hope that Brother Williams' heart will be made happy by a steady stream of checks and money orders coming from every part of the commonwealth. Let us provide generously for these little ones who have been bereft of a father's and mother's care and love.

DR. W. L. WEBER DEAD.

The news of the death of President W. L. Weber, of Mansfield College, will be received with profound sorrow throughout the Church. The end came last Saturday at a sanitarium in Shreveport, La. Last year Dr. Weber was compelled to relinquish the presidency of Centenary College on account of ill-health. It was hoped that he had recovered his strength, and Mansfield had begun a most auspicious session under his leadership. The loss to that institution cannot be estimated. Dr. Weber was a son of Rev. S. A. Weber, of South Carolina, and a son-in-law of Bishop A. W. Wilson. We extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved and sorrowing family. A fuller notice will appear later.

PERSONAL.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, the able presiding elder of the Durant District, recently made a visit to Sardis and Como.

The Palmer Creek Camp Meeting was held last week with a good attendance. This is one of the oldest camp grounds on the Gulf coast.

Dr. F. N. Parker preached a strong and forceful sermon at the Parker Memorial Church of this city last Sunday. He is a favorite with that congregation.

After a stay at Cooper's Well, where he went to recuperate, Rev. E. W. Lipscomb is again at his post at Biloxi. We trust that he has returned much improved.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Moss Point, has lately visited relatives at Itabena, Miss. He also attended the opening of Millsaps College, of which institution he is a trustee.

Rev. S. J. Davies, formerly presiding elder of the Alexandria District, has been elected to a position in Centenary College. This selection has been very generally commended.

The church at Boyce, La., which was damaged by an overflow of the Red River some years ago, has been overhauled and greatly improved in appearance. It is said now to be a gem of beauty.

In our issue of last week we referred to having received a communication from Rev. G. W. Bachman concerning Bishop McCoy's illness of September the 3d. We should have written the 23d.

New Augusta, Mississippi Conference, has lately had a series of revival services, in which the pastor, Rev. L. Carley, was aided by Rev. H. A. Gatlin. There were twelve additions to the Church.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, the energetic pastor at Hazlehurst, has recently been given a much needed rest by his worthy flock. He spent a few days on the coast visiting friends, who gave him a most cordial welcome.

Rev. M. H. Moore, of Poplarville, is fortunate in having secured the assistance of Rev. W. M. Sullivan in his meeting. Brother Sullivan is a pastor-evangelist who knows how to reach the hearts of the people.

Rev. W. T. Griffin writes: "Our fellow-Christian worker, Hon. T. M. Evans, is presiding at the fall term of the Circuit Court of Harrison County at Gulfport. The interests of the people could be in no better hands."

Rev. B. F. Lewis has been blessed with a great meeting at Columbia, Miss. He was efficiently assisted by Rev. C. N. Guice, of Summit, though he did some of the preaching himself. Thirty joined the Methodist Church and ten the Baptist.

Rev. L. T. Sargent, our pastor on the Aberdeen Circuit, has our sincere sympathy in the loss of his daughter, Mrs. W. M. Francis, who recently died at Baldwin, Miss. May he have the support of the everlasting arms in his sorrow.

Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, has been having an interesting series of services, in which the pastor, Dr. A. F. Watkins, has been assisted by Brothers Harbin and Griffin and the resident ministers of the city. Much interest has been manifested.

Rev. M. L. Ward is pleased with the progress of his work on the Mantachie Circuit, Corinth District. He serves a good people, whose interest in the enterprises of the Church is on the increase. We thank him for kind words concerning the Advocate.

Rev. G. H. Thompson, of Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, preached a stirring series of sermons at DeKalb, Miss., a short time since. He was formerly in charge there and is held in high esteem. Rev. R. H. Barr, the pastor, was much pleased with his work.

At a church conference in Sardis a few days since the following committee was appointed to begin making arrangements for the entertainment of the Annual Conference, which is to convene there the last of November: Dr. J. W. Boswell, Hon. J. B. Eckles, Mrs. D. G. Pepper, and Mrs. J. Q. West.

Rev. D. Scarborough made the heart of the publisher rejoice a few days since by sending fifteen subscribers to the Advocate, accompanied by a check to correspond. These came from Fernwood, the liveliest church in Mississippi. Thank you, Brother, and may the Lord continue to bless your noble flock!

Owing to illness, Dr. S. A. Steel was not able to meet his engagement at Mansfield this week, where he was expected to hold a union meeting for the churches of that city. Dr. J. B. Lawrence, pastor of the First Baptist Church of New Orleans, was invited to conduct the revival in his stead, and it is now in progress.

In a note bearing date of the 1st inst., Rev. W. L. Graves, of Itabena, writes as follows: "On the 24th ult. we closed a fine meeting at Thorn, Miss., where Rev. R. P. Goar is pastor. During the week there were perhaps a hundred conversions and reclamations. Thirty-six were added to our Church. Brother Goar is succeeding admirably."

We were pleased to have Brother and Sister L. E. Alford, of Bogalusa, La., drop into our sanctum one day last week. They were accompanied by their little daughter, Gladys, and Miss Annie Alford, of Magnolia, who at that time was visiting her brother. Brother Alford expects soon to have the inimitable Abe Mulkey, of Texas, with him in a meeting.

Writing from Shreveport on the 30th ult., President Felix R. Hill says: "The first two weeks of the fall term of Centenary College give great encouragement. It is expected that by a month hence the attendance will be 120." This is indeed gratifying news. Dr. Hill is proving himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed" in the educational field.

Mr. J. J. Williams, a member of our church at Bunkie, La., was fatally injured in a railroad accident the latter part of August. He was an employee of the railway company and in the discharge of his duty when the misfortune overtook him. He is said to have been a man of good character and a faithful Christian. The Advocate sympathizes with the bereaved family and friends.

Rev. J. J. Golden, of Lucedale, Miss., is making things go forward in his charge. He has paid a church debt of $1,200, sold the old parsonage, which was small and inconveniently located, and built a handsome new one on the principal residence street of the town at a cost of $1,800. He has also had seventy additions to the Church. We are indebted to Brother Harbin for interesting information.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, under date of Oct. 1, writes from Haynesville: "We lost one of our best and most useful laymen last Monday, Mr. John D. Odum, of Colquitt, La. He was found dead in bed Monday morning by his wife. His decease is a great loss to our Church and that neighborhood. A faithful steward and trustee has gone to his reward. His boys will take up the work where he left off. A suitable memoir will follow."

Memorial resolutions from the Rosedale Church, received two or three days since, brought the sad intelligence of the death of Miss Mag Newman, who was well known throughout the Mississippi Delta. We know nothing of the particulars of her decease. She had been an ardent and life-long Methodist, and had often been a guest in our home. We are grieved to think that we shall meet her on earth no more. To the relatives and friends, we extend sympathy.

The Harperville Church, Scott Co., Miss., is flourishing under the pastorate of Rev. A. M. Broadfoot. The congregations are large and the membership is growing. Plans are under way to cell and otherwise improve the house of worship. The old church at Forest has been disposed of, and a new and commodious structure will be erected there in the near future. Brother Broadfoot was reared near Forest, and has a strong hold upon the people.

Ex-Governor and Mrs. J. K. Vardaman, of Jackson, Miss., have announced the marriage of their daughter, Miss Anne Alethe, to Mr. Andrew Langley Fairley, of New Orleans, late in November. The bride-to-be is a young lady of many charms and graces, and has a wide circle of friends and admirers. The prospective groom is a son of Dr. Peter Fairley, a well-known physician, of Jackson. He is now associated with a large insurance company in the Crescent City.

We thank Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, for the following interesting account of a meeting which he has lately held: "Rev. L. C. Branscomb, of First Church, Birmingham, came to us on Monday, September 19th, and preached twenty-five times to the edification of our people. He is strong, scholarly and spiritual—a great preacher. It is our opinion that no better series of sermons were ever delivered in our church. Thirty members have been received thus far. Rev. R. P. Neblett led the singing."

A Self-Help Bureau has been organized at Millsaps College, under the direction of Dr. J. E. Walmsley. The plan in contemplation is to find work about the city of Jackson which needy students can do to aid in meeting their expenses. This movement deserves hearty commendation. The working boys of the country have in them, as a rule, the making of noble men. James A. Garfield said he never met one of them without lifting his hat, because he knew what possibilities might be buttoned up under his shabby coat.

First Church, Shreveport, is being taken good care of, though the beloved pastor, Dr. H. M. Whaling, was forced by ill health to leave before the assembling of the Annual Conference. Dr. Hill will preach every Sunday morning until a pastor is secured. The Rev. S. J. Davies occupied the pulpit on the evening of the 25th ult., and the Rev. T. J. Warlick, the presiding elder, preached last Sunday. We have a brief but interesting account of the status of things in this fine congregation, which we hope to publish in our next issue.

Bishop W. B. Murray reached his home at Jackson last week after ten days of strenuous work in Texas. The Houston Post speaks in the highest terms of a sermon delivered by him on the occasion of the Houston District Conference, pronouncing it one of the most scholarly and eloquent discourses ever heard in that city. His text was, "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." The Bishop speaks enthusiastically of the brotherliness and enterprise of the Texans, and grows eloquent when talking of the outlook for Methodism in the Lone Star State.

The religious tide at Eupora, Miss., shows no abatement since the great revival recently held there. Rev. Eugene Johnson, the faithful pastor, in a letter to the office on September 30th says: "I am glad to report an increased attendance at prayer meetings and upon Sunday school. We have organized in the latter a men's class, in which there are already fifteen young business men, and we expect it to grow. The teacher is Miss Ely Willing, an intelligent, consecrated young lady, who also is one of the instructors in the public school." We are indebted to Brother Johnson for a nice list of subscribers to the Advocate and commendatory words.

Mr. A. L. Hopkins, of Sicily Island, La., under date of the 27th ult., writes as follows: "Died at her residence on Sicily Island, Mrs. Mary Glover Doniphan, aged 87 years and 7 months. She was for many years a great sufferer, though patient and resigned to the last. She was 70 years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her husband was the late Col. T. A. S. Doniphan. She had no children, but had an adopted daughter, several nieces, and one nephew, the writer. She was one of the Advocate's oldest subscribers." We extend heartfelt sympathy to the sorrowing relatives and friends, and pray that God may sustain and comfort them. Mr. Hopkins would be pleased to have the Natchez papers copy this notice.

Rev. D. E. Kelley, Conference Evangelist of the Mississippi Conference, spent several hours between trains in New Orleans last Tuesday, and honored our office with a pleasant call. Brother Kelley was just in from Lumberton, where he assisted Rev. T. W. Adams in a series of revival meetings which resulted in 51 additions and 117 conversions, and was on his way to Magnolia, where he will be in a meeting with Rev. H. B. Watkins. Brother Kelley has been a very busy man all during the year, he having held eighteen meetings and preached 348 sermons since Conference, with the following visible results: Conversions, 1,182; additions, 589; family altars established, 234. Brother Kelley is enjoying excellent health, and speaks of his work in most hopeful and enthusiastic manner. His address is Purvis, Miss.

From a Columbus (Mississippi) paper we appropriate the following: "Mrs. P. P. Beazley, of Brownsville, Tenn., who is visiting her daughter, Mrs. R. P. Neblett, in this city, sustained a serious accident a few days since when she fell from the front steps, having lost her footing as she was going out to the gate. She fell to the pavement and was thought to have only sustained a shake-up and a few bruises, but later it was found that her left hip had been fractured. She was taken to the Columbus Hospital, where careful medical attention was given. It will take several weeks to heal. Mrs. Beazley is 70 years of age." We sympathize with Brother and Sister Neblett in their anxiety for their mother, and pray that her recovery may be more speedy than is anticipated.

Mount Pleasant, Miss.:

I have been on the Mt. Pleasant work since July 27th. Since I have been here, I have held a protracted meeting at each one of the four churches. Brother Young, Brother Raper and myself did the preaching. We have had nineteen accessions and hope to have more. We expect to make a full report at Conference. You can find no better, more pleasant and worthy people than compose this charge. Asking an interest in your prayers, I am, your brother—Standifer Raper.

Rural Hill Circuit:

I have held six meetings on my own charge and one on the Kosciusko Circuit, with very gracious results. I had the efficient aid of Brother W. H. Dees in these meetings, who preached the Word of God in power and demonstration of the Spirit. Many testified for Jesus and shouted the praises of God with hallelujahs on many occasions. Rev. W. A. Clark, of the Kosciusko Circuit, was with us in one meeting, and preached to the profit and delight of all. As a result of our several revivals, we report the following results: 91 conversions and reclamations and 24 accessions to the church, 20 of them being on profession of faith. There were four family altars and no prayer meetings when I took charge of the work in the beginning of the year; now there are five prayer meetings, well attended, and 33 family altars. The older members say that the people are upon a higher plane of godly living than they have been in a long time.—T. L. Oakes, P. C.

Columbia, Miss.:

We have just closed a meeting here lasting nearly three weeks. The first week the work was carried on by myself, assisted by the pastor of the Baptist Church. Then Brother C. N. Gulce, of Summit, came to our help. There were three services a day, viz: 9 a. m.; 3:30 p. m., and 8 p. m. At the 9 a. m. service all the stores of the town closed, together with the banks. We had full houses in the day, and crowded houses at night greeted the preacher. There were a number of conversions, about twenty-five to thirty family altars erected, and over thirty accessions to our church, principally on profession of faith, and ten to the Baptist Church. During the year, there have been to our church at this place over fifty accessions and nine infant baptisms. We have large congregations and frequently crowded houses. Our Sunday school has twice overflowed, and by Conference we will have paid off a debt of about $1,000 on the parsonage.—B. F. Lewis, P. C.

Rienzi, Miss.:

You have the proper name, both as a noun and verb, for you "advocate" fully and freely what is right and good in the face of the Church and the world. The Rienzi "parson" has just finished all his meetings, and is now in the parsonage reflecting upon the sweet and inspiring associations with the best people in the world. The Holy Spirit has directed our course, energized and blessed all our efforts, for which we are truly and sincerely grateful. It was my pleasure to hold one meeting in Tennessee in the Columbia District, where we met some good people and enjoyed a successful revival. We have good prayer meetings and have Sunday schools at all of our churches, also have two Woman's Home Mission Societies on the work. We have superintendents who are wide-awake, and have the interest of the young people at heart. Our folks all appreciate our faithful presiding elder, Brother Jacob, who is so untiring in his labors, and wholly consecrated to the Master's service. We fear the pulpit of to-day, like other potent places of molding public thought and life, has its elements of deviation from the designed standard. Some of its occupants strive too much for the applause of men instead of using the gospel in its power and simplicity. The world is longing to-day for the pure gospel message, as set forth in that divine Book, the fountain-head of all knowledge.—Elijah H. Cunningham.

Lucedale, Miss.:

We began our meeting on Sept. 18th, which continued ten days. Rev. Walter G. Harbin reached us the first night and preached nine days. He is a man of strong faith and has power with God and men. His preaching is clear and convincing. His special services for the children and to men only are the finest I have ever seen. Brother Harbin does not leave a single stone unturned. Some of the visible results of the meeting were: a large number of conversions, twenty-one accessions to our church and six to the Baptist Church, fifteen family altars erected, thirteen subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and our church and town brought closer together and nearer to God. May God's richest blessings rest on dear Brother Harbin and the good work he did for us.—J. J. Golden, Pastor.

Carson, Miss.:

We had a very enthusiastic and well attended Laymen's Meeting at Carson M. E. Church, Sunday, Sept. 18. It was Brother M. L. White's regular day to preach, but as he had business of the utmost importance at West Columbia in the Master's work, could not be here. Promptly at 11 o'clock, the meeting was called to order, and after the splendid choir rendered a couple of songs suitable to the occasion, Brother V. T. Miller led in an earnest prayer, after which little Georgia McGehee stepped upon the rostrum and bade all a cordial welcome, which was responded to by Mr. Luther Carraway in fitting words. Brother G. W. Galloway spoke in his usual attractive style on the results and findings of the great Conference at Edinburgh. This discourse edified us all and will, I trust, mark a new epoch in our church. Miss Myrtle Holloway spoke on the report and progress of the Woman's Home Mission Society, which was full of information and encouragement to the ladies. After this, we adjourned to the grove by the church, and the ladies spread a sumptuous dinner which was heartily enjoyed by all. Dinner being over, the choir sang some beautiful hymns, then the chairman called the meeting to order with prayer by Prof. J. F. Burrow. Brother Ed. Broom entertained us with a delightful talk on the subject of education of the head and heart, and Brother R. E. Holloway spoke to us eloquently on the great mission of the Church. Prof. J. F. Burrow made the closing speech on the subject of "Scriptural Giving," which was impressive from start to finish. The exercises closed at 3 o'clock with a fervent prayer by Brother Hugh A. Laird. The memory of this meeting was so sweet we were in no hurry to leave the church, and we shall always cherish a happy memory of this Laymen's Meeting in the town of Carson, on that beautiful Sabbath in September, 1910.—Henry T. McGehee, (Circuit Lay Leader).

DeKalb, Miss.:

I began my first meeting at Marvin on the third Sunday in July. I was assisted by Brother C. G. Griffin of Daleville, Miss. My second meeting was held at New Hope the fourth Sunday in July. I was assisted by Rev. C. M. Chapman, of Southside, Meridian. My third meeting was held at Pleasant Ridge the second Sabbath in August. I was assisted by Brother M. H. Moore, of Poplarville, Miss. My fourth meeting was held at DeKalb in September, beginning the third Sabbath. I was assisted by Brother George H. Thompson, of Hautiesburg.

Miss. These brethren are loyal to the doctrines of our Church. They handled their subjects in a masterful manner, giving evidence that they are students searching after the truth underlying God's Word. I feel free in saying that I never heard better preaching in my life than that by Brother Geo. H. Thompson, at DeKalb. Great good has been the result of our labors in these meetings. Some conversions, four additions to the church, family altars erected, and men pledged themselves to cut out profanity. One Sabbath school was organized with fifty members. Our gratitude goes up to God and those faithful brethren who labored so zealously for the spiritual uplift of our people.—R. H. Barr, P. C.

Seventh Avenue, Meridian:

In my last communication I was just about to leave home to help Rev. J. W. Thompson in another meeting about six miles west of Pachuta, and we arrived in time to preach on the night of July 15, and remained till the following Friday night and witnessed some old-fashion services and saw some bright professions of conversion with six accessions to the church, and two young men accepted the call to preach the gospel. Our next engagement was at Frost Bridge camp meeting about thirteen miles east of Waynesboro, Miss., where we had for our co-laborer Dr. Harrison, of Meridian Male College. The meeting continued ten days, but I was only there from Monday, July 22, till the following Saturday, as I cannot afford to leave our own work on Sunday. It was a hard-fought battle, indeed, yet some good was done and the camp reorganized and started back "up the hill," as it was as near the bottom of the hill as most any place I ever saw. Dr. Harrison remained throughout the meeting and did some good work that will abide. From the 11th of September till the 15th we labored with Brother McClellan at Last Gap in a meeting about six miles west of Meridian. Good was done, yet we didn't see the meeting we had hoped to see. Four or five bright professions and one accession and the church strengthened, were the visible results. We came in from the above mentioned meeting on Wednesday night the 14th for our quarterly meeting, which was well attended and interest in church matters unabated. On the 18th we had a blessed day at our church; three joined our church, one from the Baptist Church, making twelve who have voluntarily come from that denomination to us this year, and none leaving us to go that way; another from the M. E. Church, and another on profession of faith, all adults, making at least thirty-five accessions this year to our little church. Our presiding elder preached to a crowded house for us on the night of the 18th and we enjoyed his discourse. What a humble, consecrated man he is! We are now on the eve of leaving for another meeting eighteen miles south-west of Meridian, in a district where there is not a Methodist Church in twelve miles, but many Baptists. Many are hungry for the experience for which Methodism was raised up. They want us, so we go, and in all probability a Methodist Church will be organized.—J. A. Wells.

CONCERNING ASSESSMENTS.

Referring to Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey's letter in the Advocate of Sept. 22 in regard to a better apportionment of the assessments by the district stewards, I make this suggestion: Suppose the basis of the pastor's salary be continued in making the assessments, but an exemption of $200 or $300 be made on all pastors' salaries. For example, suppose we exempt $300, then the assessments on a $500, a $1000 and a $2000 salary will be in the ratio of 2, 7 and 17, instead of 5, 10 and 20 as at present.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special, curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE NATCHEZ DISTRICT,

And Others Who May Read This.

A note added to my "fourth round" calls attention to questions 24, 27 and 29 as they will stand in the New Discipline. I am reminded that the New Discipline is not yet issued. Question 24 relates to the election of stewards, 27 to the election of Sunday School superintendents and 29 reads: "Who is elected Church leader" and refers to the "lay leader."

I am thoroughly convinced that many of us give far too little attention to the matter of getting the best men available for the offices named in these three questions. I am quite sure that some charges of which I know, are backward and dull and almost lifeless because the wrong men are stewards, when better ones are available.

A man of narrow views, indolent habits, so selfish that his own business is of more importance in his view than are his duties as a steward, and so careless that he will neither seek to know the duties of a steward, nor seek to perform them when told, is utterly unfit to be a steward; and a few such on a Board of Stewards will drag downward the best charge in the Church.

A very few—say two or three—earnest, faithful, diligent, broad-minded and religious men will constitute a far better working force than the full quota of the other kind.

Brother Pastor, nominate no man simply because he is in office now! You should have more courage than that. Name no man because of his general standing in the community, or because he or his friends wish you to do so! Present men whom you believe to be best suited to the offices, and who will, in your judgment, do the best work.

UNDERGRADUATES AND THE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

I have had several communications in the past few days, asking about the work done by the undergraduates at the Seashore Divinity School last summer, and I have referred the matter to Dr. F. N. Parker, dean, who has charge of all the work of the undergraduates. Those who passed their examinations there will be promoted to the next highest classes in their respective conferences.

I make this statement that those who may have any fears about the matter may write Dr. Parker at New Orleans, and receive from him a certificate of their work.

This feature of the Divinity School work was adopted by the four patronizing Conferences last year, and there will be no difficulty about the matter if the examining committees understand it, and I am sure they do.

Dr. Parker will make a statement relative to this matter in a short while, and it is to be hoped that every one will understand it.

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy.

Costs Little, But Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with $\frac{1}{2}$ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough. This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in gualic acid and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

BINNSVILLE, MISS.

We have been so busy since we came to the Binnsville and Wahalak Charge that we have not taken time to write anything about how we have been getting along. However, as some of our friends have urged us to write up the work, we send you the following: When we first came to this charge we found that there was a very fine field for work at the Binnsville Church especially. Here was a large community of well-to-do planters, farmers, refined and intelligent, but with a sad lack of spiritual life among them. Only one man that we know of in the entire community professed a conscious knowledge of salvation, though there were several good workers for any temporal interest of the church. We began at once to pray and work for a revival, but were disappointed last year, the visible results of the meeting being very meagre indeed, though the church moved forward beyond all our expectations in temporal matters. Two out of the six churches assigned us by the Conference of 1909 pulled out from the others, formed a half-station to be known as the Binnsville and Wahalak Charge and agreed to support a preacher without any assistance from the Mission Board or elsewhere, so we came back to Binnsville this year with an opportunity for more concentrated effort. We came back praying more earnestly than ever for an outpouring of God's Spirit on Binnsville and received the assurance early in the spring that our prayers were heard; took courage and began to plan at once for the battle. It seemed best that we should do the preaching, so we arranged for Brother O. C. Seavers to come this fall and lead the singing. We had a good many engagements for revival work through the summer, so we arranged for Brother E. E. McKeithen to come on the work as assistant pastor and help "cultivate the crop" we expected to harvest this fall, and I must say that I believe his faithful work and that of his good wife, in ministry and prayer and preparation for the meeting, were among the greatest factors in bringing about the revival. We entered the battle on the night of Sept. 11th, somewhat tired and worn in body after a strenuous summer of evangelistic work, but with a fresh faith and victory in our soul. God gave the victory from the very first service. I hardly know how to tell what followed during the week. Some of the hardest sinners in the community were converted. The house, which is large for a country church, was packed nearly every night. The altar was filled at every service and frequently the front seats had to be vacated and converted into altars. There were sometimes as high as forty or fifty at the altar seeking God at one time. Scores professed to be converted; family altars were set up, and at least one old feud was straightened up and another bids fair to be amicably settled very soon. Twenty some odd united with the Church by profession of faith. God gave us a gracious victory and it was all in answer to prayer. I wish to take this opportunity to thank the brethren of the Meridian District Prayer Circle, and other friends that were praying for Binnsville, for the way they remembered us in their daily prayers; for I attribute a large measure of our victory to the volume of prayer that went up for us from all over the district. Brethren, I hope you will continue to pray that we may be able to conserve the results and properly develop them for God.

—Roy H. Kleiser.

RALLY DAY AT TUPELO.

A very delightful program was rendered by the First Methodist Sunday School at Tupelo, Miss., on Sunday, September 18th, and the attendance on this Rally Day was so good that I feel as an honored guest, I should let you and all good Methodists know of the success of the occasion.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, a fine Christian gentleman, as well as an up-to-date and authoritative Sunday school superintendent, has a school worthy of notice and commendation.

There were 135 in attendance; six classes had a hundred per cent. present, while four classes had but one absent and all the others made good averages. There are 375 church members and with the 135 in the Sabbath school, one can readily see how the children will gradually grow out of this school into the church.

Mr. Ledyard, the capable pastor, is wide awake and beautifully helpful in every line of work, and his son was the first on the cradle-roll to be introduced.

The church was artistically decorated by Mrs. Robbins, that sweet mother in Israel, who works early and late for the good of the Master, and the spirit and joy of the hour were on every face.

The Wesley Class and Mr. R. A. Weaver's Sunday School class have a splendid attendance and are doing a grand work.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

I am prepared to supply "Pastors' Reports to Annual Conference," late revised, which must be used this year. Export the book for the quadrennium. Price, postpaid, 10 cts; cash with order, in silver or two-cent postage stamps. Do not ask to charge this unless ordered with other books. The new Discipline is promised December 1st. We hope to have it at the Conference. The newly revised Quarterly Conference Record for this quadrennium is ready. Price, $1.00. Presiding elders and pastors should see that each charge is provided with this book before they leave the charge, so that it may be in hand at the beginning of the new conference year. The long-expected new book, "Conscience and Its Culture, or Through Conscience to Christ," by Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Indianola, Miss., is now ready, and I am ready to fill orders. Price, $1.00.

THE TEST OF TIME.

"Time proves all things," but especially the merits of "Gray's Ointment." This remedy, for cuts, bruises, boils, burns, carbuncles, rheumatism, blood poison, tumors, and all skin eruptions, has stood the test of nearly a century. It was put on the market in the year 1820 by the eminent physician, Dr. W. W. Gray, of Raleigh, N. C., and has proved to be the most wonderful cure for skin diseases ever discovered. No home should be without it—no trip is complete without a box in your grip, and it only costs 25¢ per box. Sold by all druggists, but if you would like a sample box to test it, write to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 109 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you postpaid, a free sample box.

H. A. Jackson, Calverton, Tenn., writes: "I have been using your Gray's Ointment with good success when all other remedies failed. For blood poison your Gray's Ointment is just worth its weight in gold."

JOHN UPHRATUS TATE, son of A. B. and D. U. Albright Tate, was born in Graham, North Carolina, Aug. 28, 1872, and died in the city of Memphis, Tenn., July 16, 1910, after weary weeks of suffering and pain. John was deprived of the helpful influence of "mother," she having died when he was a few hours old. He was raised by two maiden aunts, who spared no pains to train him up in the way he should go, and in age and feebleness extreme one of them made her home with him, and, even till she breathed her last, it was his greatest pleasure to minister to her and love her for her extreme kindness to him. Such devotion one seldom sees. A boy could not love a mother more. When but a small boy he professed religion and joined the Presbyterian Church and was loyal to its communion many years. Coming to Mississippi and engaging in business in 1890, and not being in reach of his own Church, he united with the Methodist Church, and to the end loved and supported it. His progress in the divine life was steady, and his last years in the service of the Lord were his best. In October, 1893, he was married to Mary E. Brown, of Columbus, Miss. He loved his wife, the three girls and two boys God gave them, and for them he literally gave himself. I was with him frequently during his last illness, even when his spirit departed, and though grieved to witness the grief of sister, caused by the separation, I rejoiced to witness the peaceful ending of a Christian life. John had lived a Christian life, endured the pain of sickness long without a murmur, and had prayed to live, but expressed a willingness to die, claiming it was all right either way. He fell on sleep without a twitch of a muscle, triumphantly departing this life to receive his crown of righteousness. His body sleeps in the quiet little cemetery at Mayhew, Miss. Peace be to his ashes and may the consolation of the Holy Spirit be the comfort and support of "Mamie" and the children. S. A. BROWN.

Como, Miss., Sept. 22, 1910.

LUCILE GRAY was born at Call, Tex., Feb. 26, 1903, and died at Bon Ami, La., Sept. 13, 1910. The Bon Ami Sabbath school, with all the children and the pastor of the Methodist Church, join with sympathetic accord in paying tribute to one of whom Christ said: "Of such is the kingdom of God." And the height of our tribute is equaled only by the depth of our feeling. We shall miss little Lucille; we feel just a small portion of that lonesomeness felt now by the sorrowing parents and remaining children. She was a lover of the Sunday school, and among her last thoughts were those created by the helpful picture card. She was a flower of purity and innocence whose precious fragrance was far too sweet for the ills of this world. God has transplanted this tender plant to a fairer garden, where no storm comes to break the frail stalk, where there is no atmosphere severe, nor insect bold, nor worm undying. O, how fair in the pure light of the Christ is this growing blossom! How wondrous the love and care of our Heavenly Father! At the funeral it was the privilege of the writer to pronounce the sermon. J. C. ROUSSEAU.

Sister MARY A. LOPOSSAR, generally known as "Grandma," went to her reward early Monday morning, Sept. 12th, 1910. "Grandma" lived 87 years, 60 of which were given to God and her church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. For the last ten years, on account of feebleness, she was unable to attend church; yet she never lost interest and love in the great work her church is doing. She was the mother of six children, four live to mourn her absence. These and her many relatives and host of friends we commend to her God, who doeth all things well. It was Grandma's delight to talk to her pastor on heavenly subjects. So often she would remark: "I am only awaiting the last call: I know, all is well with my soul." Blessed are those that die in the Lord, was verified in her death. We extend to her hereafter family and relatives our deepest sympathy, and trust that each one will follow her example in giving the heart and service to God and the Church in the morning-time of life. Her pastor, E. G. MOHLER, JR.

DELLA COWAN BROWN, daughter of Rev. J. M. Brown, of the Louisiana Conference, was born in Shubuta, Miss., July 7, 1868, and died at Clinton, La., August 19, 1910. It had been the privilege of this writer to know the deceased from her infancy, having been present at the death of her mother in her early childhood. The death of this young woman was one of those providential occurrences which the finite mind cannot grasp. When about fifteen years of age, she became a member of the church, and through all the years of her young life was active in church work, especially in the Sunday school and Epworth League departments. At Benton, La., where her father was pastor for eight years, Della Brown was the very soul of the latter. Her devotion to her father and family was not less than her devotion to the church. She found time for domestic work, for society and the church. She possessed an unusual adaptation to these three departments of life's activities. She was at all times cheerful and imparted the grace of her cheer to all with whom she came in contact. Her life was most beautiful, finding pleasure in all social functions not out of harmony with God's Word. Until attacked by that dread disease, pellagra, her friends expected a long and useful life for God and humanity, but that monster cut their expectations short, and we were all left to mourn, but in hope of a glorious future. J. A. PARKER.

The spirit of another sweet and devoted mother has been ushered into the presence of her King at a time those who loved her felt that she was so very necessary to her devoted husband, daughter and son; but her King had better things for her in the beautiful beyond. The subject of this sketch, Sister M. H. ELLIS, was born Oct. 13, 1845. She was married to W. H. Ellis on Jan. 18th, 1865, and died at her home near Midnight, Miss., on the night of Sept. 22, 1910. She joined the M. E. Church, South, while quite young, and lived a consistent Christian life until the good Lord saw best to take her to himself on high. She leaves a husband and two children and a host of friends to mourn their loss. But we mourn not as those who have no hope, but look forward to the resurrection morn, when we shall meet her again to part no more. May God abundantly bless the loved ones left behind. We laid her body to rest in the family burying-ground near their home, to await the resurrection morn. A good woman is gone where

"No chilling winds or poisonous breath
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

J. H. FOREMAN.

Heller's Roses for Outdoor Planting

We Grow Roses. That's our life-work, the thing we like to do best of all. If we could grow roses in another part of the country, we would. This queenly flower has been a life study with us, and we know it in every form and color.

A New, Better Type of Roses
We grow Roses that will grow, that are the best and the strongest that can possibly be grown. Here we have the very best Rose soil in America, and in it the methods perfected by our life-long experience produce plants of a new type. In sturdy vigor they are unequalled Roses.

Bigger Roses Our Watchword
We grow only Roses of good size. The "thumb-nail" size, so widely sold in the past few years, aren't good enough for us or our customers. We don't try to compete with them. Our first size Roses are from 3 and 4 inch pots, and we have three larger sizes, all fine plants.

Roses Suited to the South
We grow mostly Roses for outdoor planting. Roses for the South are a specialty with us. The favorites of the love Rose gardens of the old South are as dear to us as they are to you, and we are constantly introducing new kinds of equal merit. We prepay our orders. Our methods enable us not only to give you the best and biggest Roses you can get, but we prepay them, both by mail or express, to your door.

A NEW ROSE BOOK FREE TO YOU
In most of the southern states Roses do best planted in the fall. Send today for our handsome new catalogue. Best look of the kind. If you have neighbors who buy Roses send the names of six and we will give you, free, a fine plant of the grand new Rose, Jeannette Heller.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 9.

TWO ASPECTS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF GOD.

(Nahum, 1:28; Rom. 11:22.)

In our reference both the Prophet and the great Apostle to the Gentiles represent the government of God as seeming to present a twofold aspect: one of severity toward the impenitent sinner, and one of mercy and love and beneficence toward the obedient.

How, do we explain this seeming twofold aspect of the government of God, who is omnipotent and omniscient, and whose essence is love?

First, we must go back to the beginning of God's sovereignty over man. Ethically, the sovereign is as responsible to the citizens for good order in the state as the citizens are responsible to the sovereign for obedience to the law.

Therefore, the necessity of government to maintain good order, and of law with a penalty attached as a means requisite to maintaining good order.

But in God's government of men would not there have been perfect order without the need of a single human being suffering the penalty of violated law, had God created a system without the possibility of evil?

Or, since man must be punished for his sins, why was he made capable of sinning?

The problem of evil is a profound one, the solution of which is intricate and difficult, and, to be made perfectly clear, would require much more space for discussion than is allowed here. However, we may briefly answer the above questions as follows:

(a) The highest possible created being is not merely an automaton, with a marked course before it from which it has no power to depart; but it is a moral being, endowed with a will power which it can use in choosing its course and in pursuing its choice; a being that is capable of infinite amelioration and God-like attainments—such a being is man.

(b) Such a being, with such powers and capabilities, would be impossible in an order in which free action would be limited by the impossibility of evil. For, had God created man incapable of sinning, then would he have been void of the moral element, and hence incapable of holiness.

Therefore, while God is not the author of the evil that his law condemns, neither does he approve the evil that calls forth the penalty of the violated law, yet it is not incompatible with his omniscience, omniscience, mercy and love to admit that he is the author of a system that allows the possibility of evil; for only in and out from such a system is there the possibility of moral perfection.

The system thus being justified as that out of which the most perfect ends may be attained, then it follows that the government, with its laws and the penalties thereto, is justified as a means requisite to these ends.

And, while the government seems twofold to the governed, it is because of the twofold attitude assumed toward it: the obedient avoids suffering the penalty, and says: "How good God is to me." The disobedient suffers the penalty of the violated law and says: "God is severe with me." When the truth is that the government is a unity, its attitude the same, and that one of beneficence toward all its subjects; its one purpose being that of the highest good of every individual and the whole race. And God is not really severe with any, but equally good to all. The inflicting of the penalty of violated law is not vindictive, but corrective, and for the amelioration of the individual or race.

St. Paul says: "Wherefore, the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ."

Christ says: "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, we shall be free indeed."

Therefore, God's laws have no terror, and his government no injustice to the one who will come to Christ, and who will live in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

And when we suffer as God's children the suffering is not necessarily punitive, but may always be made ameliorative. It may be and often is what we suffer as a part of the race, as in some great physical evil, in which case the suffering or the innocent individual is not unjust, since we, like our Lord, must be afflicted, and out of the suffering of the whole there is born some heroic effort against the evil that finally benefits the whole, as the national state and civic movements against contagious diseases, etc.

Moreover, when we seem to suffer unjustly, we should remember that this life is only a little part of our existence, and that God, who sees it all, knows what is best, and in his beneficence will work it all out right in the sublime plan that he has for every trusting, obedient soul.

St. Paul says: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

MISSIONARY RALLY AT PHILADELPHIA.

Pursuant to announcement and ample preparation, our very aggressive and able pastor, the Rev. N. B. Harman, held in the Methodist Church in Philadelphia, Miss., at 11 a. m. Sunday, September 25, a very profitable missionary rally.

The house was filled with attentive and appreciative auditors, and appropriate music was rendered. The pastor delivered a forceful and convincing address on missions, and then distributed in the audience cards containing this pledge: "I will be one of the Philadelphia Mission Club members to join with the Methodists and friends of the Newton District to give one day's work as a surplus for missions—the day to be Friday before the second Sunday in October. This I do in his name who gave himself for me."

Name _____ Date _____
Seventy signed the pledge, among whom were Congressman Byrd, other lawyers, doctors, merchants, etc., and doubtless there are more to follow.

The evening service of the same day was conducted by the Woman's Foreign and Home Mission Societies of Philadelphia. After several interesting addresses and essays the following card was circulated:

The Foreign and Home Mission Societies say to the ladies of Philadelphia what Martha said to Mary: "The Master has come and calleth for thee. What shall your answer be? Answer: 'I, Mrs. _____ will join the Foreign Mission Society.' 'I, Mrs. _____ will join the Home Mission Society.'"

This I do for Jesus' sake.
Eleven members were in this way added to the societies.

The ladies have been very active this year and have remodeled the parsonage, and the Philadelphia Church, as a whole, is in a flourishing condition.

THE STUDEBAKER PLANT COVERS 101 ACRES

The Best Wagon Value

Studebaker stands for honest wagon value. Today over one million are in daily use—many of them from 25 to 30 years—and still giving good service.

There is a reason for this—Studebakers have been making wagons for over half a century—the reputation of their products is in the hands of men who have been in their employ for more than half that time—that is why the Studebaker Quality is proverbial. Every kind of material going into the Studebaker product must measure up to Studebaker specifications—every vehicle going out must be up to the Studebaker standard.

That is why the Studebaker wagon meets the Southern Planter's requirements as no other wagon does—it is built for his particular needs.

See the Studebaker dealer and talk to him about your individual requirements. He is competent to advise you. Our Studebaker 1911 Farmer's Almanac, telling all about the Studebaker products will be mailed free on request. Write for it today.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Huey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of The Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holler aspirations,' by Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

FOURTH QUARTER. LESSON II. OCTOBER 9, 1910.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.

Matthew xxv. 14-30. Similar parable, Lk. xix. 11-27.

14. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

15. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18. But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

19. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

20. And so he that had received five talents came, and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliverest unto me five talents; behold, I have gained beside them five talents more.

21. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliverest unto me two talents; behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

24. Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed.

25. And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed.

27. Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Golden Text: "His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Matt. xxv. 21.)

I. God's Ownership of Our Lives.

If we would find a text which expresses tersely the fundamental truth which underlies fully one-third of the thirty or more parables which Christ uttered, we may find it in these words of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians: "Ye are not your own; ye are therefore, glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." It is, in short, we belong to God, and are not to look upon ourselves as belonging to ourselves, or as free to consider only our personal interests and preferences as though there were no God above from whom we receive all in trust, and to whom an account must in the end be rendered.

The parable of the Talents, which we study to-day, as also the similar parable of the Pounds, which might well have been included with it, are in emphasis upon the fact that our abilities are not our own, to be used for selfish ends alone, forgetful of service to God and humanity.

The parable of the Marriage of the King's Son, which we studied recently, and even more forcibly the similar parable of the Great Supper, impress upon us the fact that our time is not our own, and that we have no right to say, "Busy with my own affairs, I have no time to attend to spiritual matters, and to render service to God."

The parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard, another recent subject of study, made emphatic the truth that our possessions are not our own, and that we have no right to say "What's mine is mine," and God has no claim upon it.

So, in these three classes of parables, Christ declares that all that we are, and all that we have, belong to God, and are given us in trust by him to be used unselfishly, and for his glory.

But it is to our abilities and capacities, rather than to our time or money, that the parable of the Talents directs our attention; and its emphatic message is that we must all work for God, each in proportion to his several ability. Its subordinate message is that our abilities vary, and that of each will be required only the right and faithful use of such powers and opportunities as we have. A third and important truth brought out is that something will be required of us all, for something is given to all, and none may say truly: "There is nothing I can do."

The parable of the Pounds, wherein the same amount was given to each, admirably supplements this parable of the Talents by showing that, even with the same gifts, different degrees of diligence and fidelity will achieve different results with proportionate rewards; and it is easily possible for a man with small natural ability by greater diligence to accomplish more and to receive greater reward than his more favored but less faithful brother. So there is encouragement for all, and discouragement for none; but warning also for all against neglecting the gift that is in them.

But the question may perplex some as it has perplexed me: "What exactly is meant by 'talents' in the parable?" Of course, literally, it was an amount of money, probably the Attic talent, worth about $1,200, but what are we to interpret that as referring to in our lives? Some, as Trench, make it refer primarily to "spiritual powers and capacities," though we object to that as limiting the application of the parable to real Christians, already in possession of some degree of grace; all others could then say "I have no talent to be used for God." Dr. D. D. Whedon, broadening the meaning somewhat, and with logical acuteness, holds that by talent is not meant natural abilities, "for the talents are said to be conferred according to their several ability." He says: "The talent is plainly a trust to be discharged; a responsibility to be met. And every man in probation (Christians and non-Christians alike) has a charge and office; and that task God imposes in proportion to our ability." But, though this is logical, yet it makes of the talent not a something to be given to be used, but a something required, whereas the evident meaning of the parable is that something is entrusted to us to be used aright. So we can but fall back upon the simpler explanation already implied, that by a talent is meant the natural abilities and gifts which God has given us, including the position which we occupy with the opportunities it brings, all of which consecrated to God's service, and under the influence of his grace, may become larger or smaller channels of blessings to the world, through which God's work may be done and his kingdom of righteousness, peace and joy may be made to come in larger measure among men. Thus all are held accountable, and whoever withholds his gifts from the influence of God's Spirit and uses them only for selfish ends, buries them, so far as any service rendered to God is concerned.

There are two scenes in the parable. The first is that of the great man preparing for his long journey, calling unto him his own servants, and delivering unto them his goods. The second scene is that of the great man returning, and the reports being rendered.

With what joy must the faithful servants have approached their master. As Edersheim says: "We can almost see their honest faces beaming with delight," and the joy of hearing "Well done, good and faithful servant," must have been a foretaste of the joy of the Lord, and of the larger opportunity for service promised.

But how differently does the unfaithful servant come. How heavy and reluctant his steps, and how doggedly mean and insolent are his words, blaming his failure not upon himself, but upon his lord by a misconstruction of his character. We can almost hear him saying to himself, after his lord's departure: "Well, now, suppose I do take this money and try to do something with it, he will take it all and the profit, and I will have nothing. So I'm not going to try." His spirit was that of a shiftless modern plantation negro. But it was false that his lord would take it all and reward him nothing, as his generous treatment of the others show. And even had it been so, had he been a grasping tyrant, his own confession should have made him the more diligent and anxious not to incur his displeasure. So, from every standpoint, he was to be condemned—not for stealing, he did not steal; not for squandering, he did not squander, but simply for failure to rightly use the talent entrusted to him. Instead, then, of coming with a heart glad in the consciousness of time well spent and opportunities improved, he came in shame and bitterness of soul; and, instead of a well done and a kindly acceptance, he heard the ominous and scathing words: "Thou wicked and slothful servant—take the talent from him—and cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." So it will be with us if we neglect or refuse to render, from whatever excuse, service to God.

II. Personal Application.

"Let none hear you idly saying, 'There is nothing I can do,' While the souls of men are dying, And the Master calls for you."

1. Do you recognize and accept the fact that you belong to God, and that he has a right to your faithful service? Or, are you dreaming that it is a legitimate excuse that your personal affairs so occupy you that you cannot respond to his call?

2. What are you doing for God? Are you sincerely trying to do anything for him?

3. It is through the Church of God that our service can chiefly be rendered, and certainly where there is unfaithfulness to the Church and its ministries there is little hope that there is fidelity elsewhere. The lamp is certainly then under a bushel. As a test, then, do you think your pastor could heartily report you to God as a "good and faithful servant," because of your fidelity in these things which may seem least, but which reveal much? Are you faithful in attendance upon the Sunday morning and evening services, even? How many could not even stand that test? Are you faithful in your official duties? or in the Sunday school? the prayer-meeting? the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Societies? Do you even attend these, much less take part in them?

4. But perhaps you answer: "O, well, what do those things amount to?" The very question suggests the sin of the one-talent man, excusing laziness by discounting results of labors. Certainly here you can find opportunities for receiving good and doing good, encouraging others, and accomplishing far more than you realize. Read of the work of the Women's Mission Societies and you will be astonished to find how much little monthly meetings of a faithful few aggregate in spreading the gospel at home and abroad. Think what it would mean for America if the membership of its churches were only faithful to their plainest and most sacred obligations.

5. Finally, don't deceive yourself into thinking that God is after all going to tell a lie in the face of all the world, and say to you: "Well done, thy good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," when you have not been faithful. Can the Lord depend upon you? Can your pastor? Can the church?

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try it.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salves, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

IN SEARCH OF A MESSAGE.

Words are of value as they convey ideas; the fewer words the better, if only the idea be clearly expressed. Sometimes in reading a book or listening to an address we are led to wonder why the writer or speaker took so long to say so little. When we come to analyze the book, we find that the five hundred pages might easily and profitably have been reduced to fifty, and the tedious speech might easily have been reduced to one-fourth of its length. The power to talk without saying anything is a melancholy possibility to mortals. The tendency to prolixity seems to be unduly developed in certain persons, and it means a good deal of unnecessary weariness to those who are sure to suffer from it. It seems to grow upon people, until they can hardly tell the time of day without embodying it in a neat little speech.

One of the first lessons a young preacher or writer should learn is to get his ideas before he makes his speech or writes his article. If a man does not know what he wants to say he will probably talk a good while before he says much. The ideas are all-important; any other kind of oratory must necessarily be of the soap-bubble variety.

When a man attempts to speak to us, whether through the printed page or from the platform, we have a right to conclude that he has some sort of a message. The message may concern the stars or it may discuss the feeding of stock; it may deal with the political situation, or it may tell us how to train our children; it may be deeply spiritual, or it may be largely business, but it must have something of interest to our race; and inasmuch as it is a faithful and true message we have a right to give it place.

But if there be no message, if there be only a flood of meaningless or semi-meaningless words; if the truth has evidently not gripped the writer or the speaker, we have a right to ask that we be excused from listening. It makes little difference how well the words are arranged, nor how admirably they may be delivered, unless there be a central core of thought. It may be, as we have been told, that George Whitefield could make his hearers weep by his pronunciation of the word "Mesopotamia," but George Whitefield's message was not made up of "Mesopotamias." It sounded the very depths of human experience, and gripped both heart and brain.

But where is a man to get ideas? How can one so place himself in touch with God and man as to receive a real message for his time? This is a serious question, and one that should be seriously answered.

God speaks through facts, and a man should seek to find out these facts. The facts of history, of science, of human experience, are full of meaning for men, and it is part of the divine message to explain these facts, so that human life and experience shall be the richer.

And God speaks to men through men. Sometimes men fail to realize this. They seek God upon the mountain summits or in the far-off ether, and fail to see that he is revealing himself to us in the face of our brethren. The man who forgets man can never hope to know much of God. But when we stoop to serve, when we bend our backs beneath our brother's burden; when in our human light we take a fallen brother's hand and in the name of our Lord lift him up and lead him toward the light; then and there we will see our God. Wherever is heard the cry of human pain, wherever a tear-dimmed eye tells of a burdened heart, wherever human weakness falters and stumbles over the roughness of the appointed path, wherever there is sorrow to be comforted, discouragement to be cheered, anguish to be assuaged, there will we find the presence of the Man of Sorrows. And here, in helping the lowly, we will be given some message for the race.

But there is need of the quiet hour. We need our Horobis just as Elijah did. The human mind must find its own grist. It is well to listen to wise men and to read wise books, but the mind must "gang its ain gait" and sift and search all that comes to it. Great thoughts usually demand long periods of incubation. We cannot hasten the mental process; the mind will not submit to pressure. If we want to evolve ideas that will have the energy and force of the Eternal behind them, we must take our time. Society and solitude seem to be two essentials to thought. Each must have its proper place, and then we shall know what message the times demand, and be able to the limit of our ability, to respond to the urgent call.—The Christian Guardian.

CATHOLICISM AT HOME AND ABROAD.

A Bishop of the Methodist Church, who was in Montreal during the great Eucharistic Conference recently held there, and saw the immense throng of 100,000 persons gathered in solemn conclave at Fletcher's Field to celebrate the Mass, was so impressed with the religious enthusiasm and sincere spirit of worship manifested by the people that on returning to Pennsylvania he preached a sermon in which he confessed that, though having tried, he cannot be optimistic about the outlook of Protestantism in the United States; the spirit of which he finds to be in decay.

His difficulty seems to be not so much one of positive diminution in Protestantism as of an unhappy contrast with the Catholicism of French Canada, for he goes on to say with horror that, at the World's Missionary Convention held at Edinburgh a prominent man said that in ten years from now delegates from the Catholic Church would have seats in our missionary convention and would be welcomed. If the good Bishop would look a little further afield and consider the atheism of France, the illiteracy of Portugal and Spain and the crushing poverty of Italy, in which countries the Catholic Church is the only Church as far as the vast majority of the people are concerned, his faith in the comparative vitality of Protestantism would get new strength.

For an enlightening incident, let us go right to the heart of Catholicism—Rome. There, in a city which has been peculiarly shut within itself, and where nothing but the Catholic Church has had sway for many centuries, a city overrun with monks, friars, nuns and priests of many orders, dominated in every quarter by high looming churches, cathedrals and monasteries, the Mayor—who was elected by the will of the people—has at a great public function in celebration of the overthrow of the temporal power, denounced the Catholic tenets and called down on himself a special malediction from the Pope. We quote the incident, not in praise of the Mayor's action, but to show how utterly the Catholic Church has lost hold of the community where its strength should be greatest; for no elective officer would have dared to do such a thing unless the real Catholics had been a negligible minority of the population.—Weekly Witness.

THE BEST FILLED PULPITS.

"That pulpit is best filled," once said the late Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, "which most fills heaven." Heaven is waiting to be populated in large measure by the pulpit efforts of believing men—taking the term "pulpit" in a broad sense. Every sermon should have a tendency to "pull" or, if need be, to push, men heavenward. If it cannot supply the hearers with wings on which to fly in flashing flocks to glory, let it apply itself to the more laborious and prosaic task of drawing men one by one out of the miry pit and the valley of gross darkness. It ought to be possible for a well-equipped and consecrated preacher to impart in his every discourse to every hearer an impulse toward a higher life than the sensory and self-seeking, and thus to lessen by so much the gravitational pull of sin upon the souls of his people.

Many pulpits, as a matter of fact, are occupied by men whose teaching is largely concerned with temporal and transient interests, while a few are disgraced by occupants whose talk is glibly of heaven, while their personal life is very much of the earth earthy. It is not difficult for a smart and self-confident man to rattle around in any pulpit, but no pulpit is filled and fulfilled which is not glorified with the holy motive of using its every power of argument and appeal for the definite purpose at convincing a jury of now unrepentant men that they ought to bring in a moral verdict against themselves, and confessing their guilt before the bar of God, distinctly commit their bodies and souls, now and forever, to the cross and cause of the glorified Nazarene.—Zion's Herald.

There is no action so slight but it may be done to a great purpose and ennobled thereby.—John Ruskin.

Where God hath promised, the prayer of unwavering faith is the only rational sort.—Southern Churchman.

"Lack of joy in the worship of the Lord is not a strange thing when found associated with lack of enthusiasm in his work."

The fear that hath torment is the fear that lacks that consciousness of the presence and love of God which it is the privilege of every believer to possess. The perfect love that casts out fear is the goal of all believers who go on as they are led.—Author not known.

A VISIT TO HIGH HILL AND ELSE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

High Hill Church is about six miles south of Forest, Miss., in the extreme southern or south-eastern part of Scott County, surrounded by some of the stickiest, muddiest country perhaps you ever saw. The church is situated on top of a very "high hill," from which one can see eight or ten miles east and northeast.

My first visit to this place was in August, 1869, in company with Rev. Louis Kendle, who was at that time a member of our Conference. I was presiding elder of the Paulding District. We held a quarterly meeting at the Carr Church on Saturday and Sunday, and spent Sunday night in the home of that grand, good woman, Sister Gilbert Carr, who lost her husband in the war.

On Monday morning Brother K. and I went to High Hill Church. At that time it was the property of the M. P. Church, and Brother James Taylor was the pastor. He was in the midst of a protracted meeting. I preached for him at the 11 o'clock hour. This was my first visit to High Hill. Some time after this the Protestant Methodists and the members of the M. E. Church, South, of this community, were united into one body, and came under the care of the M. E. Church, South.

Twenty-seven years afterwards I was sent to the Lake charge. High Hill was one of my appointments. Calvin Jones, who was a young single man 41 years ago, had married a Miss Harvey, a bright Christian woman. Through her good influence he had joined the Methodist Church, and at that time was one of the stewards, a faithful, good man. I served the work one year, then was sent to Carthage.

After an absence of nearly 14 years I was invited to visit the place again and preach for the people. Accordingly, I made an appointment for the second Sunday in September. So, on Sunday morning, the 11th, a large congregation of people, most of them strangers to me, met at the church to hear an old superannuate, a former pastor, preach. The good Lord was there and helped wonderfully while I read and talked. We had a good day.

Quite a number who were prominent in the church fourteen years ago had "passed over the river." Among them were Brother and Sister Idleburger, Sister Harvey, Brother Williamson and wife, and others. Brother Williamson was one of four men who joined the church forty-one years ago at Williamsburg, while Dr. Weems and I were conducting a revival meeting. The other three, Brothers McDonald, Wm. Holloway and Arthur Mangum, passed away years ago, after spending several years in the Master's service.

Brother Williamson, with his good wife, moved from Williamsburg many years ago, and settled near High Hill Church. He lived to a good old age, brought up a family of nice children, who are doing well. Brother Williamson had a good Christian woman for a wife. She helped to make him what he was. She also brought up and sent out to bless the world some noble sons and daughters. What a blessing to this sin-cursed world are good, Holy Ghost women! Well, Brother Williamson and Brother Calvin Jones of High Hill community had such women to help rule well their households.

Brother Jones' son married Brother Williamson's daughter. It was in their home that I was so royally entertained on this recent visit to this church, Saturday night. I found Brother Walter Jones to be a warm-hearted, truly religious husband and father. He is one of the stewards and the Sunday school superintendent of High Hill Church. When I first knew him, most fifteen years ago, he was a young man of promise. He is now one of the leaders of the church in that county. I found Sister Williamson, the second wife of old Brother Williamson, in the home of Brother Walter Jones, making her home with her stepdaughter. She is one of our many good women who take and love to read our Advocate.

Brother W. W. Graves is our present pastor in charge of High Hill Church. He is loved and held in high esteem by the people of his charge.

On my way home I met President Hull of Millsaps College. He has been doing faithful good work for the college since his election to the presidency. The outlook is very encouraging for the college to have the largest attendance in its history this session. Brother Hull has preached nearly every Sunday this summer, and has traveled extensively in the interest of the college. Let us preachers and people stand faithfully by this school and make it the grandest institution of learning for our boys and young men in the State. Let me say to our people: Send your boys to Millsaps College. Four of my boys were educated there, and all four of them are now preaching the glorious gospel of Christ. May heaven's richest blessings rest upon the President, faculty and student body of Millsaps.

WRITE THEM UPON THE TABLE OF THINE HEART.

Proverbs vii, 3.

By Hon. W. A. Belk.

The first verse of this wonderful chapter of Proverbs reads thus: "My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee." The thought is to heed the many warnings, the sound advice and many promises which God has given us. "Keep my words," "Lay up my commandments." What a beautiful thought! Brought into this world without our volition, yet we at the very outset of our journey are not left without a guide and a chart. God's Sacred Book, with all necessary advice concerning our duty, meets us as we begin the voyage. It is plain in its "commandments" and consoling and comforting in its many promises: "Thou shalt not" cannot be misunderstood. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," gives us courage to go on. "My grace is sufficient for thee," nerves us for the battle. How important, then, that we study this "Guide" in order that we may know just what our duty is and what our limitations are. So long as we do not violate God's rules, just so long will He sustain us. When we violate His "commandments" we must pay the penalty. If our young people as they enter upon life's duties would stop to fully realize that they can make success sure by taking the Bible at its word, and heeding its teaching, then there would be fewer failures. Our Commonwealth has certain laws, the breaking of which is prohibited. Each parent is anxious to impress upon his child these laws and the penalty following their violation. In this they are correct. But how much more important is it that we impress it upon the minds and hearts of our children that God, too, has laws which must be heeded and which must not be broken. "Keep my words; lay up my commandments." "Write them upon the table of thine heart."

THE METHODIST CABINET.

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

When God makes a sand-grain, or a planet, he has a place for it. Much more is this true when he creates an angel or a human being.

Every church member has a divinely appointed task; and the same is true of every lawyer, doctor or statesman, etc. The minister is not an exception to this rule. He also has his place and mission, and if God has "called" him, he can "find a way or make a way." The Author of the call would be unjust to him, as he would be to any worker, to provide for him a "salvation-made-easy" plan of success in his appointed duties. These are they which come out of much tribulation, is the final compliment at the day of rewards.

No great question will be sprung at that time as to whether the expounder of the Word shall hail from "First Metropolitan Church" on $4,000 per annum, or from "Grundy Mission" on $350; provided, he has "fought a good fight." Was he from Nazareth or from Damascus? found no place when "the everlasting gates" were lifted and the "King of glory" came unto his eternal triumph. The Grundy pastor, however, may not greatly desire to return to his present charge. A good and true man may be gravely damaged by being kept too long at a trying post of service. And then the man on $4,000 is at the peril of being tempted to classify himself as "superior dirt," in consequence of prominence and big pay.

Men of the ministry differ, of course, and so also do the pastoral charges. The "silver trumpet" may do the work of a "ram's horn," but not always; nay this order be reversed for the good of God's cause. A "chance for life," however, an opportunity for growth, is needed by all.

It is contended by some that "the fittest will survive." But this fittest applies more to plants and to mere animals of some conditions, than to pastoral charges and to ministers where most careful stationing is supposed to prevail.

A good and great Bishop said at a Methodist Conference: "I shall be glad to see you at my room, but if you come to say things to injure these preachers, do not be surprised if I call up the man mentioned and listen also to his side of the question."

Too many burdens, too long endured, be it by a minister or pastoral charge, must produce damage and prevent progress. Take a Bishop, even, and place him at "Wool Socks Circuit" on $200 a year, and instantly he is needing a "double portion" of divine grace. Four thousand dollars and a city home helps immensely to carry burdens, and this sum is small in view of the great service rendered. But remove the high salary and let the minister become to be simply John Brown on $200 without special consideration—"Little and unknown, loved and prized of God alone"—then it comes to pass that "grit and grace" and every good qualification is at a premium. Men, in instances, make opportunities, but more often do opportunities make men.

The Methodist Church is doing well, and threatens to perpetuate until the truth of God is spoken around the globe, and until the knowledge of Christ shall have filled the earth; but any weakened faith in the stationing power must do grave damage and prevent best results among the churches.

In assigning the ministers it is natural to be first solicitous for the more prominent and better paying congregations, and to remember the pastor most fully in mind and leave the other to the good mercies of the best that may occur. And all this without wrong intention and in absolute innocence, so far as goes a disposition to damage a Church or to cripple a preacher. A great business of the Church is to grow preachers as well as to develop pastoral charges, and not simply by educating in the ordinary sense, and by instruction at the "institute," but also by prudent stationing among the churches. A great "seminary" cannot produce a full-fledged minister, important as is this preliminary preparation. The finest fruit trees are not grown entirely in the nursery. Many times a good charge should take a competent pastor who has "endured hardness" to his financial hurt, and the well-fixed preacher often needs a large opportunity with smaller pay. This would be wise and just, unless we insist that hungry people should perish for the crime of being famished, and that the well-supplied should feast in plenty because already in fine condition.

In other words, that the good passage, "Bear ye one another's burdens," does not apply to those of the ministry. Men of the ministry, along with best educators and statesmen, do not work for money as a first consideration; but it remains true that even the best racehorse must shorten in speed from the fact of too little in oats, and he is damaged with equal certainty in consequence of too much in feed.

The American Methodist churches have developed a good per cent of well starved preachers, and a few in many of the Conferences have been well provided for to the hurt of themselves and with injury to the cause of Christ. The aphorisms, "A lean dog for a good race," and a "hungry soldier for a good fight," are honoring in a sense and comforting (?), but extremes are hurtful in either direction. The Bishops are wise and competent, as a rule, and the presiding elders know and the time will come, no doubt, when the district "lay leader" will be a member of "the Cabinet," and when larger and more open council will prevail at the fourth Quarterly Conference concerning the plans as to a pastor for the incoming year.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

V.

I was surprised at my appointment, "Arkansas River Mission." I made a little inquiry about it. One preacher said that he would "quit the Conference before he would go to such a place." Another said that I was going to preach to more brains than I ever did before. Another said that I would "like the river people." He said they were big-hearted, and "would as readily give you a pony as a pig." We were boarding in Mineral Springs, and old Brother Ward, a superannuate there, said to me on starting to Conference: "If you are chafed, when you return come and stay with us until you get ready to move." Sure enough, we were changed, and went to Brother Ward's and remained there two weeks before we got off. Ready to go, the aged couple walked with us to the gate, when I said to the two: "Many thanks for your hospitality and kindness; but you are both old and cannot afford the expense," and offered a bill. They quickly replied: "You owe us nothing but your prayers." I was too full to speak, and walked away in silence, and we were quickly driven away. Sister Ward was in the presence of some ladies a short time before who were discussing preachers' wives, and one remarked that she "would not like to be a Methodist preacher's wife and be dragged around." Sister Ward corrected her by saying, "Do not say dragged around." She said she had moved around with one of the Lord's itinerants for fifty years, and was very thankful that she was accounted worthy to do so.

We went by train to Little Rock and there boarded a regular mail boat down to Pine Bluff. Dr. W. H. Browning was our pastor there, and we lodged at the parsonage. Bright and early the next morning we took a train and ran down to Walnut Lake. We found there an impassable (?) swamp between the railroad and the river, our objective point. We found boarding with Mr. Nat Holmes and family, and I went back up the road to Varner Station to see about crossing the swamp. Every one I questioned answered me the same way. They said the swamp was more than three miles wide, and was impassable and would be for months to come. "Does no one cross it?" I inquired. "No one. We go twelve or fifteen miles around." I began to examine myself. "I am just forty-two years old, weigh one hundred and sixty, can lift six hundred pounds, and endured in the Civil War what killed thousands of others. Now, am I afraid to enter this body of water, ice and mud?" I had on a good pair of boots, with legs up to my knees, and, unobserved, in I went. The water was from one to three inches and frozen, but not thick enough to bear my weight. I felt for the bottom, and, with some effort, drew my leg out, leaving about a twelve-inch hole, making a noise which sounded like "slock." On I went with a slow slock, slock, after an hour or two I reached a few pieces of frame work, showing where a bridge had been over a very shallow bayou. After about three hours of hard labor my feet struck higher and harder ground, and after a walk of about thirty minutes the fine cotton plantations, the Arkansas River, the fine dwelling houses, and hundreds of negro houses were in view. Well, what more about the mission? The charge lay on the river, was forty-five miles in length, and had ten members. The church capacity was about fifty, and the congregations at preaching averaged about twenty. We boarded with Mrs. Alice Douglass. She was a widow with two little boys and her nephew, who was her overseer, and his wife, and a widowed niece named Lee, and ourselves, making eight. They were antebellum in their customs. There were five servants in and about the house, and no white person was expected to draw nor carry a bucket of water, nor to do the lightest manual labor. Our landlady had an English gardener, and I never saw as fine a garden before. Sisters Douglass and Lee were Methodists, and we had family prayers, consisting of Scripture reading, vocal and instrumental music and prayer. In June, I think, Sister Douglass and her little boys were preparing for a trip to some noted springs. I called at her room and proposed to pay her some money. "Why," she said, "I am not going to charge you anything for board." When I insisted she spoke emphatically and said she would take nothing.

Scattering members, or ex-members of some of the different churches, lived on the river, but spirituality was scarce. One Sunday at 11 o'clock I was trying to preach to my little cold congregation, when, all at once, a lady began to clap her hands and to praise God aloud. Her eight-year-old adopted daughter burst into frightful screams, and said that she believed her mamma was dying. The people were startled and ill at ease, and to cap the climax, a big fine-looking dog, looking as solemn as dogs ever look, walked slowly to a door, raised his head, and gave one of the most lonesome and piteous howls that a mortal ever heard.

BENEFACTORS' DAY AT TRINITY COLLEGE.

Benefactors' Day was observed as usual at Trinity College on October 3d. The address was made by Mr. Thomas F. Parker, of Greenville, S. C., a large cotton mill owner and a man of ideals. He spoke on the general subject of "Welfare Work" in cotton mill villages, from the manufacturer's standpoint.

After the address President W. P. Few announced the gifts for the year. In connection with the announcement of gifts for the year, President Few spoke as follows:

"Gratitude is a noble virtue that ought always to be cultivated. It is due from beneficiaries to their benefactors, but gratitude is not just a passive virtue, it has in it creative power, like benevolence itself. Anybody who can completely comprehend and adequately appreciate the deeds of a benefactor has in himself something of the nature of a benefactor, and will receive somewhat of a benefactor's reward. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet is not only worthy of, but shall receive a prophet's reward. This day is set apart in the college calendar for the cultivation of the spirit of gratitude, because we are deeply grateful to those who have been good enough to help the college, and also because we desire to foster in the students of the college and in the people of the community the virtue of benevolence.

"The gratitude that high-minded men feel for the acts of generous benefactors never has and never can have in it the slightest tinge of subservience. To their everlasting credit be it said, that philanthropists in this country, with the fewest exceptions, have no wishes with regard to their gift except that they be used so as to do the most good. And I feel that a worthy institution of education can accept gifts on no other terms. Certainly no gift has ever been accepted by Trinity College on any other terms, and I believe none ever will be. I am very grateful to be able to say that the influence of the benefactors of this college has always been felt by us to be on the side of truth-seeking, and truth-speaking, and on the side of progress and the widest human service. The college will gladly welcome from any source gifts, large or small, that come in this spirit.

"All colleges in America, State-supported and privately endowed, must define each for itself their position on this question, especially with reference to two large and powerful corporations, the General Education Board, popularly known as the Rockefeller Board, because it is mainly supported by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which was established by Mr. Andrew Carnegie. The Rockefeller Board has made gifts to many of the best colleges in the country, several of them in North Carolina. I am glad to say, I should be glad to see more and larger gifts come to the State from the same source, for, in my opinion, they come without any embarrassing limitations. Many of the strong colleges of the country have been placed on the Carnegie Foundation, though, so far as I know, no institution in North Carolina is on it. This foundation has done in a good many ways conspicuous service to the cause of American education; but at the same time it has made what some of us regard as the fundamental mistake of setting up a definite method of organization and control to which all colleges must strictly conform before they can share in its benefits. While Mr. Carnegie's money, if given without hampering conditions, would, of course, be gladly welcomed by Trinity College, and while I have the highest opinion of the character and ability of Dr. Pritchett, president of the Foundation, I should not be willing to see this college change its organization in any way to secure the benefits of this great corporation. The college, I think, would not be justified in accepting financial benefits from this or any other source unless they can be had without any concessions whatever, and unless they come free of all embarrassing and compromising conditions.

"We believe in the beneficent mission of Trinity College, and we are deeply grateful to those who help us bear its burdens. We keep on our permanent records the names of all who make gifts to the college. This year, when there has been a change of administration, I must record with great gratitude the kind words, the cheerful deeds, the good wishes, and good will that have come to me and to the college from alumni, patrons and friends everywhere. In the friendship of this vast host the college has its richest asset, and I wish I knew some way by which I might put in tangible form the sense of gratitude we all feel toward them.

"With deep and grateful appreciation I now announce the gifts made during the year beginning October 3, 1909, and ending October 3, 1910.

"The announcements included annual contributions to the current expenses from Messrs. B. N. and J. B. Duke, $20,000, and from the North Carolina Conference, $14,112; for new building, gift of Mr. B. N. Duke, $100,000, and a long list of smaller, but none the less appreciated, donations to the college, to the library, to the historical museum, and to the scientific departments.

LAY BAPTISM VS. APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

By Rev. W. T. Woodward.

III.

In this paper I want to show that there is no apostolic succession to the American Baptists, as I have shown in the two former articles that there was none for the English Baptists. I contend that if the first Baptists were not legally baptized, certainly their successors were not. And it is a certain fact that Williams and Holman had no authority from any one nor from any set of men to administer baptism. And they claim that no one is baptized unless he be immersed by a regularly ordained minister, who himself had been immersed. And they also claim, that no other minister of any other denomination has the right to administer the ordinance of baptism, even if he should immerse a person.

A recent Baptist historian, A. H. Newman, D.D., LL.D., professor of Church History in McMaster University, Toronto, Canada, in his new book, which has just been published, makes some startling announcements. On page 3, he says, "If the Apostolic Churches were Baptist Churches, the Churches of the second century were not. Still less were those of the third and following centuries."

I have been informed that the Baptist preachers of north Louisiana have been saying that a conference of fifteen ministers met in the North to revise the Bible. And they all agreed that the words "Baptize and Baptize" always mean immerse every time they occur in the Bible. That was said here in my town by two of these would-be saints who hold patent on baptism and veracity.

I wrote Dr. Gross Alexander about the matter and the following will explain itself: "My Dear Brother Woodward: No, I never heard of any committee of thirteen or any other number of men that translated the word immerse. I myself was a member of a committee to make a new revision of the English Bible in July in New Jersey, and that committee did not translate the word immerse in a single instance. The brother is reckoning without the facts. Yours."

I have in my possession a letter from one of our preachers, where he shows beyond doubt that a Baptist preacher of his town published a point blank untruth. Why will these preachers pose as such saints and then tell and publish things untrue? I do not see their object in so doing, unless it be to keep the ignorant uninformed. The Baptist Chronicle of year before last published a piece in which it said: "The Baptists thrive best where the people are most ignorant." I want to give now in a short way the origin of our Baptists in America.

Here is Benedict's account: "This Church, which is the oldest of the Baptist denomination in America, was formed in March, 1639. Its first members were twelve in number, viz.: Roger Williams, Ezekiel Holloman, Stockley Westcott, John Green, Richard Waterman, Thomas James, Robert Cole, Wm. Carpenter, Francis Weston and Thomas Olney. As the whole company, in their own estimation, were unbaptized, and they knew of no administrator in any of the infant settlements to whom they could apply, they with much propriety hit upon the following expedient: Ezekiel Holloman, a man of gifts and piety, by the suffrages of the little company, was appointed to baptize Mr. Williams, who in return baptized Holloman and the other ten. Benedict's History of the Baptist denomination, p. 150.

Here is Dr. Cramp's account: "The result was, however, that twelve men declared themselves Baptist in principle. Then the question arose, How were they to be baptized, since they had no minister? They might have sent to England for one; but the application might not have been successful, and it would have involved an expense which they were not prepared to meet, besides which a long delay would have occurred. In this dilemma, they adopted the only expedient that seemed to meet the case. One of their number, Thomas Holloman, was chosen to baptize Mr. Williams, who then baptized the others. This was in March, 1639." Cramp's Baptist History, p. 161.

In those days there was no Baptist claiming to have come down all the way by successive immersion from John the Baptist, so he made a John the Baptist of Ezekiel Holloman, an unordained lay member of his Salem Church, got him immersed, and then immersed his John the Baptist, and his neighbors, and so originated the Church which was, in after years to boast very loudly of apostolic or pre-apostolic origin. They have as little real ground for their bigoted claims as any other Church, or denomination, I know of, unless it be the Campbellite brethren. Our people, many of them will fuss and fume like everything if one of us makes any effort to correct these false claims. I shall do so.

Haynesville, La.

FROM PRESIDENT D. C. HULL.

Dear Brother Meek: Through the kindness of one of my brethren of the Mississippi Conference, it has been brought to my attention that a football game has been scheduled between Millsaps College and Memphis University for October 29th. This is news to me, as no such announcement has been authorized by any one connected with the College, nor had the fact of it come to my notice until to-day.

No such game will be played here. I am informed by Manager J. F. McKay, of the State Fair Association, that the game to be played is between the city of Jackson and Memphis University, the arrangement having been perfected last February. He informs me further that the use of the name of Millsaps College in this connection is the result of inadvertence or misunderstanding.

Certain it is that the authorities of the College had nothing to do with the matter and that the College will not be a party to any game or games that may be played in Jackson or elsewhere, so long as the attitude of our Conferences remains unchanged.

Personally, I am of the opinion that intercollegiate athletics have a place in our colleges; and, at the proper time I shall be glad to give my reasons for this belief, hoping that the Conferences may see fit to change their attitude. But we are not law-breakers here, and so long as it is the expressed wish of the Conferences that intercollegiate games shall not be played, we shall regard this wish as law.

Kindly give space in your columns to this statement in order to set at rest any misapprehension regarding to the observance here of due deference to the wishes of our Conference bodies, in whom is vested the ownership of this College.

We have had a good opening with 225 students present, and the work of the year is moving off well.

Very cordially yours,

D. C. HULL,
President Millsaps College.

Though some classes are eager to hasten the full establishment of the promised constitution, the government adheres to the announced date, 1915, and prefers to advance slowly.

Epitaphs are of special interest to most people. To go to a great cemetery and wander among a wilderness of tombs and read the inscriptions upon them, though it may awaken feelings somewhat melancholy, is nevertheless a not unpleasant pastime. A worthy sentiment clings upon a marble slab that guards the dust of the dead is thereby rendered peculiarly impressive. Worthy of note, in our opinion, are the words that the late Gen. William C. Oates, of Alabama, directed to be placed upon his monument, which are as follows: "Born in poverty, feared in adversity, without educational advantages, yet by honest individual effort he obtained a competency and the confidence of his fellowman, while fairly liberal to relatives and the worthy poor. A devoted Confederate soldier, he gave his right arm for the cause. He accepted the results of the war without a murmur, and in 1865 he was a Brigadier General of the United States Volunteers in the war with Spain." There is in these sentences no note of complaint, nor the slightest trace of bitterness. The day of sectionalism is well-nigh gone, when one, who for years had carried an empty sleeve, could whisper blasphemy and epithets in public and be heard.

The El Paso Times and several of the public men of West Texas have advocated a division of that great commonwealth. They have taken ground upon the assertion that the western portion of the State is not being treated fairly by the Legislature, and that in consequence they need a government, which would take their local problems into consideration. We do not apprehend, however, that this clamor will avail them anything. The average Texan is proud of the vast territory embraced in the commonwealth of which he is a citizen, and does not desire to see it split in twain. This matter was up for discussion some years ago, and Senator Bailey made a speech in Congress opposing any division, which was pronounced by Harper's Weekly the most eloquent address heard in that body for decades.

Senator R. L. Taylor was nominated for Governor by the so-called regular Democrats of Tennessee on October 6th, and at once signified his acceptance, though at this writing he has not signed the official statement. It will be remembered that in 1890 Patterson was named some months ago for a third term, but, it having become manifest that he could not be elected, he withdrew from the race, and a second convention was called, which, as has been said, prevailed upon Senator Taylor to become the standard bearer of the party. That he is the most popular citizen of the State, there is little doubt; but many question his ability to win under existing conditions. Thousands of the robust Democrats of the commonwealth think that the only way to win out Pattersonism effectually is to support the independent ticket, and it is very doubtful whether the party lash can whip them back into line.

A successful insurrection took place in Portugal on Tuesday, October 11th. The first of revolution, which had been smoldering for years, suddenly flared forth, and almost without a struggle, the throne was overturned and a new government claiming to be republican in form was set up. The army and navy are said to have been in sympathy with the rebels, and to have deserted the youthful king. The palace was quickly captured, but the royal family escaped, and are now under the protection of the British flag. As to whether the Portuguese people generally are in sympathy with the revolt, there seems to be some doubt. Some claim that the revolutionists are in power only in the larger cities, and that the masses are yet loyal to King Manuel. The president of the new republic which has been proclaimed is Theophile Braga. The government of which he is the head has not yet been recognized by any of the nations.

DEATH OF MRS. W. M. SULLIVAN.

The members of the Mississippi Conference and the many friends of the Rev. W. M. Sullivan will be sorry to learn that he is now passing through deep and troubled waters. On last Wednesday night at 12:15 a. m. his beloved companion passed from time into eternity. She had been sick but a few days, and in her last hours suffered intensely, but she died in the triumphs of a living faith. The writer was present when she peacefully breathed her last and passed out from the service of God on earth to praise him forever on high.

A large congregation assembled at 4 p. m. on Thursday, the 6th inst., in our Cathedral Church, of which Brother Sullivan is the much-loved pastor, to pay their last tribute of respect to the departed one. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. T. Logan, who was assisted by Revs. P. D. Hardin, H. G. Galloway, I. W. Cooter, and R. V. Lancaster, pastors of the local Presbyterian Church. Besides these brethren, the following members of the Mississippi Conference were present, viz: H. M. Ellis, J. L. Ellis, C. N. Guice, W. L. Lindell, and the writer. The pastors of all the other churches in the city were present. Every business house in town was closed during the funeral service. In compliance with Sister Sullivan's request, her husband took her back to DeKalb, Miss., where she was laid to rest in the family burying ground yesterday morning.

Later on some one will furnish you with an appropriate obituary.

McComb City, Oct. 8, 1910.

The last session of the British Wesleyan Conference dispensed with the reading of the Pastoral Address, and had it printed, and a copy given to each member of that body, and it states us that this was a wise way of handling the matter, and that American Methodists might learn a valuable lesson therefrom.

In the secret of His presence, how precious delights to hide!—Ellen Lakshmi Gorch.

Concerning Missions.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

Another District Falls Into Line.

H. R. B. Elder.

The Lewisburg District of the Baltimore Conference has fallen into line with the forward missionary movement, and is raising a special of $1,500 to support a missionary in China, and has already raised and turned over a $200 special for home missions. This action was decided upon at the recent District Conference at Academy, W. Va. The $1,500 is to be collected through the Sunday schools, and an appointment has been made to the various schools based on the salary of the Presiding Elder. The unique feature is that the fund has been guaranteed by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The laymen composed themselves as it were, into a board of underwriters and pledged themselves to see that the amount is forthcoming. R. L. Johnson, of Alderson, W. Va., was elected secretary and treasurer, and will look after the collection of the funds. The special will be applied to the support of Rev. J. A. G. Shipley, one of our veteran missionaries to China, who is now Presiding Elder of the Shanghai District.

The $200 special for home work has already been collected and applied to the Western Virginia Conference, which is in need of help in some of its territory. The Holston, Kentucky and Baltimore Conferences each agreed to raise $500 to help out the work in West Virginia.

The laymen of the Lewisburg District, under the leadership of Mr. E. Chase Bare, have evidently awakened by a realization of opportunity and obligation and decided to do a worthier part than ever before in the enterprise of world-wide missions. The habit of assuming specials of this character is becoming contagious. Men are seeing in it not only an opportunity for service, but are recognizing it as a rare privilege and a source of joy to have a personal share in the program of world-evangelization.

We hope and expect to see the time when practically all our districts and congregations will be meeting not only the assessments laid upon them, but voluntarily going far beyond in their eagerness to carry out the great commission left by our Lord.

THE UNFINISHED TASK.

The Christian Herald has tabulated the unfinished task of the Christian Church and the forces employed in its accomplishment, as follows: "The millions still unreached by the Gospel are these: Asia, 42,000,000; Africa, 70,000,000; Arabia, 3,000,000; Syria, 750,000; the Sinaitic peninsula, 50,000; Eastern Sumatra and adjacent islands, 2,250,000; Madura, Bali and Lombok Islands, 2,000,000; Malay peninsula, 1,000,000; total, 113,000,000. In all, 788 Protestant Missionary Societies are at work in foreign fields. The annual combined contributions are $25,350,000. There are 5,522 ordained missionaries, 982 physicians, 2,502 men lay missionaries, 5,406 married women, 4,588 unmarried women, or a total of 19,280 foreign missionaries. There are 5,045 ordained natives and 92,918 unordained teachers, Bible women, etc. The total living baptized Christians are 3,006,372; adherents, 5,281,571. The native gifts aggregate $2,300,000."

Our work must be done to-day. There may be no tomorrow. The future is wholly in God's hands. Waste not talents nor strength in work and anxiety for the future. Leave God's work to him, and faithfully and prayerfully perform the work assigned you to-day.—Author not known.

REV. Q. A. OATS

The story of the life of Rev. Quincy Anderson, elder and father of Rev. Q. A. Oats, was born in New Orleans, La., May 1, 1840. From his strong Scotch-Irish ancestry of purest strain he inherited the red blood of iron and strength which made his whole life the positive power it was for truth and righteousness. If we venerate the man whose heart is warm with human sympathies, whose hands are clean and pure whose doctrine and whose life coincident exhibit a full proof of sincere, honest manhood in the highest sense of God to men, then the name of Q. A. Oats will shine forever. He was a live man, a broad man, a real man, a true man, great in his love for men, great in unswerving fidelity to conscience and truth, great and exalted in the solidity of his character and the principles of his conduct, gracious in spirit, simple in manner and meek. His preaching match, but more his practice, wrought a living sermon of the truths he taught. While yet a lad unsettled in life & devious ways and undisciplined the horrors of the Civil War broke upon the country, and living in a section successively overrun by the armies on both sides, and infested with bushwhackers and the general rendezvous of deserters, his young life could scarcely have held well defined plans as to its future direction. It, therefore, became uncertain, precarious and hard. The close of the war found his father with a large family to care for, and nothing left but the bare, rocky soil, even his home and all outhouses having been swept away by the flames of the enemy's fire. But young Quincy was manifestly full of the restless energy, ambition and purpose which were the abiding and controlling forces in his stormy character throughout his eventful career. Unwilling to sit down in the ashes of defeat, amid the charred ruins, desolations and hardships the war had wrought, and repine over the hopeless outlook, or content himself to eke out a scant subsistence and grow to manhood's estate without God's provisions for manhood's downer, he arose in the strength of manly courage and nobler purpose, and entered through difficulties and severe obstructions the long, hard struggle for life's higher ends and aims. The way he chose was not easy, but rugged and thorny. The heights were steep, the goal far in glimmering uncertainty lay, the young mind untrained to mental toil, the soul to discipline. But there, along the exalted plains of life's elysian objects, amid the encircling gloom of trial and poverty and toil, lay the object he sought—the wealth of being, the true riches of God to mortals given. It was enough. The vision was certain: the tender youth embarked on the stormy voyage. The sea was often rough, but he kept his heart toward the unseen shore, till at last he gained the strand. In his native county or surrounding country there was no school which met his ideal. So he at once set out to South Carolina and entered there a school of character. Here he not only advanced decidedly and successfully in his studies, but sustained himself financially, and, moreover, rendered material aid by his industry and frugality to the loved ones at home. His education was thus prosecuted under heavy disadvantages.

While his literary training was not fully collegiate, it was, however, more than academic. To these years of hard work and study in his preparation for life, Brother Oats added all the years of his active and strenuous life existence on earth. He was a diligent and painstaking student of all facts and truth. He possessed an alert, penetrating and vigorous mind, which was never satisfied with half truths. His virile intellect was used laboriously in search of truth and light, not truth in a narrow, beaten circle or a few chosen phases, but truth in its larger and broader bearings—truth wherever God has lodged it, in law and life, rock and flower, ebb and tide, mind and soul. He had a wonderful gift in devouring and assimilating books and facts. His information was large, various, wonderfully accurate and minute, extending over the broad range of phenomena, philosophy, history, literature, theology and kindred subjects as they came within his purview. In general conversation he was always a surprise to his auditors because of the large and minute fund of knowledge he possessed on all practical and common subjects. Brother Oats was clearly converted and gave his life fully and forever to God in his native county and State, September, 1858, at the age of nine years, and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the same time and place.

In his young manhood he came to the Mississippi Delta with a North Carolina friend to manage a large plantation in the region of Webb. That great country was then new, an unbroken jungle, except here and there a large plantation. It was sparsely settled, full of wild beasts, deadly malaria and insect pests. Life there was crowded with hardships, privations, and much serious and fatal illness to the whites. His friend he lost the first year, and added to this severe grief, his own life was much broken by disease and trial. He had brought his church letter with him from his old home in North Carolina and put it in the nearest church, which was twelve miles distant. These were hard days in the Mississippi Delta—but few white people, widely scattered, weak churches, but a mere hint of morality, and Christianity largely a by-word and a hiss; drinking, gambling, profanity and other forms of immorality were so common that the person who did not engage in them was an oddity. They were conditions that tried many souls. Young Oats was tempted, but none of these things moved him. They could not weaken the moral fibre of a soul so strong, nor sustain a mind so high and pure. As evidence of this he applied and was licensed to preach at Brooklyn Church November 12, 1871. He was admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Conference at Corinth, Miss., December 25, 1872, received into full connection at Aberdeen, Miss., 1874, and at the same time and place ordained deacon by Bishop Duggins, ordained elder by Bishop Pierce, Sardis, Miss., November 25, 1876. He served the following appointments: 1874, Cassidy Mission; 1874, Revere and Beulah; 1875, Bolivar, Ct.; 1876, 77, Greenwood, Ct.; 1878-79, Cherry Hill, Ct.; 1880-81, Carrollton, Ct.; 1882-83, West, Ct.; 1884, Greenwood, Ct.; 1885, Oxford, Ct.; 1886, Abbeville, Ct.; 1887-88, Hebron, Ct. In the fall of 1888 there was great need of preachers in the far West, so Bishop Galloway transferred Brother Oats to California, and stationed him at Santa Anna, in the Los Angeles Conference. From that he filled successively the following charges: in that Western frontier, Norwalk, San Luis Obispo, Lampre, Santa Barbara District, San Bernardino, and the city of Prescott, Arizona. Then, in 1889, he became heart-hungry for the warm and loving friends he left in his old conference, the fellowship sweeter to his great soul than life itself. So he was transferred back to the North Mississippi Conference, and stationed as follows: 1890, Friars Point, 1891-92, Verona; 1893-94, Crawford; 1895-96, manager of Orphans' Home, Water Valley and Jackson; 1897-10, Shuqualak, where his labors ended. In November, 1876, Brother Oats was happily married to Miss Ida Collier, near Webb, Miss. This beautiful union of hearts and lives was but brief, for in less than two years his happy bride was ruthlessly snatched from his bosom by death. With her going his life became sad and lonely. But on January 29, 1882, in Woodville, Miss., he was happily and fortunately married the second time to Miss Alice A. Coleman, an accomplished and noble woman of large mind and heart, and of literary culture. She was at the time a teacher in Edward McGehee College. She and two children, both grown—Mrs. Carroll Clark, of Verona, Miss., and Prof. Coleman Oats—are left to mourn the irreparable loss of husband and father. Brother Oats' life was spent in hard and difficult places, with slight remuneration. Many of his first and best years were spent in the Misisippian Delta. He was a pioneer there in planting and organizing Methodism in that fertile but hard and inhospitable field. No one now can ever know the crosses borne, privations endured, the sickness and pain suffered, the hardships and trials encountered; the loneliness to a refined and loving heart. He endured hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, and, like Paul, he could say, "None of these things move me." He blazed a way in the great American jungle, followed the trail of the panther and bear, crossed and recrossed the can-brake wilderness, sought out the lonely cabin of the sick, the poor, and desolate, and ministered unto them and comforted their sad hearts with the sweet peace of the gospel. Then his work, too, in California, was very hard pioneer work on the fringe lines of Southern Methodism's advancing hosts. It required a gain of heroic spirit, daring courage, and unflinching fidelity to conscience and truth to meet the issue and save the day. Q. A. Oats was cast in such a mold. He was so great he defies analysis. You cannot take him apart—he was a whole. "We touch heaven when we see a man." He was real and genuine. He could not play hide-and-seek with truth and right. His convictions were sacred—as inviolate as his soul. He could no more tolerate a sham than he a sham himself. His code of thought, principle and action was as high and divine as his conceptions of God. To him life and religion were one, or neither was anything—life, a mission, an existence, an aim, was his estimate true and constant. A man who knew him well remarked: "His life is greater than any sermon preached on earth." As a minister he honored his calling, served his Lord and his generation with whole-hearted devotion and singular fidelity. The gospel to him was the only plan by which the lost could be saved. To his faith God was real and almighty. Men were fallen and ruined by sin, but Jesus could save unto the utmost. His style was textual and expository. He would turn a flood of light on the Word from the Word itself. But he would also use other sources of light to make luminous the whole truth. He was strong, original, logical and convincing. When he had concluded his sermon you felt the uplift and gravity of a larger world and had the vision of loftier altitudes.

As a friend he was natural, simple, unaffected, unselfish, warm-hearted, generous, confiding and reciprocal. He was not always understood, but there was no manlier man, no truer soul, no knightlier spirit. He was a man who combined in himself uncompromising truth, luminous virtues, granite principles and mountain visions. His massive manhood, his unsullied character, his unshadowed soul, his untarnished name will be a rich heritage to me forever. As a father he was kind, proud, loving, thoughtful, firm, but gentle and gracious. As a man, minister, citizen, he filled the sphere of a genuine soul.

He could not be controlled by the voice or shibboleth of majorities unless they were right. He did his own thinking and did it honestly, sincerely and profoundly, and lived and wrought exactly as he thought. As a husband, he was cold, rate, gentle, careful, loving and appreciative. Neither his life nor his preaching ever lowered the standard of manhood or the character of the gospel.

While on the Pacific Coast, his name was fully recognized by other churches larger and more influential than his own, and more than once was he offered other pulpits and nearly three times the salary he was getting, but to one of his fidelity and convictions this was no temptation. Golden doors, flattering remuneration, high social positions were open to him, but like Moses, he chose to suffer affliction with the people of God. His life was never shadowed, his manhood never compromised, his conscience never violated, his integrity never suspected. His name will ever be a shining picture of wholeheartedness, trueheartedness, faithfulness and love. Brother Oats' health began to fail very rapidly after the Okolona Conference, December, 1899. At that Conference he was appointed to Louisville, having finished his third year at Shuqualak. But his people loved him so devotedly they said they could not give him up, so they set to work at once with great zeal to effect an exchange by which their most beloved pastor might remain with them and fill out his quadrennium. This exchange was effected and the man of God began his fourth year's work among the people who knew and loved him so truly and devotedly. The work was heavy and the three previous years had wrecked his constitution. His good wife and friends soon discovered he was giving away rapidly under the strain. They tried to persuade him from going and doing so much, but he could not be checked. He went till his second Quarterly Conference, then his official board became alarmed. They raised his salary to $100 and voted him a vacation of two months for rest. This was noble, but to no avail. A trip had been hastily planned to the mountains of his native State with the hope of his restoration, but for this, too, it was all too late—the arrow had sped to its mark, the heart's blood was ebbing away. He was carried about April the 15th to the home of his daughter in Verona, Miss., where he had the tenderest attention and most loving care, but all again to no avail. His work was done, the book of his life had been written, and God was graciously closing the volume.

Surrounded by loving and heartbroken members of his family and friends, on May the 6th, he breathed his last and went home to God and the angels. He died of angina pectoris.

On the Sabbath, May 8, in the church at Verona, crowded to its utmost, amidst weeping and tears on all sides, the sad obsequies were held by the writer, assisted by several members of the Conference. This is the story of one side of his active life. The other side can never be seen, written or measured; it came to its full status and glory as the flower comes to its perfection and fruitage, under God's central sun. His blood was iron, his will tint, his character granite, his life labor, his thought light, his soul dawn. He has entered the high places of the Father's presence and glory. Yes, he is at rest, at home, at ease in the Father's house. We have lost him but for a spell. Our lives are richer and sweeter because of a wise counselor, a faithful minister, a martyr toiler, a chivalrous spirit, a princely man has fallen. He knew the end was coming and talked freely and calmly about his release. He went out to meet the last enemy, met him and came off "more than conqueror." He said, "There is no fear, I have set my house in order and am ready for the summons." Behold the Lord, the Lord of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the mighty man and the man of war, the judge and the prophet, and the prudent and the ancient, the captain of fifty and the honorable man, and the counselor."

A SONG.

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
There is ever something sings away.
There's the song of the lark when the skies are clear,
And the song of the thrush when the skies are gray.

The sunshine showers across the grain,
And the bluebird thrills in the orchard tree,
And in and out when the eaves drip rain,
The swallows are twittering ceaselessly.

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
Be the skies above dark or fair,
There is ever a song that our hearts may hear,
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
There is ever a song somewhere!

There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
In the midnight black, or the mid-day blue;
The robin pipes when the sun is here,
And the cricket chirrups the whole night through,
The buds may blow and the fruit may grow,
And the autumn leaves drop, crisp and sere,
But whether the sun, or the rain, or the snow,
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear.

A SOLDIER BOY AND A BIBLE.

(As Related by the Boy.)

My name is Thomas B. Young. I was born in Florida. At an early period in my life I was bereft of my parents, and I went to live with a rich uncle, hotel proprietor in one of the first cities of the State. My young life was one of ease and I grew up a boy not knowing the necessity of work. My uncle, desiring to be good to me, installed me as clerk in his hotel, but having been so used to idleness I decided the task was too hard and told my uncle I was going to leave him. Asking him for money with which to travel, he gave me a check for $400. Looking at it and thinking it was $40, I angrily and foolishly tore it in bits before his astonished eyes.

Like the prodigal of sacred story I soon began to pant; but, unlike him, I did not return to my old home, but decided to join the army. I began to be a very bad boy, learning to gamble, and with such companions as that vice would bring to me, I went from bad to worse. Remaining with the army a number of years, I became first sergeant of my company. After various moves of the regiment I found myself stationed at the government quarters near Minneapolis. Having a leave of absence for a few days, I went to St. Paul and spent most of my time and almost all of my money in gambling.

In the morning as I was starting back for the barracks I saw a Bible lying in a window, and seized with a sudden impulse I went in and secured it, although it took every cent I owned. Placing it under my arm I started for the bridge spanning the Mississippi at this place, on my way to the fort. As I walked on I suddenly awakened to the fact that I had bought a Bible. Why I did it I could not imagine, for I was a confessed and professed infidel, a blatant unbeliever. That Bible must be destroyed. An attempt was made to fling it into the river; it struck a brace in the bridge and rebounded to my feet. I kicked at it, but missed it and struck the railing with my foot. Seeing I was attracting attention I gathered up the book, and started for the further end of the bridge, determined to dispose of the volume after passing the people who had seen the attempt that failed.

Queer as it may seem I had a similar experience again, and feeling perplexed and confused I determined to take it to quarters. Reaching the barracks I clandestinely hid the book in my locker, heartily ashamed to let any of the boys know I had such a possession.

Soon the Spanish-American war broke out and I was ordered to the front. Now I had become first sergeant of the engineering crew, and at the battle of Santiago was ordered to replace some sacks of sand that had been shot away, putting us under fire. While thus engaged a bursting shell from the enemy's fire blew a splinter into one of my lungs. After a desperate siege, life and health returned, as it seemed, God had a purpose in store for me. I was taken to a convalescent hospital in Florida after I had begun to recover, to which place my locker, which had been left behind when I was ordered to the front, was sent to me. I had carefully buried the Bible at the very bottom of the box, and what was my surprise when opening it to find it on the top of everything. I am sure I did not want the book, so when inspection day came around I placed it with some other odds and ends in a sack to be casted out and destroyed. I gave a sigh of relief when it was gone from my sight.

Having recovered and stationed to go fishing, I one day passed by a garden trap and there saw a gunny sack which had a very familiar appearance. I opened it and there was my Bible. Would I never escape it? So quietly was I aroused by this time as to the persistency of the book, I determined then and there to keep it for nothing more than a mascot of superstition. I took it back to the hospital and again placed it in my locker. One of my comrades, a very dear friend, was dying of tetanus. His jaws were set. I was his constant attendant. Just a little while before he died he turned to me and said:

"Tom, you have a Bible."

"I cannot imagine how he knew, but I took it from its hiding place and began to read to him in John. I read the first three chapters. He asked me to re-read them. I did so. When I reached the immortal 'three sixteen,' which tells of God's wonderful and universal, unselfish love, he said feebly:

"Tom, can that mean me?"

Not knowing what to reply, I said:

"That is what it says here."

Then he said:

"Tom, I believe, won't you ask him to save me?"

As I had never deserted a comrade I would not leave him nor deny his dying request. So I dropped on my knees and prayed the best I knew. He whispered through his set teeth:

"Tom, I believe he saves me now."

Then he began to hum that old hymn:

Jesus lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly;
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high,
Hide me O my Savior hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide,
O receive my soul at last.

Then he died.

Afterwards I was transferred to the Philippines and saw service in China during the Boxer uprising. While in line of battle and marching over dead Chinese I was seized with a desire to help the poor wretched people, but could not understand what the desire meant.

After retiring from army life I drifted back into the old ways and habits and became more and more wicked. One night, walking along the streets of a Western city, I was thinking of my dying comrade and of my own misspent life, when I heard music coming from a mission hall. I entered and that night became saved.

Since then God has called me to go to China as a missionary and I am now preparing. The book I study most is the same Bible I could not lose nor throw away.

MRS. H. W. LEDBETTER.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. Willie Mattie McK. Ledbetter, wife of our pastor at Colfax, La., died in the triumph of a Christian faith at the Colfax parsonage August 13, 1910, and was buried by Rev. P. M. Brown at Simsboro, La. She was born in Webster Parish, near Minden, La., May 3, 1874, and was married to H. W. Ledbetter June 24, 1894, and was the mother of three children—Bessie, Blanche and Willard. Bessie died nine years ago, leaving two little ones to bless and be comforted by their father. At the time of their marriage Sister Ledbetter was a member of the Baptist Church, but when her husband was recommended for admission into the Methodist ministry she thought it best to join with him, which she did after attending meeting conducted by Brothers Shepard and Barr, and her walk was ever as becometh a saint, being extremely modest and rarely beautiful, with her conversation always seasoned with love. Through a long sickness, in which her body wasted away from consumption, and while her life was sinking out of time into eternity, she was ever conscious of the Lord's presence, and left many beautiful evidences of assurance of His sustaining grace. On the fourth Sunday in May, when she had her first hard spell, after which she was unable to leave the house, in the presence of her husband and a friend, she testified that she had a vision of angels, so beautiful that she only wished those with her might be present to see them, too. At least at one other time she seemed to have been allowed to look into the faces of these heavenly messengers, and never once gave expression to any fear of death. Once she awoke repeating the 14th chapter of John. When she saw that a further fight for life was useless, she was deliberate in her directions as to where she wished to be buried, how she was to be dressed, and that she wanted "Nearer My God to Thee" and "There Will Be No More Good-bys in Heaven" songs that she had often sung for others, sung at her funeral, and just a few hours before she passed away she took her ring from her finger and gave it to her husband, with directions for its disposal. She was a faithful and worthy preacher's wife, making many friends and drawing all closer to Christ, and an unselfish mother, whose life was full of sacrifices for her loved ones. And, although she was cut off in young womanhood and rests from her earthly labors, her works do follow her, and her memory to many is precious. But it is more for our bereaved brother pastor and for the motherless children that we think than for the saintly one from whom all sighing and sorrow has fled; and as we have daily prayed for them since our first knowledge of their affliction, so do we now assure them that they do not weep alone, and that, when all others may have forgotten them, the inner brotherhood of pastors shall still be found doing a brother's part. And here we thank the kind people of Colfax for all their ministries to our fellow workers in the gospel and to his suffering wife and sorrowing children, and assure them by the authority of a divine promise that they who have given "a drink of cold water in the name of a disciple shall not lose a disciple's reward." Not every Christian minister in the hours of affliction has been attended by those so kind, and these shall not lose their reward.

All is well that ends well, and some day, some time, we'll understand.

"Her toils are past, her work is done,
And she is crowned at last;
She fought the fight, the victory won,
And entered into rest."

P. O. LOWREY.

Editorial.

THE PROBLEMS OF MINISTERIAL SUPPLY AND SUPPORT.

That there has been a general scarcity of ministers in the churches of the United States for the past few years is well known. All denominations have experienced difficulty in procuring preachers for their pastorates, and in some the problem has at times become most acute and perplexing. Even the Methodists and Baptists, among whom pastors have usually been plentiful, have been complaining of an insufficient number of clerical recruits and the consequent impossibility of filling their pulpits with efficient men. Probably there has never been a time in the history of Southern Methodism when so many appointments were being served by supplies as now.

Various theories have been advanced to account for this dearth of preachers. Some would explain it wholly on financial grounds, contending that the salaries paid are insufficient to attract young men to the ministry as a life work—that the sacrifices required are too great, and, hence, they turn to more remunerative occupations. But this worldly explanation has never been to us at all satisfactory. It is out of harmony with the whole history of Christianity. The day of the Church's material prosperity has never been the season when she exhibited the most spiritual power and aggressiveness. Her times of persecution and adversity have been the occasions when she won her most glorious triumphs. Little, in our judgment, could be expected of men enticed into the ministerial calling by the material inducements offered. Such a motive would be a poor and pitiable substitute for the divine constraint that had laid hold of Paul, when he exclaimed: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

As we see it, the cause of more young men not entering the ministry lies far deeper than a mere surface money consideration. We think it is due to the lack of a vigorous spiritual life among the membership of the churches. There is, to be sure, much activity of certain kinds in our congregations and a larger outflow of philanthropy than in the days ago, but do they believe as strongly in the fundamental verities of the gospel as the fathers? Is the sense of sin as palpable among them and the conviction as profound that, without the cleansing influence of the Holy Spirit, it will blight and utterly destroy the soul? Do they exercise as much in meditation and prayer? Do they worship God as much in their homes? Does religion occupy as large a place in their thought and life? It is the general, every-day atmosphere that most counts in impressing the mind and molding the character. Is that as pronouncedly spiritual as it once was? Give Christ and the work of extending his kingdom the foremost place in the affections and activities of his professed disciples, and there will be no lack of enthusiastic volunteers to carry forward the cause. Difficulties will not deter them, nor the lack of pay restrain them. Men will respond to the challenge of the heroic. They do it in carnal warfare, and not less readily have they sprung forward to meet such a call in the nobler struggle to uplift and save humanity when a real campaign of rescue was being attempted. Have you not noticed how workers arise on every side when the revival spirit is abroad? There has never been a period when "Christianity in earnest" could not find agents through whom it could propagate itself. There is something radically wrong with the religious state of a denomination which can not grow a sufficiency of ministers to meet its demands.

But how about the statement that bright young men seem disinclined to the pulpit, and that only those of inferior ability may now be found in the ranks of the ministry? It has always been true that most of our preachers have come from the humbler walks of life. In the opening decades of the Christian era, the great Apostle to the Gentiles wrote: "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." But that there has been any deterioration in the quality of our pulpit service, we do not for one moment admit. On the contrary, we think that beyond question it has greatly improved. There are more educated men in the ministry now than ever before, and the average intelligence of our preachers is much higher than formerly, as it ought to be. It is yet, of course, far too low, and the churches fully realize it and are laboring to equip more amply those who are to lead in their work. But we insist that, in point of intelligence, ministers already compare favorably with those engaged in other callings and professions. We may be told that there are none of the commanding abilities of Beecher, or Brooks, or Talmage, or Simpson, or Bascom, or Pierce among us. It is easy to retort that there are now in the legal profession or public life no such men as Calhoun, or Webster, or Clay, or Prentiss, or Conkling, or Lamar, or Ben Hill. No vocation is always adorned with stars of the first magnitude. They seem to come only occasionally and usually in clusters.

We do not desire to be understood in what we have written as minimizing the matter of ministerial support. That is a pressing and most important problem. That our preachers are inadequately and irregularly paid and have to stint and sacrifice, is painfully true. And too often the meager sums which they receive are grudgingly and complainingly given. Many times, when a presiding elder, we have heard stewards relate in the quarterly conference unpleasant and humiliating things that had been said to them while collecting their assessment lists. Under the circumstances a self-respecting preacher could hardly accept the money raised, were he not forced to do so by absolute necessity. Such a procedure is a shame and reproach. That our ministers continue faithfully in the field under such conditions, evidences a deep conviction of their call, and is much to their credit. The secular papers have had not a little to say about fifty-seven preachers in the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church surrendering their credentials and entering secular pursuits, giving as a reason the smallness of the salaries to be had in the ministry. To our mind, their action is proof not only of a lack of liberality on the part of the laity of that section, but also of a dearth of spirituality among at least a part of the clergy. It has long been a matter of note that the Methodist preachers of the North are, as a rule, much more given to taking a hand in politics and business than their brethren of the South. May it not be that already partially secularized, they do not find it very difficult to become entirely so? A ministry, wholly unentangled with the affairs of the world, is the most apostolic, and, in our opinion, the best fitted to conserve and carry forward the interests of the divine kingdom. The work of the pastorate alone is enough to fill an angel's brain and heart.

We exhort our people to honor their ministers and do the utmost possible for them. They need and deserve all that can be paid them. Salaries have not kept pace with the increase in the cost of living. Many of them can spare nothing to purchase new books that they may keep abreast of current thought. Thus their growth in power and usefulness is hindered. And their quarterage should be promptly raised. It is a gross injustice to make them buy on a credit and wait until the end of the year for what is due them. The worth of a consecrated, fearless, faithful preacher to a community is incalculable. He is Christ's representative, and the Master will not be unmindful of those who esteem him very highly in love for his work's sake.

BISHOP J. H. MCCOY.

It was our great pleasure to hear Bishop McCoy preach two sermons at Greenville, Miss., last Sunday. His text at the morning hour was Acts xvii, 28: "For in him we live, and move, and have our being," and at night he discoursed upon Philipians ii, 5: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." To say that the Bishop's pulpit utterances made a fine impression, would scarcely give an adequate conception of the effect which they produced. Indeed, they were of an unusually high order, being characterized by freshness and vigor of thought and apt and telling illustrations. The spiritual and evangelical note in them was deep and particularly noticeable.

Bishop McCoy has already visited several of the districts in the North Mississippi Conference, and it is expected that by the time the Annual Conference meets he will have touched and preached in every one of them. And he has done this notwithstanding the fact that his episcopal district embraces four representative Conferences, and that he has a vast amount of work of a clerical and administrative character to perform. We strongly commend the disposition of the Bishop to mix and mingle with our preachers and people. It has been a complaint of the masses of Methodism for years that they so seldom see and hear one of our chief-pastors. One of our leading church papers suggested after the ad-journalment of the last General Conference that we had perhaps elected too many Bishops, that five instead of seven would probably have been enough. In that view we are far from concurring. We believe in having the episcopal college sufficiently large to make its members available for service in every part of the connection. By his democratic spirit and brotherliness, Bishop McCoy is winning his way into all hearts wherever he goes. He seems to be wholly unaffected by the dignity of his high office, and his admirable bearing is beyond the reach of praise. By many he is compared to the sainted Marvin, the fragrance of whose consecrated life pervades as one of the cherished heritages of Southern Methodism.

CHURCH CHOIRS.

The following brief editorial from the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, is so pertinent and timely that we reproduce it with our full and unreserved endorsement.

A correspondent of the Pittsburg Advocate rightfully contends that the congregation shows all too little appreciation for the services of unpaid volunteer choirs. The choir members, she says, spend much time in preparing the music, in order that all the services may be benefited. They not only pay their church dues, but gratuitously give many hours of time and labor. But the congregation too seldom expresses an appreciative word. There would be inspiration to better work if the members of the choir, individually and as a whole, could receive some cordial encouragement once in a while, or have some recognition in the way of an entertainment, a dinner, or some remembrance at Easter or Christmas time. We believe that the writer has said a very sensible and necessary thing. We criticize our singers too much, and praise them altogether too little.

CHURCH DEDICATION AT ALEXANDRIA.

Bishop W. B. Murrah dedicated the beautiful new First Methodist Church at Alexandria, La., last Sunday. Most of the other pastors of the city called in their appointments, and together with their congregations attended the dedicatory exercises. It was a magnificent audience that faced the distinguished minister when he entered the pulpit. Choosing Luke x, 42 as his text, he delivered a characteristically strong and eloquent discourse, making a profound impression upon his hearers. At the evening hour the Bishop preached again and five-minute talks were made by the pastors of other denominations. The structure dedicated is one of the handsomest and most commodious houses of worship in the State. It has been completed under the wise and aggressive leadership of the Rev. H. R. Singleton, who is finishing his quadrennium in the charge, and cost approximately $40,000. The construction of such an edifice and setting it apart for divine worship and service, unencumbered by debt, is a great achievement, and we heartily congratulate Brother Singleton and his enterprising people. They have wrought nobly, and well deserve the commendation which is being generally accorded them.

OUR EPWORTH LEAGUE WORK.

We are pleased to note that our Epworth League work is progressing favorably under the capable superintendence of Dr. F. S. Parker, the General Secretary, and Rev. J. M. Culbreth, his efficient assistant. The report which is being sent to the Annual Conferences clearly shows activity and growth in this organization. There are now in the connection 4,087 League Chapters with a membership of 145,091. This means that of our 5,921 pastoral charges, 1,854 have no Epworth Leagues; and since these pastoral charges have in them 19,116 societies, it indicates that there are in Southern Methodism 17,069 congregations without a League Chapter. The announcement of these figures should serve as an earnest call to our pastors and people to bestir themselves to provide facilities for equipping and training our young people for Christian service. Nothing does this so effectively as the Epworth League, with its several departments properly maintained.

The advancement of the League during the past quadrennium was steady and encouraging. There was a net increase of 526 chapters and 24,004 members. The Epworth Era now has a subscription list of 10,000, and was able to pay last year all expenses, including the salary of the editor. Much wholesome literature bearing on the work has been published and circulated. A permanent Bible and Church Study Course to consist of sixteen volumes is now in process of preparation. Among the contributors to this are the following: Bishop Candler, Dr. DuBose, Dr. H. Walter Featherstone, Prof. Frank Say, Prof. Dr. Franklin N. Parker, Principal J. E. McCulloch, Henry Beach Carr, Prof. Thomas Carter, Prof. Cunningham, Dr. S. M. Godbey, and Dr. W. W. Pin-

The Junior League work is in good shape and growing. The age limit in this organization has been extended to sixteen years. Nearly fifty larger League organizations held annual meetings during the summer of from two to ten days' duration. Some of these represented district and some State Annual Conference divisions. Five were formally organized assemblies, giving courses in the Bible, missions, methods of Christian work, and emphasizing with great success the evangelistic part of the League's life. By means of the ten-cent assessment the Central Office has become well-lighted, self-sustaining, and if the profits of the Epworth League literature sold by the Publishing House were credited to it, it is probable that the department would be found more than self-sustaining.

NOT LOSING ITS HOLD.

There is little to sustain the statement sometimes heard that the Bible is losing its hold on the intelligent young life of the Church and nation. On the contrary, the influence of Christianity is more potent in even our secular institutions of learning today than at any former period in our history. The Student Volunteer Movement alone is proof sufficient that this is true. And further evidence of it is found in the fact each succeeding year sees the Word of God more widely circulated and more pains fully studied. Upon this latter point a recent number of The Presbyterian comments so forcibly and instructively that we here with give the quotation:

"While reports are being sent out from some quarters that our colleges are hotbeds of infidelity, it may surprise some people to hear that there are 80,000 college men studying the Bible in thirty-day Bible classes in fifteen different nations. Last year there were in attendance upon these voluntary Bible classes in the institutions in North America 22,750 men. Of these, 1,000 were studying the Bible in Greek letter fraternity chapter houses; 14,000 were non-Christians; 1,400 faculty men assisted in training leaders and in teaching. This work is all the more remarkable because it is carried on in voluntary classes. This means that this large number of young men want to study the Bible, so it is not an enforced or perfunctory exercise, but a study that interests the mind and springs from the heart."

ADVOCATE DAY.

Sunday, October the 30th, has been chosen for "Advocate Day." Our special campaign for the Conference organ, which is now on, will close then. Let no friend of the Advocate do any work until the 30th, but secure renewals in his charge at the earliest moment possible. Delay is never wise, it increases difficulty to be avoided. But it is our desire that every preacher in Louisiana and Mississippi who has not hitherto to do so sooner shall make a special effort in behalf of the paper on the fifth Sunday in October. We sincerely trust that the claims of the Advocate will be presented from five hundred pulpits on that day. Brethren, we earnestly appeal to you to join in our slogan from the red hills of Tennessee to the surfbeat of the Mexican Gulf, "A greater Methodistism and a greater Advocate."

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone will begin a series of revival services at the First Methodist Church in Greenville next Sunday. He will be assisted by the Rev. H. S. Sprague, the popular pastor of our church at Greenwood, Miss.

Rev. W. W. Drake will commence a meeting at Lake Charles next Sunday, which will likely be continued for two weeks. He will do the preaching himself and a specially organized choir will furnish the music.

Mrs. A. E. Collier, of Greenwood, one of the noblest Christian women in Mississippi, died at the home of her grandson in Vicksburg on October 3d. She had lived a beautiful and useful life, and was ripe for translation to the heavenly home.

The editor was absent from the city from Tuesday, Oct. 4th until Monday the 10th, having been called to Mississippi by urgent personal business. This accounts for the fact that some departments of the paper are not as full as usual this week.

At the residence of the bride's mother, in Neshoba County, Mr. J. on Dent and Miss Gertrude Augustus, were united in marriage on October 2d, the Rev. N. G. Augustus officiating. The Advocate extends hearty congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. D. E. Kelley and Rev. C. N. Guile assisted Rev. H. B. Watkins in a meeting at Magnolia last week. The results of their labors are not known at this writing, but with three workers so energetic and energetic in their efforts we dare say that much good was accomplished.

Mrs. A. J. Foster, whose husband was an active member of the North Mississippi Conference, is residing at Georgetown, Texas, where she is teaching a course in the Southwestern University. She insists upon having the Advocate read to her daily, because, as she expresses it, it comes to her with news from home.

Rev. J. W. Chisholm, of Camden, W. Va., in a letter to the publisher says: "Our people read the Advocate and take an especial interest in the editorials. They strongly commend the paper for standing so fearlessly for the rights of the Church. Brother Chisholm has been kindly taking care of our interests in his charge."

The Rev. M. G. Janney, a member of the Louisiana Conference, is reported to be of the opinion that the Master, has no doubt, is the Master. He sends greetings and adds: "I often recall the words of I. L. P. Shepard and Crews, 'I am not a man, but a man with whom I am in the Kingdom Conference.'"

Rev. J. W. Chisholm, of Camden, W. Va., in a letter to the publisher says: "Our people read the Advocate and take an especial interest in the editorials. Tidings from the Field

Jonesborough Circuit:

Having seen nothing from the Jonesboro Charge, I will write a few lines concerning it. Brother Stephens is our pastor. We had Rev. W. D. Bass with us in our meeting at Mount Pleasant on the fourth Sunday in August, and we had a great revival. The people were built up spiritually, and several were added to the church.—P. M. Brode.

Harrisville Charge:

I am through with my revival meetings. I was assisted by Brothers W. E. Dickens, L. L. Roberts, W. J. Ferguson, W. W. Perry and W. R. Thurman. These servants of God did good work, and were appreciated by all. During the year I have received 42 into the church, painted D'Lo church on the inside and made Poplar Springs church larger, and made some improvements on the parsonage, ceiling and papered one room, and we papered three rooms and the hall last year. I have ordered paint for the parsonage. We are also trying to pay off an old debt of $260 that has been on the parsonage the last three years. We have in cash and subscriptions $240. I want to bring up the collections ordered by the Conference. On account of the boll weevil and dry weather we are having a hard pull. Pray for us.—R. T. Nolen, P. C.

Melville, La.:

The Melville Circuit is looking up somewhat this year. We have organized a splendid W. H. M. S., which is a strong factor in our church life. We have screened the parsonage and have entertained the Alexandria District Conference. We were exceedingly fortunate in having Col. Stubbs with us, but not any more so in him than in our genial presiding elder. Nor have we forgotten the Advocate, but almost troubled its readers here, and are still at work for more.

We have had three revivals on the work so far. Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir did us good service at Bayou Jack and Bethel. Brother W. L. Doss was with us at Waxia and rendered exceedingly good service. These churches were lifted heavenward in their religious life, even not counting the good that was done through the additions to the church.—A. A. Bernard, P. C.

Eureka Circuit:

I suppose a report from the Eureka Circuit will be of interest to some. I have just finished my series of meetings, in which I am indebted for valuable assistance to Revs. J. A. Biffle, H. T. Gaines, W. M. Young, and W. N. Duncan. They did excellent work that will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. We have received twenty-nine into the church on profession of faith and seven by letter. At Terza we had the greatest revival of the year, with nineteen conversions and accessions to the church. The Eureka work is in fairly good shape. Everything is moving along nicely and I expect to come up to Conference with a clean sheet this fall. I am in hopes that this will not be misleading to any one. I will state for the benefit of the good brother who made the complaint, that I served the work spoken of by him, and did not regard it as such an honor that I would be guilty of a wilful misrepresentation to make it appear that I was serving it at the present.—C. Wesley Bailey.

Abbeville, Miss.:

I will give you a short report of my revivals this summer. My first meeting began the fifth Sunday in July. I was assisted by Brother J. D. McWhorter, of Sallis. His sermons were enjoyed by all who heard them. We have few better preachers in North Mississippi than Brother McWhorter. We had ten accessions to our church. Next was our camp meeting. I was fortunate in securing the services of the Rev. A. C. Holder (evangelist) of Shreveport, La. Brother Holder is one of the most zealous workers I have ever seen. Any preacher would be fortunate in securing his services. His singer, Mr. Herring, delighted all who heard him. In this meeting there were thirty-nine received into my church, some to the Oxford Church (Methodist), and others some to the Baptist and Presbyterian. Our next meeting was Andrews Chapel, which resulted in only one accession. I was assisted in this meeting by young Brother Conner. Last but not least, at Abbeville, where I was assisted by Rev. J. H. Bell, of Potts Camp, about which I have written you before. As a result of all my meetings, eighty-one have been added to our church. To God be all the praise.—B. P. Fullilove, P. C.

Amory, Miss.:

I have enjoyed serving the splendid people of Amory and Nettleton charge the past nine months, and feel that good has been accomplished. The presence of Brothers Harrison and Stone (superannuates), who live here, is a benediction and blessing to the town, and especially to the pastor. Both preach occasionally to the delight of us all. Our meetings have been successful, the one at Nettleton resulting in twenty-three additions to our church. The preaching done by Brother E. B. Rainey has borne rich fruit, and the results will abide. I was assisted at Amory by Brother L. A. McKeown, of whose preaching it is needless to speak, save to say it was up to his usual high standard. Mac is a wonderful preacher, and the results of his work with us are gracious. Twenty-five additions, and the church lifted, I trust, to a higher plane of Christian living.

We have had, in all, this year sixty-eight additions to our church, and finances in full up to date. The stewards manage all collections, and successfully. This is a pleasant charge, and a more loyal, kind-hearted people it has never been my privilege to serve.—Yours, R. O. Brown.

Houlka, Miss.:

I guess it is time to hear from Houlka. I suppose we are about like other folks up here. I have a dear, good people; they know how to treat a preacher, so as to make him feel free and at home among them. We have had good meetings at all the churches. Brother R. O. Brown, of Amory, was to hold my meeting at Houlka Church, but sickness prevented his coming. The Lord, however, was with us, and we had a good meeting. Brother Garner, of Shamoni, did the preaching at Concord, with fine results. Brother Garner is goodness personified, and a fine preacher. Brother Armour, of Buena Vista, did the preaching at Ashbury, and the people were highly pleased with his sermons. Brother Cain did some very excellent preaching at Wesley. All of these brethren are in high favor with my people. We had our third quarterly meeting Saturday and Sunday. It was indeed an enjoyable occasion. Brother Felts, our beloved P. E., preached Saturday at 11 o'clock and at night, and again Sunday, with great power. His sermons were a feast to all who heard them. The crops are sorry here, but Houlka charge is in very good shape. These are a noble people and deserving for what they have done. We hope to carry a clean sheet to Conference this year. Pray for us.—T. J. Durrett, P. C.

Church Point, La.:

As it was my privilege to attend a revival just closed some two weeks ago at this place, held in the M. E. Church, South, I feel that it would perhaps be well to tell of the good accomplished by the eight days' labor among us. Many have expressed themselves since the close, and expressions are unanimous among the members and the visitors who heard the eloquent sermons preached by Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, that he left an enduring impress upon the community. He was so endowed with the Holy Spirit that he won the people, who are most appreciative of this young minister's labor here. We feel that the good he did among us will be lasting and when the roll is called up you'd many of us will meet him there. We feel that our church was revived and blessed, and that throughout the coming years we will revert to this meeting with pleasure and thanks to God. Could this young missionary be forgotten in a field like this? Echo answers, never. As he would ascend the pulpit and throw a look of familiar kindness around upon his audience, they knew he was to give them what was in his heart and mind. His words had power, because they accorded with his thoughts, and his thoughts had reality and depth, because they harmonized with the life which he lives. We unanimously wish him to remember the little M. E. Church, South, at Church Point, and pray for its members and progress. Our pastor in charge, Rev. H. B. Vandenburg, is loved and appreciated for the good he has accomplished on this charge this year, and we thank him for his wise selection in the man he obtained to assist him in our meeting.—Creole.

Derma Circuit:

We are moving along very well on the Derma Charge, have held six meetings and have one more to hold and wind up for Conference. I have received between forty and fifty into the Church. Brother W. L. Graves assisted me at Graves Chapel. We had a great meeting.—R. P. Goar, P. C.

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron

For you to remain in ill health, when this celebrated tonic will build you up and put health, strength and vigor in your system, is inexcusable. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, failing health is caused by bad blood. The blood being the body's sole nourishment, must necessarily be pure, otherwise sickness and disease follows. W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON makes pure, rich, red blood and stimulates the liver and kidneys, strengthens heart action and invigorates the nerves, is laxative in its effects and insures proper digestion. Restores all organs to normal health and creates a hearty appetite. Relieves rheumatism by eliminating uric acid from the blood.

50c and $1.00 per bottle.

Get a $1.00 bottle from your druggist, and if you can't see any improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of it, take the remainder to him and your money will be refunded. If your druggist can't supply you, send his name and $1.00 and it will be sent direct, charges prepaid.

W. H. Bull Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo.
In the Spring of 1907 I was a complete wreck and was pronounced by some doctors to have dropsy, by one to have cancer of the stomach, another said tumor; in all these were forty-four or fifty doctors. Scarcely any of them agreed, and none of them did me any good whatever. Four of our County doctors said I could not be cured and gave me up to die. My weight had decreased to 117 pounds and I was perfectly helpless when I decided to try your HERBS AND IRON. After using five bottles my health was immediately restored and in a few weeks I was as strong and healthy as ever in my life. My weight today is 215 pounds. I shall never fail to recommend your remedy.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

BOONEVILLE CIRCUIT.

Some days ago, while just in the midst of our Carolina meeting, which was a great one from the beginning to the close, I gave you a partial report of our meetings up to that date. So now, as we have closed all, I will endeavor to give a full report of what has been accomplished here, on the Booneville Circuit. I do so for the encouragement of the brethren that preceded me on this work. The seed that they sowed here years ago are bursting forth into great harvests, and, too, I love to keep the commands of our Savior. On one occasion he said to an individual: "Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee; and hath had compassion on thee." Hence, for this reason, I love to tell what great things the dear Lord has done for me and those that I come in contact with, for I believe this command applies to us today as much as it did to that poor individual less than two thousand years ago. Had he kept his mouth closed concerning the wonderful things that the dear Lord had done for him those poor people around Decapolis would more than likely never have been saved. The trouble today is that too many people are keeping their lips sealed tight about the great and wonderful things that our precious Savior is doing and has done for us. I am glad of an opportunity to testify for him and of the great things that he has done for me and mine. When in Washington some weeks ago, at the World's Sunday School Convention, I was very much impressed with the fervency demonstrated on the part of all nationalities to stand up boldly for the lowly Galilean, and I am more determined now than ever to stand up and testify for my Lord.

Since the first of July I have been in meetings, and have seen about five hundred conversions and some of the most wonderful displays of God's power. Yes, the repetition of old-time things have taken place. The infirm have been healed and sent on their way rejoicing. Oh, it was grand to behold!

The meetings, on my own charge were brought to a close at Hodge's Chapel church with a great victory. We added thirty-four members there; Rev. J. H. Holder, of Booneville Station, did the preaching, and it was powerful, too. I don't know of a preacher anywhere that stays closer to his Lord than does Holder; that's the secret of his power. If there were more such consecrations, we would hear of more such gatherings.

We have added eighty-nine new members to our registers this year, whereas, my last report showed just fifty; but I want eleven more before Annual Conference, to make out the hundred. Pray for us.

Bishop McCoy will be with us here at Booneville to hold a joint fourth quarterly conference for Holder and me on October 22nd and 23rd.

Praise the dear Lord for all things.

QUININE CANT.

Quinine cant is a term used by the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine to designate a certain class of insects which are known to be carriers of the malarial parasite. These insects are found in the Southern States and are particularly abundant in the Mississippi Valley. They are known to be carriers of the malarial parasite and are therefore a great danger to the health of the people. The Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine is working to control these insects and to prevent the spread of the malarial parasite.

FEED YOUR STOCK ON NUTRILINE

STEAM COOKED
NUTRILINE

The Only Steam-Cooked Feed on the Market

Manufactured from the by-products of rice, pure corn, clover, alfalfa meal and a special mixture of cotton seed meal, thoroughly mixed with sterilized blackstrap molasses. Keeps your stock in strong, healthy condition. Makes your cows give more milk, enables your horses to do more work, puts a healthy flesh on your pigs.

C. C. Lewis, Secretary, E. M. M. Co., Elmer, La., writes: "Two years ago we entered the feed business at this point and your product (Nutriline) was unknown in this section. My first orders for you were in five-ton lots. Before the harvest was over, we were sending an average of one hundred tons. All our farmers are using Nutriline and some use it exclusively during the entire season. You will find no better kept records in this section than the ones that show the other feed stuff Nutriline. They will find in your type of shipments, for us are a room-mate of a southern farmer's signature."

Write for our booklet: "Can You Afford to Feed Anything But Nutriline," which tells you all about stock—when and how to feed. IT'S FREE.

WAITING FOR GOD.

(Hab. ii, 1-4; I Thess. v, 1-10)

The Historical Setting.

Habakkuk's mission in the world was to teach his people the one great lesson of waiting for God: the time in which he lived needed that message more than any other. It was about the year 600 B.C.: over twenty years had passed since Josiah had made his superficial reformation, and the reckless and tyrannical acts of Jehoiakim had made Judah a veritable hotbed of oppression and sacrilege. Assyria had fallen, the battle of Carchemish gave Babylonia the ascendancy over Western Asia, and Judah had just felt the heavy hand of Babylonia the year before. Torn by oppression and strife within, handicapped by a monarch who disdained both justice and the God of justice, threatened by a terrible and invincible power from without—such was the condition of Judah when Habakkuk appeared to tell the suffering people to wait for God.

Practical Observations.

1. There are certain times in the experiences of men when we can do nothing but wait for God. We are prone to speak of man's power and ability; yet even when so speaking we know that there are innumerable things which man cannot do, that there are movements affecting him over which he has no control, and that there are occasions when nothing he can do with himself could possibly influence his destiny in the right direction. In such times humanity must be re-enforced by divinity, help must come from without, man must be still and wait for God to manifest himself and take control. Habakkuk faced such a crisis, and his method of procedure is to be recommended to all men.

We must wait for God in times of sorrow and perplexity. When the clouds gather and the storms break, we are at the mercy of the elements: the only wise thing to do is to wait for him whose voice can still the tempest and whose foot can be safely placed upon the rolling waves. I believe steadfastly in the doctrine that God uses sorrow and suffering to train and perfect the characters of his children. I believe that because the Bible teaches the blessedness of mourning and suffering, because such things are here (and God uses all things, even sin itself, for the good of men), and because I have seen character beautified and developed by these things. But many times—indeed, most times—men, by their own actions and attitudes, frustrate God's own plans and rob themselves of the blessing of development which he would give them.

2. Those who wait for God must place themselves upon the tower of a great and sincere faith. When God speaks, it is to the consciences of men; and before his voice can thus be heard, the man must be upon a spiritual elevation, apart from the world and its vices, awaiting in expectation. The still, small voice came to Elijah in the mouth of the cave in the mountain; the visions were given to John upon the lonely Isle of Patmos; Jesus went up into the mountain to pray, and drew apart from his most intimate disciples. When we pray, enter into your closet, and there wait for God with the cares and the sins of the world shut out from consciousness. Man's spiritual state, like and flows like the waves upon the bosom of the lake. We go from the Carina of triumph to the Juniper tree of despondency from the baptism witnessed by the visible presence of the Spirit and the audible voice of the Father, we are taken up into the mountain to be tempted by the devil, from the mount of transfiguration we must go down among the afflicted and the wretched; every time we seek to build three tabernacles we hear the voice that says, "Arise and get thee up, for his is not thy rest." We are given moments of spiritual elevation, that we may in them become fitted to live and do in other and more disagreeable moments. Let us seek them, let us long for them, and in them let us wait for God.

3. When God comes to us after our waiting, it is to place a responsibility upon us and to give us a task to perform. God never speaks to a man simply for that man's own sake; God wants his every word to go ringing through the ears upon which it falls and down the ages to all sons of men. Visions are but to equip men to serve. The Voice from the burning bush sent Moses back to lead a race out of slavery; the Light upon the roadway sent Paul into Damascus, where it should be told him what he should do; the Tongue of Fire that sat upon the disciples' heads in the upper chamber made those men great apostles.

Man's moral duty on earth, it has been suggested, is to receive and transmit messages from the divine mind. And God gives such visions profusely to those who wait for him: he speaks a various language to all who will listen. He may never again send wheels a-whirling and colors aglowing to dazzle the eyes of men, but his great visions are still being seen on earth. They come through sermons and hymns and prayers; they come through the air, the sunshine, the song of the bird, the call of the timber wolf; they come whenever men see an opportunity of doing good to one of the least of the children of earth, whenever we see the world suffering from sin and misery and degradation, whenever we see the power of evil dragging a brother down to despair.

4. Have you seen a vision like that? Then there was a moment of supreme importance in your life, there was a divinely given opportunity for you to grasp. There is a story that is full of interest and instruction for us. The Philistines one day came up against the Israelites and spread themselves out over the valley of Rephaim. King David faced a crisis in the life of his nation, and in that crisis he did what all great men do: before reaching the decision he waited upon God. And Jehovah said unto David: "Do not go up, but move in a circle and come upon the enemy over against the mulberry trees. And when you hear a sound in the tops of those trees is of an army marching through, then bestir yourself and strike. For at such a time I have gone out before you and have re-enforced your arm with divine strength." David did as he was told, and swept the enemy from the field.

Let all the leaders of God's people wait upon God. Let all who would fight against the foes of right listen closely for the sound of the marching in the tops of the trees. And when you hear that sound in your own heart, then bestir yourself. For God has gone out before you, he has given you a great opportunity; then is a supreme moment in your life. Great men are made by responding to the sound in the tops of the trees: great deeds are done by action in a supreme moment; great men are discerned by their actions in a crisis.—Epworth Era.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of The Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations.' By Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

JAMES B. STANLEY, of the battleship "Iowa," who was drowned in Chesapeake Bay, off Annapolis, Sept. 1, 1910, youngest son of Dr. J. S. Stanley and Mary Elizabeth Stanley, was born June 22, 1889, in Detroit, Ala. In childhood he was converted and united with the Methodist Church in Verona, Miss. At the time of his death he was a member of the Methodist Church in Brooksville, Miss. In February, 1907, he joined the navy, serving during the cruise around the world on the "Minnesota." A few months ago, he transferred to the "Iowa," from the deck of which he fell and sank to rise no more. A bright, happy boy, he was the pet of his family, and wherever placed, his sunny spirit gained him many friends. One of his shipmates, Emile Falk, at the time of the fatal accident, risked his life repeatedly by diving under a coal barge in fruitless attempts to rescue his drowning friend. A letter to Dr. Stanley from the commander of the ship says: "Your son's record was good. To his parents, his brother and sister, we offer our love and sympathy. Why this young life should be so suddenly ended while many who are weary with the heat and burden of the day are spared, is past our finding out. God knows best." A. FRIEND.

THOMAS JEFFERSON WRIGHT, son of Susan W. Moorman and James L. Wright, was born Oct. 8, 1847; was married to L. A. J. Wyatt, Dec. 25, 1873; and died May 4, 1910. He leaves a wife, two sons and one daughter, with three brothers and four sisters and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Brother Wright was a useful man. Oh! how he will be missed. The family have lost a good husband and father, the community a good citizen, the church one of its best members. Brother Wright was a leading man. He was Consul Commander of the W. O. W., president of the Farmers' Union, of Yallobusha County, and steward of the Methodist Church. He was true to his church, a Methodist of the old type. He prayed the closing prayer at Pine Ridge at the close of the Quarterly Conference on Sunday and went to heaven Tuesday morning. Sleep on, dear brother. God called you home. He thought it best. To his will we submit. He knows best. A large congregation met at old Shiloh Cemetery to bid farewell to this good man. His casket was completely covered with beautiful flowers. Look up, loved ones, he is not dead, but alive for evermore. He is watching and waiting over there in the sweet by and by, where we will meet him again some "sweet day." Farewell, dear brother, till we meet to part no more. R. P. GOAR.

Sister AMELIA M. COGGIN was born in Itawamba County, Miss., on the 5th day of April, 1862. She was reared in a religious home, and at the early age of 10 tender years, was genuinely converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at New Chapel Church, and remained a consecrated member of the same till on the 5th day of September, 1910, she passed through the ordeal of death. She went home to glory and joined the Church Triumphant, there to be forever with God and his glorified saints. On the 8th day of December, 1881, she was married to Brother W. T. Coggin, of Lee County, Miss., and this marriage was indeed a happy one. It was the kind of marriage that results when God doth join together and no man can put asunder. A couple more devoted to each other would have been hard to find. But on the day above named, God stooped down and took her to that good place prepared for his people. She leaves a husband and eight children—six boys and two girls —to mourn their loss, besides a host of friends. As a girl she was possessed of a sweet and engaging temper, which made her a favorite in the home and community where she was reared, and this genial affable disposition never left her. As a wife she was affectionate and true, as a mother she had that special tact that brought her into the very life of her children, and she held them in a strong love force as few mothers can. Her life was filled with religious joy, that wether children to her and to the church at an early age. The husband and children needed her, and so did the church, but the Father of all spirits said, "It is enough, lay down the cross and take thy crown." My heart sympathy and prayers go out for the family. T. J. DURETT.

IRMA POWELL, wife of J. T. Birdsong, was born at Camden in Madison County, Miss., June 11th, 1882. After a brief illness, she died at Vicksburg, Sept. 11th. This daughter of a Methodist itinerant minister, Clarence A. Powell, of distinguished memory and not long gone but before the daughter was like the annual flowers in her brightness and beauty. Itinerant daughters, with frequent changing environments, take this annual flower quality, growing into mosaics of finely blended character by lights and shades of various influences. The writer has known and loved this attractive life from her childhood, a serious, clear-eyed child, whose eyes continued limpid as life deepened, and were clearest when they closed. The woman does not wish always to remain in the class of the annuals; her dreams bring visions to her, and loving construction of the home that will some day be hers, where she will reach the quiet and the peace of stars which leave the less twinkling class, and grow fixed, so with Irma. On the 12th of last October, standing beside the bed of her father, mother and loved ones grouped around, and the man of her heart by her side, Irma was married. Home directly to Vicksburg—and happily settled. Plays for which years are to contribute, maturing perfection, attachments, too soon to be wrenched loose, but sure and enduring. This Christian woman was qualified to make home here for her husband, and bright the sun streamed down the way which promised to be long and shining. But she is gone, the way closes, attachments jar, and wrench apart, the home as a child and not older than a child, must be remembered now and mourned for the charm which has vanished, and the promise which gave it beauty. To her companion, I need not say that the sweet wife's Christian life, with its years treasure given to him, passes by all perfect rights to him. She would have given for always her best to him, and her best was in her spirit self. Memory is not the only friend grief leaves us, no, it only settles firm the foundations which were earthly—uplifting, the vision where the structure is complete in heaven. We loved Irma—for she was lovely. God comfort those who sorrow and must sorrow for her. W. H. HUNTLEY.

THE WORK OF CONSERVATION.

As has been said of woman's work, a pastor's duties never cease. It would seem that after a revival, when the religious consciousness of the people has been quickened and there is unusual activity in every department of the Church, that he might with propriety abate the strenuousness of his labors and give to the weary brain and heart and body a season of relaxation and rest. But not so; for the period, which follows a time of spiritual refreshing is of more than ordinary peril, and the minister needs to be unusually alert and energetic. A great general is his Satanic Majesty. When the forces of righteousness are aggressive, he becomes correspondingly so. Where the greatest displays of divine power are seen, the most remarkable exhibitions of diabolical influence are apt to occur. This was true of the time of the incarnation, when Christ in bodily form walked among men. It was not a mere accident that so many possessed of evil spirits gathered about the pathway of the Son of man, or that the Master and his disciples were so often and so malignantly assailed by the wicked one. God in sending into the world his Son was putting forth his mightiest effort to destroy sin and crush the rebellion against his government, and Satan adroitly sought to match force against force—he bestirred himself to the utmost desperation because he knew that the climax of the battle was on. So to-day he fights hardest where the tide of the struggle seems to have gone most against him and he apprehends that his cause is most in danger.

This doubtless explains why in so many cases religious declension so quickly follows a great spiritual awakening. While the good people are on guard, the watchful enemy sows the tares amid the upspringing wheat, and almost ere anyone is aware, what promised to be a rich harvest is blighted and destroyed. It would seem that with the good meetings and gracious ingatherings we have every year, the Church would soon overrun and possess the land. Why do we make so little progress? It is because Satan tears down nearly as fast as we build up—because what we wrest from him in the summer, he regains in the winter; hence we are continually battling over the same ground—working over the same material.

The great problem which the Church needs to master is that of holding the territory won, of conserving the fruits of her victories. The minister who knows how to fold and shepherd his converts is the one whose work abides and who perpetuates his influence into the far future. With matchless eloquence George Whitefield swept through England and the United States; drenching thousands of cheeks with penitential tears and setting multitudes of lips to shouting hallelujahs of praise, but when his majestic form was laid low and the trumpet voice was hushed, scarcely any visible results remained to tell of his marvelous ministry. But where God gave Wesley converts, he organized them and provided for them means of spiritual culture, and a Methodism that reaches around the globe is but the lengthened shadow of the man of Epworth. Talmage made the mistake of only preaching to the people, and the Church which drank in his golden periods vanished with the passing of that gifted prince of the pulpit. Spurgeon knit his members together in the bonds of fraternal love and fellowship and united them in Christian activities; and though he no longer lives to lead them, they are yet a mighty factor in speeding the gospel on its widening way.

We frequently hear it said that the converts of evangelists do not stick. That depends very largely upon the spiritual care that follows. Neither will they remain faithful if led to Christ by a pastor unless they are given proper teaching and oversight.

The babe must be nurtured if it is to live and grow. Keeping his people safe in Jesus and developing them to the utmost in him, is an essential part of the work of every man called to preach the gospel. Merely starting men in the upward way is not enough. No matter how fair and promising may be the beginning of one's salvation, if it fails of completion, it is valueless and amounts to nothing. Our mission is not to make babes in Christ, but men and women in Christ—not to make Christians, to-day true and to-morrow unfaithful, but saints, who walk over with the Lord on earth and dwell with him evermore in the sky.

But how are the fruits of our revivals to be conserved? Tremendous and most perplexing is the task. It involves practically the whole vast question of a successful ministry. Indeed, for this manifold and difficult work no man is sufficient. When we shall have done our utmost, we shall still realize that we have largely failed. Lifeless matter is ever amenable to law and responds obediently to the skillful human touch, but the free and capricious will of man—who can sway and govern it? Making machines is easy, but the making of saints taxes the resources of both earth and heaven. Confessing our inability to prescribe a course that will anything like hold all we win in our aggressive evangelistic campaigns, we will nevertheless venture to make a few suggestions concerning this great work of religious conservation.

First, we observe that if new converts are to be kept true to Christ it must be done in and through the Church, which is God's appointed agency to save the world. When members are received they must be brought into the prayer meeting, Sunday school, and public gatherings of Zion, if they are to remain spiritual, grow in grace, and develop into usefulness. Aloofness from God's people almost invariably leads to religious declension and apostasy. Hence, the pastor who would retain and increase his recruits must bestir himself to keep them in touch with the services of the sanctuary. There is no surer evidence of a waning piety than an infrequent and irregular church attendance.

But since the Church is the agency which must be chiefly depended upon to foster and promote piety among our people, it necessarily follows that this will be successfully done in proportion as that organization is spiritual and faithful to its high and unworldly mission. It must have life in order to be able to give it; only as Jesus is lifted up, can it be expected to draw and hold the people, for the cry of men is yet to see him. The explanation of empty pews is the absent Christ. Let him be more in the prayer meeting, more in the teaching of the Sabbath school, more in the hymns that are sung, and more in the utterances of the pulpit, and the power of the Church to attract and save will be vastly augmented. Let the minister who would guard against having any of his flock fall away, seek to inject into all of the activities of Zion the spirit and high purposes of the Master.

Of the value of pastoral visiting and the ministry of intercession in keeping those whom God has given his honored servants, we will not now write. They are potent in their influence and cannot be neglected without disastrous consequences. A wise pastor will also have some regard for the social conditions existing in his charge. In communities where the church members have beautiful homes, young people, who have renounced the world and professed religion are sometimes left to drift back to the theater and the dance and card party because no wholesome social life is provided for them. To allow this to take place is to commit a grave and irretrievable blunder.

But the intricate and unceasing work of shepherding the sheep is not the pastor's alone. It belongs to all of the congregation. Christians are exhorted in the Divine Word to watch over, rebuke, edify, comfort, and pray for each other. They are to bear one another's burdens, and if one is overtaken in a fault, the others are to restore him. That church is strongest which is most completely welded into a great spiritual solidarity, and the preacher who can most effectually do this is the most superior workman. When the laity are more awakened and enlightened and feel more appreciably their sense of obligation, the leakage in Zion will be reduced to a minimum. Then there will be more voices to speak, more hearts to pray, more eyes to see, more arms to uplift. May God speed the glorious day.

THE PASTOR'S AND PEOPLE'S RIGHTS.

The Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church contains the following paragraph: "No pastor shall engage an evangelist, other than one appointed by the Bishop of his own Conference, without first obtaining the written consent of his district superintendent." At the recent session of the Colorado Conference of that denomination Bishop Quayle is said to have interrogated every district superintendent (presiding elder), in the open session, as to whether he had enforced this requirement of the law. We have no fondness for wandering and irresponsible evangelists, and not the slightest disposition to defend them, but we frankly confess to a strong aversion to this disciplinary provision. Our objection to it is that it abridges the powers of the pastor, and echoes a note of distrust in him. We believe in trammeling the rights and prerogatives of the preacher in charge as little as possible. He is on the ground and knows the needs of his field as no one else can; hence we believe in allowing him some liberty of choice and latitude of action.

There is some tendency in our Church toward the establishment of a bureaucracy—of having everything governed by general boards, and converting the pastors into mere machines to execute orders. We are uncompromisingly opposed to this trend of affairs. No iron-clad rule will work everywhere; conditions vary, and methods that will succeed in one place will fail in another. We favor leaving to each local congregation some power of initiative and some degree of self-government. All of our thousands of churches cannot be compressed into one mold—cannot be made to see and think and act alike. We need to take care lest in managing things for our people from a distance, we do not at the same time destroy their interest in the work of Zion. We voted at Asheville to give the Church Conference the right to elect the official members of the congregation, because we feel that more responsibility should be thrown upon the great body of the laity. We look with not a little fear upon the movement toward a centralization of government which for some years has been going on in Southern Methodism. As we see it, we are confronted by no graver peril than that of getting too far from the people.

Bishop John W. Hamilton, who held the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says the report that fifty-seven preachers of that body resigned on account of small salaries, is a piece of fiction; without the slightest warrant of truth to sustain it. The fact is, a good class of young men were admitted, and the itinerant ranks were rather overcrowded. Is it not strange how such misinformation gets afloat in the news currents? In the Spanish-American war, Mole St. Nicholas became famous as the starting place for thrilling rumors which were wholly untrue. But in this day of peace the place of their origin seems more difficult to locate. We believe that, as a rule, the secular papers seek to publish the facts about current events. Generally, it is their eager haste to give the news first that gets them into trouble. It is a time when the wise man is not in a hurry to credit all that he sees in the daily press.

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

By a Circuit Rider.

No. I.

The Seventh-day Adventists are becoming very active in many parts of the South. They teach several errors, and Methodists should inform themselves and be prepared to meet their arguments. They held recently a camp-meeting of three weeks' duration within the bounds of my pastoral charge, and they came from several States.

Much of their theology is speculative. They deny the immortality of the soul, and affirm that man becomes extinct at death; that everybody will be resurrected to be judged, after which the wicked shall be annihilated.

They teach that "the first day of the week is not the Christian Sabbath, but only a man-made institution."

In the literature which they circulate, they say: "It was not till about one thousand five hundred years after Christ that Sunday began to be called the Sabbath."

"I speak to you, Protestants who keep Sunday, a day formerly dedicated to the sun, and afterward brought into the Church by Constantine, and Roman Catholics, and called the Christian Sabbath, a day never known for the first day of the week by any of the writers of the New Testament."

In their preaching they affirm that Constantine, A. D. 321, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday, and that Tertullian, A. D. 200, was the first man to apply "the Lord's day" to the first day of the week. They read and preach all Protestants out of the kingdom who do not keep Saturday.

They disturbed the minds of some of our people, but a sermon by the pastor set them straight again.

Concerning Constantine, the facts are these: When he came to be Emperor more than three hundred years after the birth of Christ, Christianity had spread over the Roman Empire, and there were thousands of Christians. Constantine in the progress of his military career gained a victory over his enemies at Milvian Bridge, near Rome, A. D. 312, that made him the sole Emperor of the West. It was just before that battle that the incident occurred which resulted in his conversion. There was the appearance of a flaming cross in the sky at noon-day with the motto: "In hoc signo vinces"—under this sign thou shalt conquer.

Constantine then became a Christian (though he was not baptized until some time afterward), the first Christian Emperor the world ever had, and he put a stop to the persecutions of the Christians. He made a decree that Christianity must be tolerated. His decree required universal religious liberty—liberty not to Christians only, but to all men, to follow the religion of their choice.

What he did respecting the Sabbath has been twisted and perverted by the Seventh-day Adventists. He simply handed out a decree that ordinary work must cease on "the venerable Sunday," but he made an exception with the laborers of agriculture. This is the truth of the whole matter as told by such authorities as Eusebius, Lardner, Kitto, Putnam, and others. The laws which he made were civil laws respecting the Sabbath, just as other nations since his day have passed civil laws concerning the Sabbath. Constantine gave preference to the Christians in all appointments to civil and military offices, and Christianity became the established religion of the Roman Empire.

It is nowhere on record that he changed the day from the seventh to the first. He simply recognized officially the day which the Christians were observing, "the first day of the week," and he added civil laws to strengthen it. He gave the Christians nothing unknown to their practice. The Roman Catholics afterward recognized the same day, as all the denominations of Christendom have done, except a few erratic folk here and there, who are trying to create confusion, and butt their brains out against the custom of the world. The civilized nations of the world and the churches have given official and ecclesiastical recognition to what has been the custom from apostolic times. It is a fact that the early fathers of the Church, scores of years before Constantine, and scores of years before the Roman Catholic Church was in existence, speak of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath, and observed by the Christians. Authorities tell us that the Roman Catholic Church did not start till A. D. 325, that there was no papal power till A. D. 600.

Justin Martyr, A. D. 140, says: "On Sunday we all assemble in common, since that is the first day on which God, having changed darkness and chaos, made the world, and on the same day our Savior rose from the dead." He also says: "They, both those who lived in the city and those who lived in the country, were all accustomed to meet on the day which is denominated Sunday for the reading of the Scriptures, prayer, exhortation and communion. The assembly met on Sunday because this is the first day on which God, having changed the darkness, and the elements, created the world, and because Jesus our Lord on this day rose from the dead."

Irenaeus, Bishop of Corinth, A. D. 167, says: "On the Lord's day every one of us Christians keep the Sabbath, meditating on the law, and rejoicing in the works of God."

The Epistle of Barnabas, second century, reads: "We keep the eighth day with joy, on which Jesus rose from the dead."

Tertullian, A. D. 200, says: "On the day of the Lord's resurrection alone we ought to abstain not only from kneeling but from all devotion to care, putting off even business, lest we should give place to the devil."

Clement of Alexandria, (contemporary with Tertullian) says: "A true Christian, according to the commands of the gospel, observes the Lord's day by casting out all bad thoughts, and cherishing all goodness, honoring the resurrection of the Lord, which took place on that day."

Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 107, says: "The Lord's day, the day consecrated to the resurrection, the queen and chief of all days."

Dionysius of Corinth, A. D. 170, says: "We keep the Lord's day holy."

Pliny, A. D. 100 (a heathen emperor), says: "They, the Christians, are accustomed to assemble on a stated day (before light) and sing a hymn to Christ as God."

The above statements refute the statements of the Seventh-day Adventists. Other authorities such as Eusebius, Kurtz, Webster, Putnam, Schaff, the Bible dictionaries, and modern encyclopedias, tell us that so early as A. D. 100, the Lord's day was generally observed.

Space in this article forbids me making the argument from the Scriptures, but I will do so in my next. Significance is attached to the fact that Christ appeared six or more times to his disciples on "the first day of the week," and to the fact that the disciples themselves came together to hear preaching on Sunday, the day Christ rose from the dead. (Acts xx, 7.)

It is true that Paul went to the synagogues of the Jews on Saturday, but it was to convince them that Jesus was the Christ, and that the entire Mosaic law was fulfilled in him. (Acts xvii, 2-3; xviii, 4.)

The Judaizing Christians tried to bring Christ's disciples into complete bondage to the law, and when they became open antagonists to the Church, the apostles laid aside the Jewish Sabbath, and they kept the Lord's day alone.

The Seventh-day Adventists, in contending for the Jewish Sabbath, and in refusing to eat meats are Judaizers pure and simple. They are more than nineteen hundred years behind the times, and have the same right to contend for "circumcision"

THE LOST PRESENCE.

Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

"Where, oh, where is he whom my soul loveth?" This agonizing wail, begun in Solomon's day, is yet heard in every hamlet, even in the city, full of this twentieth century civilization. Zion appears to have put on her beautiful garments of outward splendor, possibly never before have such gorgeous, comfortable, costly edifices been erected to express to the passing stranger the adoration of Christian hearts for the name of Jesus. Never before has Methodism's pulpits been occupied by such a goodly number of educated, cultured, specially trained ministers. Never before has the field of labor contained so many schools and colleges for the education of the masses. Never before have laymen seemed so concerned about missions, gladly consecrating their time and treasures to honor their Lord. Never before has the Bible had such searchings as it now is passing through. Never before has there been the universal praise from all quarters for the character and name of Jesus Christ, as the model man—fascinating, thrilling, eulogistic sermons about Christ—his bodily form, his mental calibre, his prophetic genius, his wise sayings, his beautiful dreams of earthly and eternal happiness, stirring audiences sometimes to an exaltation of feeling almost reaching to the shout of victory, as are being delivered. Sometimes ministers are thrilled by an invisible power as they throw the bridle reins of restraint into the hands of the unseen, yet powerful energy, that for a time takes visible possession, almost extorting the cry—Ephraim. Alas, however, descending from the transfiguration mount, we hear the old heart wail: "Where, O where, is he whom my soul loveth?" Skeletons in the closet? Oh, yes, plenty of them. Pastors' hands tremble lest the closet keys by some misadventure allow alien eyes to view the gruesome occupants.

Zion inwardly needs comforting. As of old, there are souls daily inquiring: "How long, O Lord, how long?" meanwhile, weeping between the porch and the altar, praying for deliverance.

How my heart goes out in sympathy toward the pastor, surrounded by a clientele wholly absorbed in worldly mindedness, who live in homes where family altars have never been erected, or, if ever erected, have crumbled into decay, possibly in homes palatial, contributing to every needed want of the body, yet deficient in a place to feed the soul, as alluded to by Christ. (Matt. vi, 6.) Out of a membership of some 200 there may yet be a possible dozen or two willing, out of courtesy to their pastor, to grace the benches of a mid-week prayer meeting.

What a soul-rack pastors have in ministering to a charge whose highest ideal of the Christian life is to go to heaven when finally incited from the enjoyment of the sinful frivolities of the present life. Pastors rack their brains—searching the poets, communing with science, philosophy and their Bibles—to procure enjoyable tid-bits for their condescending auditors.

In time, some pastors lose heart and, mechanically, walk the treadmill of daily duties as slaves, glad when the sun goes down that they may sojourn for a few hours' rest in the land of Nod.

Brother Meek, I thank you for that suggestive editorial in the Advocate of September 15th on "Neglected Doctrines." Christ is still the fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. He is still able to save unto the uttermost all who will come unto God—through him.

He yet calls: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "Take my yoke upon you," "learn of me," and ye shall find rest unto your souls. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin" when we comply with the conditions. Speaking from my own personal experience, I believe that in the day we obey (Jer. xxix, 13, which says: "And ye shall seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart,") the tide will turn.

Many are walking with Christ to Emmaus—hearts burning within, eyes hidden, and failing to invite the stranger to the hospitality of the "upper room." They still cry, "Where is he whom my soul loveth?"

Many have strong faith in the regeneration and growth route into the blessing of entire sanctification. May the Lord grant them a safe and speedy realization of their fondest dreams? But, Brother Meek, fifty-two years ago I was directed by a special sermon delivered by my presiding elder, Rev. Jno. G. Jones, to try the faith route, and, after a special presentation of my soul's desires, making the perfect consecration that Jesus required of the young man who craved eternal life, the Lord gave me a blessing—call it what you please—that toned up my fragmentary body, giving strength to render effective work for forty years, that tuned up my soul to a harmonious companionship that supplied all demands, turning desert wastes into oases which have driven away all fear having torment, giving a shouting, triumphant spirit, to begin, continue, and end my active ministerial life; and, now, almost helpless in body, I am filled with a strong desire to own a conveyance, that I may do an independent missionary work, visiting every house, warning every soul—repeat the story of the cross; and tell the people "the Comforter has come."

Speak disparagingly of my "experience," if any so desire; if I have been deceived, abiding in a fifty-two years' hallucination of mind—glory to God—the hallucination yet abides, makes me happy and content. I have been paid in full to date for all service I have rendered, and should there be no future, I have not lost a cent of real value by giving all to Christ in October, 1858. God owes me naught; but, then, there is grace upon grace. What that will mean to me remains to be seen; it gives no present concern.

"The word of the Lord is tried." What I want the people to know is: That there is "Balm in Gilead," and that the route into Perfect Love or Entire Sanctification is wide open, and whosoever pays the price can enter, eat of honey and the honeycomb; drink everlasting life's artesian water—never abide in cloudland, fear or darkness, but always in the light, as he is the Light; have fellowship one with the other; and daily realize that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus.

Just to take him at his word.

Just to rest upon his promise.

Just to know "Thus saith the Lord."

He who does not see the heroic in the common places of life would not find them elsewhere. After all, the heroic is in us, not in the circumstances or the occasion. These are but the opportunities for its exercise.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

VI.

This year (1881) was a very dry year—I suppose the driest year in all my life. It was a general drought all over the country. I was returned to the river, and it was well for me, in a temporal way, at least, as the river bottom was much more productive than the hill country. Our Conference met that fall in Pine Bluff, and just after the opening I was called home to attend the funeral of a lady, and did not get back until Friday. The preacher's pay was short, and the collections were shorter. Bishop McTyeire presided seemingly with much ease and with satisfaction to all. The Bishop preached on Sunday at 11 o'clock, one hour and fifty-two minutes. I said to my old friend, Dr. Hunter: "The Bishop was a little tiresome today." Dr. Hunter replied: "He was not tiresome to me. When he speaks he says something."

My work now had another appointment fifteen miles further up the river and on the opposite side. Being across the river made but little difference, except in high water. When the water would fall sandbars hundreds of yards wide in places would remain, the light-colored firm, and the dark places quick and dangerous. Once, in trying to get home, the ferryman put myself and horse over, and I, with a long hitch rein, led him. He walked over the light looking places, but would go down to his breast in the dark sand. I thought sometimes that I would have to leave him, but, being strong and active, he made it out. I shall never forget the many poor cows I saw hopelessly sunk in the sand, with their heads and a part of their necks protruding. With piteous moans they would turn their heads and look at me, praying in their way for help, where I was powerless.

Near my upper Old River church there lived a lady about middle age, whose name was Young. She had a fine cotton plantation, a fine dwelling, supplied with the finest furniture and carpeting, and a $500 harp, with a number of other musical instruments. She had no children, and no white neighbors near, except the overseer with his small family. Old family servants who had known her from her infancy were in the main her company, except when her many visitors were with her. My service once each month was the only preaching for miles around. Mrs. Young did not claim my preaching, that I know of, as instrumental in her awakening, yet, strange to say, she became very much concerned for her soul and hungry for God. An old "aunt" in the yard said: "Mis has mos quit eating, and she don't do nothing but pray and cry." I was nearly sixty miles away, and one day she was so miserable that she sent out on the farm for old Steve, who was a great man to pray. The old negro came and threw his hat down on the gallery and asked Mrs. Young if she sent for him. She replied: "Yes, Steve, I want you to come in here and pray for me." And there was a sight for angels. A rough old negro man in an elegant parlor, kneeling near one of the most cultured and refined ladies in all the land! She told me all about it. Not, she said, in time of Steve's prayer, but that same day the burden was removed, and an indescribable deep and satisfying peace came into her soul. "Oh," she exclaimed, "here on this river, where there are so few white people, and they are generally so wicked, the Lord led me to see that I was a lost sinner, and now I am so happy!" I related her experience in public and in private as long as I was on that charge.

While 1881 was a very dry year, 1882 was a very wet one. It rained all summer, and while 1881 was very healthy, 1882 was very sickly. Malaria, chills and fevers, and swamp fevers, raged all along the river. Wife had a short spell of fever, but I escaped all the year except two chills. Some of my friends said that I was on the go too much, malaria had no chance to get me. They did not know all. I carried capsules of quinine in my saddle-bags all the time, and swallowed them often riding along. I took the liberty to add a schoolhouse nine miles above my upper church to my charge. Captain Sennett, an elegant, wealthy farmer, owned the schoolhouse and asked for preaching. I promised him one Sunday in each month at 4 o'clock p. m. from June until December. On my trip there in September I took a chill, but reached there and tried to preach, after which I went home with Captain Sennett, too sick to eat, and the captain gave me a severe lecture about my imprudence. Said he: "We appreciate your visits here, but do not expect you nor want you to come when you are sick." I replied that I was not sick when I started, and it was too far to go home, and so I came on and preached to my schoolhouse congregation, and I am glad that I did. The captain was a Christian (Campbellite) in belief, and I continued: "My church teaches that a soul, to be saved, must be born of God, powerfully, consciously, and may know it beyond a doubt. And we teach that every true gospel minister is called of God, impressed by the Holy Spirit, until there is no peace, day nor night, without obedience, and a minister of Christ deserving the name is a consecrated man, and will fill his appointments when conditions are such that any one else will go, and where he himself is possibly able to go. Why, sir, replied the captain, my belief is that in a public congregation, when all is cool and quiet, and a man walks in and joins the church and is baptized, that he is all right, and as to a call to preach, preaching is teaching, and any man has a right to preach. President Giddens, who died last year, preached. "Captain," I inquired, "would you not prefer to have an inward witness that you are saved? Bless your soul, I have it, and water, nor anything is external, and anything to do with it."

No outward form can make me clean.
The leprosy lies deep within.
Nor running brook, nor flood nor sea,
Can wash the dismal stain away.

I finished my time, and the captain paid me $35, and I am sure that his opinion of Methodism was very much changed.

THE ALEXANDRIA DEDICATION.

(In our issue of last week we made brief editorial mention of the dedication of the new Methodist Church at Alexandria, La. To the Daily Town Talk of that city, we are indebted for the following more extended account of that interesting event.)

Last Sunday (the 9th) was a great day in the history of the Methodists of Alexandria, and a notable day in church circles. It began with a Sunday school rally at half after nine o'clock, at which there was a large attendance and several inspiring addresses. Plans are being laid for a forward movement in the Sunday school.

At half after ten o'clock the auditorium was closely packed and before the service had progressed very far the Sunday school room as well as was crowded with a representative Alexandria audience. Service for the day had been called in at the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches and the pastors of these churches occupied seats in the pulpit, while members of their congregations swelled the audience, which was composed of people of all religious faiths.

The service was opened by an organ voluntary by Mr. W. D. Wadley, a master of the instrument, and a selection from the choir. After a hymn by the whole congregation, Rev. J. D. Harper, pastor of the Methodist Church at Winnfield, and a former pastor and presiding elder at Alexandria, led the congregation in a fervent prayer for God's blessing upon the occasion. "Lift Up Your Heads, O Ye Gates," was the anthem then sung by the choir, rendered with splendid effect. The choir for the occasion was composed of Mesdames Owen and Pulliam, sopranos; Mrs. McGimsey and Miss Trimble, contraltos; Messrs. Roberts and Wadley, tenors, and Messrs. Thomas and Butler, basses, and Miss Ena Dent, the accomplished organist of the church, at the organ.

Rev. Paul M. Brown, presiding elder of the Alexandria district, read the lessons, after which the congregation united in a hymn, followed by the offering. Miss Trimble then sang in a rich contralto, "Calvary," which was a beautiful and fitting prelude to the sermon which followed.

Bishop Murrain took for a text words from the tenth chapter and forty-second verse of St. Luke: "One thing is needful," and from that text preached a masterful, eloquent and inspiring sermon. His subject was "The Spiritual Life," and for nearly an hour held the closest attention of his audience, as, with faultless diction, pleasing voice and graphic illustration and description, he unfolded the beauties, value and safety of the religious life. It would be impossible to fittingly report the discourse. It is sufficient to say that it was a model of pulpit eloquence, and made a lasting impression upon his hearers.

When, after the sermon, the Bishop came to dedicate the church, he expressed his great gratification at being called to perform this pleasant office without having to first take up a collection, and paid a deserved tribute to the officers and members of the church, whose liberality and self-denial and zeal had made such an occasion possible. His praise of the architectural taste and beauties of the building was unstinted.

The officers of the church, a splendid looking body of men, some fifteen or more in number, stood before the chancel, and through their chairman, Mr. H. H. White, presented the church for dedication, free of all incumbrance. The Bishop, in the beautiful ritual of the Methodist, then pronounced the sentence of dedication and offered the dedicatory prayer. With hearts filled with praise the entire congregation sang the doxology, and the Bishop pronounced the benediction.

At 7:30 in the evening the main auditorium of the church was crowded with another representative audience and the pulpit was occupied by representatives of nearly all the other churches in the city. After an organ voluntary and a congregational hymn, Rev. Paul M. Brown led in prayer and Rev. J. D. Harper read a Psalm. During the evening the choir rendered three beautiful special numbers and the congregation joined heartily in several spirited songs. Rev. P. M. Brown spoke on the relation of the First Church to the District work. Rev. J. D. Harper, the only former pastor present, spoke feelingly of other days in Alexandria Methodism, and

Rev. George Jackson, a superannuated minister who has labored for many years in the vicinity of Alexandria, made a brief address.

Addresses of felicitation and congratulation appropriate and happy were made by the Rev. B. L. Price of the First Presbyterian Church, Judge J. R. Thornton of the First Christian Church, Rabbi L. J. Rothstein of the Jewish Temple, Rev. C. T. Alexander of the Emmanuel Baptist Church, and Mr. R. C. Jarreau of the Christ Church Episcopal. Many were the appropriate, complimentary and appreciative things said by these gentlemen and a spirit of brotherly love, which touched deeply the entire audience, characterized each one. Bishop Murrain, in a few well-chosen remarks, responded to them, after which Mr. H. H. White, on the part of the official boards, expressed appreciation for the zeal and liberality of the members of the church, thanking other citizens who had contributed and paying a high tribute to the ladies of the Home Mission Society for their unflagging zeal and successful endeavors.

The pastor, Rev. H. R. Singleton, then brought the service to a close with a few remarks, in which he thanked all who had made such an occasion possible, commended the members of the church for their liberality and steadfastness under the strain of the past three or four years, expressed his keen appreciation of the presence and help of Bishop Murrain, and the brotherly kindness of the representatives of the other churches manifested through all of his pastorate here, and especially by their presence and kind words on this occasion. The congregation joined heartily in singing "We'll Never Say Good-Bye In This World," and the Bishop pronounced the benediction, and "Dedication Day" became history.

The movement for a new church began under the pastorate of Rev. N. E. Joyner, to whom great credit is due. When the new pastor came he found that options had been given on the old property and taken on the new lots, and deals were consummated soon after. The old church was torn down, and the congregation for six months worshipped with the congregation of the Christian Church in their new building at the corner of Eighth and Jackson streets. The pastor of the Christian Church, Rev. L. A. Betcher, had been forced by ill-health to give up his pastorate for a while, and the pastor of the Methodist Church, by official action of the officials of the Christian Church, became their pastor as well.

When Mr. Betcher returned, the Methodist congregation went to the High School auditorium and for some time worshipped there, occupying their new church for the first time on the second Sunday in June, 1908, when Dr. W. F. McMurry preached the opening sermon. The cornerstone had been laid on Oct. 26, 1907, by Dr. Felix R. Hill.

The contract for the new Alexandria Church was signed on July 15, 1907, by the contractor, E. H. Baldwin, and Chairman H. H. White, of the building committee. The main entrance is through a wide loggia between the towers, opening into the tiled floor vestibules on each side. The auditorium is entered from these vestibules, and from the north vestibules the Sunday school room and primary department. The auditorium has a bowled floor, sloping from entrance to the pulpit platform. In the rear is the choir gallery and organ loft. There are portable rolling partitions between the auditorium and Sunday school room, the latter having a special entrance. The pastor's study has direct connection with the pulpit, and adjoining it a private toilet room. The Sunday school has an ornamental balcony containing five class rooms, which, with the class rooms and primary rooms on the main floor, can all be thrown together by rolling partitions.

The auditorium has wide diverging aisles and circular pews and a seating capacity of 438. The Sunday school room will accommodate 300 on the main floor, including 70 in the primary room, and 100 more in the balcony class rooms. The superstructure of this splendid church is of gray mottled St. Louis brick, while the foundations and trimmings are of white limestone. The red Spanish tile is on all the roofs. The windows in auditorium and Sunday school room are of art glass and contain many beautiful figures. The Kilgen organ, costing $1,550, is a beautiful ornament to the church. Its sweet tones are heard with pleasure by all who attend. The total cost of the church, including furnishings, was $38,597.

The building committee was composed of the following gentlemen: Hon. H. H. White, chairman; T. W. Holloman, secretary; W. C. Roberts, treasurer; Ed Rand, J. M. Nugent and Rev. H. R. Singleton.

Church News

Dr. Wayland Hoyt, distinguished as a writer and one of the most eminent Baptist preachers in America, died at his home in Philadelphia on September 25th. He was seventy-three years of age.

The triennial National Council of the Congregational Church assembled in Boston on October 11, and continued its sessions into this week. Representatives from every part of the republic have been in attendance.

Mr. Robert Ringer, Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Jackson, Miss., has been chosen General Secretary of the Association in New Orleans, and will soon take up his residence in the Crescent City. He comes highly commended as a trained and efficient worker.

The Philathea Union of Hattiesburg, Miss., has inaugurated a movement to build a home for working girls in that city. This is a noble undertaking, and we trust that it will succeed. In many ways the organized adult classes in our Sunday schools are making their influence felt for good.

Dr. W. E. Thompson, who for the past four years has been in charge of the St. John's M. E. Church, South, of Memphis, has been transferred to the Holston Conference and stationed at Centenary Church, Chattanooga. Dr. Thompson is one of the most forceful pulpit orators in Southern Methodism.

Dr. William Few will be formally inaugurated as President of Trinity College on November 9. An announcement of this event has been sent to all of the leading higher institutions of learning in the United States. The congratulatory address will be delivered by Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, President of the University of Chicago.

Rev. John Wordsworth, Lord Bishop of Salisbury, England, who came to the United States to attend the General Episcopal Convention at Cincinnati, has been visiting the University of the South, at Sewanee, and several Southern cities. He is a grandnephew of William Wordsworth, the famous poet, and one of the fifteen English Bishops who are members of the House of Lords.

Dr. John F. Goucher, of Baltimore and his two daughters, Misses Eleanor and Elizabeth Goucher, have sailed for the Orient, where the Doctor has numerous duties to perform for the Methodist Episcopal Church. Though his life has chiefly been spent in educational work, he has long been aflame with enthusiasm for missions, to which he has given large sums of money.

The founder of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Episcopal Church was Mr. James L. Houghteling, who died on July 28, 1910. A memorial service in his honor was presided over by Mr. Clifford Pinchot, of Washington, during the recent convention of the Brotherhood in Nashville. The Episcopalians claim for Mr. Houghteling the distinction of having blazed the way for the general Brotherhood movement, which has now extended itself into seven or eight leading denominations.

The National Convention of the Christian (Campbellite) Church, in session at Topeka, Kansas, last week, was largely attended. A movement was made to provide for a central administrative body and the unification of the three missionary organizations of this denomination. The negro question was also discussed at some length. Professor J. D. Lehman, of Mississippi, declaring, "If we do not take steps to discharge our duty toward the negroes, their degeneration will rapidly undermine our society."

This is Bible Week in Memphis, Tenn. The various pastors of the city were requested to preach on the importance of Bible study last Sunday, and a series of services are being held with a view to promoting a higher appreciation of the Divine Book. All the Protestant denominations are co-operating in the movement. One of the most interesting features of the occasion is a large exhibit of Bibles and helps to biblical study which is being made in the parlor of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The Methodists of Oklahoma are planning for a well equipped Woman's College in Oklahoma City. A square mile of land has been secured in the suburbs of that municipality, and it is proposed to build the institution on a quarter section of this, selling enough of the remainder for residence lots to raise at least $100,000 for the school. The leader in this movement is the Rev. N. L. Linebaugh, who is widely known for his enterprize and superior business capacity. Dr. George H. Crowell, an ex-North Carolinian has been chosen president of the projected college, though it is not expected to open until September, 1911.

Church. They have declared in favor of having suffragan bishops, and some of these will be elected for the larger dioceses and in fields where the race question is giving trouble. The measure which aroused the most interest was the proposal to have the Church endorse to some extent healing by faith, and to provide in the ritual a service to be used in assisting the sick. This movement was approved by the House of Bishops and the clerical part of the House of Deputies, but rejected by the laymen of the latter body. The final determination of the matter has not been made at this writing. The fact that "the Emmanuel movement" had its origin in the Episcopal Church is thought to have exercised considerable influence in favor of giving the sanction of the denomination to faith-healing.

The world's interest in Wesley continues to grow. Everything pertaining to him attracts instant attention. Richmond College, England, has brought to light a new portrait of him—painted by an artist named Horsley on the occasion of one of his last visits to Sunderland—and the church press in other lands is already reproducing the picture. The first of the six volumes of the new and improved edition of his Journal has just been issued in America by Eaton & Mains. It is edited by Nehemiah Curnock, formerly editor of The Methodist Recorder and an English scholar of distinction. This first volume is said to throw a flood of light on Wesley's early life and his experiences in America. France also has a new book which deals with the founder of Methodism, entitled, "La Jeunesse de Wesley, par Augustin Leger, Docteur es lettres." This volume has not yet been translated into English.

WESLEY ADULT BIBLE CLASS DEPARTMENT.

The organized adult Bible Class is no longer an experiment. There are more than fifteen thousand organized classes in the United States and Canada. Careful statisticians say that there are to-day five hundred thousand men in America studying the Bible who were not in Sunday school five years ago.

Looking to the federation of all classes in the M. E. Church, South, the General Conference at Asheville, in May, provided for the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department:

"Let Wesley Adult Bible Classes be organized in our Sunday schools, wherever practicable, for the development of Christian character by means of systematic religious instruction, Christian fellowship, and mutual helpfulness, and training in Christian service."

The Sunday School Board has formulated the following Constitution for the Wesley Adult Bible Classes:

CONSTITUTION OF WESLEY ADULT BIBLE CLASSES.

Article I.—Name.

This class shall be called _____ of the _____ Sunday school of _____.

Article II.—Object.

The object of this class shall be the training of Christian character for Christian service in the extension of Christ's kingdom, by means of Bible study, mutual helpfulness, and social fellowship.

Article III.—Membership.

Any person twenty years of age, or over, may become a member by attending the class and signifying a desire to join.

(When special conditions make it necessary persons under twenty may be included.)

Article IV.—Officers.

The officers of an organized Wesley Adult Bible Class shall consist of a Teacher, Assistant Teacher, President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, who shall be elected annually in September and their names and addresses reported to the Central Office at Nashville, Tenn., care of the Superintendent of the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department.

The class officers shall severally perform such duties as usually pertain to their respective offices.

The Teacher and Assistant Teacher, in accordance with the law and usage of the Church, shall be nominated by the Superintendent of the Sunday school to which the class belongs, and shall be confirmed by vote of the class. Vacancies ad interim shall be similarly nominated and confirmed.

Article V.—Committees.

There shall be at least four standing committees, namely: Executive, Membership, Social and Devotional. The Executive Committee shall be composed of the class officers, the chairmen of all standing committees, the pastor, and superintendent of the Sunday school.

Article VI.—Meetings.

The class shall meet every Sunday in connection with the Sunday school for Bible study. Meetings shall be held at least once a month. The membership shall constitute a _____ officers and committees shall _____ council to consider the _____

The Membership Committee shall be responsible for securing new members, looking up absentees, and the visitation of the sick.

The Social Committee shall provide for the social and literary needs of the class.

The Devotional Committee shall be charged with all matters pertaining to the moral and spiritual welfare of the members.

Article VIII.—By-Laws.

As the work of the class progresses, such additional officers and committees as are deemed necessary may be provided, and any rules concerning class management and methods of work, not out of harmony with the general plan of the Department, may be adopted.

Certificate of Registration.

A Certificate of Registration will be furnished all classes adopting the Constitution, upon receipt of application, accompanied by twenty-five cents. The Certificate is artistically lithographed, with a picture of the Holy Club at Oxford; it will bear the seals of both the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department and the International Sunday School Association, and is suitable for framing for the class-room.

Emblem.

The red and white pin of the International Association with the letter "W" in the center has been adopted as the emblem of the Wesley Classes.

The Motto.

The words, "My Brother and I," spoken by John Wesley, referring to the joint work of the members of the Holy Club at Oxford, are recommended as the motto to all Wesley classes.

The Adult Student.

The Adult Student will be the medium of communication between the Central Office and the classes. In addition to excellent lesson helps and articles on class work, a new department will be added, in which class problems will be discussed.

Advantages of Class Organization.

There are many advantages in class organization. The working force of the class is multiplied; each member is given a part in class activities. Responsibility is distributed; instead of leaving the teacher to bear the burden of responsibility, the members share it with him. Workers are discovered and developed. A social spirit is promoted. It furnishes the school and Church an agency for service.

Status Not Disturbed.

After classes organize they are earnestly requested to report to the Central Office and co-operate with the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department. The status of classes in relation to other unions will not be disturbed neither will it be necessary to make any changes in class names, in the affiliating with their own denomination. What is earnestly desired is the closest fellowship and co-operation of every adult Bible class in Southern Methodism, in order that there may be unity of policy and action in the endeavor to realize the object for which the classes were formed.

For information concerning the Department and work of organized classes, address Chas. D. _____, Superintendent, Wesley Adult Bible Class Department, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Concerning Missions.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The press superintendent would be glad to receive the half yearly reports from the conference officers so that she may have them published next month.

The following excellent paper was read by Mrs. E. J. Harris of the Central Church, Meridian, at one of their Home Mission meetings this summer.

MRS. M. W. SWARTZ, Conference Press Supt.

Is the Educational or the Evangelistic Work the More Necessary Among the Immigrants Who Come to Our Shores?

Some years ago there was held in the city of Chicago what was known as the World's Fair, and it was, without doubt, one of the greatest exhibitions of the kind ever given in this or any other country.

There were on display the finest specimens of the natural products of the world, the finest specimens of man's handiwork, and the most perfect specimen of man himself. This last was a South Sea Islander—a savage—and though perfect as to stature, measurement and muscle, he was yet inferior to the average graduate of any of our common schools.

What is it then that gives the college man superiority? The intellect brought to a high state of cultivation by education, training and study.

But the question is: Whether purely educational work among the immigrants who come to our shores is as important as evangelistic work? And I hold that it is of the highest importance. In an address before the City History Club of New York City, made up largely of children of foreign parentage and of foreign birth as well, Mr. Hamilton W. Mable made the statement that we would welcome any number of immigrants to our shores, provided they come to us with loyal hearts and open minds, willing to drop race prejudices and alien customs and habits into the harbor when they come in sight of the Statue of Liberty. Now, of course, this means that they must imbibe a knowledge of our constitution, our government, our ideals and our hopes for the country.

The kindergarten in any city does splendid work in this direction, for it takes the children of Italian, Polish, German, French, Hungarian and Jewish parents and teaches them the primary lessons of wholesome, clean living, and of good citizenship. Take a city like New York, for instance; the only hope in amalgamating its mass of humanity from all parts of the civilized, and perhaps, also, uncivilized globe, is in education. You cannot try to root out a man's religious prejudices or beliefs until he can at least understand the language you speak, and has some idea of the ideals you cherish which have brought you to your convictions.

Man is by nature religious. From the early dawn of his history we find him feeling after God, perhaps groping his way in darkness, yet coming nearer and nearer to the light.

It is this longing for the higher and better that must be trained and directed in the right channels, for a man will act upon his belief, and religion is ethics in action. This, we admit, cannot be done by instruction in philology, geometry and botany. These are very good things to have when needed, but a deeper, truer knowledge of God, "whom to know aright is life eternal"—this is the pearl of great price which, when found, the merchantman sold all he had in order that he might buy it.

When Jesus was on the earth two thousand years ago, he gave much of his time to teaching the people, inasmuch that even the Jewish rabbis, those learned doctors of the law, questioned: "From whence hath this man this wisdom?"

Moreover, he urged the twelve, and then the seventy, to "Go into all the world and teach all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." And later came the insistent cry: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." But did they do so? Not at all. Centuries passed and America was discovered. Because of religious persecution, English, Dutch and Huguenot peoples settled in this unknown world in order that they might worship God after their own convictions. Still, the Savior spoke: "Go ye," followed by that tender promise, "and, lo! I am with you alway." Did they go? By no means. Then what happened? "From all the dark places of earth's heathen races" they gathered together by shiploads, thousands and hundreds of thousands, and came to us, strangers in a strange land. And again we hear the voice saying: "Teach."

My friends, this is what we must do whether we like it or not. We can engage in foreign missionary work without leaving the shadow of our own doorposts. Chinese, Mexicans and Syrians infect our country as disease infected the early colonies. But a ministry to morals alone will not meet the need. I am glad that the churches of our day are realizing the importance, and, indeed, the necessity, of reaching the people through the physical needs of the individual. Immigrant Homes, Homes for the Friendless, Doors of Hope, Day Nurseries, Reading Rooms and Travelers' Aids, all have their place in the Christian's field of labor.

Rescue the perishing.
Care for the dying.
Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave.
Weep o'er the erring one.
Lift up the fallen.

This is the prime work of the Woman's Home Mission Society, and indeed, if we take our cue from the Master, it is what it should be. He fed the hungry, comforted the sorrowing, healed the sick, and if he were here to-day, he would not be indifferent to the physical wretchedness of men—and we are charged with the same mission.

Let us first establish the brotherhood of man, then will be time enough to teach the alien the Fatherhood of God. Then the foreign outcast and the American pariah alike, even though submerged in the depths of despondency and poverty, can shake himself free and exclaim: "I shall not be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flyeth by day, nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day," for "the Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

With such a religion wars would cease and strife and discord be at an end; then the battleships of the seas would be anchored in the harbors of peace; the guns stacked on the field of liberty; the swords beaten into ploughshares and the spears into pruning-hooks. Corruption in private life and public trusts would not be practiced; prisons would give up their fettered throngs; crime and suicide would curse the land no more; for love would fill the hearts of men, and the earth would be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, even as the waters cover the sea. We would have better fathers, kinder mothers, more obedient children; frowns would be changed to smiles and tears be wiped away; death robbed of its sting and the grave its victory; earth would be a paradise and every home a mansion of the blest. Such a religion would bankrupt hell, establish heaven on earth, and make man truly and, indeed, the image and likeness of God: his Creator. Then from Christiania and Stockholm on the North, to the Persian Gulf on the South, and from the Chinese littoral on the east to the Pacific slope on the west, would resound the glad angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

REGARD THE LIMIT.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D.

Some time ago I was in one of the largest steel mills in Pennsylvania. The elegant mansion on the hill is one of my homes, and a sweeter, happier one cannot be found between Lake Erie and the Gulf, for the Georgia lady who presides over that fireside has transported to that Northern clime the beauty and the fragrance of Savannah roses. One day I went through the immense mill, watched the whole process of turning iron into steel, and steel into machinery. In one room I saw them testing the steel. A bar eighteen inches long was put between two clamps, the power was applied, and the bar of solid steel was slowly stretched until it snapped. The limit of elasticity was carefully registered and recorded. Up to that limit the metal will safely bear any strain, but it is dangerous to exceed it.

So even solid steel has a limit of elasticity. This summer, under peculiar circumstances, I came near exceeding it. Physicians in Ohio, physicians in West Virginia, physicians in old Virginia, physicians in Arkansas, physicians in Texas, thumped me and sounded me, and "examined" me, and concurred in independent verdict: "Sound as a dollar, but exhausted; quit." Dr. Eastman, at Hot Springs, Ark., said: "Cancel everything; go home and take the petting cure; it will do you more good than all the baths; quit." When I reached Merrie Meade, my home doctor said: "Now quit—quit reading, writing, thinking, above all worrying. Nothing but absolute rest will avail."

Well, it was a hard prescription, for I love work; but it was unavoidable, and I yielded to the inevitable. I exceedingly regretted the necessity to disappoint our friends at Mansfield in the meeting, but after brave effort to get in shape I had to give it up at the command of my physician. I am glad to tell you the rest cure is proving effective, and with the approach of cold weather I hope to recover my strength. Hereafter I will be more careful. Today, October 5th, I am sixty-one. I have only recently learned that at sixty a man may be imprudent, that nature does not react as rapidly as at forty. But don't you call me old till I am eighty; and then be sure you mean my mortal frame; for I never felt at twenty-five a keener interest in life, a more ardent zeal, a finer flame of hope. The path grows brighter with the flight of years; each hill top reveals a wider view; and the "sweet fields beyond the swelling flood stand dressed in living green." The eternal verities of the Gospel never appeared so true or glorious as they do after the test of more than half a century. But it is a sad reflection that I will only really know how to live here when I will have to move! I am still learning, and I hope to be ready to make a better start "over there." So here I sit and wait.

FROM THE SPIRIT.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

Any theory which excludes the truth that the Holy Spirit directly imparts light and instruction to a true child of God is a false theory.

There are very many religious people who affirm with great positiveness that the Spirit instructs and guides Christians only through the words of the Bible. They scout the proposition that the Spirit so operates in a believing soul as to give distinct information in respect to the truth, or personal duty or privilege. And yet these people say that they take the Bible as their guide in reference to all questions of truth, of belief and duty. If this be so, then they are blind readers of the Bible, for the Bible most plainly declares that the Holy Spirit does directly impart light and instruction to believing ones. Christ said to his disciples just before his death, that the Spirit would teach them what to say. Here are his words: "The Holy Spirit shall teach you in that very hour what ye ought to say." Christ did not tell them that they must depend upon some written words for their proper instruction. He even forbade them to study and meditate beforehand as to what they should say to their opposers. They were to expect that the Holy Spirit would directly and promptly teach them just what they ought to say in their defense. He would impart all needed knowledge and give the right wisdom to them. Then ponder these words: "The Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." But the objectors in these days say that those words applied wholly to the apostles. They did not. Christ's words prove that the Holy Spirit acted directly and minutely upon the minds of those men, irrespective of any written word. He was in their hearts, in their persons, as an instructing and guiding power. And Paul, in writing to Christians, uses this expression: "Not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth." He referred to the express teaching which the Spirit imparts to Christians. So it is that, when the earnest believer, as he studies the Bible, asks God for a correct knowledge of the truth, the Spirit directly enlightens his mind, leading him into the meaning of God's Word. We do not depend enough upon the Holy Spirit.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE ENTERTAINMENT.

1. Will the Presiding Elders be kind enough to furnish the name and postoffice of every lay delegate, candidate for admission on trial and for readmission, and local preacher recommended for orders?
2. Brethren who expect to come to Sardis by private conveyance will please let the fact be known, that provision may be made for their horses. This is important.
3. Others besides preachers and lay delegates who desire to attend Conference are requested to correspond with the undersigned. They will be informed by mail whether entertainment can be provided. The pastor will not be responsible for the entertainment of persons who do not write to him in advance, and in time to get a reply.

Please write immediately to

PATTY'S PENNY.

Oh, the beauty of that store window! Patty Price stood before it with her brown eyes round with anticipation of good things to come. Her bare toes burrowed into the sand and stones without feeling their hardness; her two short braids quivered with excitement, and one little brown hand clasped tightly the penny that was to purchase so much happiness.

What should it be? One thing she knew—it was to be candy, for it was so long since she had tasted any that her mouth watered for it. From the chocolate sticks, so tempting in their rich brownness, her eyes turned to the gayly-colored papers of peppermint and winter-green lozenges, and then strayed on to brighten into determination as she saw a box of colored candy marbles, such beautiful marbles, and six for one-cent. "Two for each of us," said Patty to herself, for she was a generous little soul and always remembered little brother and sister at home.

So intent was she on her choice that she did not hear the sound of wheels, nor did she see her good friend, the rural postman, jump from his delivery wagon with the big mail-bag in his hand. But he saw her, and his jolly face broadened into a smile as he said:

"Hullo, Patty! Going to buy Miss Brown out?" Then she went up to him and slipped one hand confidently into the big one held out to her, saying, "See what I found this morning," and opening the other hand, displayed the moist treasure within.

"Why, let's see that penny, Patty," said the postman with a twinkle in his bright eye. "Why, that looks just like the one I lost yesterday afternoon!"

Then it was Mr. Rice's penny, and not hers, after all! Poor Patty! her heart seemed to sink right down into her feet, it was such a disappointment. Well, one thing was certain, she wouldn't enjoy buying candy right under his very eyes with a penny that he had said was his. So she slipped away while the postman went on into the office, never thinking again of his joking words.

She would go and ask mother if she ought to give it back to him. Mother always knew what it was best to do. So in haste she came into the room where her mother sat mending little garments in all stages of dilapidation, and with words tumbling over one another in their hurry, and with some tears, finally made herself understood.

Mrs. Price put her arms around Patty and drew her close, while her other worn hand gently smoothed the roughened hair. "Mother knows it's hard to give it up, dear, when you have so few pennies to spend for yourself, and she's sorry for her little girl. But mother knows, too, that you do not want anything that does not belong to you, and that you will be a brave girl and give the penny to Mr. Rice as he comes along. There he comes up the street now!"

Patty gave her mother a kiss, wiped some tears away and hurried out to the gate where Mr. Rice saw her standing as he came driving along. He saw her little outstretched hand, and as he reined up his horse, heard her childish voice: "Here's your penny, Mr. Rice."

For the first time he remembered his words at the office.

"Why, Patty, child," he began, "did you think I really meant that was the penny I lost? Bless your heart, I lost my penny in a village ten miles away. Now run right off and spend that one quick, before any one else claims it." And with a hearty laugh and "get up there" to his old horse, he drove off.

Mrs. Price, watching from the window, smiled and said, "I guess it's all right" as she saw Patty's flying feet disappearing down the street, and a little later she was sure, for Patty burst in, vehemently demanding: "Where's Ruth and Bennie? I've got something for them."

Then with a big hug for her mother: "He was just joking, mother, and I didn't have to give it to him at all. But I'm glad I did what you told me to, for I feel lots better inside."

And mother said: "I knew you would."—Georgia M. Root, in Pacific Presbyterian.

HOW CHARLES AND MARY LAMB WROTE STORIES FOR CHILDREN.

A hundred years ago a thin but lively little London boy was taking life as he found it in Christ's Hospital, the "Blue Coat" school for the sons of poor men. The little boy was Charles Lamb, and life as he found it there was a pretty hard matter, for the masters beat the boys shockingly, and the lessons, Latin and Greek, were long and severe. The great stone school with its paved floors was cold and damp, and the meals were very scant of nourishing food. It was a dreary enough school life, compared to what we have now, but Charles Lamb's father could afford no other, and little Charles took his floggings and poor food with as much courage and patience as he bore his trials in his little "Aunt Mary" as called well, and bright spots came often in the form of holidays. Then he would trot out to his father's house, where his loving, older sister, Mary, would always have delicious meals ready by the cozy fire. She listened eagerly to his brother's stories of school life, or if he chose to get a book from the tall bookcase, the two would read together.

For Lamb, from a little boy, was a lover of books, and one of the happiest events of his childhood was the gift of a kind old gentleman gave his school chum, Samuel Taylor Coleridge. It was a free ticket to the King's Library. Many a rainy holiday, when the teaching streets in London were too chill for the little boys in long blue coats and school uniforms, to wander in them, Lamb and Coleridge went in happy haste to the library, and may add here that books and libraries were far scarcer and more prized then than now.

Lamb's choice always went to the great writers of Queen Elizabeth's day, and first of all he chose Shakespeare. He loved the men and women who thronged those pages with their joys and sorrows; he read and re-read the mighty plays. No doubt on his visits home he and Mary often talked and read together of Shakespeare.

Lamb's childhood passed as quickly as does that of every child, and young manhood found him full of troubles. His parents died, he had to work desperately hard, and to take constant care of Mary, who had grown very delicate. But the brother and sister were happy nevertheless, for they loved each other dearly, and Mary kept their little rooms so bright and cheery.

One day, thinking perhaps of the way she and Charles had enjoyed Shakespeare, Mary had an idea. She would do three things at once—make a little money, write about the poet she loved, and do something for the little people of whom she was so fond. The plan was to write the stories of Shakespeare's plays for children; that they might early enjoy them and become acquainted with them. Charles decided to do the tragedies, while Mary did the comedies, and it was a great success, for in those days few people had given a thought to books for children.

"Now," Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare has become a classic, and every child should turn, as soon as possible, to the pages the gentle brother and sister wrote for him so long ago. Therein he will find, as Charles Lamb says in the preface, "a lesson of all sweet and honorable thoughts and actions, to teach courtesy, benignity, generosity, humanity, for of examples teaching these virtues his pages are full."

RESULTS OF WORK DAY.

The result of "Work Day" for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage is about $1,200 to Saturday of last week. Many of the larger Sunday schools and churches have not reported, and we are hoping that the amount will reach as much as last year at least, which was about $2,000. We are very grateful to those schools who have helped in this effort, and we trust the results will be gratifying to all. With $5,000 due in fifteen days, the situation is serious, and we urge the brethren to send in the money they have collected. Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

PREACHERS' AND LAYMEN'S MEETING.

The fall meeting of the pastors and laymen of the Greenville District was held in Clarksdale October 5th and 6th.

All the pastors were present, except two, who were kept at home on account of sickness. Some laymen were present. Rev. W. S. Shipman opened the meeting with religious service at 2:30, Wednesday afternoon. Rev. W. W. Woodard addressed the Conference, setting forth in his remarks the purpose of the meeting, after which Bishop J. H. McCoy was introduced and presided over the meeting.

Before the program proper was entered upon, Brother Woodard called for a brief statement from the pastors as to the outlook for paying all Conference claims in full.

Each pastor reported that these claims would be collected in full. The reports of the pastors showed an advance on all lines of church work. Early in the spring fifteen pastors paid the whole of their foreign and domestic missionary assessments. One new church has been built this year at Belen; several new structures are in process of erection. Quite a large amount of money has been expended on repairing church and parsonage property.

A topic which was discussed freely was "Early Methodism in the Delta." Rev. J. W. Honnoll and Dr. Price gave a full history of the beginning and growth of Methodism in this Mississippi Valley. The growth and development of church have kept pace with the material developments. When Brother Honnoll first came to this territory there were few churches. At the present time we have fifty-three church organizations, with several new ones soon to be effected. Methodism has entered every community in the Delta, with the exception of one or two small communities where there are no church organizations. But the time has come when we have the Baptists to compete with. That Church is seeking to enter this section, and is putting forth every means possible to take the field. One great Methodist preacher once said he feared only two things—they were the "devil and the Baptists." We Delta preachers realize that in this field Methodism has these two forces to meet and contend with.

The necessity of establishing a Greenville District Training School was laid upon the hearts of all present. Bishop McCoy spoke to this subject, showing the need of such schools to serve as feeders to our church colleges. Brothers W. S. Lagrone and Shipman made quite impressive speeches on this subject, as did also Brothers Mounger and Cogdell. A committee was appointed to investigate the advisability of such an enterprise. This committee is to make its report at the District Conference.

The preaching was done by Bishop McCoy and Brother Honnoll. The Bishop preached a strong sermon on "Christian Hope," which deeply impressed all present. Bishop McCoy, by his fraternal and democratic administration of the affairs of the meeting, and by his spiritual sermon, won all present. Brother Honnoll, as he always does, preached a strong sermon. The meeting closed Thursday afternoon, and everyone left feeling that the purposes of the meeting had been accomplished.

LAYMEN'S MEETING OF MONROE DISTRICT.

We, the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Gibbsland, Louisiana, respectfully invite the leaders and local committees of the Laymen's Movement to meet with us at such a time as our district leader, Rev. W. G. Harbin may appoint.

Signed by: J. P. Jones, lay leader; C. C. Clark, C. A. Berry, committee.

The invitation above was forwarded to me by the pastor of the church at Gibbsland some days ago, since which time I have been striving to fix upon a time which the pressure of engagements might leave me free to come to.

After much prayer and thought, I am prepared, as lay leader of the Ruston District, to accept this invitation on behalf of the lay leaders in the district, with deep gratitude to the pastor and local committee, and to the church at Gibbsland.

This meeting will be held Nov. 26, 1910, embracing only the one day. Leaders from all over the district can come to Gibbsland in the morning, and return in the evening, missing but one day from affairs at home. Bishop Murrah has been invited to address the meeting, and a careful program will be prepared and announced through the columns of this Advocate in a very early issue. Let every lay leader in the district prepare to attend this rally, and let each one begin now to arouse interest in this meeting, and make an earnest effort to secure the attendance of every laymen he can from his church.

WALTER G. HARBIN,
District Leader.

Is the pastor's salary up, or in arrears? If behind, he needs it. An empty pantry and pocketbook are not promoters of either piety or efficiency in service. The officials in every charge should do their utmost to pay in full.

The Rev. Henry Haigh was the fraternal messenger from the British Wesleyan Conference to the recent general assembly of Canadian Methodism at Victoria. While on this side of the Atlantic, he wrote some most entertaining letters to The Methodist Recorder. In his last communication to that excellent periodical, he thus refers to his overland journey to the seat of the General Conference: "The only place on the train which seemed to be neglected was the smoke-room—and that on the way to Conference! For awhile, after some experience elsewhere, I hardly felt it could be a Conference train. But the Canadian ministers almost to a man have forsworn tobacco, as they have forsworn alcohol. The laymen seemed to me to be just as abstemious." Happy Canada!

Let no one imagine that we endorse all the views expressed by correspondents of the Advocate. Far from it. It is quite enough to be responsible for what we ourselves write. To allow only the editor's sentiments to find voice in our columns would be to make of the paper a close corporation, indeed. Under proper and necessary limitations, we believe a church organ should be an open forum for the discussion of all religious matters of interest. But no brother has a right to demand that he be heard, or that what he has to say shall at once appear. We cannot print anything like all we are asked to publish, and we deem it our duty to use the space at our disposal as we think best for the interests of the Church. One who takes offense because an editor cannot use his copy needs to go to the mourner's bench.

From a recent number of the Times-Democrat, we appropriate the following remarks concerning one who was faithful in lowly service: "Home-returning folk speak of the death in New York City recently of Albert Meislahn, ringer of the chimes at Trinity Church, who died at the age of sixty-two. He had rung the chimes for fifty years, and was buried from the church which he served for half a century. The bells that long knew his friendly, skillful touch, were tolled as he lay beneath them. He was born in the shadow of Trinity, and almost as soon as he could climb the stairs he began helping the official bell-ringer. From his twelfth year to his retirement, he climbed the eighty-eight steps to the belfry tower at least 10,000 times. Such a life of loyal service cannot but leave its impress upon the world; the hurried brokers and business men down in Wall Street, frenzied financiers in the mad rush for foothold in big New York, will leave no more wholesome lesson than the old bell-ringer whose chime-melodies told of the passage of the hours and the nearness of eternity to all who would pause to listen for the lesson. The least of us may leave our message to and our imprint upon the world through fidelity in our sovereignty over a few things."

WILL YOU OBSERVE, OR IGNORE IT?

The fifth Sunday in this month, October the 30th, has been named as "Advocate Day." It is our earnest request that at that time a special effort shall be made in every congregation to secure renewals and new subscribers to the Conference organ. We make this urgent appeal to our preachers and people because we are really in need of their assistance. A united movement in behalf of the New Orleans Christian Advocate throughout Mississippi and Louisiana would undoubtedly give it a great forward impulse. We ought to issue in New Orleans a paper second to none in the Church. The welfare of Methodism demands this. The tide of immigration is turning southward, worldly influences are becoming stronger, and denominational competition fiercer. A journal, well equipped and aflame with enthusiasm, must sound the notes of advance, if we are to enter the open doors about us and make the most of our widening opportunities. The Methodist Episcopal Church has the best papers of any denomination in America. It recognizes the importance of having a strong press, and is putting up the money to maintain it. On the other hand, our Conference organs, with a few exceptions, are struggling for life. Nearly everywhere they need to be re-enforced, improved and enlarged. What place would the old-time gunboat, with tattered rigging and a rusty gun or two, have in a modern navy? or the slow-moving horse gin of the days ago, turning out a bale or two of cotton a day, in this time when machinery lifts the fleecy staple from the wagon and hands out the finished product, wrapped and banded, with startling rapidity? All about us the music of progress is in the air: in every department of endeavor, "Equipment" is the watchword of the hour.

A paper to succeed must have adequate funds. It cannot live on the free air and compliments. And in the case of the Advocate, a better income is imperatively demanded. There is no going forward without it—it is even doubtful if we shall be able to maintain the present standard. What shall we do? This is not merely the problem of the editor and publisher, but also of Louisiana and Mississippi Methodism. Shall we advance the price of subscription? That would bring financial relief, but it would tend to defeat the very object for which the paper exists. Put an agent in the field? That would cost $2,500 or $3,000 a year, and it would tax him to earn his salary? Let the editor travel and solicit subscribers? That involves large expense, and, as he is without editorial or clerical assistance in his part of the work, who would perform the task of editing (more than enough for one man) in his absence? No, no; under existing conditions our reliance must be directly upon our preachers and people. It needs to be recognized that the Advocate is not published for private gain, but is an enterprise of the Church. It can no more be maintained independent of the co-operation of our pastors and laity, than can our Missionary or Church Extension operations. Like other institutions of Methodism, its home lies in the loyalty and active support of the ministry and membership of the Church in its territory.

What should be done on "Advocate Day?" Talk to the people about our paper: tell of its claims, and of their need of it in their homes; but do not stop with talk. Send men through the congregation to take renewals and new subscriptions; follow this up the next day by looking up absent delinquents and seeing that everyone is urged to continue to subscribe. We do not desire to lose a single name upon our files, if it can be avoided. Will you not help us, brother? We earnestly appeal to you to do so. Not because any personal interest is involved, but for the good of your own flock, of Methodism in our section, and of the increasing kingdom of Christ.

A PORTRAIT PRESENTED.

On October the 13th, a fine oil painting of Major R. W. Millsaps, the generous founder, was presented to Millsaps College, at Jackson, Miss. The presentation speech was made by Bishop W. B. Murrah, and the address of acceptance by President D. C. Hull. The portrait is the work of Mr. Betts, a noted Chicago artist, and is said to be a striking likeness of Mississippi's most distinguished banker and philanthropist. It will occupy a prominent place on the wall of the college chapel, having been substituted for the familiar crayon picture which has hung there for many years. It affords us great pleasure to chronicle this interesting occurrence, which will be a source of gratification to every Mississippi Methodist.

The service which Major Millsaps has rendered our Church in that State is immeasurable and enduring. He has given it resources and a forward impetus which must powerfully affect its future for all time to come. Indeed, his liberal contributions, reaching up into the hundreds of thousands, have enabled us to build in eighteen years the foremost denominational institution in that commonwealth, forging past all of our sister churches in educational equipment, though some of them have been engaged in the task of college building for three-quarters of a century. Nor is it Methodism alone which has been blessed and enriched by the benefactions of Major Millsaps. The institution made possible by his beneficence is an ornament and benediction to the entire State, and is contributing much to the development of a worthy and progressive citizenship.

Mississippi Methodism has felt the impress of many masterful hands in the course of its history—of Gibson, Withers, Paine, Marshall, Wheat, Andrews, Adams, Galloway, and many others whose names will long shine resplendent. In that great galaxy belongs the founder of Millsaps College, and centuries after he has gone hence, his memory will be revered and honored by succeeding generations.

PURITY FEDERATION CONVENTION.

This gathering will assemble in New Orleans on October the 25th—Tuesday of next week. It is one of a chain of conventions which are being held in the leading cities of the country for the promotion of individual and social purity. This is a warfare in a great cause, and the movement is of national significance. The two sins which most threaten the life of the republic are the greed of gain and unbridled lust. Against the latter, this organization is making a vigorous and much-needed fight. A number of distinguished moral and social reformers will attend the meeting here and deliver addresses. They deserve the co-operation of every man and woman who desires to see society made cleaner and better. Detailed announcements concerning the exercises of the convention will be given in the city papers in due time. Meanwhile, any information desired as to the plans for the meeting may be had by applying to the Rev. W. W. Holmes, chairman of the local committee on arrangements.

CHIEF-PASTORS IN THE CITY.

The announced assembling of the Bishops in semi-annual session in New Orleans on Thursday of this week is awakening much interest among the Methodist people and general public of the city. At this writing, the program of exercises which has been arranged is tentative and incomplete. The sessions of the Episcopal College will, of course, be executive, and will be held either at the First Methodist Church or at the Grunewald Hotel. A public reception will be tendered the distinguished visitors at the First Methodist Church Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, and the Brotherhood of Rayne Memorial will entertain them at the same hour Friday evening. It is expected that several of the Bishops will remain over the Sabbath and that most of our pulpits in the city will be filled by them next Sunday. The Methodism of New Orleans appreciates the presence of these worthy leaders of the Church, and prays that their conference may be overshadowed by the Holy Spirit and make for the peace and prosperity of Zion.

THE DEATH OF DR. J. M. BEARD.

We regret to announce the death of Dr. J. M. Beard which occurred in this city on Sunday, October the 9th. His obsequies were conducted in the First Methodist Church the day following at 3 p. m. Dr. S. H. Werlein, Dr. F. N. Parker, Dr. J. A. Rice, Rev.

J. F. Foster and Rev. A. I. Townsley taking part in the service.

Dr. Beard was born in North Mississippi, and when a mere youth served the cause of the Confederacy under Gen. N. B. Forrest. For many years he was an active and influential member of the Louisiana Conference. Among the charges that he served were Algiers, Moreau, New Iberia, Mansfield, and Rayne Memorial and Felicity, of this city. He was also presiding elder of the Crowley District, and for a brief time edited the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Those associated with him in the itinerancy speak highly of him as a minister and man. At the time of his demise, Dr. Beard sustained to the Church the relation of a local preacher. We hope that some one informed as to the career of the deceased will furnish us a fitting memoir in the near future. To the sorrowing family and friends we extend sympathy, and pray that grace to sustain them may be granted in this trying hour.

THE AMERICAN BOY SCOUTS.

With the plan to organize a branch of the American Boy Scouts in New Orleans, we are in hearty sympathy. It is a good order, and tends to develop its members physically and to awaken in them a spirit of kindness and humanitarianism. But that those initiating the enterprise should connect it with the Wild West Show is unfortunate and regrettable. It will tend to discredit the order in its very infancy. And especially objectionable is the announcement that the showmen will give the boys lessons in scouting next Sunday. Such a bold profanation of God's holy day and influencing the youth of the city to join in it, is nothing short of an outrage. It deserves the outspoken rebuke of the Christian public. Such management will arouse the churches into an antagonism of this deserving order, when otherwise it would have their encouragement and approval.

MEETING OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in annual session in the office of the Christian Advocate, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La., on Thursday, Oct. 27, 1910, at 11 a. m.

N. E. JOYNER, Chairman.

PERSONAL.

Bishop J. H. McCoy will spend next Sunday with the Rev. L. M. Broyles at Corinth, Miss.

We are pleased to report that Rev. L. A. Sims, of Epworth Church, this city, who was operated on for appendicitis several days ago, is convalescent and has left the Sanitarium.

Rev. A. F. Vaughan has just closed a ten days' meeting at Lafayette, La., in which he had the efficient aid of Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Homer. We have not been apprised of the results.

The September Bulletin of the Lake Charles Church is a bugle call to the membership to get busy. This congregation is prospering under the leadership of Brother Drake, who is in the midst of an interesting meeting.

We are grateful to Rev. J. S. Rutledge, our pastor at Indian Bayou, La., for valuable work done for the Advocate. He reports his charge in good condition, with "the revival fires kindled last summer still burning."

Mrs. Jacob Cohen, an active and appreciated worker in the Carrollton Avenue Church, is ill at the Touro Infirmary. She is greatly missed by her friends and fellow-laborers in the Master's cause. We wish her a speedy recovery.

The Methodist parsonage at Washington, Miss., was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 17th inst. The house was valued at $3,000, and the loss was partially covered by insurance. Our pastor there is the Rev. R. Bradley.

Among the speakers who addressed the Sunday School Institute held in New Orleans last week was Mr. R. M. Weaver, of Corinth, Miss. He is a worthy Methodist layman and a practical Sunday school man, who believes in the efficiency of modern methods.

Rev. L. E. Wicht, of the Haynesville Mission, is busily occupied winding up the work of the year. The pastor's salary will probably be paid in full, but he fears that some of the Conference claims may not be wholly met. The charge has gone forward under his guiding hand.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon, of San Antonio, Texas, will address the Epworth Leaguers of the city at the First Methodist Church on Friday evening at 8 p. m. That he will bring to these young Wesleyans a stirring message, needs not to be said. The general public are cordially invited to attend.

On page 7, third column, of this issue there occurs a mistake in the head-line, "Laymen's Meeting of Monroe District." It should read, "Laymen's Meeting of Ruston District." This error was made in printing the first side of the paper, and was not discovered until the first side was off the press.

Bishop Murrah arrived in New Orleans Monday and will remain throughout the week. He is held in high esteem by the Methodist pastors and people of the Crescent City. He is expected to preach at Carrollton Avenue Next Sunday at 11 o'clock, and at Louisiana Avenue in the evening.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, of Gulfport, was in the city last Friday and favored the Advocate office with his presence; but the editor, not being in, missed seeing him, which he much regretted. Brother Griffin has charge of the Sailors' Rest at Gulfport, where he and his associates are doing a noble work.

Rev. J. S. Parker, of the Rankin Street Church, of Jackson, Miss., has kindly sent us an interesting report of his work, which will appear next week. He has recently had a fine meeting, in which he was assisted by the Methodist pastors of that growing city. He has had 65 accessions up to the present time.

Rev. Theo. Copeland, who at the late session of the St. Louis Conference was assigned to Cabanne Church, in St. Louis, is much pleased with his appointment. The stewards have attested their appreciation of the new pastor by raising the salary $600, which make the stipend of the charge $3,000 and a house.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, of Abbeville, La., brought his wife to the city for medical treatment a few days since. She is quite ill at the New Orleans Sanitarium. Their son, Mr. E. A. Hoffpauir, an accomplished civil engineer of Vicksburg, Miss., is also here to be with his mother at this time of solicitude. Let prayer be made for this stricken and anxious family.

Rev. W. W. Holmes is delivering in the Louisiana Avenue Church a series of sermons on the following subjects: "The Giving Church," "The Teaching Church," "The Working Church," "The Social Church," and "The Spiritual Church." Mr. Holmes has announced that he has no purpose to go to the foreign field, as has been reported, but that he feels that his work is among the people of Louisiana.

Rev. J. J. Kelly, who for weeks was so critically ill in a sanitarium in this city last summer and whose life at one time was almost despaired of, is now at his post of duty at Winnaboro and is able to meet his appointments. This is, indeed, good news, which we are happy to chronicle. Brother Kelly reports thirteen accessions, a number of infants baptized, and about $100 raised for benevolent claims since his return home.

Dr. John A. Rice, of the Rayne Memorial Church, this city, has issued a neat card announcing a series of Sunday morning and evening discourses which will extend to the meeting of the Louisiana Conference. The themes are happily chosen—two of them dealing with the death of Christ, and we doubt not that their delivery will awaken much interest. Dr. Rice is strikingly original and versatile in the plan and scope of his pulpit work.

For reasons deemed wise, Rev. A. I. Townsley has postponed the revival services at the Second Methodist Church for one week; so they will begin on October the 30th instead of on the 23d, as before announced. As stated in our last issue, the preaching will be done by the Rev. W. R. Hendrix, of Louisville, Ky. As a preparation for the meeting, prayer services will be conducted from the 23d to the 30th, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society.

We were delighted a few days since to receive a cheery letter from our long time friend, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, who resides near the beautiful campus of Millsaps College. We appreciate more than we have words to express his hearty and kindly commendation of our editorial utterances. Mrs. W. L. C. Hunt, who is a sister of Mrs. Sullivan and whose honored husband was translated some months ago, is now one of the inmates of this charming Christian home.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb is making ready for Conference in his charge at Indianola, Miss. Within the past few days he has secured $235 on the Conference collections, and if there is any balance he will get it. Going up short is an experience of which he knows nothing. For the third time in succession Brother Lipscomb will report the sessions of the North Mississippi Conference for the Commercial Appeal. Our great contemporary knows when it gets hold of a capable man.

Dr. Lewis Powell, after four years of faithful service at First Church, Memphis, has been transferred to the Louisville Conference and stationed at Settle Memorial Church, Owensboro. This is said to be a magnificent charge. The Doctor's son, Rev. Paul Shell Powell, preached his first sermon in his father's church in Memphis on September 18th to a large congregation. Though only nineteen years old, he is an A. B. graduate of Vanderbilt University. He will take a full theological course at Vanderbilt before entering the active work.

Rev. George Fox, of Bastrop, La., is having success in his work. Some time since he was blessed with a gracious revival at Humphrey's Chapel, in which the church was greatly quickened and there were nine accessions. He was assisted by Rev. T. S. Randle and Rev. Scott Randle, of Gilbert, who rendered excellent service. "Much credit," writes Brother Fox, "is also due to Sister Randle, who led many of the prayers and exhorted sinners to come to Christ. There is laid up for her a crown bedecked with many a star, which God, the righteous Judge, will give her on that day."

The Rev. W. L. Linfield, Treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, in sending in his report for the third quarter, says: "Considering the ravages of the boll weevil in the central and western part of our territory, I think the showing is fine." A glance at the statement furnished fully justifies this verdict. And that our brethren are doing so well for the cause of missions gives great gratification. Never was the outlook on the firing line so hopeful. We must allow nothing to necessitate any halting upon the part of the Church. If need be, let us stint and sacrifice to give the precious gospel to those who are lifting appealing hands to us.

Rev. R. A. Clark, of Okolona, Miss., requests us to state that Dr. W. F. McMurry, Secretary of the General Board of Church Extension, will dedicate the new Methodist Church there on Sunday, November 6, and that all former pastors are cordially invited to be present. Brother Clark adds: "I have about $1,200 to raise within the next two weeks to be ready for the dedication, but I have no fear that I cannot do so. We expect to make this a great day for Okolona Methodism. Our officials are busy winding up the finances of the year's work, and I expect to go to Conference with a 'clean sheet and a $19,000 church free of debt. We had our Sunday school rally last Sunday and 200 were present.'"

The famous Young Men's Bible Class at Corinth, Miss., now has a rival in the Wesley Class at Tupelo, of which an account may be found elsewhere. Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle is the teacher of the latter, and if our Corinth friends keep up they will have to bestir themselves. We know what Mrs. Hoyle can do. We tried to keep pace with her in League work in the days ago, and we were always in a trot. In the selection of a name—"The Wesley Class"—so far in advance of the action of the General Conference, the Tupelo workers have achieved quite a distinction. We are pleased to see the Mississippians forging forward in Sunday school activity. May these fine classes speedily multiply!

Bishop A. W. Wilson, our honored Senior Bishop, will occupy the pulpit of the First Methodist Church in this city next Sunday at 11 a. m. Highly favored, indeed, is this congregation. For profound spiritual insight and vigorous and majestic thought, it is doubtful whether Bishop Wilson has an equal in any Church in America. And his saintly life and the noble service which he has rendered, have securely enthroned him in the esteem and affections of his brethren from the Atlantic to the Pacific. With the bearing of a Hebrew prophet and a heart whose every beat is loyal to the Southern Methodist Church and the cause of Christ, there is in the connection no figure so towering and imposing as this trusted and revered Chief-pastor, who stands near the close of his great career, with an unsullied record behind, and inspiring prospect before. May he yet be spared for many years to bless and lead the on-moving hosts of Southern Methodism!

From the Times-Democrat of the 17th inst. we appropriate the following account of the dedication of the Methodist Church at Amite, La., last Sunday: "Free from debt, the handsome new Methodist Episcopal Church, South, erected at this place by the members of that denomination on the site of the old building, was formally dedicated yesterday at 11 o'clock. Bishop W. B. Murrah, D.D., of Jackson, Miss., delivered the dedicatory sermon. Judge Robert R. Reid, chairman of the building committee, presented the building, which was consecrated in the presence of a standing congregation which taxed the capacity of the building. Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder; L. C. Wilson, former pastor, and H. W. Bowman, preacher in charge, participated in the services. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and pot plants. A select choir of well-trained voices rendered appropriate music. Following the invocation, Dr. C. S. Stewart presented to the church a handsome Bible, which was accepted by the Bishop on behalf of the members. Bishop Murrah delivered an effective and eloquent sermon. He talked over an hour, during which time he held the wrapt attention of the congregation." Brother Wilson, Brother Bowman and his people are entitled to much praise for projecting and carrying to consummation this notable enterprise.

LESSON FOR OCT. 23.
REVIEW

Golden Text: And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem. (Luke ix, 51.)

HOME READINGS.—Monday, Peter's Confession, Matt. 16: 13-28. Tuesday, A lesson on forgiveness, Matt. 18: 21-35. Wednesday, Jesus on the way to Jerusalem, Matt. 19: 1, 2, 13-26. Thursday, The laborers in the vineyard, Matt. 20: 1-16. Friday, Jesus entering Jerusalem, Matt. 21: 1-17. Saturday, The king's marriage feast, Matt. 22: 1-14. Sunday, The wise and foolish virgins, Matt. 25: 1-13.

THE GIST OF THE LESSONS.

The Review should embrace the lessons from July 17 to October 16. They fall within the period of the Transfiguration and the close of the first day of the last week of our Saviour's life on earth. Peter's confession just immediately preceding the transfiguration. Following the transfiguration Jesus left Galilee for the last time and proceeded slowly to Jerusalem. His public activity at this time is often referred to as the "Perean Ministry." Our lessons touch only on one or two incidents in that ministry. A fuller account is given in John's Gospel. Next comes the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and the delivery of many important parables in and near the temple.

July 17.—Peter's Confession, Matt. 16: 13-28. Peter would have dissuaded Jesus from the work. He came to do. Has God given you your work? Then you must do it, though your dearest friends would move you from it. You find by losing. That is not according to the mathematics we learned at school, but it is heavenly mathematics—we find our real life by losing our lower life in service for others.

July 24.—The Transfiguration, Matt. 17: 1-8, 14-20. Peter had a vision of the glorified Christ and would have remained with it in forgetfulness of the needy multitude below. Some people look on church services as things in themselves and to be enjoyed, whereas their inspiration should be carried out to others.

July 31.—A Lesson on Forgiveness, Matt. 18: 21-35. The followers of Jesus are not to make forgiveness a matter of mathematics. They are to cultivate a spirit of forgiveness, which forgives without count. God has forgiven us much, and we only imitate him in less degree as we forgive others.

August 7.—Jesus on the Way to Jerusalem, Matt. 19: 1, 2, 13-26. The claims of the kingdom must have the highest place in your life. Riches, or the desire for them, cannot enter in along with them. One or the other must be supreme.

August 14.—The Laborers in the Vineyard, Matt. 20: 1-16. So much pay for so much work, that is the basis on which worldly labor is rewarded. God's basis is the spirit in which the service was done. What a world of encouragement there for even the most humble worker!

August 21.—Jesus Nearing Jerusalem, Matt. 21: 1-17. Greatness is not a matter of birth, or rank, or outward show, but of spirit. It manifests itself in service for others, for service is of the very essence of greatness.

August 28.—Jesus Entering Jerusalem, Matt. 21: 1-17. As Jesus entered Jerusalem so many hundreds of years ago, so is He ready to enter your heart and life now. The people of Jerusalem little suspected his real greatness. To you, too, he will reveal himself beyond all thought.

Sept. 4.—Two Parables of Judgment, Matt. 21: 23-46. "We needs must love the highest when we see it." We must, or our appreciation of the true and good will be taken away.

Sept. 11.—The King's Marriage Feast, Matt. 22: 1-14. All men are called to the Kingdom of God. If any are not among the chosen, it is be-Famous "Pint of Cough Syrup" Recipe.

No Better Remedy at any Price.
Fully Guaranteed.

Make a plain syrup by mixing one pint of granulated sugar and 1/2 pint of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2 1/2 ounces of pure Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup. This gives you a family supply of the best cough syrup at a saving of $2. It never spoils. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

The effectiveness of this simple remedy is surprising. It seems to take hold instantly, and will usually stop the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. It tones up the jaded appetite and is just laxative enough to be helpful in a cough, and has a pleasing taste. Also, excellent for bronchial trouble, throat tickle, sore lungs and asthma, and an unequalled remedy for whooping cough.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) is a prime favorite in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, though never successfully. If you try it, use only genuine Pinex, which is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in quinal and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this recipe.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

cause they have chosen not to obey the call.

Sept. 18.—Three Questions, Matt. 22: 15, 22, 34-46. Which is the greatest commandment was the problem the scribes set themselves to answer. All are great, said Christ, for all are summed up in the little word "love." He who loves fulfills the law of God, though he may do it unconsciously.

Sept. 25.—Temperance Lesson, Gal. 5: 15-26. "They that are of Christ Jesus." Do you belong to that class? Then you are one with Christ in the uplifting of the world and mankind. Of necessity, too, you must be opposed to anything that drags man down, and what more so than the liquor curse?

Oct. 2.—The Wise and Foolish Virgins, Matt. 25: 1-13. Jesus is coming again, though we do not know when. We are most prepared for that coming as we keep the lamp of service trimmed and burning.

Oct. 9.—The Parable of the Talents, Matt. 25: 14-30. Don't underestimate the value of your gifts. Faithful service is not reckoned according to the amount you do, but according to the way in which you live up to what you have.

Oct. 16.—The Last Judgment, Matt. 25: 31-46. It is reasonable that every man must give a final account of his life. That life will be judged, not by its professions, but by its actions. You claim to be a Christian; how is your life bearing that claim out? From the Christian Guardian.

THE POWER OF A SINGLE LITTLE GERM.

The most dreaded and hardest fought creature in the whole world is the "germ." One tiny little germ can in a remarkably short time destroy the human body and cause death in the most organized form. For instance, you have a cold, bruise, boil, carbuncle, burn, felon, other insect bite, or a sore of any kind; it festers, the blood poison germ creeps in, the suffering is intense and often times death. "Gray's Ointment" is a germ destroyer. It prevents complications from all kind of skin eruptions; it promptly arrests all pain and permanently cures these skin troubles, which if left alone are so disastrous. Get a 25c box of "Gray's Ointment" from your druggist, and keep it always on hand—you can't tell when you will need it. If you have never used it and want to test its merits, write Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 509 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you a free sample box.

Mr. W. R. Crise, of Bertlett, Mich., writes: "It is without doubt the best Ointment for healing wounds I ever saw."

CHURCH EXTENSION COLLECTION.

Louisiana Conference.

By reference to the minutes of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension it is seen that last year we were asked for $2,810.37 as donations to needy churches, but after sending off the pro rata due the General Board we only had $1,000 to appropriate, and so some needy churches had to go unaided. But had our assessment of $1,000 been collected in full, leaving us $200 for Conference appropriations, we could almost have paid everything asked, and the rest of the $2,004 sent the General Board would have come back to us and more. Please, therefore, brother pastor, see that the Church Extension Claim is not overlooked, and that it shall be considered one of your most important collections.

P. O. LOWREY,
Secretary of Board.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The World's Christian Citizenship Conference, which will be held in Philadelphia November 16-20, promises to be epoch-making. Already more than one thousand delegates have been appointed, representing almost every Christian interest in our own and other lands. Scores are being daily appointed, and the number will doubtless reach thousands. Congregations, Missionary Societies, Sabbath Schools, Men's Brotherhoods, Christian Endeavor and other young people's societies, Ministerial Associations, Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A.'s and various Christian reform organizations are entitled to appoint delegates. Any such organization desiring yet to appoint should do so at once, and send without fail the names and addresses of all appointees to the General Superintendent, J. S. Martin, 603 Publication Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa. Any person desiring to attend, whether delegates or not, should likewise immediately write the General Superintendent. This is the only way to insure seating accommodations.

It's Nerves

That make life worth living—when they are all right. But when weak or exhausted it's different; some of the organs do not get enough nerve energy. Their action becomes weak. The penalty is aches, pains and misery. Dr. Miles' Nerve Restorer restores nervous energy. It establishes normal activity, so that nature can correct the irregularities.

Dr. Miles' Nerve Restorer has completely cured me of nervousness and indigestion. I suffered untold misery for months. The first half bottle of Dr. Miles' Nerve Restorer relieved me. I have used 7 bottles in all, and now I feel as well as ever, eat heartily, digestion good, nerves strong, sleep well.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased our all-wise Father to transplant to the courts of heaven our beloved sister, Mrs. R. F. Abney, whose Christian life and influence for good was such that her death was just a passing over to the Beulah Land; and,

Whereas, we feel that this holy, consecrated life of fifty-nine years, with its benign influence, will live on to perpetuate a boundless power, leading and guiding others to the realms above; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That Montrose Sunday school and church realize that only time, with its healing, can cure our irreparable loss of one who was so earnest and true, and ever ready to aid in the cause of Christ.

2. That we deplore the loss of such a friend, and extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family.

3. That we will emulate her beautiful example.

4. That this tribute to her memory be spread upon the minutes and copies furnished each member of her family; also sent for publication in the Jasper County Review, the Bay Springs News, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Respectfully submitted,

MRS. E. F. PRUITT,

MRS. C. F. NEILL,

MRS. TINCIE NICHOLS.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Adopted by the Methodist Sunday School of Rosedale, Miss.:

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom and mercy has seen fit to remove from earth to heaven our dear, Christian friend, Miss Maggie Newman; be it resolved:

First, That we, as members of this Sunday school, feel deeply the loss of our cheerful, efficient secretary.

Second, That our church, its societies, and this entire community have suffered an irreparable loss in the death of this true, conscientious woman.

Third, That we extend to her family and to her friends in other places our sincere loving sympathy.

Fourth, That we send a copy of these resolutions to our home paper, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and spread a copy of same upon our Sunday School record.

Mrs. ANNA B. FARRAR,

Miss TILLIE MONTGOMERY,

Miss HATTIE D. CHAMBERS.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 23.

REPENTANCE AND RESTORATION

(Zeph., 3:11-13; Acts, 3:19-20)

What is Repentance?

In the New Testament (Greek) there are two words used to express repentance, and one to express repentance and restoration, or reformation or conversion.

The first to which attention is directed is Metamelomai, which means sorrow for sin, and is translated "repent," but it is never used to express that degree or type of repentance that results in conversion or "restoration." For instance, it is the word used for repent in the parable of the two sons (Matt., 21:29), in which connection it merely signifies a change of mind of a sorrow for sin. Again, it is the form used, in Matt. 27:3: "Then Judas which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented." Judas' repentance was not unto salvation, for the Savior said (John, 17:12): "None of them is lost but the son of perdition," speaking of Judas.

Therefore, genuine repentance is more than simple sorrow for sin; it is definitely expressed in the second word, to which I call your attention, Metanoeo, which signifies not only a sorrow for sin, but a turning away from, a forsaking of sin. This is the word that is always used when repentance unto salvation is spoken of. John the Baptist uses it in exhorting the people to repent; Jesus began his ministry by using it in exhorting them to repent; Peter on the day of Pentecost and in our second reference uses it.

Then, the word that signifies repentance and restoration, or conversion, is Epistrepho. In Acts 26:20 it is translated "turn to God."

Therefore, there is involved in genuine repentance, a sorrow for sin, a turning away from sin, and a turning to God for restoration into divine favor and fellowship, and for a reception of the sense of pardon and the witness of the Spirit.

Why Repent?

Our Savior said: "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Man involuntarily turned away from God, violated his law and entered into the degradation and death of sin. God in mercy made it possible for him to return. But he can return only as "a new creature in Christ," who died to redeem him, and he can become this new creature in Christ only by being sorry for his sins, forsaking his sins, and turning unto God by faith in Christ.

When Should We Repent?

Now, "Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6:2.)

"And the time of this ignorance God winked at, but now he commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts, 17:30.)

Now, while you are thinking about it; now, while you are conscious of the necessity of every one's repenting; now, while you see yourself a lost sinner; now, while the Spirit of God knocks at the door of your heart for admittance. An old gentleman once told me that in early life he had entered the Spirit and driven conviction from his heart, and that, in so doing, he had sinned away his day of repentance, and could not repent and be saved.

What is the Result of Genuine Repentance?

Coming into the saved relationship, entering into vital union with Christ; entering into possession of the infinite riches of grace so abundant for every soul that will continue to use the means of grace; entering into a sublime consciousness, by the witness of the Holy Spirit, of the glorious heritage of a son of God, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ.

A CHURCH DEDICATION.

Dear Brother Meek: Bishop Murrell was on hand at Horn Lake Sunday, 2d of October, the dustiest day I have ever seen in Mississippi. Preparations had been made under the shade of the great giant of the forest for the comfortable entertainment of a very large crowd. The dust no doubt kept some away. The collection possibly kept a few away. About 400 came. The Bishop preached a great sermon on Moses' choice of the spiritual, instead of the riches, honor and splendor of the Egyptian throne. The people were captivated from the very beginning. You could almost see the great statesman as the Bishop outlined his character, touching the salient points. I will never forget his description of the funeral and burial of that great servant of God.

The people were all charmed with our own Mississippi Bishop and vied with each other in expressing their appreciation of his services. Of course, after such a sermon, the money came pouring in.

The church is clear of debt—the faithful few becoming responsible for the deficit.

We have preoccupied an important area of country which will in a few years become a suburb of the growing city of Memphis. We are about ready for Conference.

SUMMER TIME REFRESHINGS.

Dear Doctor Meek: Good interest has prevailed with us in the revival meetings of this August and September.

Very many services alone would have amply repaid for all the work performed and any expense of time or money. God's forces often are silent, and the greatest results do not always appear upon the surface.

Only the fewest people of these congregations are among the unsaved. There were conversions, however, and fifteen new names were added to the membership of the churches.

At Tibbee Station the preaching chapel had been renovated, and a new organ placed. Rev. E. M. Broyles, of Corinth, kindly paused with us for three days. As a consequence of his sermons of great excellence and the presence of the highest, many were made to sit together in heavenly places, and the fruits will abide as the years pass.

At Maynew Rev. H. S. Spragins was the appreciated assistant who successfully dispensed the word of life, greatly to the comfort and help of the good congregations. A gracious refreshing was a natural result.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, Modes of The Heavenly Life, by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations.' By Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good; the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

Price, 75 cents, postpaid. Order from C. O. Chalmers, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

pastor, and preacher of the occasion, was present at Curtis Chapel.

Good crowds attended and fine interest existed from the first. Many times the congregations were greatly moved, and all the fruits of a real revival appeared.

The final service was a climax to no few benedictions.

At Antesia the steady-going revival of eight days was up to anticipation.

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, of Starkville, gave great satisfaction in the pulpit and among the people. A really good meeting was the general verdict, and five additions to the church was a special result.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, of the district, was the principal worker at the Kilgore quarterly meeting. The combination demands of the existing situation were quickly estimated, and revival preachings, financial disquisitions and general collections were the promiscuous and rapid-fire procedure of this ministerial expert.

"Something was doing" in sundry directions, and three joined the church.

A much enjoyed feature of Saturday was the sumptuous dinner on the ground, following the very interesting sermon by Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Second Church, Columbus, on "Jonah and the Whale."

These five churches are a station in part and also a circuit, and contain all the elements of a best pastoral charge.

Columbus, West Point and Starkville are suburban to this goodly location.

Obituaries.

ELSIE MASSEY was the youngest daughter of B. R. and Mrs. Nan Massey. She was held in high esteem by all who knew her. She was just entering into young womanhood when the grim monster Death came and claimed her for his victim. She had made her peace with God just a little more than two years ago. It was her disposition to dispense sunshine everywhere she went. She frequently went about the home singing some sweet song of Jesus and his love. So weep not, dear father and mother, sister and brothers, we shall not hear Elsie's voice on earth again, but shall hear it above. She has filled her mission here on earth, and Jesus has called her home. She has accomplished the work God had for her to do, so she is now at rest, where there is no more sickness, sorrow, pain nor death—forever with the redeemed, singing hallelujahs to God. T. L. OAKES, Her Pastor.

Mrs. FANNIE HEDRICK, whose maiden name was Fannie Chaffin, was born at Columbia, La., May 7, 1850, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. W. Birch, near Port Gibson, Miss., Sept. 24, 1910. She was left an orphan at the age of twelve years. On January 5, 1871, she was happily married to Mr. J. A. Hedrick, of Claiborne County, and for many years they resided at the old home place, near Martin, Miss., where eight children were born to them; four of whom survive. Sister Hedrick was converted shortly before her marriage and united with the Methodist Church, of which she remained a loyal, consistent member until death. Sweet-spirited, affectionate and thoroughly unselfish, she was indeed a devoted wife and mother, a kind neighbor, and a Christian whose light shone brightly and steadily. She suffered much during the last few weeks of her life, but she bore all with wonderful patience, and passed away sweetly trusting in Jesus. She is mourned by her aged husband, four married daughters and their families, and by a large circle of friends. May God graciously comfort the bereaved ones, and may they all some sweet day join the sainted mother in the heavenly home. M. M. BLACK, Pastor.

Died, Aug. 8, 1910, LONNIE, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Simpson, Watson, Miss., age 27 years, 9 months. No scene could have been more pathetic than the interment of this splendid young man, who was loved by many and admired and respected by all. In the zenith of his bright young manhood, endowed by nature with many noble traits, possessed of a high sense of honor, intellectual and tactful, kind-hearted and courteous, he was sure to be successful in any vocation in life. He was married in 1908 to Miss Katie Coleman, of Byhalla, Miss., and to them was given a lovely little daughter, who was the pride and joy of their happy hearts; but, all too soon, the joy of the future became a sombre hue. Ill health with persistent trend entered the little Eden, and finally sapped the life and strength of the brave boy who was the joy and stay of father's and mother's declining years, the comrade and brother of Gordon, the beloved of his sweet young wife, the father of dear little Louise, who will never know his tender, loving care. Oh! it was so sad—so much to live for; and yet this patient sufferer was ready to do the Master's will. He had given his heart to God and united with the church when quite a boy; so the only dread was the universal one, the parting from loved ones, and such cheerful devotion to Him was never exceeded on this earth. How often the sympathetic friend has witnessed the scene—a frail, bright-eyed young man, surrounded by his noble father, his gracious mother, his dear young brother, his beloved wife, all smiling at baby Louise, while tears were in the hearts of every one of that sweet home circle, because the thought of the coming separation shadowed each brave heart, but the loving, patient endurance of these sore tried hearts seemed a living manifestation of God's gracious Spirit. Oh, may it abide with them always, and the picture thus poorly portrayed be revealed throughout the ages in its immortal setting in a home on high! M. T. W. L.

Mrs. MARY G. DONIPHAN died at her residence on Sicily Island, La., on Aug. 4th, 1910, aged 87 years and 8 months. She was born at Natchez, Miss., July 10, 1823, where she married the late Col. T. A. S. Doniphan, once editor "Mississippi Free Trader." She became a member of the M. E. Church, South, about 1837 or 1838, and lived an active Christian life until her health failed. She left in her will $100 to her church at Florida Station, on the N. O. & N. W. R. R. She was never a mother, but adopted a daughter, Mrs. H. M. Peniston, of Sicily Island, who survives her, together with six nieces and one nephew to mourn their loss. A character so angelic, a life so full of good to all, has gone home to meet her maker and loved ones of yore. Her home here was the haven of rest for many pastors and presiding elders who have gone before, and many living will remember her. She was the life and the strength of Pine Hill Church and Sunday school. She fed many a weary Confederate soldier journeying home. She helped many a neighbor in distress and trouble and raised several orphan children to a happy marriage. Her tenants and laborers all were beneficiaries of her good deeds and loved and honored her. And her examples and precepts are living and acting while she is no more with us, but in the happy realms above. These noble and Christ-like deeds will shine in her crown like bright stars in the firmament. She was a dear lover of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the New York Christian Herald. We shall miss her and mourn, but do not wish her to return. We hope to so like that we shall meet her in heaven. Her nephew, Mrs. LULA GATLIN FANT was the youngest child of Brother and Sister N. W. Gatlin. She was born at Johnston Station, Miss., August 15th, 1868. Having been reared in a Christian home, and possessing inherent qualities of loyalty to her Christ and the church, she was a useful adherent to his cause in the days of her youth. While yet in her teens she was married to S. A. Fant, who yet lives to mourn his loss. The added responsibility and cares of home did not deter from her devotion to the work of the church. Whenever able she was found in her place at all the services. She was blessed by nature with a good voice, and this, conjoined with the kindling flame of her Redeemer's love, caused her to serve through song as few of us can. While connected with all its enterprises, her chief work for the church was in the Sunday school with the young. Having been a regular attendant in her childhood days, she gave her heart to God early and joined the M. E. Church, South, and thus was well equipped for her leadership in the work. She was taken sick February 14, 1910, and for seven months she lingered and suffered. For the last four months of her illness it was a struggle to live, but her brave spirit was manifest throughout all these trials. During this time the writer frequently talked with her about her assurance of acceptance with Christ. There was never a doubt in her mind or heart. She was always ready for his call. Her faith was made perfect through suffering. After forty-two years and one month of sojourning in this world of sorrow and sunshine, with aged father and mother, husband and four sons and two daughters, together with friends drawn around her bedside, she departed this life at 3:47 on Wednesday evening, September 14th. We shall all miss her. Our loss is heaven's gain.

is so well known that the best recommendation a wagon can have is that—it is a Studebaker. There are over a million Studebaker Wagons in daily use—many of these have seen from 25 to 35 years' service. We make wagons that are built especially to meet the requirements of every vicinity. That we do, is shown by the fact that every year for over 40 years more than 2,000,000 bales of cotton have been carried to market on Studebaker Wagons.

The name Studebaker stands for honest quality—experience—careful construction—greatest value. Go to a Studebaker dealer when you buy a wagon. Then you can be sure that the wagon you buy will give perfect satisfaction. See the Studebaker dealer and talk to him about your individual requirements. He is competent to advise you. An Appeal for Our French Mission Work.

By Rev. R. E. Martin.

Dear Brother Meek: Will you allow me space in the dear Advocate to say a few words for the French Mission of Louisiana?

Having worked three years in this field, I am glad that I have learned a good many things which I think would be helpful to the church members, as well as the public in general, but specially to those who have subscribed to that cause.

I said above that I have worked three years: I mean three years for the M. E. Church, South—worked eight years for another denomination, and know perfectly well the few things which I am telling in this writing.

The accompanying picture is proof that the French people of Louisiana can be reached with the gospel of our

One of the main things that induces these people to quit the Roman Catholic Church is to be relieved from paying so much money for religious services. It will take a long time to teach them that our Church also expects its members to support all her institutions.

Oh, brethren, do not let this stand in our way. It is possible to reach about two-thirds of this Creole population, if not more. But this work must be treated as a mission field.

Since we can expend millions of dollars in the foreign field, how is it that we cannot secure more for the home field?

If our Church cannot maintain missionaries in this part of the world, she is not doing what the Lord expects her to do. And she is not doing what some other churches will do. The Baptists and Presbyterians are beginning to send missionaries into this field. These missionaries are provided with enough money to do the work committed to them, and this is the only way to do it.

Christ said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." He said also: "When the gospel shall be preached in all the world, then the end shall come."

Well, brethren, this is a part of the world, and Christ will see that his gospel is preached in southern Louisiana, even if he has to break all of the rules and regulations that the churches stand for today.

Some say we can't raise the money. I understand that, for this writing shows that it is hard for me to get money from the field in which I work.

Oh, but understand that it is among the poorest and the most ignorant class that I am working. This is the reason why I say it should be conducted as a mission work.

Now, to those who love Christ and know him personally, and also love our Church, I see a way for you to overcome these difficulties and barriers which seem to be in our way.

For instance, I saw in the New Orleans Christian Advocate that the good people of one of our towns have raised the salary of the pastor to $2000. I rejoice with him, for doubtless he has suffered enough in the past to be paid that much to-day. O, but listen, why might not these good people, or any others who have the cause of God at heart, let the salary of their pastor remain at $1000 and give the other $1000 to one missionary in this French field? Surely they would have no less credit among men and a good deal more before God; for they would be helping him to pull away from fanaticism, dark ignorance and sin, thousands of souls.

What a great difference there is between a pastor who lives among Christian people, who are receivers of help and favors, and gets $2000 a year as a salary, and a missionary who has to live among non-Christian people, who has to pay for everything he needs—food and lodging and traveling expenses—and yet gets only $300 a year.

Oh, but you say, we pay a man according to what he knows, not what he does. This may be right, but I do not believe that Christ asked Peter about his knowledge, but he said to him "Follow me." It made no difference to Christ if Peter knew that the Pacific ocean is the biggest ocean, and the Amazon River is the largest river in the world, and Mt. Everest the highest mountain. But he said to him: "Go ye into Jerusalem and tarry there until you receive power from above." My dear brethren, let me plead with you and say that such are the only kind of men we need in this French field—men who have received the blessed power from above, men full of the Spirit of God, who love God above all things, and their fellowmen as themselves—men who can partake of the sufferings, troubles, sorrows and distress of others—men like Christ, who love to go to the sinner with a smile of kindness, shake hands with him and tell him I am willing to help you in any way possible. It is that power which holds me up and gives the courage to go on and preach the words of God at four different places; and besides this, I sometimes help in meetings. I support a family of eight members, paying my own expenses, as above stated, and yet I get only $300 a year.

Now, in conclusion, will say that I thank God for what he has done for me. I wish also to thank every member of the Louisiana Conference, and everyone who has helped in this French mission work.

A few words to that Mississippi brother who wrote in the Advocate of August 12th under the caption: "Let the Church Show Appreciation." You said it is a reproach and injustice to pay a man only $300 just because he serves a poor charge. Brother, I agree with you in this matter, but let us remember the words of Christ: "The first shall be the last, and last be the first."

Brother Vandenburg, I thank you for what you said about Prudhomme charge in the issue of September 1st. Yes, a French minister is needed. Let us pray to God that he may move many to come in this field.

I really believe that if the present conditions continue to exist, some of those who work in this mission will be compelled to quit. I do not believe that our Lord ever asked any one to starve his family to death in order to serve him.

Now, may this appeal do good to some one. I ask your prayers.

Lord Jesus Christ. But, brethren, it will take a longer time than some of you realize. It will take continuous effort, hard labor and prayer to establish Christianity among them.

Being a Creole myself it seems to me that I am prepared to understand their ways and what should be done to convert them.

It seems to me that our Church intends to push this mission forward in order to reach the entire southern part of the State. Blessed be God if that can be done at an early date. I am afraid some of our leaders have a wrong idea of how it should be done.

I do not write this to criticize our Church and those who are at the head of it, but only to explain things of which I know personally. It looks as if some of our brothers expect a large financial return in this field. Oh, do not deceive yourself that way.

Why use anything else for Fever but Johnson's Tonic? It is the supreme remedy for any phase of Malaria poisoning. It is 100 times better than Quinine, and does in a day what slow Quinine cannot do in 10 days. It will drive out every trace and taint of Malaria from the blood, and do its work quickly. Its cures are in striking contrast with the feeble cures made by Quinine and remedies based on Quinine.

It cures so quickly that there is no loss of time, no waste of money, no watching by the bedside of the sick, no heart-breaking wretchedness in the family which is doomed by the use of Quinine.

ADVOCATE DAY, NEXT SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30th, 1910

APPROVED BY BISHOP MURRAH.

I note with gratification that a special day has been named for bringing the claims of our Advocate to the attention of our people. The importance of this should be emphasized. The church paper meets a need that nothing else supplies. There is no other one thing that promotes all of our interests so effectively.

We have the paper. Above all things now, we need that it should be widely circulated throughout Louisiana and Mississippi.

I shall watch the outcome of Advocate Day with eager interest.

W. B. MURRAH.

ENDORSED BY BISHOP MCCOY.

My Dear Doctor Meek: Your efforts to extend the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate should command the hearty support of all the pastors and representative laymen in the patronizing Conferences. We cannot hope to interest our people in the enterprises of Methodism without first informing them. Ignorance and apathy go inevitably together. Inspiration waits on information. The religious newspaper has come to be an indispensable factor in the inception and furtherance of the large affairs of the kingdom. How any pastor can bring himself to overlook its value, is more than I can understand.

I have taken great pleasure, in my travels through North Mississippi, in commending the Advocate to our people. You are making one of the best papers in the connection. I trust that the brethren will show their appreciation of your efficient services, and at the same time enlarge the field of your usefulness, by pushing the campaign for new subscriptions. We should stop short of nothing less than one subscription to every Methodist home.

With every good wish for the Advocate and for its editor, I am fraternally yours,

J. H. MCCOY.

New Orleans, La., Oct. 22, 1910.

A WORD FROM BISHOP MOUZON.

Every man, when he becomes a member of the church, puts himself under solemn obligation to support the institutions of the Church. The Advocate is one of the institutions which every Methodist is pledged to support.

The Methodist Church stands for something—a personal experience of the power of God and a certain organized movement to spread scriptural holiness over the world. Our church papers stand as the exponents of our Methodism. Every man who loves his church will subscribe for her papers both for his own soul's good, and in order to spread abroad the truths and principles for which his church stands. We despise sectarianism; but we need a more loyal denominationalism.

Our pastors should attend more than they do to the character of papers and magazines which are read by our people, and more particularly by our young people. A man's thoughts determine his character; the religious paper that our people read will determine the character of our people. We must have both piety and intelligence—growth in grace and in knowledge.

The preacher is the key to every situation. The wise pastor will put the Advocate into the hands of his people.

EDWIN D. MOUZON.

THE FAMILY ALTAR AND CHURCH PAPER.

Dear Brother Meek: The Licensing Committee of the Columbus District will shortly be called together to examine five candidates for license to preach. Of this number, four are from homes in which there has been for years a family altar and into which the New Orleans Christian Advocate makes weekly visits.

Question: Does this instance warrant the assertion that a family altar and a church paper in every home would very largely, if not altogether, solve the problem of the dearth in the ministry? Answer, Mr. Editor.

W. E. M. BROGAN.

WHY WE PLEAD FOR A LARGER CIRCULATION.

1. It would enable us to do more for the cause of Christ and for Methodism, which we believe to be in its teaching and polity the most Scriptural Church in existence. This is the great object for which the Advocate exists. We now have between seven and eight thousand subscribers and a reading circle of perhaps twenty or twenty-five thousand. The more this is widened, the greater will be our opportunity to speed the coming kingdom of our Lord.

2. It would give us a better income and enable us to produce a more instructive and helpful periodical—so that we would not only touch more people, but impress them more. We want to print on better paper, to develop new departments, to secure editorial assistance, and produce a religious journal second to none in the connection. With a larger circulation, our advertisements would become more remunerative, and all to the slightest degree objectionable could be discarded. Ten thousand paid-up subscriptions would place us in a position to do better and more satisfactory work in every particular.

3. But is not this movement to reach the ten thousand mark undertaking rather too much? Far from it? In reality, with our constituency, we ought to have not less than fifteen thousand subscribers. Look at the following figures: The Raleigh Christian Advocate, serving a church membership of 73,358, has a circulation of 7,000, or 1 to 9; the Texas Christian Advocate, serving a membership of 243,467, has a circulation of 21,000, or 1 to 11; the circulation of the Alabama Christian Advocate is 1 to 13; that of the Southern Christian Advocate, 1 to 8; of the North Carolina Advocate, 1 to 12; of the Wesleyan Advocate, 1 to 16; of the Central Methodist Advocate, 1 to 9; of the Baltimore Southern Methodist, 1 to 9; of the Florida Advocate, 1 to 10; of the Western Methodist, 1 to 11, and of the Pacific Advocate, 1 to 7. Ours is about 1 to 20, and, in point of per capita circulation, we stand in the lowest class, along with the Midland Methodist and the Baltimore and Richmond Advocate. What is the explanation of this? Is the church membership in other States more intelligent or in a better financial condition than ours? Nay, verily. There is no finer or more substantial Methodism to be found anywhere on the globe than that which exists in Louisiana and Mississippi. Our poor showing must be due to our failure to cultivate properly our field—to press with sufficient force and persistency upon the attention of our people the claims of the Conference organ.

4. "Advocate Day" has been appointed with the hope that a general effort will be made to increase, in some measure at least, the circulation of our paper in the Methodist homes of the two great States which constitute its patronizing territory. We urgently request the assistance of every pastor and interested layman in securing its observance. We trust that not a single congregation will ignore it. Men pass, but institutions abide. One year more will terminate the present contract of both the editor and publisher with the Committee representing the Conferences; others may take their places. But the New Orleans Christian Advocate is here to stay; and, in proportion as we build it up and make it strong, will it strengthen and carry forward the interests of our beloved Church. Let every Methodist help in making it in every sense a greater and more influential paper. The Baptists have two weeklies in Mississippi and one in Louisiana. Shall we not sustain one, where they have three? It is not a question of ability; but of interest and loyalty. Let every brother lend a hand, and the forward movement begin next Sunday.

IN THE SILENT ACRE.

"He left an estate estimated at a million."

The phrase has a familiar ring. It is often uttered in everyday speech, often published in the news-columns, but there is one place in which man has thus far never dared to engrave it.

If success is to be measured by dollars, if the chase for money is the true aim of humanity and its highest destiny, then of all places it should be graven deep on that one shaft where it has never yet been placed—the tombstone.

No marble shaft, raised in reverence, love, pride or sorrow, has yet borne a dollar-mark.

Every other standard of worth—save that of wealth—finds its place there. Upon the white stones, defying Time, is written every other tribute to the lives of men—their kindness, their fidelity to duty, their love of family, their probity and their integrity. And yet, dashing along this broad road of life which must lead to the common goal, humanity seems to be possessed of the desire to attain the one object that in the end has no value.

Out in the Silent Acre the vision is, perhaps, straighter and sees farther into things that are real than in the down-town crowd. So it is that this judgment of the tombstone upon the true values in life is the reflection of all human hopes. For the tombstone is the signal station to Eternity. And it is to the glory of mankind in a day when dollars seem to be the chief aim of existence, that, deep in our hearts, we keep the scales of judgment so well balanced that no man ever yet wrote as his epitaph: "He left an estate estimated at a million."

As long as men yearn for love, for friendship, for the sympathy and regard of the living, no man ever will.—Jackson Daily News.

PROGRESSIVE SANCTIFICATION.

By R. C. James Mudge, D.D.

Methodism has a marvelous inheritance which it cannot afford to ignore. But to make the most of it requires wisdom. It is not wise to ignore the fact that in the course of one hundred and fifty years many of our old-fashioned and old-fashioned ideas have changed. The fruits of the recognition of this fact are of disloyalty to the founders. We should not be expected to remain stationary in all the details of doctrine than in those of policy. We cannot afford to do. Modification in the one as well as in the other are imperatively demanded from time to time by the altered conditions that confront us. Yet, of course, such adaptations should be so managed as to retain all advantages while dropping all encumbrances.

This process, we fully believe, is called for in the case of the doctrine of Christian Perfection, which, from the beginning, has stood so close to the center of Methodism's peculiar message and largest effectiveness. It has not, practically, the place now it once had. And the reason is obvious. There has been a lack of adjustment. The old presentation has failed now for some time to commend itself at the bar of clear thought, and the opposition of intelligence, joined to the opposition of carnality, leaves it very little chance to make headway. Furthermore, certain evils, not unknown in early days, have developed so offensively as to offer serious obstacles, creating in many minds a distrust at the terms most commonly employed. Evidently, then, what is needed for the best interests of the Church is a new statement of this precious truth, such an one as will free it both from intellectual objections and from practical obstructions. Only thus can it take once more the place from which it has fallen, and do the good for which it is designed.

A very little alteration will accomplish this. Two things, and only two, must be made prominent in the teaching that shall meet the need. The essentials are these: (1) Perfect loyalty to Christ; a consecration brought sharply up to the furthest, latest limit of light or knowledge, involving in most cases a very distinct second work of grace, a marked epoch in experience from which an exceedingly blessed new departure is taken. (2) Unceasing devotion to the progressive realization of a complete mastery of all that is involved in ideal character, and faultless Christ-like living. These two things are enough. Less would not do; more are not necessary. A single aim, whole-hearted in its mighty purpose to do all God's will and nothing else, combined with an intense longing to know ever more and more what that aim in its widest inclusiveness, its fullest development, its entire articulations and implications, may comprise, cannot fail to result in a magnificent life. It means loving and serving God with all our present powers, together with a persistent effort to increase those powers, to know more and so be able to do more for him.

A statement on the above lines does not lend itself to fanaticism, or censoriousness, or misapprehension. It does not lead one into metaphysical bogs unfathomable, or raise points of doubtful philosophy and recondite, obsolete theology. It steers clear of distracting, belligerent dogmatics and uncharitable, unprofitable controversy. It affords no standing ground for partisanship, cliques, or schismatical proclivities. It is unassailable, unmistakable, strategic, clear, conclusive. It is sufficiently Wesleyan to secure all the benefits which the church has found in the ordinary holiness movement. It is sufficiently catholic to unite under its banner all genuine believers in Jesus, all deeply earnest souls who are hungering for the closest possible walk with God. It leaves in the background certain incomprehensible speculative quiddities in no way important or productive of the best results, but which have, on the contrary, led to much evil. It gives free scope for a thoroughly reasonable, simple, Scriptural propaganda such as we have not had for a long while, and cannot have under the more usual teachings, but which the church tremendously needs. It lays the emphasis on a right will and a constant growth. It makes the Christian life one from beginning to end, as the Bible does, one in kind but subject to ever-increasing degrees of knowledge, which, when followed by corresponding consecration, open the way for ever-increasing degrees of purification or empowerment. It makes the whole mind and image of the Master the specific goal toward which we constantly press and to which we steadily approximate. It embodies a wholesome holiness, a sensible sanctification, a practical Christian perfection, something which can be preached in our churches without embarrassment or embitterment, without fear or friction, and something approved by the most critical philosophic thought. It is a continuous rather than a consummated sanctification, not an absolute finality at any point, but exerting an immense stimulation at all points. If adopted it will inaugurate a higher type of religion among us, and will contribute vastly to the spiritual prosperity of the church, bringing back much of the old-time power.

Is there any good reason why this proposed modification should not be adopted, why this old doctrine in somewhat altered dress should not take a new start in these days, and marvelously bless the people? The present writer can see none. The limitations of this article do not permit him further enlargement. He will welcome correspondence on the subject, and if there be sufficient response will gladly print a more extended exposition, for which his fifty years of experience and study in these things should give him some special qualifications. He is an intense lover of holiness in all senses of the word, and of the Methodist-Episcopal Church in all its departments of activity.

Malden, Mass.

ARE CHILDREN BORN REGENERATE?

By Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B.D.

The reply of Dr. Featherstun, in the Advocate of October 6th, to my discussion of the state of infants, in the Advocate of August 4th, which Dr. Sawyer was kind enough to approve, raises a question which is now looming large in Southern Methodism, and which is of vital importance to the integrity of her doctrine and to the maintenance of the evangelical character of her ministry.

However, he obscures the issue by entitling his article, "Are Children Born Saved?" and by raising a cloud of dust about our "harking back to the Calvinism, etc., of the dark ages, when men believed there were infants in hell not a span long," as though, forsooth, I had taught a thing of which I had never even dreamed—that children dying in infancy are damned. And to follow such implications with the specific quotation from me, which he kindly gives, "we believe that children dying in infancy are sanctified, as well as saved, through Christ's atonement," seems to me incongruous and self-contradictory.

We both agree on the truth—so universally accepted among us that it is commonplace—that all children dying in infancy are saved, and no man can justly imply that I teach otherwise.

But there is, as his article indicates, a vital point at issue between us; and to discern it we must be a little more exact in our use of language. The word "saved" is ambiguous in theological discussion, as it includes both justification, regeneration, and sanctification in its full meaning; and yet may be used in a popular sense as referring to any one of the three, especially the two former.

Now, we are all agreed that infants are born under a dispensation of grace equivalent to a justified state; free by the grace of God from the condemnation which the sin of humanity has brought upon us all as a race, for "as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom., 5:18.)

But we emphatically deny that Methodism teaches, or has ever taught, that children are born regenerate, in any sense in which that word is used in the New Testament, or rightly in Christian theology. Dr. Featherstun asserts flatly that they are: "They are born regenerate," and in so doing takes issue, not with me only, but with practically the whole of Christendom—Protestant and Catholic as well. For, if there is one thing on which theologians of all ages and of all churches have agreed, it is the fact of man's inborn depravity. If Dr. Featherstun denies this we refer him to Fisher's History of Christian Doctrine, in the recently published International Theological Library; or to Watson's Institutes, and the works of Wesley and Fletcher. If he has forgotten his own church standards, Watson, whose discussion of this subject is particularly full (Vol. II, pp. 57-60), while holding, as do we, that all children dying in infancy are saved, asserts (as flatly and positively as does Dr. Featherstun the contrary): "As to infants, they are not, indeed, born justified and regenerate." Who most truly represents Methodism, Dr. Featherstun or Richard Watson, I leave others to judge.

But the great, clear, overwhelming, universally accepted utterance on this subject, is the seventh of our twenty-five Articles of Religion—not ours alone, but on this point, a statement of the faith of the Church Catholic. It reads:

"Of Original or Birth-Sin," (notice the caption).

"Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (as the Pelagians do vainly talk), but is the corruption of the nature of every man that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil and that continually."

But Dr. Featherstun quotes the New Ritual in support of his statement: "They are born regenerate," as though, perchance, he could array Methodism against herself—the New Ritual against the Articles of Religion—a ridiculous ploy to put us in, indeed, could such conflict be shown to exist. But even could he do this, I would have historic Methodism, in all her glory and power, with me; and he would have a new-hatched, unfledged Methodism, trying to fly through untried spaces, with only one wing escaped from the shell. However, we deny that it is the intent of the New Ritual to teach infant regeneration, though its language is ambiguous; not, however, if considered in the light of the movement for its revival.

Let us review a little familiar history. It is well known that the Roman Catholic Church teaches innate depravity, as do other churches, but it teaches also baptismal regeneration; allowing (though with less emphasis today) that children dying unbaptized are lost. So it places great stress on infant baptism. The Calvinistic, Lutheran and Episcopal Churches agreed with the Catholic in its teaching concerning depravity, and the English church especially in its teaching concerning baptismal infant regeneration, with a less clear expression as to what becomes of those dying unbaptized. So, holding the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, their ritual for the baptism of infants naturally included language indicating, and prayers for, regeneration. Our ritual, taken almost literally from the English Prayer Book, contained, until this year, several expressions which some thought implied too clearly that we accepted that doctrine. So a Commission on Revisals was appointed at the General Conference in Birmingham in 1906, with the special intent, as is said in the Introduction to the New Ritual, of eliminating these objectionable features: one of which is specified as that the old ritual "squints at the Romish doctrine of baptismal regeneration."

So, we find the New Ritual, while asserting "Forasmuch as all men, though fallen in Adam, are born into this world in Christ the Redeemer—under a dispensation of grace as we have always held—omits the old allusions to and prayers for regeneration; and, lo, Dr. Featherstun, despite the explanation of the omission as given by the Church, jumps at the argument that since no prayer is made that they be regenerated, they are already regenerated, and need no regeneration. They are born regenerate. Is this the intent of the Church? Plainly no. For in the order for the Baptism of Such as are of Riper Years the necessity for regeneration is emphasized, Christ's "Ye must be born again" is read, and prayer is made that those baptized may receive "that which by nature they cannot have; that they may be baptized with the Holy Ghost, received into Christ's holy Church, and be made lively members of the same."

If to eliminate all mention of regeneration as inappropriate and misleading in the order for the baptism of infants, and then to emphasize and pray for regeneration in the order for the baptism of such as have come to years of accountability, is to teach that we are born regenerate, make the most of it. To a child, it seems, it would make plain that we do not teach infant regeneration; but rather that the birth from above comes when the heart is surrendered to God in faith.

But we would not imply, neither would the teaching of Methodism nor of the old or New Ritual permit us to imply, that the infant is left without the influences of God's Spirit upon its heart from its earliest days. It is this which is the source of the good which we find in all; and so we have in Article VIII the doctrine of the prevenient grace of God, inclining us toward a good will, and working with us, when we have that good will. Oh no, God is ever active in our behalf; and as the child responds to the holy influences which come from him, he will lead him onward and upward, teaching the lesson of spiritual need, and bringing him to Christ as a personal Savior. But certainly this prevenient grace of God, leading toward and preparing for regeneration, must not be confounded with regeneration, which comes only as, in conscious need, one seeks a Savior from sin's guilt and power. And if any deny the need of this for themselves or others, we know how St. John characterizes such: "If we say that we have no sin (no sinful nature) we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." "If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us."

Now, briefly, as to the interpretation of the passage, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," in saying "Of those who are like children in humility, in trustfulness, in teachableness, in obedience—of such is the kingdom of heaven." I did not, of course, mean to exclude the children themselves; and Dr. Featherstun's inference that I did exclude them, and sent those dying to hell, seems to me purely gratuitous. I was writing a practical exposition of a Sunday School lesson, for adults mainly, and was placing the emphasis where I felt it would be most profitable.

But while I admit, in the words of Calvin, that "Christ comprehends as well little children themselves, as those who in disposition resemble them," (does it not astonish Dr. Featherstun that the Calvin whom he refers to with horror should agree with him in the interpretation of his text?) yet I deny that upon it a doctrine of birth-regeneration—deny that upon it a doctrine of birth-regeneration—I suppose it may be called; it has not been named, yet; it is a new thing in theology—can be based, which is contrary to the unanimous teaching of Christ and his apostles elsewhere to the doctrines of all Christian churches, and to the experience of humanity in all ages. The very words regenerate, born again, are misnomers if they refer not to a birth after and other than the birth of the flesh. Certainly Christ, his apostles, and our Methodist fathers preached "Ye must be born again" ardently and effectively, even though it may become the custom, instead, to tell us that we were born again when we were born, so that we needn't be born again.

But, as a last resort, our modern theologians may reply: Yes, but they were preaching to sinners, men who had degenerated and fallen from their first estate. Such is, of course, a makeshift, for they well know that they were preaching to all-unconverted persons; but the taking of such a position enables us at least to clearly recognize those who take it; not as indeed moderns, in the very vanguard of progress, but as ancients more ancient than we, routed and discredited ancients at that; and we read to them the words, old when Wesley re-wrote them: "Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (the example of Adam who fell from a state of innocence and goodness) as the Pelagians do vainly talk." Sad it is, indeed, to see our would-be advanced brethren standing under the banner of Pelagius, long since routed by Augustine (the despised), but still, through the centuries, engaged in a guerilla warfare against the solid phalanx of the Church.

But one more objection Brother Featherstun raises. He argues, doubtless to the comfort of some, but widely at variance with the Scriptures and Methodism's great motto, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord"—that my insistence that the evidences of depravity—willfulness, selfishness, anger—which appear in infants, reveals the fact that they are not by nature ready for heaven; proves too much; for, if that be true, then we are not ready. Of course, we are ready, full of willfulness, selfishness, anger, as he claims; and, as it is easier to let down the bars of heaven and revise the Scriptures than it is to conform our lives to their demands, he proceeds to do away with such restrictions, and sends wilful, crying babies, and selfish, quarrelsome folks, all unchanged, into a heaven which must needs then be unholy.

But, worse still, he denies my allowing to dying children, taken before they can appropriate the grace of God for their renewal, the sanctifying touch of God's Spirit to fit them for entrance into what has until now been recognized as a holy heaven, with the question, "Has a dying child more claim on God's love and grace than a living one?" We answer, no; though one needs a different expression of God's grace from that which the other needs. The dead child cannot be led into regeneration and sanctification, as God will surely seek to lead the living one; so he must be lifted into such a state; and the transformation wrought without its volition, for it can exercise none. So we believe still that "the spirits of children, dying in infancy, are sanctified as well as saved through Christ's atonement."

But what is this new type of Christian in whom the evidences of depravity are so manifest and the mind and spirit of Christ do not appear; and what kind of a regeneration is this that Dr. Featherstun is now preaching? Certainly not that of the Scriptures, or of evangelical theology. But we forbear taking Dr. Featherstun to task concerning these low standards. His last question, however, I will turn upon himself, and ask him: Is death a regenerating or sanctifying agency? And does he dare assert that men or infants can go in an unholy, unchanged condition into the presence of God? And I will then answer his question. No, death is not a regenerating or sanctifying agency, but the Holy Spirit of God is; and is within the reach of all who earnestly pray, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me," so that they are without excuse who fail to bear in their lives the fruits of the Spirit; and this same sanctifying spirit is given to infants dying, as shown above.

Yet both Dr. Featherstun and I can agree, no doubt, that though both allow the old claim that death is not a sanctifying agency, yet our only hope for the salvation of many who might be called imperfect Christians, is that in the hour of death they in penitence look unto God, and that death certainly releases the soul from the temptations and trials which flesh is heir to, and allows it, if such were its aspirations, to soar upward into that perfect purity and holiness which it longed for but attained not on earth.

But certainly, we will not build our hope of heaven on the evident imperfections of little children, claiming that they dying go thither unchanged, so we dying may go thither unchanged also; nor will we deny to a dying child that grace of God which it cannot seek for itself, but which is offered us freely as sufficient for all our need.

So it is evident that the conception of birth-regeneration which Dr. Featherstun presents is out of harmony not only with Methodist doctrine, but with all accepted Christian theology, and, worse still, is destructive of those high standards of regenerate life and character and that exalted conception of heaven which have been and must ever be the crowning glory of Methodism.

God grant that this new doctrine shall not prevail in our midst.

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

By a Circuit Rider.

H.

The object of this article is to present from the Scriptures a few of the arguments for "the first day of the week," and answer one or two inquiries and statements of the Adventists.

It is true there is no expressed commandment in the Bible authorizing the change of the Sabbath from the seventh day to the first. But we must not be misled over the absence of a specific commandment. There are facts in the Bible showing that the change was made.

Now, this is one of the methods of the Adventists. They put the question in their literature, and with a flourishing of trumpets and a blowing of horns say: "Show us the commandment!" In this way they catch a few people who are uninformed, and who are blind to logic and facts.

If there had been a formal decree at the beginning of Christianity changing the Sabbath to the first day of the week, the Jews and weak Christians would have been greatly offended, and many of them would have been lost to the Church. The Apostles pursued a course which gave light gradually, and many of the Judaizing Christians were saved to the Church. They saw eventually that Christ was the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, and that all the rites and ceremonies and sacrifices of the Mosaic law were fulfilled in him. Many accepted the new order of things and adapted themselves to the way of the gospel.

The Adventists want to know why the Apostles did not state in so many words that the Jewish Sabbath was done away. The answer is: "It was not necessary to do so. Why single out one item in the Mosaic economy and declare its substitution by another day, when the whole burden of their preaching was that the entire system of Moses was superseded by a higher and better dispensation? Surely the greater includes the less, and if a new dispensation was begun under the lead and guidance of Jesus Christ, of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, it was only necessary to accept Jesus as the Christ in order to enter upon the new order of things, of which the first-day Sabbath was the central institution."

Because the New Testament tells us in a few places that the Apostles went to the synagogues of the Jews on Saturday, the Adventists clap their hands in false triumph, and affirm that there is no evidence that Sunday has taken the place of the Jewish Sabbath. They overlook the fact that the Apostles worshiped with the Jews in order to reach them, to win them away from their legalism to the light and liberty of Jesus Christ.

When it became necessary for them to break away from the Jews they did so, and they kept the Lord's day, the first day of the week. At first, for the sake of expediency, they did several things which they did not do afterward. Paul took Timothy "and circumcised him because of the Jews." (Acts, 16:3.) The Adventists have just as much right to contend for circumcision as for the Jewish Sabbath.

Rev. 1:10: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Wesley's Commentary says: "On this day our Lord rose from the dead; on this day the ancients believed he would come to judgment. It was, therefore, with the utmost propriety that St. John on this day both saw and described his coming."

The testimony of Wesley and the early Church fathers is preferable to the theory of modern Adventists. Instead of interpreting New Testament passages by the words of modern Adventists, we will come nearer the truth if we interpret them by the practice of the primitive Church.

Psa. 118:22-24 reads: "The stone which the builders refused is become the headstone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing, and is marvelous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

The day which Jesus, the Lord made, and about which the prophet spoke, was the day which saw the Redeemer rise from the dead. This is the day his people are rejoicing in, and which has been commemorated every week in the Church from the time of the Apostles. It is not a myth that Jesus is the divinely established corner-stone. It is not speculation that he rose from the dead on the eighth day. The Lord's day is the day in which he changed darkness and chaos, and the day of his resurrection. All the Rabbinists interpreted this psalm of Christ. Jerome, A. D. 340, so interpreted it, and Matt. 21:9 proves it: "And the multitudes that went before and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest!"

This triumphal entry of Christ into Jerusalem was on the first day of the week, "a fitting prelude to the next first day of the week, when he burst the bands of death, and walked forth from the tomb Lord of death and life."

It was also on the first day of the week that he appeared, after his resurrection, to Mary Magdalen (Mark 16:19; John 20:11-18), to the women returning from the sepulcher (Matt. 28:9), to Peter (Luke 24:34), to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus (Luke 24:13), and to ten of the disciples at Jerusalem, Thomas being absent (John 20:19).

John 20:26 reads: "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them. Jesus cometh, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst."

The Adventists deny that "after eight days" means Sunday. But the way the Scriptures count time, it does. For instance: "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

Wesley says: "As the Hebrews had no word to express a natural day, they used night and day, or day and night for it. So that to say a thing happened after three days and nights was with them the very same as to say, it happened after three days, or on the third day." Apply this fact to John, 20:26, and the phrase "after eight days" means the next Sunday. Count the part of the first Sunday on which the disciples were assembled as one day, then Monday two, Tuesday three, and so on, and the next Sunday makes eight days, or "after eight days."

Now, why did Jesus appear to all of the disciples on the first day of the week? And why did he work "signs" in their midst when he appeared to them? Simply to convince them that he was the Son of God, and to give them the Holy Spirit. (John, 20:22, 30, 31.)

Significance is attached to the personal appearing of Christ on that day. He chose to come on the first day of the week to convince them, and to give them the Holy Spirit. This is the day above all others he is convincing the world. It is "the Lord's day" for rest and worship, and for the propagation of the gospel.

The Adventists say in their literature that "John 20:19 is the only recorded instance in which Christ met with the disciples after his resurrection."

They are mistaken!

They also say that the disciples were not assembled to honor the resurrection (they did not know about it), but "were assembled for fear of the Jews."

They make much bustle or ado with this argument, overlooking the fact that the real significance is attached to the personal appearing of Christ to them on that day. He chose the first day of the week several times in succession to convince all of them, to give them the Holy Spirit; thus intimating the sanctity and importance which subsequently would be attached to the day.

CHURCH AND PARSONAGE INSURANCE—IS THERE A BETTER WAY?

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

It seems to be a settled policy with business men to carry a good amount of insurance on property and human life, although they are greatly enriching the insurers thereby. That there should be some kind of a sinking fund for an emergency, there can be no question, for it is possible to keep the policy paid annually, while a burn-out might ruin a business without the premium paid, and a death without the insurance benefit might leave a needy family in destitution.

Our Board of Church Extension is very positive in its demand that our church property be kept insured, but leaves us no alternative in the matter but to enrich the old line companies with their high salaries. The Louisiana Conference Minutes reveal the fact that in 1909 our few insured churches carried $419,810 in policies, for which they paid $2,369, and collected on premiums for damages $130, leaving $2,239 in favor of the insurance companies. In 1908, $2,199 was paid out and nothing collected back, thus leaving the insurance companies enriched by the total of our outlay. Why this waste? Could not a great Church have saved this $4,438 in these two years?

Just how, would be a problem to be evolved like our other problems—the way "felt" in small beginnings until experience and business sense settles on a definite policy. The Conference Church Extension Board might establish a sinking fund into which a definite per cent of the value of our church property might be paid by the several congregations, and received back in the same ratio to aid in rebuilding, or the whole question could be handled by the Parent Board.

Anyway, it might be done, and for one we should like to see this money used for the strengthening of our finances rather than enriching secular multi-millionaire institutions.

Secular News and Comment

It was a very interesting and profitable session, and the speakers were so full of life and vigor that the audience was kept in a state of high interest throughout the entire afternoon.

The Panama Canal Commission, which was organized in 1904, has now completed its work and the canal is open to traffic. The canal is a great boon to the commerce of the world, and it is a great credit to the United States.

President Taft has announced that he will not seek re-election in 1912. He has decided to retire from public life and to devote his time to his private affairs. This is a great relief to the country, and it is a great credit to the President.

The Panama Canal has cost up to the present about $34,000,000. Of this amount, $10,000,000 was paid to the French Canal Company and $24,000,000 to the Panama Republic for the strip of land through which the waterway will pass. It is estimated that the enterprise will be completed early in 1913.

The press dispatches report that England, France, Spain, and Germany have proclaimed readiness to recognize the provisional government of Portugal, and also the permanent republican form of government as soon as it is properly constituted. This looks as if there is no possibility of a re-establishment of Manuel's shattered throne.

The general health of the United States Army is reported to be steadily improving. The loss of efficiency from sickness and injury during the past fiscal year was 41.1 per cent, as compared with 42.6 for 1906, 40.1 for 1907, and 49.7 for 1908. This improvement is doubtless due to an increasing knowledge of how diseases spread, and, consequently, better sanitation.

The portrait of the late Senator J. Z. George in the Mississippi Hall of Fame was decorated with ivy by the Daughters of the Confederacy on October 20th. That was the anniversary of the birth of the grand old Commoner, who did so much for the State of his adoption. Sprigs of green were also entwined about the paintings of Jefferson Davis and General Stephen D. Lee.

Will Carlton, the noted poet, whose home is in Brooklyn, N. Y., reached his 65th birthday on Oct. 21, and was the recipient of many congratulations from friends and admirers. Mr. Carlton was born in the town of Hudson, Mich., and was engaged in newspaper work for many years in Detroit, Chicago, and other cities of the Middle West before the publication of his farm ballads brought him fame as a poet.

David Bennett Hill, formerly Governor of New York and United States Senator from that State from 1881 to 1897, died at his home at Wolfert's Roost, near Albany, on October 20th. Mr. Hill was a bachelor and 67 years of age. He was a lawyer of eminence and an astute politician, and was for many years a recognized force in public affairs, though we think he was an opportunist rather than a man of profound convictions.

Jones County, Miss., is to have an Agricultural High School. The County School Board, at a meeting held on the 21st inst., selected a site for the school at Ellisville; the City Council of that place pledging $10,000 in cash and free water and light as an inducement to secure the institution. The school will be located in the southern part of the town, and the work of construction will be begun about the first of next year.

The Civic Association composed of prominent ladies of Baton Rouge, La., will assist the gentlemen of that city in raising $15,000 to advertise its advantages throughout the country. A desirable type of immigrants is one of the great needs of all sections of the South. And to make the attractions and opportunities of Dixie known will do much toward turning the tide of population our way. Climate and all things considered, it is the fairest and most-inviting portion of the nation's broad domain.

At the last session of Congress an appropriation of $100,000 was provided for the establishing of postal savings banks throughout the United States, and a Board of Trustees for the system has been appointed by President Taft, composed of Postmaster General Hitchcock, Secretary McVeagh and Attorney General Wickard. On the 22d inst. the Board held a meeting and approved a list of forty-eight second-class postoffices in as many States at which the plan will be given its first trial. Gulfport was selected as the site for the first postal bank in Mississippi, and New Iberia was announced as the place in Louisiana.

In the death of United States Senator Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver, which occurred at his home at Fort Dodge, Iowa, the nation has lost one of its foremost citizens. He was an orator of uncommon gifts, a debater of high rank, and an upright Christian gentleman. Senator Dolliver was one of the most successful supporters of the insurgent movement in the Republican Party, and was a close and trusted friend of Mr. Roosevelt. He was the son of a Methodist preacher and a conspicuous layman in the Methodist Episcopal Church, which sent him as a special messenger to our General Conference some years ago. He was born in Preston County, Va., on May 22, 1838, and was a member of the State University of the latter com-

As a result of this last selection, the author's corner has doubled its representatives and gone far ahead of the statesmen in numbers. Eleven bronze tablets for the names chosen will be designed with an appropriate quotation from the works of each, and the formal unveiling will take place in October, 1911.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe died at her summer home at Middleton, R. I., on October 17th. She was born in New York City on May 27, 1819, and was in her 92d year when the summons came. She was of distinguished lineage, numbering among her ancestors Roger Williams, Governor Samuel Ward of Rhode Island, and General Marion of revolutionary fame. At the age of twenty-four, she married Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, the widely known philanthropist, and throughout her long and illustrious life was a resident of Boston—the center of American letters. Gifted as a poet and essayist, she wrote many things of rare literary excellence, but the most famous product of her pen is her "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which was written while visiting the Federal camps near Washington in 1861, and first published in the Atlantic Monthly.

The first attempt to cross the ocean in an airship, which was made a few days since, by Mr. Walter Wellman and five associates, ended in failure, though happily no human lives were lost. This daring enterprise was financed by three great newspapers—the New York Times, the Chicago Record-Herald, and the London Daily Telegraph—which subscribed $25,000 to promote it. The America, the ship in which the venture was made, was constructed on the old idea of having the craft lighter than the air displaced. It was 228 feet long and 52 feet in diameter with a lifting capacity of 23,650 pounds. When described, the America had been in the air 72 hours and had traveled a distance of over 500 miles. The passengers were rescued by the steamship Trent, which they saw passing and signaled by a wireless message, the transfer to the sea vessel being effected by means of a life-boat which the air craft carried.

A fearful hurricane prevailed from Cuba up to Charleston and Cape Hatteras from the 18th to the 22d of last week. It is thought 20 or 25 vessels have been wrecked with a deplorable loss of life. Those lost were nearly all sailing ships or large schooners loaded with lumber or oil. The steamers seem to have ridden out the gale without harm. Around Hatteras was the worst of the storm, and there the Southern Pacific steamer Comus had a thrilling experience, running right into its vortex, but coming safely out. Wireless messages from several ships described the gale as "terrific with mountainous waves." And also from Friday, the 14th, and several days following, another cyclone raged in the Yucatan channel and the Gulf of Mexico, and this time also many sailing craft went down, only part of one schooner's crew being saved, and that by accident. Four or five steamers from Central America to New Orleans, were caught, but came safely into port after being some days overdue.

Dr. H. H. Crippen, the American dentist, who is charged with having murdered his actress wife, and whose spectacular flight across the ocean and apprehension when the ship reached this side of the Atlantic attracted world-wide attention, was convicted on October 22 and sentenced to be hanged on November 15. The dispatch with which the trial of the noted criminal was conducted and the outcome of it, is a striking testimonial to the wisdom of English laws and the efficiency of her courts in the administration of them. The technicalities which here clog, and so often hold in complete check, the machinery of justice, there seems to have little recognition. The people of Great Britain, not only obey the law better than our people, but also enforce it vastly better. We may well let them be our teachers in this respect. President Taft never preached a more wholesome doctrine than when he urged that our judicial system should be so reorganized and our laws so framed that undue delay in the trial of cases would be made impossible. Such action would do more to rid the country of lawlessness of all kinds than anything else conceivable. Indeed, it is the only thing that will give our citizenship a proper regard for our courts and dispose them to await with confidence the adjudication of personal wrongs.

TWO BISHOPS IN COLUMBUS.

We have been highly honored here during the past week. Bishops McCoy and Candler have been to see us. Bishop McCoy came and preached on Sunday, Oct. 16, in the morning at First Church, and at night at Second Church. He pleased our people immensely. On Saturday night the ladies of First Church gave a reception to him and the Methodist teachers the pupils of the L. I. and C. and 500 people shook hands with him. He spoke to the L. I. and C. girls on Monday morning. Bishop Candler spent twenty hours in the city, having come to perform the marriage ceremony for his niece, Miss Mary McClure. Quite a number of our people met him. He is full of work as usual, and had to hurry away. Mrs. Candler was here also. Columbus Methodism is making some progress. T. W. LEWIS.

WINONA DISTRICT MEETING.

Dear Brother Meek: The Laymen's Meeting at Winona, Miss., Oct. 17 to 19, was interesting, inspiring and profitable.

Bishop McCoy's brotherly bearing and powerful preaching made him the central figure of the occasion from Monday evening till Wednesday noon. His helpful ministry recalled the visit of his father to Winona during the Annual Conference, December, 1887, and the remarkable sermon he preached on the text, "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

The enforced absence of Dr. Hull and of Hon. Thos. B. King, was greatly regretted. Their places were not supplied, but the time was profitably filled by certain laymen of the district, and some of our own pastors.

The meeting grew in interest and power till Wednesday morning, when three hundred and one dollars in cash were laid upon the table. It is proper to make special mention of Rev. H. H. Estes; Dr. W. T. Johnson, M. C. Smith, Wm. Liddon, Jno. G. Woods. To date the special contributions are as follows:

Valley Hill	$ 1.00
Mars Hill	42.00
Carrollton, H. M. Thompson, Leader	150.00
Moorhead	100.00
Greenwood	200.00

Total $493.00

My appeal now is to the other eighteen charges to send in a contribution at once. Please, brother leader, attend to this. The need is imperative, the opportunity great.

Brother Williams helped us and the Orphans' Home by his presence and preaching.

Nothing did more permanent good than the books sold by Brother Bachman.

Rev. J. W. Dorman; Rev. J. H. Mitchell; Rev. W. W. Mitchell and Rev. W. L. Duren were appreciated visitors.

The really great meeting came to a fit finale in the sermon by Rev. S. M. Thames. Brother Thames took a wide "through," plowed a deep furrow, and mightily stirred us as he spoke of the great things of the kingdom.

The success of the meeting was due more largely to the wise planning, discreet forethought and masterful leadership of Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder, than to any other human agency. He is making full proof of his ministry. Yours truly,

J. R. BINGHAM.

Church News

The presiding elders of the Holston Conference reported 10,000 conversions during the past year.

A meeting of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust was called for Tuesday of this week. What business was transacted we have not learned.

St. Luke's Church, of Oklahoma City, of which the Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker is pastor, will give a reception in honor of Bishop Denny on November 8.

Dr. John H. Dye has announced that he will be a candidate for the chaplaincy of the Arkansas State Senate. He is admirably suited for the place, and we hope that he will secure it.

A new mission has been opened by our Church in San Francisco, with the Rev. J. A. Batchelor in charge. At the late session of the Pacific Conference $800 was asked for, that this work might be entered, and $1,100 was quickly subscribed.

One of the largest offerings ever given in a single service was made in Cincinnati at the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The women of the church presented $300,000 in money, checks, and jewels for missionary work.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

Dr. J. W. Shoaff, presiding elder of the Los Angeles District, has been stricken with paralysis. The last news we had represented him as not doing well. He was formerly pastor of the First Methodist Church of Columbus, and went West from the North Mississippi Conference.

At the funeral of the late Senator Dolliver on October the 20th, Dr. Charles M. Stuart, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, spoke on "Dolliver, the Man", and Bishop W. F. McDowell on "A fallen leader." That these were eloquent and worthy tributes, needs not to be said.

Dr. G. C. Rankin, who for the past twelve years has edited the Texas Christian Advocate, has been reelected by the Publishing Committee. Wise action was this. There is not a more forceful man on the tripod in Southern Methodism than this fearless Texan. Never does his trumpet send forth an uncertain sound.

Bishop Morrison has distinguished himself in Georgia by making a tour of the Thomasville District, in the southern part of the State, in an automobile. Dr. A. M. Williams, who accompanied him on the trip and wrote an account of it for the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, says that his preaching mightily stirred the congregations that heard him. He proposes to dub him, "The people's Bishop."

The Pacific Conference has 74 pastoral charges and an equal number of parsonages. The value of its houses of worship is $500,000, and of its parsonages $135,000. In their recent annual session the brethren of this body, by formal resolution, invited Bishop Waterhouse to make his home on the Pacific Coast, agreeing to provide a residence for him in the event that he should decide to do so.

The Methodist Woman's College of Alabama opened its first session on October the 19th, with eighty students in attendance. This institution is projected on broad lines, and it is predicted that it will soon be one of the foremost female colleges of the South. In beautiful Montgomery it has an admirable location, and the constituency to which it is making appeal has no superior in the connection.

The Episcopalians in their recent Convention at Cincinnati voted against having negro bishops in their denomination. They also declared against allowing divorced members of the Church to marry. A protest against the treatment being accorded the Jews in Russia was adopted, and a movement was projected to arrange for a World Conference on Church Unity. For the promotion of this enterprise, Mr. Pierpont Morgan subscribed $100,000.

The Sunday school hosts of the world are now growing at the rate of two hundred schools, with twenty thousand new members, every Sunday. This fact was made known by Mr. Marlon Lawrance, general secretary of the International Sunday School Association, in his annual report to the executive committee in session recently at Winona Lake. This is a remarkable fact and indicates the power and efficiency of the modern Sunday school movement.—Central Methodist Advocate.

The expulsion of monks and nuns from Portugal has caused much comment by both the secular and religious press. It is not surprising that a people crushed by financial burdens should display intolerance toward religious orders which have helped to impose them. Where Rome has undisputed sway her influence is like a light and tends to retard both enlightenment and prosperity, for the two largely go together. Most significant is the fact that eighty per cent of the population of Portugal can neither read nor write.

Tennessee Conference show that 3,037 adults and 671 infants were baptised. The number of Methodists within its bounds is 71,045. Dr. J. S. French, who for the past four years has served the First Church of Atlanta, Ga., was appointed to McKendree, and Dr. G. H. Detwiler, of Asheville, N. C., was assigned to West End. Dr. W. B. Taylor, the retiring McKendree pastor, was sent to Franklin, and Dr. C. W. Byrd was transferred to the Western North Carolina Conference.

The Travelers' Aid Society of New Orleans is doing a noble work, and both its influence and fame are spreading. The special object of the organization is to safeguard and render assistance to ladies traveling alone. A young woman passing through the city a few days since stated that she had heard of the Society on the high seas, and was informed that she would find its representatives at the depot ready to befriend her. Other places are also following the example of the Crescent City and entering work of this character. Jackson, Miss., has lately done so.

The National Council of Congregational Churches, which was held in Boston a few days since, declared for closer relations with the Protestant Episcopal Church and for union with the United Brethren and the Methodist Protestant Church. We doubt, however, whether there is any likelihood of the merging of these bodies being effected. The Methodist Protestants at least now seem more disposed to seek union with the other Methodisms of the United States. And of this we are heartily glad. One in doctrine and spirit, we think the followers of Wesley should draw closer together, instead of straying off into other folds.

A SIGNIFICANT GATHERING.

What in many particulars might be called a remarkable meeting was held in the towns of Moss Point and Pascagoula. At the September meeting of the Pastors' Association, composed of the seven pastors of the two towns, a movement was suggested looking to a union laymen's meeting. Committees were appointed to secure speakers for Sunday, Oct. 16, and for the holding of a banquet on Saturday evening previous.

This function was presided over by an elder in the Presbyterian Church and speeches were made by ten gentlemen selected by the toastmaster, who spoke forth the sentiments of the various denominations to which they belong. Good cheer abounded among the seventy-five or eighty representative laymen gathered to honor the occasion. Such subjects as "The Kind of a Minister I Want," "The Kind of a Layman I Want," "Foreign and Home Missions One," and "To Every Man His Work," were discussed. The spirit of the occasion and the large gathering gave surprise to one speaker, who said that he had no idea that so many intelligent representative Protestant laymen could have been found within the ten miles square—so greatly has the cause of Protestantism grown in these latter decades in these parts.

The place of the banquet meeting was suggestive, it being that of a room used as a popular saloon before the State-wide prohibition law was enacted, but which now is occupied as a well-kept, respectable restaurant.

Union services were held in Moss Point in the morning in the Methodist Church, and in the evening in the Baptist Church. In Pascagoula union services were held morning and evening in the Opera-House. Professor J. L. Johnson, of Mississippi College, represented the Baptist Church; Hon. Rucks Yeager, of Gulfport, the Episcopal Church; Judge T. M. Evans, of Gulfport, the Methodist Church; and Rev. George Summey, of New Orleans, the Presbyterian Church. It was a great occasion in our Protestant history in these parts and destined to bring forth much fruit.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting was held last Monday morning in the pastor's study of First Church.

Present: Parker, Holmes, Townsley, Sims, Foster, Carley, Werlein, Atkinson, Rice, Harrell, Joyner and Lutz.

The Thanksgiving service will be held at First Church and the offering will go toward the building fund of Epworth Church.

Dr. W. R. Hendrix, of Louisville, Ky., was invited to address the Preachers' Meeting on Monday Oct. 31.

The reports of the pastors were as follows:

Carrollton: Bishop Murrāh preached a great sermon. All the Conference collections will be in full. The Epworth League is taking on new life.

Second Church: The presiding elder preached an able sermon. Had two conversions. Revival begins next Sunday. Week of prayer will be observed this week. Orphanage collection, $52.10. Eleven accessions.

Algiers: Getting along very quietly. Junior League is doing a fine work. Orphanage collection $51.02.

Louisiana Avenue: Bishop Kilgo preached a fine sermon. The singing at the church has improved greatly. The sewing school has 100 in attendance. Two accessions. Orphanage collection, $31.

Parker Memorial: Bishop Hendrix preached a stirring sermon on "The Church." Finances better than last year. Raised $150 for pews.

Epworth: Getting along very well. The presiding elder preached a convincing sermon and one joined the church. New building will be started soon. Two accessions. People have been very kind to the pastor during his illness. Orphanage collection, $15.

First Church: Congregations improving. Eighteen accessions. Bishop Wilson preached a spiritual sermon on "Imitators of God."

Felicity: Bishop Atkins preached a strong and logical sermon on "Justification by Faith." Two accessions. Woman's Foreign Missionary Society received a special contribution of $100 for China from Mrs. J. H. Keller, in memory of her husband, Mr. J. H. Keller.

St. Mark's Hall: Have good crowds in attendance. There is a measure of increased success. Two of the workers will become deaconesses.

Rayne Memorial: Bishop Denny preached a warm and sympathetic sermon that moved many to tears. This has been a profitable month. There are signs of promise. Ten accessions.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

VII.

I had a misfortune each of my two years on the Arkansas River Mission. The first year I lost a fine horse. He was a deep bay and a fine saddle and buggy horse. His death was from hydrophobia. He was strangely affected, and we had no idea at first what the trouble was, but concluded it was hydrophobia from reading and studying the case. To confirm my opinion, a number of other animals died having the same symptoms about the same time and in the same vicinity. I had only had him a few months, gave all the money I had for him, and I felt a little depressed at the loss; but the next thing I knew my river friends had money enough collected to buy another good horse.

In my organized church there of seven there was one man, and while the men generally swore profanely and disregarded the Sabbath, they were all my friends, as to personal respect and readiness to respond when called upon for money. The ladies collected and the gentlemen would ask the collectors how much they wanted, and would pay whatever the ladies assessed them.

The second misfortune was loss by fire. October 25th, 1882, about sunrise, the old Douglas home was discovered on fire, and it had such a start that to save it was doubtful from the first. Wife was away from home, and I was so busy with others trying to save the house that we lost all—viz., clothing, bed-clothing, framed pictures, photographs of parents, relatives and friends; but, the worst of all, my library, which contained my books in the Conference course of study, and many others that I had been gathering since I cared for books. In addition, Dr. A. B. Winfield was the bookman of the Conference, and I had a number of his books that I was selling on commission, and lost a good many of his by the fire. I wrote him right away about it, and he replied that the loss was his, and sent me Watson's Bible Dictionary to start a new library.

Our boarding house now being in ashes, we were without a home; but Henry Hardy, my only male member, kindly took us to his house free of charge. Next, our destitution was considered, and almost every farmer on the river had a plantation store, and from the people generally and these stores in particular, we received large quantities of goods. No particular account was kept, and I never knew, even approximately, the total amount received the second year on the mission. The year's living at a richly supplied table, the suits of clothing, dry goods, silver and currency, and wife's presents, amounted to more than any other year of my ministerial life.

The spiritual results were unsatisfactory. It is said that "one sows and another reaps," and, while the visible results of my earnest prayers and sermons and tears were small, I did what I could, and left those big-hearted, noble people believing that my labors were not in vain.

Our Conference met November 22d, In-Hope, and we had cold, wet weather all the way through. I cannot report much about the session; I suffered so with toothache that I attended very little. Dr. D. R. McAnally, at that time editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, was present, and talked and preached and made himself at home.

My appointment was Toledo, headquarters of Cleveland County. The Methodist Church there had recently been destroyed by fire, and I preached in the courthouse until the Baptist people kindly offered me theirs, which offer I gladly accepted. The Baptist membership generally were better workers than my own, and before beginning a series of meetings I went around and invited them personally to attend and help, and they did it, and we had a fine meeting and a number of bright professions at the "mourner's bench." At my different meetings that year there I can safely count fifty as bright professions as I ever saw. One meeting in particular. It was at Wofford's Chapel, not far from Pine Bluff. It was in a vicinity of well-to-do people, and the church was a nice frame building, and the people were Cumberland Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists. I began in July, on Thursday night, and preached to a few. Saturday night the house was full, and I called for penitents. The first to start was a Mr. Rhodes, who was considered a hard case. He stepped boldly and quickly to the altar railing and dropped down. His Christian wife arose and said: "Bless the Lord, Doc has made a start at last; I have been praying for him ever since we were married." Strong men hardened in sin would fall off their seats and call with a loud voice for everybody to pray for them. There were as many penitents in one part of the house as another, and the greatest demonstration of the power of God that I ever saw in all my life. When converted they jumped to their feet and looked for their friends. The District Conference was held on my work, and I had to close on Monday night. From what we could see in the church and hear of afterwards, we concluded that there were at least fifty genuine conversions resulting from the three days and nights meeting, with a congregation of about two hundred. Members of three churches attended, and they all made themselves at home, and were all blessed alike. It does me good yet to think of it. Bless the Lord, O my soul!

A REPLY TO DR. FEATHERSTUN.

By Rev. G. B. Winton, D.D.

It is manifestly useless to discuss the proprieties with a man who thinks he is courteous when he "repeats" that a proposition of his opponent is "disgusting nonsense," and who has ideas of Christian kindness equally fantastic. Waiving personalities, therefore, I take up the two points which Dr. Featherstun attempts to make against the Vanderbilt Board of Trust.

The first is that the statute of 1895 justified the General Conference in electing trustees, and would serve to protect the Board if it accepted this new plan of filling its vacancies. I need not say that this statute has long been attentively considered by the Board, and that with the help of the ablest lawyers in Tennessee. Our final decision that it could not justify us in adopting a new method of perpetuating our membership was based on two considerations. First, it is probably unconstitutional; so the lawyers tell us. But Dr. Featherstun says that Bishop Hoss says that it has been declared constitutional. Chapter, please, and volume, and page, not of the Christian Advocate, but of the records of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. This is no matter for obiter dicta, whether of infallible bishop or fallible lawyer. Secondly, and sufficiently for us, that article and section of the Constitution of Tennessee to which I before referred (Art. ix, Sec. 8) distinctly says that when the Legislature passes statutes affecting the charters of corporations, such statutes shall not abrogate any rights conferred by existing charters. The concluding sentence of that section, referring to the laws above indicated, says: "... which laws may at any time be altered or repealed, and no such alteration or repeal shall interfere with or divest rights which have been vested legally." (This sentence, it will be noted, was omitted by the Vanderbilt Commission when in its report the above section was quoted.) Now, more than twenty years before the law of 1895 was passed, the State of Tennessee, by charter duly granted, did "legally vest" in the corporation, Vanderbilt University, the right to fill vacancies in its own membership. Should the said statute, therefore, prove to be ever so constitutional, it could not "interfere with or divest" that right. It was in view of this provision that I wrote before: "Laws passed by the Legislature since the issuance of the charter of Vanderbilt cannot, under the above article of the Constitution, have an ex post facto application." I made no reference to the general nature of ex post facto laws, upon which Dr. Featherstun kindly furnishes a disquisition; I merely used the phrase for convenience, writing, as I usually do, exactly what I meant, no more, no less.

The other proposition of Dr. Featherstun, of which he writes as though it had been under discussion all this time, is that the Board secure an amended charter. Was any such proposal made at Asheville? Does anybody authoritatively make it now? The Board greatly desires a new charter. But having in mind the furor aroused when in 1905 it undertook to secure one, its members are naturally a little skeptical. To secure such a charter requires the petition of every member of the Board. In 1905 Bishop Hoss got two of the members who had signed the petition to withdraw their names, and the matter had to be dropped. Something like this would probably happen again. Besides, Dr. Featherstun seems to have overlooked the fact, mentioned by me in a former communication, that under the laws of Tennessee no institution of the class to which Vanderbilt belongs can now secure a charter placing the election of its members in any other body than the corporation itself. Like others, it appears to assume that a school cannot be a "church school," unless its trustees are elected by some Conference. Yet Emory and Henry College (Bishop Hoss's pet) has a self-perpetuating board, as have also Emory College, in Georgia; Randolph-Macon, and others.

The whole tone of my critic's writing, as of that of others, is to the effect that the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University is a rebellious and contumacious body, which must be coerced. Inasmuch as this entire controversy was raised by the impugnment of motives and the attributing of purposes, it is not surprising that every action of that Board has come to be judged by the treasonable designs which it is alleged to harbor. Such allegations and such an attitude have no justification. It was for this that I entered a plea for reason; of abuse we have had a surfeit. Dr. Featherstun objects to my reference to Bishop Galloway. But it was Chas. B. Galloway (clarum et venerabile nomen!), president of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, who in 1905 advised and took part in the readjustment of the relation of the Bishops to the Board, that first fatal step which so aroused the hostility of Bishop Hoss. Likewise, and at the same time, he commended and participated actively in the movement for a new charter, an act of the Board which has been over and over exhibited to the public as proof of the perfidy of that body and of its unfaithfulness to the Church. When, as the result of the criticism of these acts, the General Conference of 1906 appointed a Commission, and this Commission issued a report, it was the hand of Charles B. Galloway that traced the lines expressive of the sentiments of the Board upon formal reception of said report. (The roughly pencilled tablet leaf in that familiar writing is still in existence.) Yet no action of any board was ever more bitterly denounced than was this. It was made the pretext of bringing the whole matter up again in the General Conference of 1910, where it exercised, in more ways than one, a most baleful influence. It is, therefore, not surprising that there are those who would now have us be silent concerning these attacks on one whose voice is silent in death. Well may they wish it. But it need not be surprising, on the other hand, that the members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, following, as they know themselves to be, in the footsteps of such a leader as was he, whom they mourn as sometime their beloved and honored president, resent, and will continue to repel, the imputation that they are disloyal to the Methodist Church.

THE WORLD'S NEED—A TESTIFYING CHURCH.

By Rev. J. M. Barkley, D.D.

I dare not be a pessimist. Human pessimism and Divine sovereignty are consistent terms. I cannot be a pessimist while "God is in his heaven." But, discredit the muckrakers and the mock reformers as we will, the times are out of joint. If virtues are vile, evils are gigantic. Twin sins which threaten the very existence of this Christian nation are the vulgar race for gain and the rotting sin of social vices. The former of these evils, the inordinate love of money, is the parental and passionate root of sins which have vitiated the whole world.

I name only these two great categories of sin—they are by no means all. But as we see their terrific hideousness, is it not enough to convince us that the want of this wicked world yawns with an unmeasured depth? Yes, look at it as you will, this old world is turned topsy-turvy. Things are on top which ought to be under, and things are under which ought to be on top. And I do declare it my solemn conviction, that, for its uplifting, there is nothing this old, sinning, sorrowing, suffering world more needs than a witnessing church—a church which will dare to testify against its evil deeds, as Nehemiah testified against the transgressors of divine law in his time—a church so divinely enlightened that it receives God's truth, lives God's truth and teaches God's truth as the positive remedy for the sin and wrongs of the whole world.

Under the white light and spiritual power of Pentecost these three things—giving, praying, witnessing—were in splendid conjunction. And, behold, and see what they did! From farthest East to farthest West, and from the mountainous solitudes of the North down to the sunny Greek isles of the South, where burning Sappho loved and sung, they carried the testimony of Jesus. With that testimony they faced every condition and class. With it they faced the fierce hatred of Judaism, the sorcery and witchcraft of Cyprus and Philippi, the rude savagery of Lycaonia, the sensuous idolatry of Ephesus, the sordid commercialism and the sodden immoralities of Corinth. With it they scaled the heights of Arecagus, and met the philosophy of the world. With it they went to the palace of the Caesars. And with it they won, the world over.

The need of the times is a whole church testifying for Christ. Eloquent preachers have their place; and yet the ambition for eloquence may be fatal to a harvest of souls. Many a man has ridden the hobby-horse of eloquence hard, and got no further. Edward Everett, the orator of the academy, was eloquent for three hours at Gettysburg field—and got into a book. Abraham Lincoln, the orator of the backwoods, was eloquent for three minutes—and he got into the heart of every schoolboy in America. Why the difference? One, with the grace of art, orated; the other, out of passionate experience, testified. We want great evangelists and learned scholars and skillful teachers and diligent pastors; but back of these, and just now, more than these, we need a church which will give and pray and witness. And when the church shall bring these into her life again as at Pentecost, then shall she be a Pentecostal church. Then shall she "arise and shine, her light being come; and the glory of the Lord risen upon her."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

OUR CHIEF CONCERN.

It matters not
What men may think of us! To-day they praise—
To-morrow blame—and so through all our days
We lift our eyes to catch the smile of one
For something said or done,
And meet another's frown.

It is surpassing strange
That we, who know full well how all may change,
Yet care so much and pay a price so high
To win the honor which so soon must die,
Which is not worthy a passing thought,
Far less to be thus dearly bought.

But let it be our chief concern to see,
Whatever we are called to do or be,
That all our lives may bear the pure high light Which shines from yonder Throne, that from His sight.

No coward thought need shrink, in trembling fear,
To stand before our God through grace, with conscience clear.

And only by His standard set our own,
And live as they who seek His smile alone.

—Edith Hickman Divall.

AT WHOSE HOME?

A beautiful little canary came flying by and settled down on the branch of honeysuckle. "I'm so tired," he said. "I haven't found a really happy home yet. I'm sure, though, that no one would be unkind or unhappy in such a charming place as this.
I think I'll make my home here."

But just then a dog came around the corner of the porch, limping and crying, for a boy was running after him, striking him cruelly with a big stick.

"O! O!" said the bird, and away he flew. "I couldn't stay there. That boy would surely be unkind to me." And he flew to a window sill of a fine stone house in a beautiful garden.

"What a lovely home! I'm sure I can stay here."
But there were sounds of crying from the room within, and, peeping in, he saw two little sisters quarreling over a doll.

"Let go! That's my doll!" "No, you shan't have it! I want to play with it," and in the struggle the poor little doll was pulled to pieces.

"Dear! O, dear!" chirped the poor little bird.
"They might try to do that with me. I don't want to live here."

On he flew, from home to home, finding unkindness so often that at last he sank down, worn out, onto a porch, to die, his poor little heart almost broken with sadness. Suddenly he felt a warm hand close over him, and a soft, kind little voice said:
"Why, you poor little thing! O mother, see this dear little bird! Please let me keep him. I'll take good care of him, and not let a thing hurt him!"

"Very well, dear, you may. Now, go and feed him."
And the little canary found happiness and kindness at last, and sang and made the little child happy for being so good to him.

JEAN'S ALGEBRA.

Jean unstrapped her books, and took pad and pencils from the closet.

"I'd like to be polite, Mr. Marshall," she said, laughing across at her father's old friend, who was spending two days with him, "but I never dare to be polite until my algebra is done."

"What makes you like it so much?" Mr. Marshall asked, smiling. "Young ladies don't generally have much taste for algebra."

"Like it!" Jean repeated vehemently. "I despise it.
That's why I do it first; if I gave myself the tiniest margin of excuse, I'd never get it done. And I may be stupid—I am stupid in it—but it shan't conquer my morals, anyhow."

"I see," the guest replied, rising. "Well, good luck to it—and you, Miss Jean. Perhaps you'll like it better after a while."

"Never!" Jean returned, emphatically.

A month later three girls were looking at one another with dazed eyes. They must take care of mother, of course, but how? Corinne's music? Barbara's art? They had been studying only for accomplishments—they never had supposed that they would need them.

Then a letter came from Mr. Marshall, with the wonderful offer of a well-paid position for Jean.

"Jean!" Corinne cried; "why, she's the youngest!"
"And never studied typewriting in her life!" Barbara chimed in.

"For Miss Jean," Mrs. Randall read. "A young lady who always tackles her hard things first in her determination that they shall not conquer her morals—is the kind of young lady that we need fifty-two weeks in the year."

"Who would have thought that a little thing like that could lead to this?" Barbara said brokenly.—

KENT'S CHAT WITH SISTER.

"Hello! What are you, sis—a hat rack?" Kent
Willard asked, as he came up the steps and found Esther chatting with one of the university students.

Esther dropped her caller's hat as if it had burned her fingers.

"Pshaw, Miss Willard," its owner protested. "That hat is honored by having you pet it."

"I wasn't petting it. I didn't know I had it in my hands," said Esther, quickly; but Kent had already walked on into the house with a manner that left his sister feeling rebuked.

When she followed him a little later, the first thing she said was: "Kent Willard, you were rude to call me a hat rack."

"Look here, Esther, tell me this. Would you reach into a fellow's pocket and take out anything?"

"Of course not!"—indignantly. "If you mean my having his diary, I just caught it out of his hand.
He flourished it around, and said there was one page about me."

"I didn't know you had his diary," Kent answered, dryly. "Look at this," he broke off, pushing back his hair and showing a stubby lock, cropped close to the forehead. "Sue Bronson cut that off when I was drawing in the study room. One of the girls dared her. O, that's funny, is it? Well, it isn't the hair I care about, but how would she like it if I did the same thing to her?"

"H'm! You'd better not try it."

"It would serve her right. You girls draw a circle round yourselves when it comes to our taking liberties, but if you don't stay inside your circle, you needn't expect us fellows to respect it."

"O, Kent, you're too fussy!"

"Is this fussy, then?" Madge Holton sneaked my Latin book out of my coat pocket and took out a note that Roger Danforth had written me in class, and then she wouldn't give it up. She said 'twas her motherly duty to see what kind of notes I was getting in school, and all such stuff. I knew she'd feel mighty embarrassed if she did read it—'twas nothing for her to see—so I tried to get it away."

"This was all on the street, mind you, coming from school, and when she couldn't keep it from me any other way, she dropped it into the neck of her waist-one of those buttoned-behind affairs. She'll have to undress to get it out, and she'll feel cheap enough if she reads it, too. I tell you, I was disgusted, and when I walked up here and saw my own sister patting and smoothing another fellow's hat, I said to myself that you are all alike."

"But such a different thing! And Madge went too far, of course; but don't you know that a girl does those things just to flatter a boy—to make him feel how important he is?"

"Well, a girl makes one large mistake if she does," was the emphatic answer. "We may laugh and scuffle with her, and pretend to think she's cute, but her stock goes down just the same, you mark my words."

A GOLD MEDAL.

I shall never forget a lesson I received when at school. We saw a boy named Watson driving a cow to pasture. In the evening he drove her back again, we did not know where, and this was continued several weeks.

The boys attending the school were nearly all sons of wealthy parents, and some of them were dunces enough to look with disdain on a scholar who had to drive a cow.

With admirable good nature, Watson bore all their attempts to annoy him.

"I suppose, Watson," said Jackson, another boy, one day, "I suppose your father intends to make a milkman of you?"

"Why not?" asked Watson.

"Oh, nothing. Only don't leave much water in the cans after you rinse them—that's all."

The boys laughed, and Watson, not in the least mortified, replied: "Never fear. If ever I am a milkman, I'll give good measure and good milk."

The day after this conversation there was a public examination, at which ladies and gentlemen from the neighboring towns were present, and prizes were awarded by the principal of our school, and both Watson and Jackson received a creditable number, for, in respect to scholarship, they were about equal.
After the ceremony of distribution, the principal remarked that there was one prize, consisting of a gold medal, which was rarely awarded, not so much on account of its great cost, as because the instances were rare which rendered its bestowal proper. It was the prize of heroism. The last medal was awarded about three years ago to a boy in the first class who rescued a poor girl from drowning.

The principal then said that with the permission of the company, he would relate a short anecdote.

"Not long since, some boys were flying a kite in the street just as a poor lad on horseback rode by, on his way to the mill. The horse took fright and threw the boy, injuring him so badly that he was carried home and confined some weeks to his bed.

Of the boys who had unintentionally caused the disaster, none followed to learn the fate of the wounded boy. There was one boy, however, who witnessed the accident from a distance, who not only went to make inquiries, but stayed to render service.

"This boy soon learned that the wounded boy was the grandson of a poor widow, whose sole support consisted in selling the milk of a cow of which she was the owner. She was old and lame, and her grandson, on whom she depended to drive the cow to the pasture, was now helpless with bruises. 'Never mind, good woman,' said the boy, 'I will drive the cow.'"

"But his kindness did not stop there. Money was wanted to get articles from the apothecary. 'I have money that my mother sent me to buy a pair of boots with,' said he, 'but I can do without them for a while.' 'Oh, no,' said the old woman, 'I can't consent to that; but here is a pair of heavy boots that I bought for Thomas, who can't wear them. If you only buy these, we should get on nicely.' The boy bought the boots, clumsy as they were, and has worn them up to this time."

"Well, when it was discovered by the other boys at school that our scholar was in the habit of driving a cow, he was assailed every day with laughter and ridicule. But he kept on cheerfully and bravely day by day, never shunning observation, driving the cow, for he was not inclined to boast of his charitable motives. It was by no mere accident that his kindness and self-denial were discovered by his teacher."

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, I ask you—was there not true heroism in this boy's conduct?—Nay, Master Watson, do not get out of sight behind the blackboard. You were not afraid of ridicule, you must not be afraid of praise."

As Watson, with blushing cheeks, came forward, a round of applause spoke the general approbation, and the medal was presented to him amid the cheers of the audience.—The Children's Own.

MEETING OF THE BISHOPS.

The College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in one of the reception rooms of the First Methodist Church of this city on Thursday, October the 20th, at ten o'clock a. m., with Bishop A. W. Wilson in the chair. Bishop Collins Denny, the efficient secretary of the body, was in place ready for the duties of his office. The other members of the College present were Bishops E. R. Hendrix, W. A. Candler, James Atkins, J. C. Kilgo, W. B. Murrah, E. D. Mouzon, and J. H. McCoy. Those absent were Bishop H. C. Morrison, who, on account of the storm on the coast, missed his railroad connection; Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, who was detained in California by the critical illness of Dr. J. W. Shoaff, presiding elder of the Los Angeles District; Bishop E. E. Hoss, who is in the Orient; Bishop W. R. Lambuth, who is in South America; and Bishops Joseph S. Key and O. P. Fitzgerald, who are superannuated. The Bishops held in all four sessions, each of which was executive and lasted two or three hours. What transpired in their meetings is, of course, unknown, except what they have been pleased to give out. Bishop Morrison arrived early Thursday evening and participated in all the subsequent deliberations of the body, thus making ten chief-pastors who were in attendance upon the semi-annual meeting of the Episcopal College, which is now required by a law of the Church enacted at the last General Conference.

To Bishop Denny, the secretary, we are indebted for the following information as to what was done by the Bishops in their several sessions: A resolution was adopted declaring that the May meetings of the College shall be held in Nashville, Tenn., since the various General Boards of the Church, with which the Bishops are connected, are held in that city at that time; and that the date and place of holding the fall meetings shall be determined annually when they assemble in the spring. The fifty-six delegates to the Ecumenical Methodist Conference which will assemble in Toronto, Canada, in October, 1911, who were appointed last May, were announced as having accepted; and their names will be published by the secretary at an early date. Forty members of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, of which Bishop Hendrix is the president, were named, consisting of five Bishops, eighteen preachers, and seventeen laymen. The Bishops appointed to membership in this body are: A. W. Wilson, E. R. Hendrix, W. A. Candler, E. E. Hoss, and E. D. Mouzon.

The last General Conference having constituted a Court of Appeals for the quadrennium, it became necessary for the Bishops to name a chairman for that Court with equal tenure of office, and Bishop Denny was designated for this position. The Laymen's Movement was considered, and a commission was appointed to devise plans to promote its growth and the efficiency of its work. It is composed as follows: Bishop J. C. Kilgo, chairman; Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, of Virginia; Rev. O. F. Sensabaugh, of Texas; Mr. John F. Burton, North Carolina; and Mr. W. G. M. Thomas, of Chattanooga, Tennessee. Bishop A. W. Wilson, was designated as fraternal messenger to the British Wesleyan Church, and will visit and address the Conference of that historic body in 1912. There being throughout the Church a demand for a complete and up-to-date revision of McTear's Manual of the Discipline, that task was assigned to Bishop W. A. Candler. A committee, consisting of Bishops Wilson, Candler, Atkins, and Murrah, were appointed on the Constitution of the Church.

Bishop Hendrix made a full report concerning the Robert A. Barnes Hospital, which is to be located in St. Louis, Mo., and opened in 1912. The Trustees have in hand approximately $2,000,000. Of this, $200,000 will be paid for the site, $500,000 for buildings and equipment, leaving a round million for endowment. Experts have pronounced the plans for this great plant the most modern and perfect of any institution of the kind in the United States. When vacancies occur in the Board of Trustees, they are to be filled by the appointment of the Bishop, last holding the St. Louis Conference. After this report, the work of the Church in the various fields was taken up and carefully considered.

Many social courtesies were extended our chief pastors during their stay in the Crescent City. On Thursday, at noon, Dr. E. B. Craighead, the President of Tulane University, gave a luncheon at the Grunwald Hotel in honor of Bishops McCoy, Candler, Kilgo, and Mouzon. At eight o'clock Thursday evening an informal reception was tendered the distinguished visitors at First Church, which was largely attended by the Methodist people of New Orleans, all the pastors of the city and quite a number from neighboring towns. Dr. Werlein presided felicitously over the meeting, and Dr. F. N. Parker made an appropriate address of welcome. All of the Bishops, except Bishop Candler, who was slightly indisposed, were seated on the pulpit platform, and each of them made a happy five-minutes speech. Then followed a brief season of good fellowship, and light refreshments were served.

Friday afternoon the Bishops in automobiles visited the several Methodist Churches of the city; that they might get some conception of the needs and opportunities of Methodism in this great field; and Friday evening the Brotherhood of Rayne Memorial Church gave them a banquet in the Sunday school room of that congregation. This occasion was particularly interesting and enjoyable. Dr. Rice, the brilliant pastor, had assigned each Bishop a live topic, and while the excellent menu was being served a number of stirring speeches were made. Bishop Wilson spoke on "The Year's Progress." Bishop Morrison, on "The Geography of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." Bishop Atkins, on "The New Sunday School." Bishop McCoy, on "The Young People's Societies." Bishop Denny, on "What Shall We Do With the Prayer Meeting." Bishop Murrah, on "The Laymen's Movement." Bishop Candler, on "Personal Evangelism." Bishop Mouzon, on "The Church and Social Service." Bishop Hendrix, on "The Church and the New Knowledge." and Bishop Kilgo, on "What Can the Brotherhood Do?" Addresses were also made by Mr. Behrman, Mayor of the city; Major Thomas E. Davis, editor of the Picayune; and Dr. Summey, of the Presbyterian Church.

On Saturday the Bishops lunched at St. Mark's Hall that they might have an opportunity to look over that mission plant and observe the character of the work being done there. Six of them remained over the Sabbath, and their assignment to the various pulpits was as follows: First Church, Bishop Wilson; Rayne Memorial, Bishop Denny; Parker Memorial, Bishop Hendrix; Carrollton Avenue, Bishop Murrah; Louisiana Avenue, Bishop Kilgo; Felicity Street, Bishop Atkins.

The presence and ministry of these beloved servants of the Church were a blessing and inspiration to the Methodism of this city and section. Possessed of a high order of ability and of a manifest purpose to do their utmost for the Master's work, to come into contact with these strong men is to have one's faith heartened and his confidence in a large future for our denomination reassured. Not a single speech or sermon was delivered by one of them that was not vibrant with loyalty to the Word of God and marked by an intensely evangelistic spirit. There is every reason to thank God and take courage, as we front the second decade of the twentieth century. The best days of Southern Methodism are yet to come.

We trust that the Bishops enjoyed their visit to New Orleans and carried away pleasant memories of their stay among us. And especially do we hope that they were impressed with the needs, problems, and possibilities of this great field, and that they will carry it on their hearts, give it a place in their prayers, and, as opportunity offers, use their influence to re-enforce the work here in every possible way. The Methodism of this city is virile and plucky, but in this great center where there is a large foreign population and the enveloping atmosphere is chiefly Catholic, it should have more encouragement and assistance from the general connection. If the recent sojourn of our leaders with us has adequately impressed them with this fact, their coming was, indeed, most fortunate and will mean much to the Church in this section in the future.

INFANT BAPTISM.

We have been pleased to notice that many of our pastors in sending in reports of their work have mentioned the number of infants baptized. It is always gratifying to us to observe indications that our preachers and people are careful to attend to this duty. Though like many of the other ordinances of the Church, it is not expressly commanded in the Scriptures, it is inferentially plainly taught, and is subscribed to by nine-tenths of the adherents of the Christian faith. And the practice is sustained by a historical argument that is of very great weight, being clearly traceable as far back as the second century. The importance of having this rite administered to our children should be frequently stressed from the pulpit, that the parents in our membership may not overlook it.

So far from infant baptism being a waning doctrine, as is sometimes alleged, it is certain to strengthen its hold upon enlightened Christendom as the years pass. The young life of the Church is sure to occupy a larger place in the expanding kingdom of our Lord, and the child will more and more come into possession of his rights and privileges under the divine economy. Already some of the Baptist preachers of the North, under the influence of this sentiment, have instituted a service in which infants are consecrated to Christ. But this will not long avail to stem the tide. Truth is mighty, and must ultimately triumph over narrowness and error. Baptism is a divinely established mark that belongs to all who are in right relationship to the Master; infants are included in that number, and hence it cannot be justly denied them. Methodism has won many proud victories in the field of theology, but she has waged no nobler crusade than that which she has carried on to free childhood from the unwarranted religious proscriptions of Calvinism. The Church that aspires to sway the future must lift the standard of the Cross above the cradle.

THE TRANSFER POWER.

The transfer power has long aroused opposition in some of the Annual Conferences, and is looked upon by not a few with a suspicious eye. That in some instances it has been unwisely exercised and has wrought injury, all must admit. But under our form of church government, it is an indispensable necessity. No area of territory can always be counted on to produce just the kind of men needed to supply the churches existing in it. Congregations of other denominations search the whole country for pastors to fill their pulpits. A Baptist Church in New Orleans may call a minister in New York. Without the power to bring men from a distance to meet special needs, the administration of Methodism would be anomalous and weak. The highest efficiency in service would be impossible. Erected into a barrier across which pastors may not be freely moved, Conference lines would become a serious, if not fatal, obstruction to progress. Perhaps the transfer power should be more carefully scrutinized and have some safeguards thrown around it. But any restrictions imposed should not, in our judgment, be vested in the Annual Conferences, for that would tend to produce a conflict in authority. Moreover, those bodies might be indisposed to vote in transfers to take their better appointments, even when they are needed. If restraints are to be enacted, let them be lodged in the Episcopal College. With our Bishops meeting twice a year, why would it not be expedient and wholesome to make all transfers from one Conference to another contingent upon a majority vote of that body? Or why could not the Bishops constitute an executive committee to have charge of the matter? We are not sure that such an arrangement would be practicable, but we are inclined to think that in this direction must be found relief from the abuses of this necessary power.

"AN INSTRUCTIVE CONVERSATION."

Under the above caption, Rev. W. A. Betts, of Montrose, Miss., has prepared and had printed an interesting leaflet expounding the meaning and emphasizing the responsibility of the vows assumed when one becomes a member of the M. E. Church, South. The instruction is given in the form of questions and answers, and, in our opinion, is calculated to do much good. We have long thought that the undue haste with which members are received in the Church and our failure to impress more fully upon them the weight of the obligations assumed, is likewise a weakness and reproach. Brother Betts' leaflet is designed to aid our pastors in remedying this deficiency in our administration. Copies of it may be had at 50 cents a hundred by writing the author at Montrose, Miss.

THE VETERANS' MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. S. Harrison, of Starkville, are proposing to unite in such an organization the older preachers of the two Mississippi Conferences. A communication setting forth the purposes of the suggested Association, the conditions of membership, etc., may be found elsewhere in this issue. We heartily approve of this movement, and sincerely trust that it will eventuate in success. We feel a profound interest in all that concerns our older brethren in the ministry—those who have borne the burden and heat of the day and carry the marks of honorable service. The trying time of life is the fading time—when strength is waning and the step is no longer agile and firm. For these veterans of the Cross to meet annually, and interchange views, talk of their experiences, and enterprise plans to make their influence longer and more powerfully felt, we think, prove both enjoyable and profitable. Moreover, such an organization might be made to do much toward the preservation of Methodist history in Mississippi, which is a greatly needed work. Let those interested and eligible to membership correspond with Brother Harrison or Dr. Wier on this subject.

PERSONAL.

A card just received from Rev. J. M. Morse, of Gulfport, says: "We are in the midst of a great union meeting here." We trust that he will tell us more of it later.

Rev. G. W. Baccus has rented and moved into the "Downer superannuate home" at Long Beach, Miss., at which place his correspondents will please address him.

The Homewood charge, Mississippi Conference, is having a good year under the efficient pastorate of Rev. W. W. Graves. We are indebted to this energetic worker for service rendered the Advocate.

Rev. Robert B. Downer requests us to state that hereafter his address will be North State and Wells Street, Jackson, Miss. Let his correspondents take note of this and govern themselves accordingly.

Fayette, Miss., has lately been blessed with a season of refreshing. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Campbell, had with him Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Jackson, who preached a series of strong and helpful sermons.

Rev. H. B. Watkins informs us that Rev. C. N. Guice is holding a meeting in his church at Summit, Miss., doing the preaching himself. Large crowds are attending, and the prospect for a revival is bright.

The Methodist Woman's City Board of Missions held an interesting session at St. Mark's Hall yesterday afternoon. Under the capable leadership of Mrs. W. W. Carre, this organization is wide awake and active.

Mrs. W. B. Murrah, of Jackson, Miss., was a welcome visitor in New Orleans last week. She arrived in the city on Tuesday, the 13th inst., and remained until Monday. She and Bishop Murrah were guests of the Grinnwald Hotel.

Bishop Mouzon is engaged at present in looking after the work within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, which is a part of his episcopal district. He spent last Sunday in Vicksburg and was booked to preach in Natchez Tuesday night of this week.

The new Methodist Church at Eunice, La., which has been under process of construction for several weeks has been completed. Rev. C. C. Miller, the presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, preached the opening sermon to a large congregation last Sunday.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of the Winona District, writes: "Brother W. L. Graves, our popular pastor at Itabena, underwent a successful operation for appendicitis at Greenwood last Friday. He is doing finely to-day (Monday), and bids fair to recover rapidly."

Last week's issue of the Western Methodist contained the following statement: "The work of Rev. W. J. Carpenter, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, is by all accounts most satisfactory to the people of that city. The editor was recently near enough the scene to pick up this item."

The many friends of Miss Mary Abarr will regret to learn that for four months she has been a helpless invalid at her home at Long Beach, Miss. It is quite doubtful whether she will ever again be able to lead an active life. She is well known as a newspaper correspondent.

The Advocate is invading the Volunteer State. From Collierville, Tenn., Rev. A. S. Raper has forwarded us a list of subscribers from the regions round about. Our young friend is making a fine beginning in the work of the ministry. He is in charge of the Mt. Pleasant Circuit.

The Midland Methodist of October the 19th says: "Rev. A. C. Holder, of Louisiana, has been visiting the family of his father-in-law, Mr. C. W. Morrison, at Paducah, for some days. Brother Holder is now in Memphis, assisting Rev. A. C. Bell, in a meeting at Washington Heights, in that city."

At the Missionary Institute held at Winona, Miss., last week, Capt. H. H. Estes and Dr. W. T. Johnson, of Greenwood, and Mr. M. C. Smith, of Moorhead, each gave $400 to the cause of missions. Worthy laymen are these, whose faith in Christ is attested by both their conduct and liberality.

Rev. W. J. Wood has kindly favored us with a list of subscribers from Paris, Miss. He is bringing things to pass on that circuit. The hope of the Church is in the men who work. The toilers are the builders. In his meeting just closed at Paris there were 45 conversions and 29 accessions.

Dr. S. S. Keener, the able presiding elder, of the Monroe District, was in the city last week. He attended a meeting of the Legal Conference held in the Advocate office on Thursday, and was also present at the reception tendered the Bishops at First Church. His many friends here gave him a cordial greeting.

We acknowledge the reception of a contribution of $5 to our "Help Fund" from Col. J. M. Johnson, of Acona, Miss., who is given to abounding in good works. This will carry the Advocate for a year into five needy homes into which otherwise it would not enter. It is a gracious thing to give the glad tidings of the growing Church and Kingdom to the poor.

Bishop Morrison preached in Gulfport last Sunday. This was in compliance with an agreement made prior to his attendance upon the meeting of the Bishops. He has many calls for special service throughout the Church, and is particularly in demand where debts are to be liquidated. As a collector, he scarcely has an equal in Southern Methodism.

Mrs. M. L. Wilson, of Monroe County, Miss., in renewing her subscription speaks of the Advocate in terms of high appreciation. She says that it has been a great comfort and help to her. Such an assurance is most encouraging. If we can make our paper contribute to the enrichment of the spiritual life of its readers, we shall feel that we have not wrought in vain.

Bishop Murrah left New Orleans Tuesday morning for East Bernard, Texas, where the German Mission Conference assembled to-day. This will be his first presidency over an Annual Conference, but that he will measure up fully to every requirement there is not the slightest doubt. His adaptation to the multifarious duties of the episcopacy is already strikingly manifest.

Through courtesy of the Times-Democrat, we give our readers this week a group picture of the Bishops who were here last Thursday and Friday to attend the semi-annual session of the Episcopal College, with the exception of Bishop Morrison. The explanation of his absence from the group is that he was detained by a belated train and had not arrived when the picture was taken.

The United Woman's Society of the Second Methodist Church is holding its annual week of prayer this week, and the general theme is "Studies in Practical Christianity." Tuesday night Miss Violet Bell spoke on "Hospital Service." Wednesday night Mrs. Worrell talked on "Korea in Transition," and to-night Miss Jean Gordon will speak on "Child Labor." The public is invited.

We were delighted to have as a visitor at our office this week, Mr. W. T. Holland, of Greensburg, La., editor and publisher of the St. Helena Echo. His paper is one of the best weeklies in the State. It is not to Mr. Holland's discredit that he is a loyal and ardent Methodist, who takes pride in the history of his Church and is keenly interested in its present enterprises and activities.

We were pleased to receive a personal note a few days since from Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss., who is widely known as an evangelist. He reports that he has had a great year in the Master's work, having held some of the most successful meetings of his life. This statement means much: for some of the most extraordinary revivals we have ever witnessed were conducted by Brother McIntosh.

Miss Julia Jones is beginning her eighth year as teacher of the school at Robinsonville, Miss. The service which she has there rendered our Church has been far-reaching and immeasurable. It is not surprising that the people hold her in such universal esteem. Such is her activity in all kinds of good work that she might with propriety be termed the unordained deaconess of the Northern Delta.

Rev. W. G. Harbin has just closed a great revival at Dyer, Tenn. The entire community was stirred, and all the stores of the town were closed for the morning services. The results in figures are not known to us at this writing. Brother Harbin's next field of labor will be at Slidell, La., where he will conduct a union meeting; thence he will go to Alexandria. The Lord is greatly blessing him in his labors.

Mrs. C. C. Gunn, of Noxapater, Miss., writes: "Our week of prayer was observed and greatly enjoyed by all. On Sunday night of that week we had a good program consisting of a fine song service, some recitations, and a very instructive sermon on woman's work by our pastor, Brother S. B. Myers. The offering for the Ruth Hargrove Seminary was $5.66. Pray that we may use our talents wisely in the Master's service."

From the Columbus Dispatch of October 16, we take the following: "Rev. John Richey, of Winona, closed a most interesting series of services at the second Methodist Church in this city last Friday. The sermons which he delivered were doctrinal in character, dealing with the great fundamental themes of the gospel. Large congregations heard him each evening, and were greatly benefited and uplifted by his learned discourses."

The Carrollton Conservatives of October the 22d says: "Large congregations at the Methodist Church last Sunday heard with delight the excellent sermons preached by the Rev. W. L. Duren, pastor of the Methodist Church at Tupelo. Mr. Duren is a clear and accurate thinker, an accomplished rhetorician, and a forceful speaker. His sermons awakened thought and made a profound impression, holding the rapt attention of his hearers."

The Corinth District held an Epworth League Rally at Booneville on October 22 and 23d. Among the speakers announced to be present were the Hon. T. B. King, of Memphis, and the Rev. R. A. Clark, of Okolona. Bishop McCoy was also expected to attend the gathering. A reception was given the visitors last Friday evening by the Booneville Senior League, which was under the management of a committee of which Miss S. L. Buchanan was the chairman.

A Sunday school room is being added to the church at Brooksville, Miss., and other improvements are under way which will cost $1,500 or $1,600. Brother Langford says that all assessments will be met in full in that charge, and that he will report a gain of fifty in membership. We are always delighted to hear of a church improving its facilities for work. The old-time power operating through up-to-date methods is what we need to achieve the largest results.

Under date of the 19th inst., Rev. W. G. Harbin writes from Haynesville, La.: "The Church and local committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement at Gibbstand, are co-operating heartily with the pastor and District Leader in preparing for the District Rally on Nov. 26th. An interesting and inspiring programme is in the course of preparation. Every pastor in the Ruston District should do his utmost to secure a large attendance at this meeting on the part of his laymen."

Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., on October 21, writes as follows: "I am just home from Oak Grove, La., where I assisted Rev. W. L. Hunter in a ten days' meeting. It was certainly a revival of remarkable power. There were 75 or more conversions and reclamations. Brother Hunter is a talented young preacher and very popular among his people. Oak Grove desires to become a station next year. I might find it possible to make an additional engagement with some pastor for a meeting in November."

Among the ministers who were attracted to New Orleans by the presence of the Bishops last Thursday and Friday we noted the following: Rev. J. E. Denson, presiding elder of the Lafayette District; Rev. T. J. Warlick, of the Shreveport District; Rev. R. W. Vaughan, of Ruston; Rev. K. W. Dodson, of New Iberia; Rev. C. C. Miller, of the Baton Rouge District; Rev. J. P. Haney, Ponchatoula; Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, of Abbeville; Rev. T. B. Holloman, of Moss Point, Miss.; and Rev. J. M. Alford, of Bogalusa, La.

Rev. W. J. Eckles, supply on the Wall Hill Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, died at St. Joseph's Hospital in Memphis last Monday afternoon. He had been ill with gall stones for nearly three months, and was operated on Friday preceding the day of his death. Mr. Eckles was forty-eight years old; he leaves a wife and two children. He was a brother of the Hon. J. B. Eckles, of Panola County, and of Prof. A. K. Eckles, Principal of the public school at Cleveland, Miss. The Advocate extends sympathy to the sorrowing relatives and friends.

The following have kindly favored us with clubs of subscribers within the past two weeks: Mrs. E. L. Cartmel, Natchez, Miss.; Rev. J. L. Rutledge, Indian Bayou, La.; Rev. C. L. Northington, Ripley, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Thompson, Pachuta, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Graves, Homewood, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Harper, Blairtown, La.; Rev. J. W. Brown, St. Landry, La.; Rev. M. M. Black, Port Gibson, Miss.; Rev. J. O. Bennett, Bernice, La.; Rev. A. S. Raper, Mt. Pleasant, Miss.; and Rev. J. Loyd Decell, Osyka, Miss. A number of brethren have sent in one or two names. We highly appreciate the assistance of our friends.

Writing from Bogalusa, La., under date of the 18th inst., Rev. J. M. Alford says: "The work here is in better condition than ever before. We have had a number of valuable additions to our membership. The fourth Quarterly Conference has been held, and the reports were most encouraging. I am preaching to full houses, and am happy in the work. I have just organized a fine Epworth League and our young people are active. Rev. Abe Mulkey, of Corsicana, Texas, will begin a ten days' meeting here one month from to-day. Meantime, I will assist Rev. E. L. Alford, of Newton, Miss., in a series of revival services."

Tidings from the Field

Myrtle Circuit:

We are closing a very successful year on the Myrtle Circuit, have had a general revival throughout the entire charge. At Hickory Flat we held our first, with Brother Bass (our own well known and beloved David Bass of Corinth) to lead the hosts of the Lord against the powers of sin, which resulted in the conversion of fifty souls and addition of twenty-nine to the Methodist Church, and the church itself was greatly revived. We had no other ministerial help, but a more loyal and helpful host never rallied to the cause of God than the faithful of the Myrtle Circuit. We have had on the charge 134 conversions and 85 to join the church (most of the others joined the Baptist Church, and they were glad to get them, even if some of them were little children), and an increase of interest in a general way. We, or rather they, for Mrs. Jones and the good women of the charge did it; have organized six W. H. M. Societies and two W. F. M. Societies, and they are doing a telling work at all the places. Within two months from date of organization, they had the church that Dr. Boswell built at Hickory Flat painted inside and out, pulpit, pews, and all the rest. At Friendship they have raised money to buy an organ, and at Myrtle they are doing good work in the way of furnishing the new parsonage which Brother Randolph completed last year; in fact, the women are working at all of the churches, and the men are going to help them. The men at Myrtle have placed the material on the ground for a Sunday school annex of three good rooms; this means good Sunday school work. We are not willing for our presiding elder to have any thing better than the Corinth District until another year. We have just had him with us; he always helps us to higher things. The district has developed marvelously under his care. Surely the Lord has been with us this year. The Advocate is growing under the care of the new editor; our people all like it.—W. W. Jones.

Osyka, Miss.:

Our fourth Quarterly Conference has gone on record, and all our meetings have been held, so we write. We will only report from two of our four churches this time, but will let the remaining two be heard from later. The Osyka work is composed of Osyka, Muddy Springs, Holmesville and Johnston Station, a hewn-out work, but hewn from the best of granite, for it is indeed a good work. Our first meeting began at Muddy Springs the second Sunday in July, with Brother J. C. Ellis, from Gallman, doing the preaching. Brother Ellis is a splendid preacher, and the Lord blessed his efforts. Not a more loyal people can be found anywhere than there is right here. In June, when their crops needed them most, they left their fields and got out boards and covered the church; then had the church painted inside and out. In one month's time the boards were gotten out and church covered and painted and all paid for. The Home Mission Society, of which Mrs. J. C. Carter is president, had all the inside work done. This society includes all the ladies of the church, and is doing splendid work. Our next meeting was begun at Osyka on Thursday night, July 21st, and continued through Sunday, July 31st. Brother J. W. Lee, of the Louisiana Conference, began this meeting for us, and won the hearts of the people by his clear, concise, and spiritual interpretations of the Word. Then came Brother D. E. Kelly, the right man in the right place, with his denunciations of all manner of sin. Deep, pungent conviction seized the people, and conversions and reclamations followed. "Turning points," "Pay day" and "We Pass This Way But Once" are synonyms of sermon truths in the minds and hearts of our people. There were twenty-three ac-

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try it.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salves, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

cessions to the church, and many were saved. All denominations were united in this fight, and the victory was a great one. We have good, faithful people to serve here at Osyka. They have gotten a new pulpit stand, new lamps, a new carpet, and, best of all, a handsome cherry-finished altar, which is frequently used. Osyka and Muddy Springs will pay all assessments in full. Holmesville and Johnston Station will appear next.—J. Loyd Decell, P. C.

Jackson, Miss., Rankin Street:

We have recently held a very interesting and profitable meeting at the Rankin Street Methodist Church of this city. The preaching was done by the local pastors and others, and was most gratifying and helpful. Strong sermons were preached at every service. Fifteen additions to the church, making a total of sixty-five during the year. Last Sunday your old friend, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, of the North Mississippi Conference, delighted our congregation with an able discourse, and on the evening of the same day, Brother Henderson, a senior of Millsaps College, preached for us a sermon which was good to edifying. The preachers of Jackson and vicinity have been most generous to our church this year, and our thanks are freely given to one and all. Evident tokens of spiritual and material prosperity are manifest in Rankin Street Church.—J. S. Parker, P. C.

Rainey Mission:

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I write these lines. We have finished our meetings. We were assisted by Brother J. T. Gullett at Bethel and our people all learned to love him. We were assisted at Rainey by Brother W. D. Bass and Rev. J. H. Bass. Brother W. D. Bass, of Corinth, did the preaching and Brother J. H. Bass, of Ripley, led the music. Everybody seemed to enjoy this meeting. We were assisted at Black Jack by Rev. J. N. Flynn. Brother Flynn served this church last year, and all the people knew him at the beginning. Our help failed to reach us and I held our next meeting at Shelby Creek and also at Mount Pleasant. We had fine meetings all over the charge. In all, we had 110 professions and we are still in a revival. We are having additions to our church at almost every service. Up to the present, we have had seventy-six additions to our church. This has been by far the best year of my life. The Lord has been so good to me. This is my first year in the ministry. We have bought two organs and paid for them and have nearly enough of money to buy another. We are ready for Conference. We now have all of our Conference collections in full. We have sold $150 worth of Bibles on our charge. If Rainey Mission is managed right, I believe in the course of a few years it will be one of the leading charges in the Corinth District, for we have the people and the farming land to make this. We have a noble people on the Rainey Mission. Out of these 110 professions made, a large per cent were between 25 years and 50 years of age; one old gentleman 76 years old, and several between 45 and 60 were converted. The religion we have up here is the old-time religion. Many family altars have been erected.—C. A. Northington, P. C.

McComb and Fernwood Charge:

I promised in my recent write-up of the Fernwood Church to give you an account of the work here in South McComb as soon as our revival meeting here was over. I shall now fulfill that promise. Conditions here are different from Fernwood. Nearly all of the members are laboring people, and there are no rich men among them to get behind things and make them go; consequently, we have some difficulty in raising all the finances of the church. We have about 350 members here, most of whom do very little towards the support of the church. The comparatively few upon whom the burdens rest give liberally in proportion to their ability. We have some true men and women of God here. Alford, Magee, Blount, Smith, Bales, and others I might mention, are true yoke-fellows in the work. We have a live Woman's Home Mission Society, with 20 active and 8 honorary members. Our women are doing a splendid work. They have furnished the choir with chairs, carpeted the aisles of the church, and painted the building outside at a cost of $135. We have spent $215 on the parsonage in the way of repairs, paint and papering, which have made it one of the most comfortable parsonages in the Conference. Of this amount Fernwood paid $105. The parsonage is very undesirably located, and its sale has been authorized by the Quarterly Conference. Our purpose is either to buy or build in a house nearer the church. The people of this charge have been kind to and thoughtful of their pastor and his family. They have tried to make everything as nice and comfortable for us as possible. We had a fine meeting here. The preaching was done by Rev. W. M. Sullivan. I have had Brother Sullivan with me in several meetings, but I never heard him preach so powerfully as he did here. The meeting was a great benefit to the church. There were several conversions and 10 accessions. This charge has been greatly honored of God during the last eighteen months, in that three of our young men have been called to preach the Gospel. Something over a year ago Brother Bennie Sutherland, of the South McComb Church, was licensed to preach, and is now at Ruskin College, in Tennessee, preparing for his life's work. At our last District Conference Brother C. A. Schultz was licensed to preach, and expects to apply for admission on trial in the Mississippi Conference a year hence. Brother Schultz is of Fernwood. Brother Cleveland Reagan, of the South McComb Church, was recently recommended for license to preach, and is now at Millsaps College getting ready for the work God has called him to do. Our people are naturally proud of these young preachers, and are looking to their future with great expectations. This charge will pay every assessment in full, with several extras for other purposes. With best wishes for the Advocate, and asking an interest in the prayers of all its readers, I am, respectfully,

D. SCARBOROUGH.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 30, 1910.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

Reference: I Cor. xvi, 2.

Our reference to-day gives some principles of Christian giving which, if they had been observed all along through the history of the Church, would have saved the writing of some hard pages in the history of the workers and institutions of the Church. In the first place, St. Paul writes to the Corinthians as if giving were a part of their Christian duty, based upon the great debt they owed to God. He appeals to them not as a supplicant, but with a tone of authority demanding what was right and just at their hands. They owed a debt, and as far as money could do so, he wanted them to pay it. How abundantly Paul felt this sense of obligation himself is seen in Romans i, 14-15. If men could just enter into this sense of obligation put upon them by an open-handed Heavenly Father, how abundantly would it solve every problem, financial and otherwise, of the Christian Church. How God has trusted his children! What large things has he put into their hands! Corresponding to this he has made the world's evangelization dependent on their sense of obligation to him. He has put the lands and cattle and money in the hands of men, and over against these he has placed a world of need which he expects us to supply. The poor man needs bread, the naked child needs clothes, the Church needs pastors and schools, and orphans' homes, the great wide world needs Christ. God has entrusted us with the means to do these things. Are we doing it, or are we using it for ourselves? We need to impress men not with the thought that generosity is a very good trait, but that we owe a debt which we must pay. I think often that we "take on" so over men who make a large spasmodic gift that we teach the doctrine of "works of supererogation." Unconsciously a man keeps back God's money until he has on hand multiplied thousands and he then gives to some charity a few of those thousands and keeps the rest, and we laud him to the sky as a great philanthropist and issue him a gilt-edge pass to heaven.

May we not echo and re-echo the demand that we are God's and that his debt must be paid—not as charity, but as an honest obligation? The second principle taught by the apostle is to give honestly. Give in proportion as God has prospered you. Dr. Rawlings puts it somewhat newly when he changes the question, "How much must I give?" to "How much can I afford to keep for myself?" How much of my income can I spend on myself and still give to God his part? I know officials in God's Church who pay more to keep an automobile in repair than they give to the Church per year. I know Methodist people who pay large amounts for luxuries of the most extravagant character whom a request for $100 for missions would give apoplexy. Read Malachi iii, 8-12. Are you giving God a just share of your income?

I meet a man once in a while who says, "Oh, I keep no books with God," this as an evidence of generosity.

Brother, keep books for him one year and see what a poor part of your means you have given God. I don't believe a Christian is often justified in limiting himself to a tenth.

The third principle taught by the apostle is, give systematically. What I have already said has emphasized this point. We should find giving an easier matter did we pay up regularly and systematically. You put it off to the end of the year so that your debt to God has gotten so large you can't pay it, and so divide it and pay one-tenth of your share. That's your kind of titling. Pay regularly and faithfully God's share, and instead of it being a burden it will be a joy.

I think the point of "give cheerfully" has been overlooked, so I shall not emphasize that here, except to say if you can't pay God cheerfully, pay him any way. Your grocer doesn't say "Pay me cheerfully." He says, "Pay me"—cheerfully if you can, but pay me!

"God loves the glad giver," but even the reluctant, stingy, hard giver will become a cheerful one when once by experience he has learned its pleasure.

JACKSON DISTRICT LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

We held a most helpful session of three days in our Epworth League Conference at Florence, Miss., Sept. 21 to 23, 1910, and from the opening of the Conference to its close the interest was all that could be desired. We had seven of our pastors present, including the presiding elder, and they did much to aid and instruct in the discussions. We also had a goodly number of Leaguers and lay delegates from congregations having no Leagues, these representing almost every section, though not every charge of the district. Some of these delegates from churches having no League realized the need of such help in their own church, and went home resolved to organize a League as early as possible. Two good, strong Leagues have been organized since the Florence Conference—one at Camden, with forty-two members, organized on the 25th of September, and the other at Caloway Chapel on the 16th inst., with twenty-five members, where there are a number of other prospective members, on whose account the charter will remain open for two weeks. There were several other prospective Leagues mentioned at Florence, some of which may have already organized, but have not yet been reported to the district secretary. They will be properly reported when he gets the data. We desire to make as good a report as possible to the approaching Annual Conference; so we suggest that Leagues already organized report promptly, and urge that every church that can do so, organize a League at once. There is no other department of our Church doing as substantial work in the training of the young people for Christian service as the Epworth League, and in every department of church work we need more workers. Many of those offering for service realize that they are at a disadvantage because of the lack of training. Let us meet this need in the organization of an Epworth League in every congregation.

Many of our young pastors got their first training in the Epworth League. Has your church a representative in the ministry? Do you desire that it shall be presented? Then open the way by organizing an Epworth League.

A. P. HOLT,

Sec'y Jackson Dist., Miss. Conf.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI LEAGUE COUNCIL.

Pursuant to an arrangement made at the session of the League Conference in Kosciusko in the spring, the officers then installed met in the Sunday school rooms of the Methodist Church at West Point, Miss., October 6th, for a two days' discussion of plans, purposes and policies.

The first service was held Thursday night, presided over by Rev. R. A. Clark, the chairman of the Conference League Board, and the general topic for discussion was "The Organized League, Its Work and the Relative Value of Its Departments." Rev. J. H. Holder, of Booneville, led in the discussion. During Friday three sessions were held of two to three hours each, when every phase of the work was gone over in a careful, painstaking way by leaders who were thoroughly capable of handling their subjects. The value of our connectionalism from the central office to local league was thoroughly gone into. Mrs. Cavin of Okolona, the superintendent of junior work, mapped out her plans and gave those present many suggestive hints. Rev. K. P. Foust, of Corinth, District Secretary for that district, outlined the work of that department and gave to it a value heretofore unthought of by many of the Leaguers. It is confidently expected that much more efficient work will be done now by these, who are to keep in close touch with the local chapters, and stir them by their presence and personality.

It was urged, as very necessary, that more careful attention be given to the correspondence with and reports to these district secretaries, as they can only report to Conference officers or central office when they have the facts in hand.

Saturday morning, Mr. Walter Boswell, of Kosciusko, president of the League Conference, had charge of the closing session, in which much helpful enthusiasm was shown, and plans for a campaign for a thousand members launched. Stress was put upon the special work now being done, that of maintaining scholarships for young ministers at Millsaps College, and for young ladies who were going into definite work, either in the home or foreign field, at Grenada. The treasurer of this department reported that it was urgent that those who had made pledges at Kosciusko for this fund should send in their first installment, if they had not already done so, as the students were now in college and depending on us to care for them. If there are any Leagues in the bounds of the Conference which have not sent in their pledge, let them do so at once. If there are Leagues which did not pledge, they should arrange to have a part in this great work. These amounts should be sent to Mr. Victor Stevenson, Booneville, Miss.

There are great possibilities for the League work in North Mississippi, and such earnest workers as compose the staff of officers will bring things to pass if the local Leagues will co-operate with the District Secretaries.

HANDS OFF!

Mrs. Ray with her little three-year-old daughter was visiting her brother, who was a minister. May was just the age when she wanted to investigate new things, and her mother was continually telling her she must not touch this and that. The first Sunday of their visit May was teasing to be taken to church. To give the greatest weight possible to her entreaties, she said:

"I will be good, mama. If you will let me go, I won't touch the text!"—From Woman's Home Companion for October.

A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health! What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ill or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ill, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.: "I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 5 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it at once. 'Twill help you. At all druggists in $1.00 bottles.

Don't Send Me One Cent

when you answer this announcement, as I am going to distribute at least one-hundred-thousand sets of the Dr. Haux wonderful "Perfect Vision" Spectacles to genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearers in the next few weeks—on one easy, simple condition.

I want you to thoroughly try them on your own eyes, no matter how weak they may be; read the finest print in your bible even by the dim firelight; thread the smallest eyed needle you can get hold of and put them to any test you like in your own home in any way you please.

Then after you have become absolutely and positively convinced that they are really and truly the softest, clearest and best-fitting glasses you have ever had on your eyes, you can keep the pair forever without one cent of cost, and by showing them around to your neighbors and friends, and speak a good word for them everywhere at every opportunity.

Won't you help me introduce the wonderful Dr. Haux "Perfect Vision" Spectacles in your locality, on one easy, simple condition?

If you are a genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearer (no children need apply) and want to do me this favor, write me at once and just say: "Dear Doctor:—Mail me your Perfect Home Eye Tester, absolutely free of charge, also full particulars of your handsome 10-karat Spectacle Offer," and address me personally and I will give your letter my own personal attention. THE CAUSES OF PHYSICAL INABILITY.

To be strong and healthy is the desire of every man, woman and child in this country and they would be, if they would only stop for a moment and read the cause of their debility and then apply the remedy. There is always some cause for physical inability, and in the majority of cases it is bad blood. All food, before giving aid to the system, is first converted into blood. In other words, it is blood alone that gives strength, health and vigor to our bodies and keeps us above the level of life within us.

How important it is then, to keep our "life's blood" in perfect condition, that it may properly feed and nourish our bodies. Bad blood affects the various organs of the body, but especially the liver and kidneys. Mr. F. L. Hammond, Hattiesburg, Miss., is quoted as saying: "I have used two bottles of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and am entirely well of liver and kidney trouble. Having suffered five years with them previous to using the Bull remedy."

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron is a preparation that puts the blood in perfect condition, by feeding it from all particles of impurities, thereby making the blood rich, red and pure and toning up the entire system. It will make you feel like a new person, and you notice an improvement after the first dose. This preparation can be had from your druggist in 50c and $1.00 bottles, or will be sent direct upon receipt of price. After using two-thirds of contents of a dollar bottle, according to directions, you do not notice any beneficial effects, return the remainder and the money you paid for the entire bottle will be refunded to you. Write W. H. Bull Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo. If your druggist can't supply you, and give them his name.

How Japanese Keep Off Fat

World's Brains Outdone By Sturdy Islanders. A Wonderful Treatment For Fat Reduction.

Tokio Treatment Has Done Marvels. Send Coupon Below for a Free 50c Package.

For the first time in America a trial package of the Tokio Treatment, undoubtedly the most unique and powerful fat reducer ever compounded by human brains, is being offered free to every fat man and woman who has tried almost everything known in this country for fat reduction, and who has failed to be reduced satisfactorily.

The knowledge of the Japanese in scientific matters pertaining to body development has been considerable, and is almost as remarkable as their almost unbelievable physical endurance and strength.

The swiftness, trim, elegant figures of Japanese men and women are proverbial. Japan is an Island of Venus and Apollons.

The Tokio Treatment solves the problem for every fat man and woman in America. The wonder of it is that it was not sooner introduced here. It has remarkable fat-reducing powers, coupled with the giving of great strength and the molding of the human form to perfect lines. It is wonderfully satisfying to desperate fat men and women. Its results often surpass the understanding. Not a cent is asked to try it, so you can judge for yourself. For this reason, a 50 cent package of this Tokio Treatment in the unique and beautiful original box, is sent absolutely free to anyone who will merely send name and address on the coupon below. Send for it today.

ITS INFLUENCE FELT.

A boy sat on a doorstep in the gathering dusk of the evening, holding a string in his hand. A passer-by, noticing the boy's eager, zest and interest, asked him what he was doing that made him so happy. "I am flying my kite," was his answer. "Why, I see no kite," said the gentleman, sweeping the darkening skies with his eyes. "Neither do I," said the boy, "but I feel it pull." We can not see heaven, as we move on in this world, but if it is a reality to our faith, we can feel it pull upon our hearts as we toil and struggle under our burdens.—J. R. Miller

WHITEFORD, LA.

"I have kept silent about as long as I can. In opening my mouth I will say that I have always loved the preachers of Louisiana, and after five years sojourn in the land of the Philistines I heard Marion Lawrence, while an increased love for Louisiana and the preachers of the Louisiana Conference. I heard Marion Lawrence while in New Orleans say: 'Louisiana, all things considered, is the greatest State in the Union.' I wanted to say 'leave off the quality' phrase. My mind goes back 20 years, when I applied for license to preach, and was recommended to the Annual Conference. The vote to license was unanimous, but when I came to recommendation, two dissented. One of the men voting 'yes' was asked by one voting 'no' if he voted to recommend a green-eyed boy. He replied: 'I am like the star who wrote a letter to a friend and signed it 'Life' gave it to a friend, and near to read, having failed to sign it himself. His friend failed, and on receiving it back he addressed it to his friend at college. His friend asked if he intended to send a letter to a man he could not read himself, and he replied: 'There are better scholars at college than I am. Some of them can read it.' So my friend addressing me said: 'I cannot read the young man myself, but there are better scholars at Conference than I am; some of them can read him.' Well, Mr. Editor, we have a district up here that has 65 churches, and I am pastoring over twelve of them. We will report at least 50 conversions and 25 or 40 accessions to the church; 25 or 40 were converted at one church, old Liberty Chapel. Last Thursday night the good people of Eden stormed and pounded us, but in a way that made us feel good. Prof. Longino made the opening address, and in a very beautiful way spoke of the worth of an ambassador of God; that, though often not appreciated, there were times when his services were very much needed and appreciated. The pastor responded with a few remarks concerning the force of a good example. The Shumanite woman did not know that her zeal in building a house for Elisha would be emulated and excelled by thousands of women who have built many homes for our homeless preachers. We are in a meeting at Whiteford now, after which we will be extremely busy ready to report at Homer on December 7th. More anon.—Wilson Moore.

MAGNOLIA, MISS.

Our delightful year's work with these people has culminated in a glorious revival which has gladdened our hearts and strengthened our faith. For ten days Brothers D. E. Kelly and C. N. Guice, men approved unto God, workedmen that need not to be ashamed, were with us doing work that will tell for many years. Our little town was stirred and uplifted. Fully seventy-five people converted, forty-five added to the church, and about forty family altars dedicated. The Sunday following the meeting was one of the happiest I ever spent. Our Sunday school was large and enthusiastic. The church was crowded at 11 o'clock when I received twenty-eight into the church, eighteen of whom were boys and young men. Then, assisted by Rev. J. W. Sandell, we administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which was humbly and joyously taken by nearly every one present. The congregation in that service gave $151 as their work day contribution to the Orphans' Home. This with our contribution to the building fund, and our regular monthly contribution, will make $650 we shall have given the home this year, and we don't feel that we have given to it a cent too much. A new Foreign Society has been organized here recently with twenty-two members. Our Home Mission Society is doing finely. Our collections are practically all paid in full now and we shall have a hundred dollars excess on foreign missions. There are no more devoted or loyal people anywhere than these Magnolia folks. I had the pleasure to meet and hear Rev. J. G. Gallo-way here, who, with his devoted, consecrated wife, has left impressions for good and to be accurately measured. We are unusually fortunate in having the families of so many of our preachers here, and after I have made a pastoral visit to Brother and Sister Sandell, to Sister Stevens and her children, to Sister John A. B. Jones, and to Sister Eggar, I realize that the lines have fallen out to me in pleasant places, and that I am among God's own.—H. B. Watkins.

Locomotor Ataxia

"I suffered intensely from Locomotor Ataxia, and Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills gave me great relief. I have taken them for a long time, and some people say they are not good for me. Well, maybe not, but they relieve my pain and I will take them as long as they continue to do so. Anti-Pain Pills and Nerve and Liver Pills keep me up and I assure you I am thankful for that."—JACOB HIRGEL, Covington, Ind.

Many persons who suffer constantly from chronic diseases, find great relief by the use of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, and after several years' use, say that they have in no way injured them or created a habit.

THE VETERAN MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

Notice has been given in a former issue of the Advocate of our desire to organize a "Veteran Ministers' Association" for the two Mississippi Conferences.

A post card has been sent to a number of veterans in the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, reading as follows:

"Dear Brother: We propose to organize a Veteran Ministers' Association in the two Mississippi Conferences. All on the retired list, either supernumerary or superannuated, and all who have been traveling preachers for fifty years or more, are to be declared members, and all who have been in the traveling connection for forty years or more may become members if they so desire.

"No fees or dues to be paid. The object of the Association is to draw brethren into closer compact, that they may engage unitedly in any work or enterprise they may desire.

"First meeting to be held at Sardis, 3:30 o'clock p. m., on Wednesday, the first day of the Annual Conference. Will you work with us? Unless you object we shall consider you a member. Let us hear from you."

The following plan of organization is suggested: The election of a president, two vice-presidents—one for each Conference—a secretary, and a treasurer. An annual sermon on the first day of the Conference, to be followed by short talks, reminiscental, or otherwise, suggestive and helpful. The annual meetings to be held alternately between the two Conferences.

The design of the Association is to bring its members into closer touch with each other; to strengthen the bonds of Christian fellowship, and to give our retired brethren something to look forward to at the Annual Conference, and induce them to attend its sessions.

We cordially invite our veteran brethren of the Mississippi Conference to join us in organizing this Veteran Ministers' Association. Any veteran reading this paper, whether he has received the above card or not, will kindly consider himself included in this invitation.

Suggestions in regard to the proposed Association from our brethren, either by personal letter or through the columns of the Advocate, will be gratefully appreciated by us.

Fraternally,

T. C. WIER.

LAYMEN OF THE BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: A few weeks since I published a communication in the Advocate calling the attention of the preachers to certain questions asked at the Quarterly Conferences, and urged them to do all in their power to bring up in full the Conference assessments. I now take the liberty of addressing the stewards and laymen in behalf of ministerial support. We have only six weeks before Conference and much remains to be done. Will you do it? A conservative estimate of the increased cost of living during the past decade is sixty or seventy-five per cent. The increase in pastors' salaries has not been commensurate with the above estimate.

Under the tithing system, the people "brought the first fruits" to the Lord; but, alas! in some cases, our people feed the man of God on the "fragments" that remain; and, as no miracle has been wrought, there is not always twelve baskets full left.

Many of our preachers have expressed a willingness to receive a part of their salary in kind. Every layman who has money to pay should pay in currency, as there are some things that require cash. One more word and I have done: Do not charge your pastor more than the market price when you pay him in kind. It is my honest conviction that every charge in the Baton Rouge District can pay everything in full and no one suffer need. When we do meet our obligations, God blesses us. I challenge any man to bring proof to the contrary.

For the best essays showing how much it costs Baltimore to secure the million dollars annually received under the high license law—$500 first prize.

The Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, by virtue of special contributions for that purpose, offers One Thousand Dollars ($1,000) in essay prizes, as follows: A first prize of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for the best essay, and three additional prizes of $250, $150 and $100 respectively for the three next best essays on:

"What it costs the people of Baltimore (1) morally, (2) physically, (3) mentally, (4) financially, and (5) industrially to secure the million dollars a year which the city now receives from the liquor traffic under the High License Law."

The contest is open to any person anywhere except salaried employees of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland. Essays must not exceed 5,000 words. Each number expressed in figures will count as one word. The number of words must be indicated, and, other things being equal, brevity will be considered in making the award. Facts will count for more than mere argument. Essays must be typewritten, double spaced, with ample margin on one side of plain white paper 8 1/2x11 inches, with name and address of the writer securely attached in a sealed envelope.

Essays must be received, postage fully prepaid, by Rev. J. F. Heisse, D.D., Chairman of the Headquarters Committee, at the League office, 301 American Building, Baltimore, Md., on or before April 1, 1911. All essays shall become the property of the League. The decision will be made by the Headquarters Committee of the Anti-Saloon League or by judges designated by them, and will be announced and the prizes paid as soon as the essays can be examined and a decision reached.

THE ANTISALOON LEAGUE OF MARYLAND, by WILLIAM H. ANDERSON, Superintendent.

By order of the Headquarters Committee, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 17, 1910.

NOTE—Recognizing that the revenue argument is permitted by many people to obscure the real merits of the case, the League has undertaken: (1) by the offer of the prize to challenge the attention of the public to the fact that there are two sides to the question; and (2) through the essays to supply the argument to convince the man who is not afraid of the truth.

The League inaugurated this contest in June by the offer of One Hundred Dollars for the best essay of not over 2,500 words, competition to close January 1, 1911. The additional Nine Hundred Dollars has been subscribed by friends for this special purpose. In consideration of the great increase in the prize fund the time has been extended and the maximum word limit increased.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of The Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said: 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations,' by Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

Obituaries.

Sister ROBERT CRUTHIRDS was called home September 17th, 1910, early in the morning. She died in her fiftieth year. Many of these years were faithfully and patiently given to her children. A more patient and devoted mother, or a more faithful wife, was not known among our acquaintances. Sister Cruthirds was a member of the Methodist Church for more than twenty years. A few days before her death she said to her pastor that she was willing to go, feeling assured that God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned her sins. Bless the Lord for the Lamb that was slain, for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. The deceased leaves a husband and two children, Charley and Annie. May God in his mercy, succor and sustain them in this their sad trial.

E. J. MOHLER, JR., Her Pastor.
Huntsboro, Miss.

MRS. MARY E. GOODWIN departed this life July 25, 1910. Hers was a beautiful life. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in girlhood, ever living a consistent member, having high ideals of the Christian life, thought it wrong for ministers to use tobacco, wrote an article to the Advocate showing the evil effect of the example on the young. Some years ago her health began to fail. She sought every means of recovery in order to live with her parents, that she might comfort their last days. This was denied her, as they soon passed on to the beautiful home which Jesus said he went to prepare for his followers. Yet she was greatly blessed; not being confined to bed at all, went about, and in her gentle manner giving advice and comfort. On the evening of her death, being well as usual, after bidding loved ones good night, she retired. In the morning, her daughter, missing the sweet presence of mother, went to her room and found she had quietly passed over the river of death. May God comfort her children, and may the memory of their sweet, Christian mother guide them on to heaven.

HER SISTER.

JOHN ELAM HOLLOWAY was born in Covington County, Miss., January 20, 1843, and died at his home in Mount Olive, Miss., August 18, 1910, after several months of declining health. The deceased was married to Miss Margaret Meek, of Georgia, March 14, 1861. A family of four sons and three daughters are left to mourn their loss, his wife having preceded him to the grave by almost two years. Brother Holloway united with the Methodist Church at the age of 16, and of this church he was a member to the time of his death, having sustained for a long period of his life an official relation to the church. Apparently he had been a diligent reader of the Holy Scriptures, which Paul declares are able to make us wise unto salvation. Conscious of impending death, he declared his submission to the will of God, and only regretted that he could not be spared a few years to his family. May he who said to his disciples, "I will not leave you orphans," fill the aching void that has been left in the hearts of sons and daughters by the going away of father.

J. A. MOORE.

On September 14th, near Embury, Webster County, Miss., Mrs. N. R. HEMPHILL, wife of Mr. J. J. Hemphill, passed peacefully and triumphantly over the river of death, and no doubt made a safe landing on the shores of eternal bliss, where she shall bathe her wearied soul in seas of heavenly rest. She was born January 10, 1828, was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of twelve, at Yorkville, Ala., under the pastorate of the Rev. Geo. Shafer. In later years she cast her lot with the Cumberland Presbyterians. She was the mother of four girls and seven boys; one girl and three boys preceded her to heaven.

To say that Sister Hemphill was a noble, Christian lady, a devoted mother, and a loving wife, is merely to touch upon her saintly character. Dear bereaved ones, let us not weep as those who have no hope. Our loss is her eternal gain. Death to such a one as was Sister Hemphill is but a door that opens up into eternal happiness. May the Lord help us to live that we may meet her where there will be no more parting.—J. C. McElroy.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

Since it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our circle one who, as a mother and wife, friend and Christian, furnished a true example to those about her, with the members of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Vaughan, Miss., do hereby resolve:

First—That in losing Mrs. J. L. HEAKEMAN, our auxiliary has lost one whose faithful work and implicit faith in Christ made her Christian life both beautiful and useful.

Second—That in her death not only has our local church been made to feel the loss of one of its consecrated workers, but the Mississippi Conference has lost one who loved the church dearly and was willing to do what she could.

Third—That it is our belief that when God took her, he called her to "come up higher" where trials, sickness and sorrow would no more be her lot, but she would be with Jesus.

Fourth—That to the stricken husband and children and numerous friends, who have felt her strong, helping hand and who have felt her sympathy and love, we tender our deepest sympathy, also to her sister, nieces and nephews. May God comfort and bless them all. He knows best.

Signed: Mrs. J. E. Ferguson, Mrs. J. S. Henderson, Mrs. J. A. Ewing, Mrs. R. D. Exum, Miss Minnie Ewing, Committee.

A CANNED GOODS DINNER.

"For an informal dinner, a canned meal is novel," says the Woman's Home Companion for October. "The invitations may be made the shape of a tin can, on the label of which is printed: 'This can contains a hearty invitation (with the particulars of place and time). Anything is permissible on the menu that comes in a can or canister, a jar or glass or box. Study the catalogue of a good grocery establishment and you will find that even an elaborate meal can be planned within these limits. You can get olives, caviare and anchovies, soups in great variety, bacon in jars, and Saratoga chips, cans of trifled sausages, honey turkey, chicken in jelly, cans of roast beef, pate de foie gras, crabs and crab meat, artichokes, mushrooms, cheeses, ready-made entrees like beef a la mode, braised beef, chicken curry, goulash, veal and green peas, chicken and ham pates, and, of course, fruits, jellies and jams, lady fingers and macaroons and crackers. These are only suggestions."

Small jars of candies or shelled nuts and raisins make nice favors.

If so desired, this canned dinner or luncheon may be incorporated in a Modern Age entertainment, at which everything is done in the most up-to-date way practicable. Use a tea machine and a coffee percolator, and have your chafing-dish on the table, even if only one dish—creamed chicken, for instance—is prepared on the scene. An automobile ride afterward would make an acceptable last touch. The place-cards should have an art nouveau design if possible.

FOURTH QUARTER. LESSON V. OCTOBER 30, 1910.

THE ANOINTING OF JESUS

Matt. xvi, 1-13.

1. And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2. Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3. Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4. And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

6. Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper,

7. There came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat.

8. But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9. For this ointment might have been

Golden Text: She hath done what

The leaders of the Jews were determined to secure the death of Jesus. They had followed his public career with a sharp and critical interest. The whole effect of his words and deeds upon them was to create an implacable hatred. They would be satisfied only when his figure was no more seen walking among the crowds of people who came up to Jerusalem and when his voice fell no more, with its strange mastering tones, upon the ears of the multitudes of eager listeners. Let the feast once be over and the loyal crowds of the friends of Jesus scattered to their homes, and his death could be safely accomplished. They were eager for the day. They panted for his blood.

This unappeasable hostility to Jesus seems a very strange thing as one reads about it. Here was a life of crystal clearness, of winsome spotlessness, and yet it inspired the direst hatred. Here was a life of the most spontaneous unselfishness, a life of continued and glad self-giving, yet it aroused a malignant antagonism. The world's one perfect life seemed to call forth hatred lifted to its highest power.

The explanation of all this is that this life made demands upon men. It was righteous itself, but more than that, it asked others to be righteous. It was a moral summons. It sounded an ethical imperative in the ears of all men. Then it gave a background of light against which the evil things in men's character stood revealed in their true blackness. The very presence of Jesus was like a moral searchlight playing on the lives of men. Hidden evil was brought to the surface and revealed. There was a moral quickening which caused men to see things in right relations. So the influence of Jesus meant the defeating of evil schemes, the failure of selfish plans, the overthrow of evil. With a quick instinct the forces which had most need to fear the presence of Jesus began to understand their danger. Fear soon became wrath. Wrath became malignant hatred, and this hatred set about securing his death. A passive goodness may arouse little opposition; a militant goodness may expect to have bitter foes.

Jesus was in Bethany the evening before the triumphal entry. A feast had been prepared for him, and his friends gathered to do him honor. Within all was eagerness and hustle and hearty hospitality; but the warm glow of friendly faces did not hide from Jesus the storm which was gathering without. He had tried to prepare his disciples for the shattering of their highly colored dreams of a kingdom of external triumph, but with the dullness of men so possessed with one idea that they simply could not understand anything which contradicted it, they had listened to him with unheeding ears. So amid the faces glowing with enjoyment of the fellowship of the feast were other faces flushed with all-possessing and ambitious dreams. Soon the kingdom was to be ushered in. Soon Jesus was to be seated in power upon the throne of Israel.

10. When Jesus understood it, he said unto them, Why trouble ye the woman for she hath wrought a good work upon me?

11. For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always.

12. For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she hath wrought a good work for me.

13. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever doeth this unto me, she hath done it for me.

14. Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,

15. And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

16. And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

She could. Mark xiv, 8.

be seated in power upon the throne of Israel. The day of his triumph would be the day of their own reward. Once Galilean peasants, they would become ministers of state. So, intoxicated by their dreams, they did not heed the sad, stern words of Jesus; they scarcely saw the signs of hard and wearying struggle upon his face. It is often true that men have a singular incapacity to understand the real meaning of the experiences through which they are passing. With tightly grasped illusions they go through life to the very time when dark tragedy bursts upon them. There are many indications, but they are blind to their meaning. Sometimes it seems as if only the veriest perverseness could misunderstand, but still they cling to their illusions and with flushed, eager faces look for the realization of a false and unreal dream. The man who is the victim of such an experience is not simply unfortunate; he is at fault. A deeper earnestness would have saved him from his illusion. He is deluded because he is superficial, and he is superficial because he has not faced life with downright honesty and with seriousness. The saddest thing about the feast of Bethany was that in the main it consisted of a company of friends who did not understand Jesus and were failing to give him real sympathy when he deeply needed it.

But there was at least one exception. With the insight of a loving heart Mary had been watching the bearing of Jesus and listening to his words. She knew, too, of the mutterings of hostility against him, and it came to her as she looked upon his drawn, care-worn face, that he was girding himself for a dreadful ordeal. While other faces were bright with smiles, his was sad and heavily burdened. For all his fine and gentle courtesy and responsiveness as a guest, Mary could see that he was struggling under the weight of some great load. She longed to help him. It seemed as if her devotion were impotent. She could only stand by and see him suffer. Then an inspiration came to her. She could at least show the Master how much she cared. Quickly she found a cruse of very precious ointment and poured it upon the head of Jesus. The Master looked up and saw in her deep, serious gaze all her understanding of his pain and her desire to help. While the odor of the ointment filled the room, the odor of a gracious sympathy brought wonderful comfort to the heart of Jesus. He understood this extravagance of love, for it was like his own love to men, and did not count the cost. Wonderful words of praise and promise he spoke to the woman who, alone had comprehended his suffering. There were appreciation of her understanding and rebuke for the friends too occupied with their own selfish plans to see how he was gathering his strength for the great trial in his words. "She did it to prepare me for burial." It was not a coronation, but a funeral which was to come close upon the feast at Bethany. This woman was to be forever remembered, because she had understood. Over and over again the key to the real meaning of things is found through the insight of an unselfish love. They who love most are they who most completely understand.

Mary was not the only one, however, who was looking beneath the surface of passing events. Judas had heard the mutterings of hostility to Jesus; he had closely observed the Master's evident struggle and preparation for a hard and painful experience. Judas was a selfish man and with the insight of a keen selfishness he analyzed the situation. It was evident that he had made a mistake. He had joined a losing cause. He had committed his fortunes to a man who was to fail. The sooner he could extricate himself the better. He perceived the same facts which called forth the whole devotion of Mary, and in him they called forth no devotion at all; only cold, calculating criticism and a sharpened desire to win something from the wreck of a failing cause. John tells us that it was Judas who voiced the criticism of the act of Mary. He was feeling more deeply all the while that the spirit and hopes and ideals of Jesus were utterly foreign to his own. He scornfully rejected them and he was coming to feel the hatred a man feels for a high ideal which he has rejected and for a man who stands for it. He sought out the foes of Jesus and promised to deliver his Master to them for the price of a slave.

So among those nearest to him Jesus found the most wonderful devotion and the most treacherous hatred. The portrait of Mary and the portrait of Judas are near together in the gallery of to-day's lesson.

A strange contrast they form, a contrast as deep as human decision and human destiny. In the one face we see the triumph of unselfish devotion. In the other the triumph of that selfishness which at last can only hate and betray the good.—New York Christian Advocate.

QUININE CAN'T.

Fallacies die hard. Twenty years ago—even ten years ago—the victim of Pneumonia was shut in his room and the windows hermetically sealed. Except in scant quantities water was refused to parched lips and ice was a sin. As a result of this treatment only the Heroics survived. To-day the doctor who would practice such methods should be indicted by the grand jury.

But to-day they give Quinine for Fever. At best it is a feeble cure and those who survive it are only half cured. The time will come when the Doctor will discard Quinine. As in the treatment of Pneumonia he will make a change.

Johnson's Tonic is a faultless and splendid remedy for fever. Its cures are splendid cures, and in striking contrast with the feeble cures made by Quinine.

Those who take it are safe, and those who refuse to take it place their lives in jeopardy.

Within an hour its good effect is felt, and within a day the danger point is passed.

Here It Is

Here is just what you want, just what you need. You have been looking for it and here it is. Send for it and stop worrying. Say the word and it will be sent to you. Send us the message, saying you want to try it and it will be sent by mail, without a penny. It is Bodi-Tone, the real remedy for the sick, whose fame is spreading like wild-fire from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which is curing sick-folks by the thousands, the medicine your neighbors are talking about. The Bodi-Tone Company invented Bodi-Tone over a year ago, and immediately offered it on trial to all the sick, a fair and honest way, so everyone could try it and judge its curative value before paying a penny for it. The Bodi-Tone Company has sent out over one hundred thousand $1.00 boxes during the past year in this way, to people in all parts of the country, without asking in advance, and thousands have seen, felt and known its great curative benefits. Now the Bodi-Tone Company wants you to try a full-sized one-dollar box of Bodi-Tone at its risk and expense, so that you, too, will get to know the great curative and restorative forces in this splendid medicinal combination, which is rapidly proving its superiority over common medicines.

Bodi-Tone

does just what its name means—cures disease by toning all the body, and we want you to try it and see what it will do for your body. Bodi-Tone is a small, round tablet, that is taken three times every day. Each $1.00 box contains seventy-five tablets, enough for twenty-five days' continuous use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it cures stubborn diseases by helping nature to tone every organ of the body. The composition of Bodi-Tone is not secret. Each ingredient is named and fully described in the Bodi-Tone book, which tells all about Bodi-Tone and is sent free to every Bodi-Tone user. You know just what you are using and know it is good and safe. Among the ingredients which compose Bodi-Tone are Iron to give life and energy to the Blood; Sarsaparilla, to purify it; Phosphate to nourish the Nerves; Lithia for the Kidneys; Gentian for the Stomach; Chinese Rhubarb and Oregon Grape Root for the Liver; Cassia, which restores tone to the Bowels and Intestines, and Peruvian Bark for the General System. All these ingredients put together to restore health in the body, each serves to build upon the others work, each one helps. Many are prescribed regularly by the doctors for diseases in which we recommend Bodi-Tone; most of them have been successfully used separately or in combination with other drugs for the treatment of innumerable diseases, but the exact combination found in Bodi-Tone is peculiar to Bodi-Tone alone and gives Bodi-Tone a curative and restorative power peculiar to itself, that has already brought health to thousands. That is why we want to send a box on trial to you immediately, as soon as you write for it, for we know you will find it different and superior. Bodi-Tone is a pure remedy that all the family, young and old, can use. It contains no narcotic or habit-forming drugs; it contains nothing that we are ashamed to tell all the world. It contains no ingredient that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on drugging the body, but tones the body and cures its disorders with the remedies nature intended to tone and cure the body when that power was given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now, if you are sick, if your bodily organs are not acting as they should, if your body is not in right, natural and normal tone. This is what Bodi-Tone is, for—to help nature restore tone to the body, to restore normal health, energy, vigor, vitality and strength. If there is anything wrong with your kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your nerves, your blood, your liver, your bowels or your general system, the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, which are endowed by nature with a special action in these parts, go right to work and keep on working day after day, exerting always a well-understood, definite action that produces curative results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone, a splendid eliminant, helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the kidneys, stomach and blood, thereby exerting a continual anti-rheumatic effect which makes it hard for Rheumatism to obtain or retain a foothold in the system. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any of the various Female Ailments, for its toning properties are of special value in such ailments. Bodi-Tone is especially urged for all chronic sufferers who have tried honest, reputable physicians without getting the relief and permanent benefit desired, for these are the people who need it the most.

It Is Proven

The curative powers of Bodi-Tone have been amply proven by one solid year of cures. It has been tested in thousands of cases, covering a great variety of ailments in both sexes, at every age. Over one hundred thousand people have used it during the past year. Persons suffering from Rheumatism, Stomach trouble, Kidney, Liver and Bladder Ailments, Uric Acid diseases, Bowel Complaints, Female Troubles, Blood and Skin Affections, Dropsy, Piles, Catarrh, Anemia, Sleeplessness, La Grippe, Pains, General Weakness and Nerves Breakdown, have tested Bodi-Tone and proven its value in such disorders. Their experiences have proven beyond a shadow of doubt that the Bodi-Tone plan of toning all the body is a right plan that helps to cure these and other disorders that it is a real aid to nature. Many who have for years been in poor health and have tried doctors and most of all the prominent medicines, have written us that one box of Bodi-Tone did more good than all the others combined. Write to-day for a $1.00 box on trial and see what it will do for you. Don't send a penny. Just ask for a dollar box on trial. Address as follows:

"O YE OF LITTLE FAITH."

A sower sowed his seed, with doubts and fears:
"I dare not hope," he said, "for fruitful ears:
Poor hath the harvest been in other years."
Yet ere the August moon had waxen old,
Fair stood his fields, a waving sea of gold;
He reaped a thousandfold.

In a dark place one dropt a kindly word,
"So weak my voice," he sighed, "perchance none heard.

Or if they did, no answering impulse stirred."
Yet in an hour his fortunes were at stake:
One put a life in peril for his sake,
Because that word he spake!

"Little I have to give, O Lord," one cried,
"A coward heart that oft hath Thee denied; Couldst Thou with such a gift be satisfied?"
Yet when the soul had ceased its mournful plaint,
God took the love that seemed so poor and faint
And from it made a saint!

THE VIRTUE OF BELIEF.

By Rev. Dwight L. Moody.

Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it.—Numbers, xiii., 30.

I was very much amused the other day to see in a newspaper the statement that a certain revival had been postponed for one month, as if anyone could tell when a revival was to take place or could postpone one. It comes in God's time and when he wills, and nobody has the power to hurry or to hinder him. I believe that there is only one way to hinder God from working, and that lies in the very great unbelief that exists in the Church of God. Why, the world hasn't got the power of keeping God from working. All the unbelievers out of the Church can't hinder him one bit. It is the unbelief inside the Church that is alone able to do it. Now, the question comes, shall we cross into Paran and Kadesh? Shall we go up and take the land? There is no trouble about it. We are able to go up and overcome it. If God be with us, who can be against us? What has God got on this sin-cursed earth to delight in but his own flock? Let, then, the question be decided this morning that we are able to get up and possess the land. You remember that the Israelites sent twelve spies into Paran and Kadesh to reconnoiter. I suppose they wanted to see if God's word was true. That's always the way with unbelievers. God had said to them: "Go over, I'll help you. It will be yours. It's a land flowing with milk and honey. All you've got to do is to go and take it." But they thought they would first find out for themselves what it was worth, and whether they would be able to take it. So they sent twelve spies, and perhaps these brought back maps of the country, try, and charts of the walls and bulwarks. Anyhow, they brought back what we would call in these days a majority and minority report. Ten said that it would be impossible to take the country. All admitted that what God had told them was true about the milk and honey. Only Caleb and Joshua confirmed the Lord in regard to taking the land. All admitted that the land was good, but ten said they saw giants, and walls, and castles, and that the Israelites would not be able to overcome these. I can imagine these fellows in camp, telling their comrades that they had stood alongside these giants, and had been obliged to look up to see their faces, and that they were to them but as grasshoppers. When we are unbelievers we are but as grasshoppers, but when we believe, the giants become as grasshoppers. When we believe we are able to overcome giants, and walls, and everything.

So thus he went round the camp and found favor with the Jews. "I would rather go back to Egypt and make bricks without straw again. I would rather hear the crack of the slaveholder's whip again, than encounter these terrors." That's the way the Israelites talked, and that is the talk of the unbeliever. I am one of the spies sent out to look at the promised land. I have found it flowing with milk and honey. Let us say whether we fear anything now. Let us go up at once and take the land. I tell you that it is good. If Caleb's voice had prevailed, the Israelites might have saved forty years in the wilderness. To-day, I say that four-fifths of the professed children are not able to reach the land, simply on account of their unbelief. Many persons have told me that I mustn't expect too great a success. If I don't expect it, I won't have it. We must go at once and take the land. We are able to do it. "Their defense has gone from them." How easy it is for God to pour out His blessings in such profusion that we will not be able to receive them. That was the difference between Caleb and Joshua, and the ten. The ten got their eyes on the walls and the giants, but Caleb and Joshua lifted theirs above and saw Him on his throne. They said that it was easy for God to give them that country as he promised. They remembered how easily he had taken them across the Red Sea; how he had fed them with manna in the wilderness, and how he had made the water gush forth from the barren rock. If God wishes to aid you, then you are well able to go up and take the land. That is the difference between a man who has God with him, and the one who has not. The greatest difficulty we have to encounter is, therefore, the unbelief so current among Christians. Oh! would that God would sweep it away. Our God is able to do it. Let us not limit the power of the Holy One of Israel. Look upward and see him who sitteth on the right hand of God, and press forward: "I'll give you the land," he says. What will the rumormongers and the unbelievers do then? They can't hinder God's work, but they will come and be converted, and will become a blessing.

If we don't expect a blessing we don't get it. Look at Gideon. He had 30,000 men. God said that that was too many. They would all take their share of the glory of the victory, and there was no need of dividing it up so small. We must take our place in the dust, and give God the glory, if we want to do any good. "You've got too many," said God, "let all who are afraid step out." Twenty-two thousand stepped out. Poor Gideon! I'd like to have seen him then. His faith must have been a little shaky. It was like a meeting I once attended, when some persons went out. The others, attracted by the noise, stood up, and it looked as if all were going. "Ten thousand left," said God; "that's still too many." Then 9,700 more stepped out, leaving but 300; but they were 300 such men as Caleb and Joshua. There was no power that could stand against them; I think it was John Wesley who once said that, if he had 300 believing Christians, he would shake the gates of hell, and set God up in the world. I believe he could have done it.

Another thought that I wish to impress upon you—you must learn the lesson to let God work in his own way. We are not to mark out the way for him. We must say: "God, you are sovereign; here I am, use me if you will." We must let God use us, or set us aside as he chooses. We have got to get rid of the I's. There is no position from which he can be so glorified. You'll find that his ways are not our ways. They generally come in the opposite direction from those we expected. Who would ever have thought of taking Jericho with a lot of rams' horns, but God? If there had been so many reporters around Jericho at that time as there are nowadays, what fun they would have made of the plan of battle. Think of seven priests of our day going to take a fortified city by simply blowing upon rams' horns. How would Dr. Talmage and Bishop Potter look marching in single file blowing rams' horns? Why, they should have silver bugles at least if we had our way. God may use an empty pitcher in preference to a full one. He may lay down the iron and take up the straw to thrash the mountain. He makes use of the weak and despises the strong things very often in his work. God will only work in his own way. So let us learn the lesson—and try and make out a way for him.

Another lesson we must learn is that, if we wish to become children of Jesus, we must have faith in order to be worked. In Scotland I heard a preacher express the idea well. He said that many of the Israelites believed that God could kill Goliath with a stone from a sling, but only one believed that he would do it. We must believe that God will give us success. There is not a little child that he can't use if he wishes. If we want to do good we must come down to individual effort—the man upon his comrade, the woman upon her neighbor, and the young man upon the other young man. If I had the voice of an angel I would like to ask the thousands of ministers: "Shall we go up and take the land at once?" If we do, we have to go to work; we have to give way to the Lord—we have to bid farewell to the world—to stop parties, and festivals, and lectures. This is the one thing we have to make up our minds to do—to go up at once and take the land. I'd like to ask the many thousand teachers of America: "Is there not one Sabbath scholar that you can lead into the way?" Only think! Seventy thousand pairs of feet at once on the way to Zion. "Shall we rise and cross to Paran and Kadesh?" O God! may thy Spirit descend upon us this morning. Mayst thou use us according to thy will for good.

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

2. Next, it is essential to gather relevant information and data. This can be done through research, consultation with experts, or by analyzing existing resources.

3. Once the information is gathered, the next step is to analyze it. This involves identifying patterns, trends, and key factors that influence the outcome.

4. After analysis, a plan or strategy should be developed. This plan should outline the steps to be taken, the resources required, and the timeline for completion.

5. The final step is to implement the plan. This involves executing the tasks, monitoring progress, and making adjustments as needed to ensure the goal is achieved.

The purpose of this report is to provide a summary of the work done during the past year. The work has been divided into two main parts: the first part deals with the general theory of the problem, and the second part deals with the numerical solution of the problem. The first part is divided into two sections: the first section deals with the general theory of the problem, and the second section deals with the numerical solution of the problem. 1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress, dated January 1, 1861. It is a formal communication, and it is written in a very formal and dignified style. The President expresses his regret that he cannot continue to serve the country, and he expresses his confidence in the future of the country.

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

In the case of Public Works, they found no evidence in the report of Congress—none that the Bureau had sufficient funds to carry out a program of investigation, which legislation did in the absence of the report.

According to the complaint, they tried to "be-haviorally repress" without notice and during an absence, although the law says "A Black man to be allowed to be present, and to be furnished with notice when any complaint is about to be preferred against him." (Man-Div. p. 153)

The Bishop was allowed to come before the court.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

...should the General Conference that delegates should work with their officers for using their power in doing the things which God requires.

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible] of his legal responsibilities and the fact that on the date of entry into the United States, he was a minor.

special provision for the trial of a Bishop, for the special reason that a Bishop has no appeal."

Therefore, as the Bishop cannot appeal his case, his trial should be careful and complete. The witnesses should be unimpeachable; neither should they be chronic grumblers and complainers. The evidence should be positive, and not mere opinions based on grievances. The charges and specifications should involve moral character and maladministration, and not mere peccadillos. The administration should be judged by the law, and not by the little accidents involved in the case. Due notice should be given the accused, and he should be allowed to be present. The verdict is final, and anything like carelessness or precipitation is illegal, cruel and unjust.

Now to sum up the facts in Bishop Morrison's case: First, he was tried on complaints without written charges and specifications. It matters not what the complaints were; complaints are not the grounds of the trial. Second, he was tried during his absence without any sort of notification, and without his knowledge. Third, he was never at any time called before the Committee on Episcopacy, and was only admitted to that body by begging permission to appear before it. Fourth, he was retired twice by vote before a committee of investigation was appointed in his case. Fifth, the Committee of Investigation was appointed after it was admitted that they "had nothing to put before it," and that there was nothing against him. Sixth, the Committee of Investigation found a verdict in the Bishop's favor, and simultaneously the Committee on Episcopacy rendered a verdict against him.

If this is law, we would better revise our code of practice. If it is not law, it comes from a dangerous source as a precedent for the church and ministry. Even the complaints on which the Bishop was retired by the Committee on Episcopacy were so frivolous and baseless that the Committee of Investigation, after hearing them, did not think it necessary for the Bishop to introduce his witnesses. Many of these individual complaints were offset by committees and resolutions, coming up from the very conferences where they originated. And in not a single case was it shown that it was the voice of any conference that the Bishop would be unacceptable should he be returned to preside over their deliberations.

It is a source of satisfaction that the Committee were not a unit on any question connected with Bishop Morrison's case. Whether they differed on questions of law, or expediency, or both, it is not worth while to inquire; they evidently did not agree on doing a wrong to one of the most faithful and effective servants of the Church. And be it said to the credit of a part of that Committee that no man ever had stancher friends than those who stood by the Bishop in the most trying hour of his life. This case will go down in history as the most unique that ever agitated a Christian body.

The cases of Bishops Andrew and Morrison are almost parallel, inasmuch as neither was accused of immorality or maladministration, and neither was worn out and physically unfitted for the active duties of the Episcopacy. It was no more lawful to superannuate the one than to depose the other. But expediency evidently played its part in both cases. The Apostle says: "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient." Our version too often is: "All things are expedient unto me, but all things are not lawful." It is never expedient to do an unlawful thing, and as we many years ago, on this very subject, repudiated expediency, there is no reason why we should endorse it now.

I have written up this case that the Church may get the facts which are due to the Church, and which have never yet been fully published in any form. I have written for the Church on the plain surface facts of the law, that the Church may be informed concerning this matter. Bishop Morrison is an officer of the Church, and the Church ought to know what has been done. The Bishop did not instigate this article, nor did he even remotely suggest it, but the Church is entitled to it, even though the Bishop should not endorse it.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

VIII.

In 1883 our Conference assembled in Malvern, within twenty miles of Hot Springs. Bishop Granberry was our president. He read a chapter, a song was sung, and there were two or three prayers, and the Bishop made a talk. I sat and meditated, and the Conference reminded me of a large family reunion. The white heads, the middle-aged, the mothers, and the boys and girls were present. All looked complacent and happy and much interested in the proceedings of the Conference. Thanksgiving Day came, and the Bishop preached an appropriate sermon from Psalms 103: 1-11, inclusive. Dr. Andrew Hunter was called on to pray, and he first made the humblest, and heartiest, and most comprehensive confession that I ever heard. Many years have passed, but I remember how he began: "O, Lord, we confess with shame that we are a nation of drunkards, and Sabbath-breakers," etc. It was a very enjoyable session.

My appointment was, Carolina and Mr. Vernon, two elegant country churches, nine miles apart, with a parsonage. It was called by some the nicest appointment in the Conference. The Carolina membership consisted almost entirely of North Carolinians, and I believe there were fewer black sheep among them than any flock that I ever had the care of. The other church consisted of nice, intelligent people as members, and some of them were very spiritual. I had the honor to serve the charge at two different times, and we had precious revivals each time. At the close of 1884 the Conference met in Little Rock. I did not attend for the first time. I was in poor health, having dumb chills, and remained at home. A few days afterwards I got the Arkansas Methodist, which gave my appointment as "Harmony Grove Mission." No such charge in the Conference. Never heard of it before. Where was it? About three weeks after Conference my presiding elder wrote me that about thirty miles down the Ouachita River, on the opposite side, my work lay.

Those three weeks waiting to learn the whereabouts of my work were long weeks with me. Floods of rain had fallen and the river was so swollen that the ferryman refused to cross it. I was still on my old charge, was in a poor state of health, and water-bound. Depressing—a little so—and I was a little gloomy. Was out chopping firewood one cold, cloudy day in those three weeks, silently meditating, when, like a flash, this language of the Psalmist occurred: "Why art thou cast down, O, my soul? Why art thou disquieted within me? No more depression. The clouds lifted, and how beautifully the sun shone! I received right there in the forest one of the richest spiritual blessings of my life. Some time in January we got moved and found elegant people there, but no parsonage. I got a house and we spent a very pleasant year. I gathered some scattered sheep, and otherwise so built up the work, that it never was called a mission any more.

Our Conference again assembled in Arkadelphia. The last time was in 1876, this time in 1885. We were visited by Drs. McFerrin, Young and Hoss. They all preached, of course; the old doctor one morning on the evidences of Christianity. He represented our publishing house, but looked more like a corpse than a man of business. His face was pale, his cheeks were hollow, and his eyes so dim that he could not read; but his sermon was most pathetic and tender, and moved us all to tears.

Nothing unusual occurred until love feast on Sunday morning, when Harry May, a converted Jew, arose and gave us an interesting and wonderful account of his conversion to Christianity. All seemed to be impressed with his sincerity and earnestness, and, as he was near the close, Dr. Hoss arose and walked across the church to where May was standing, and threw his arms around him and gave him a hearty hug. Dr. E. E. Hoss visited us I think every year for several. We became very familiar with him. Dr. A. R. Winfield called him the "bloated Tennessee Hoss," and we were agreed that he was a brainy Hoss and beautiful in symmetry of character.

I was relieved of mission work and moved a few miles to Hampton, in the same county. Hampton was the county seat, and, while it was small, it had the county officials, a nice population, a neat Methodist church and parsonage. We moved in just before Christmas and were pounded with meat, lard, flour, silver, greenbacks, etc. All was moving on nicely until a cold spell, January 8th. Our room had a fine, large fireplace, and good wood was abundant, and yet it was very difficult to keep warm day or night. In vain we closed doors and windows, and rolled our beds in front of the fire; the wind was so furious and cold that we felt it keenly. We thought our house was the coldest in town, and we learned that all others thought the same. Our large, fine, black tomat would lie by the fire awhile and conclude, I suppose, that the weather was all right, and want to get out. On opening the door for him the wind would strike him, and he would lay back his ears and growl and hurry back to the fire. The hogs quarreled about their cover, and the dear people stayed in their quarters. This was January, 1886.

VANDERBILT BOARD OF TRUST IN SESSION

With three or its members enjoined from participating in its transactions, the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University met at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning at Wesley Hall, on the Vanderbilt campus, and approved plans which, if put into effect, will mean the placing of the medical and dental departments of the institution on the present Peabody College site, and the removal of half the students of the university to that section.

Three hundred thousand dollars have been offered for the development of the university. One-half of this amount, however, depends on the acceptance of the other half, and the latter portion is conditioned on the transfer to Peabody College of eleven and a half acres of the Vanderbilt campus in exchange for the present site of Peabody.

The Board approved the acceptance of the money offered for Vanderbilt, but final acceptance cannot be made except with the consent of the Chancery Court, which Tuesday morning enjoined the Board from selling or transferring any real estate of the university.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix, president of the Board of Trust, tendered his resignation Tuesday morning, both as executive head and as a member of the Board. The vacancy thus caused among the trustees was not filled, but Judge W. C. Ratcliffe, of Little Rock, Ark., was elected president for a term of four years.

The money offered for the development of Vanderbilt University is from William K. Vanderbilt and from the General Education Board of New York, which is handling the educational fund to which $40,000,000 was contributed by John D. Rockefeller.

The offer of $150,000 from the General Education Board was promised on condition that a similar amount could be secured from another source. William K. Vanderbilt then offered $150,000 to Chancellor Kirkland to be used in enabling Vanderbilt to carry out the plan to enlarge the scope of her medical and dental departments by taking over the present campus of Peabody College.

As it is only by securing the $150,000 from W. K. Vanderbilt that the $150,000 can be secured from the General Education Board, Vanderbilt will get none of the money, it is stated, unless the transfer between Vanderbilt and Peabody is made. The $150,000 offered by the Education Board is for the general endowment fund.

Chancellor Kirkland made a report at the meeting, explaining the proposed relation between Vanderbilt and Peabody.

It was shown at the session that if the $300,000 which has been offered can be secured, and the medical and dental departments moved to the Peabody campus, these two departments of Vanderbilt University can be steadily enlarged, new buildings would be erected and the old ones improved. It was stated:

"It would mean that at least 500 students—one-half of the university—would be placed in that section of Nashville," said Chancellor Kirkland.

The Board of Trust passed a resolution thanking Mr. Vanderbilt and the General Education Board for their offers.

In his letter of resignation Bishop Hendrix said he had not changed his sentiments concerning the righteousness of the cause represented by the Board. His letter of resignation was dated July 5, 1910, and is as follows:

"Mr. Whiteford Cole, Secretary Board of Trust, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: I herewith transmit to you as secretary of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University my resignation as president and member of the Board of Trust, to be presented at their next meeting. This I do with unchanged sentiments as to the righteousness of the cause represented by the Board, and only in view of my delicate relation as an executive officer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose Bishops are authorized and empowered by the General Conference to institute legal proceedings. Yours respectfully, E. R. HENDRIX."

The portion of the Vanderbilt campus which it is planned to exchange for Peabody campus is a strip of eleven and a half acres facing on Garland Avenue, and extending to in front of Chancellor Kirkland's residence. The Peabody campus has twelve acres.

Ultimately, it is stated, Vanderbilt intends to have a modern hospital on the Peabody campus, if the plans for the transfer of land are carried through.

Eighteen members of the Board of Trust were present at the session Tuesday, eight or ten being absent. Those enjoined from attending were Claude Waller, J. A. Robins and R. F. Jackson. Process was served on them early Tuesday morning immediately following the granting of a temporary injunction by Chancellor Allison. From the Nashville Tennessean of October the 26th:

"Try to be happy in this present moment, and put not off being so to a time to come; as though that time should be of another make from this, which has already come, and is sure."—Thomas Fuller.

"Life is not made up of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, of which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart."—Sir Humphrey Davy.

Church News

At the recent session of the Holston Conference Rev. R. M. Standefer, well known in North Mississippi, was assigned to Jasper, Tennessee.

The last issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate contains a picture of Dr. W. B. Ricks, the new pastor of Tulip Street Church of that city. Dr. Ricks came to his present responsible charge from State Street Church of Bowling Green, Kentucky.

The Presbyterians will use a portable church in their missionary operations in New Orleans. It will be so constructed that it can be put together and taken down without difficulty. It is said that such a building can be procured for $600 or $800.

The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, says: "Twenty years ago the New Testament was first printed in Hebrew for the Jews, and 600,000 copies were sold. There are now thought to be 250,000 Jewish Christians, and 3,000 converted Jews are preaching the gospel."

The Board of Missions of the M. E. Church will meet in Baltimore on November 3. Both Mr. Roosevelt and ex-Vice-President Fairbanks are scheduled to be present. The latter will preside over a meeting at which the distinguished New Yorker will deliver an address.

The Roman Catholics have recently consecrated the magnificent St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City. It cost four million dollars, and has been under process of construction for more than half a century. It is said to be one of the really great religious edifices of the Western Hemisphere.

Following the prayer meeting at West End Church, Nashville, on the evening of October the 26th, a beautiful silver service of Colonial pattern was presented by the ladies of that congregation to the retiring pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Byrd. The presentation speech was made by Chancellor J. H. Kirkland.

Dr. J. S. French, the new pastor of historic old McKendree, though he has been in Atlanta for the past four years, is a native Tennessean, having been born in Jonesboro thirty-seven years ago. Most of his ministry has been spent in the Holston Conference. As a bright and capable pastor, he ranks with the foremost in the connection.

The Arkansas Conference will have a course of lectures on the New Testament at its approaching session. They will be delivered succeeding evenings by that most finished of Methodist scholars, Dr. Gross Alexander. That these discussions will be luminous and helpful is beyond question; but that the time arranged for them is opportune, is not so certain.

Including both Protestants and Roman Catholics, there are 1,310,421 church members in New York City. The gain during the past decade was 76,744. Ten years ago 35.9 per cent. of the population was in the churches; now it is 37.2 per cent. There are sixty-six distinct religious bodies at work in the great metropolis. Of those which are Protestant, the largest are the Lutherans and Episcopalians.

The Young Men's Christian Association of North America met in Toronto on October the 28th, with a large number of delegates in attendance. It is the first time in a quarter of a century that the international meeting of the Association has been held in Canada, and as a consequence great enthusiasm was manifested. The convention represented a widespread constituency of not less than 500,000.

The annual convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies will be opened at New Orleans November 13 with pontifical mass at the old St. Louis Cathedral. Monsignor Falconio, the apostolic delegate at Washington, will occupy the throne in the sanctuary, and Bishop Morris, of Little Rock, will deliver a sermon upon this occasion. Fifteen bishops and archbishops will participate in the ceremonies. The convention will be concluded November 16.

Owing to the inability of the members to agree on a site, the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of New York, to which John D. Rockefeller belongs, has decided to abandon the task of constructing a new house of worship. This means that the $200,000 raised by the congregation for the new edifice, less $20,000 paid for the plans, will be refunded to the subscribers. Mr. Rockefeller had agreed to duplicate any amount raised by the membership. It is said that the movement to procure a more modern building has been much hindered by the ill health of the famous pastor, Dr. Charles F. Aked.

Drs. W. C. Lovett and M. J. Cofer have been re-elected editor and assistant editor, respectively, of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate for an additional term of four years. These brethren richly deserve the vote of confidence and lengthened tenure given them. No paper comes to our table that we appreciate more than the one which they are making for the Church. The Wesleyan is not only a credit to Georgia Methodism, but also to the whole connection. There is talk of increasing its size, though it is already a thirty-two-page journal. We rejoice in the growing success of our worthy contemporary.

We note in the Central Methodist Advocate the statement that the Canadian Methodists have suspended the publication of their Epworth League paper. The causes which led to their action we do not know. There were some who advocated the discontinuance of the Epworth Era before the late General Conference convened, but they did not muster much following at Asheville. We think every large denomination ought to publish at least one bright and interesting periodical for its young people. But the production of such a journal is far from being an easy task. It is a rare gift to be able to grip the youthful mind, either in the pulpit or on the printed page.

Upon the invitation of President Taft, two hundred laymen interested in the foreign work of the Young Men's Christian Association recently met for a conference in the East Room of the White House—the first time a religious gathering ever assembled in the executive mansion. The meeting was presided over by that greatest of Methodist laymen, Dr. John R. Mott, and the President actively participated in the deliberations. The only clergyman present was Bishop Roots, whose diocese is in central China. It was decided to raise $1,500,000 for the extension of the work of the Association in foreign lands. This is a needed and significant movement, which will doubtless accomplish much toward the extension of the Master's kingdom.

The Methodist Bishops' meeting in Washington City called upon President Taft on the 27th ult. Bishop Warren, the senior of the episcopal college, made a brief address to the President in which he outlined the work which the denomination he represented has in view. Mr. Taft in responding compared the foreign missionary work the church is doing to the humanitarian work the Government is doing in holding the Philippines until they are capable of self-government. He closed by saying to them: "I am glad to recognize that in coming here you agree with me that we are all working in the same field—yon in one way and those of us who conduct the civil part of the Government in another; but it is all for the glory of God and the promotion of Christianity among men."

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., bearing date of the 26th ult., says:

"The first meeting of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, called here for a week's conference on important church subjects, was held to-day. Bishop H. W. Warren, of Denver, senior member of the Episcopal College, presided. Among others present were: Bishops Cranston, of Washington; Moore, of Cincinnati; Hamilton, of Boston; Berry, of Buffalo; McDonald, of Chicago; Bashford, of Peking; Burt, of Zurich; Wilson, of Philadelphia; Nealey, of New Orleans; Anderson, of Chattanooga; Quayle, of Oklahoma City; Smith, of Portland, Me.; Hughes, of San Francisco; McIntyre, of St. Paul; Bristol, of Buenos Aires; Hartzel, of Africa; Oldham, of Singapore; Harris, of Japan and Korea, and Robinson, of Bombay. To-night a reception was given at Foundry Church to the visiting prelates."

The Central Christian Advocate of the Methodist Episcopal Church pays the following deserved compliment to our General Organ under its present capable management:

"Our anticipations regarding the kind of paper Dr. T. N. Ivey would produce as editor of the Christian Advocate, official paper of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are more than realized. Sensitive, refined, well educated, experienced in journalism, a gentleman of the old school, without assumption and without haste or fear, and withal wielding a winged and stable pen, Dr. Ivey was certain to produce an Advocate which would fascinate as well as instruct and defend his denomination. He has more than made good. He now calls to his side Rev. J. S. Chadwick, D. D., formerly editor of the Alabama Christian Advocate, a virile and able writer. The Advocate has sparkle and depth, and is created by modern men and brothers."

VANDERBILT BOARD REPLIES TO THE BISHOPS

The following formal reply was made to the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University to the action taken by the Bishops at their meeting in Nashville on July 12th:

"The Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University is in receipt of resolutions passed by the College of Bishops at a meeting held July 12, 1910, declaring certain acts of the Vanderbilt Board in filling vacancies in its own body null and void.

"Inasmuch as this matter has now been committed by the Bishops into the hands of legal counsel, the trustees do not feel that it is necessary to make any further reply at this time, except to respectfully ac-

PROTESTANTISM DYING OUT

Rev. Bernard Vaughan, an English Roman Catholic priest, recently preached a sermon in New York in which he affirmed, so the papers report, that Protestantism is dying out, and the only hope for America is to turn to Romanism. This is startling. If true, but it is not true. The Rev. Vaughan "was only taking counsel of his desire" when he expressed himself thus wise. The ranks of those who are standing up to-day "protesting" against the heresies and superstitions of the Romish Church were never so numerous nor so well filled as at present. Spectacular processions of priests dressed up in absurd church millinery along our city streets is no evidence that America is rushing pell-mell into the Roman fold for deliverance. Among some of the things that remain is the hard common sense for which our fathers were somewhat celebrated. As long as we have this we are not going to turn to Romanism with any undue haste. The present condition of Austria, Spain, Portugal and South American countries—lands where the panacea of Romanism has been given a full and fair trial—is ample contradiction of the alleged "saving power" of Father Vaughan's Church.—W. S. Hammond, in the Baltimore and Richmond Advocate.

IMPORTANT.

Dear Brethren: For the convenience of those attending the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference at Homer, I am trying to secure a special train on the L. & N. W. from Hagen to Homer, Tuesday, December 6th.

All from the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts, and from part of the Lafayette District, can come via the L. R. & N., leaving New Orleans at 6:10 Monday, or Baton Rouge at 9 p. m. Monday, taking a sleeper for Hagen, arrive at Hagen at 5:10 a. m. Tuesday, take Homer special and arrive in Homer at 11 a. m.

All from the Monroe District can leave Monroe via V. S. & P. at 7:05 a. m. Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbsland.

All from the Shreveport District can leave Shreveport via V. S. & P. at 6:20 a. m. Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbs.

Owing to the reduced rate given, it will require a guarantee of one hundred passengers from the two points, Hagen and Gibbs, to secure the special. Therefore, let everyone who will, come via either of the above-named routes, meeting the special at either Hagen or Gibbs. Please write me by return mail, stating at which point you will join the special.

Those south of Hagen and east of Monroe can make connection with the special via L. R. & N. only.

If we do not secure the special, all who do not reach Homer at 5:20 p. m. Monday, will be delayed in reaching here until 5:20 p. m. Tuesday.

By running the special it will give time for all work of the examining committees to be completed Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Awaiting your early instruction, I remain,

Fraternally yours,
WM. H. COLEMAN.

The possessions of the late Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) have been appraised at $611,136. The entire estate will go to his only living child, the wife of Ossip Gabrilowitch, the Russian pianist.

Both Louisiana and Mississippi are represented in the electorate of the Hall of Fame of the University of New York, the former by Judge Joseph A. Breauy, of Baton Rouge, and the latter by Judge A. H. Whitfield, of Jackson.

President Taft has accepted the honorary presidency of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, and now sustains the same relation to that organization in the United States that King George does in England.

The "grandfather clause" lately incorporated into the Oklahoma Constitution, has been held valid by the Supreme Court of that State. This provision declares that no man is eligible to suffrage whose grandfather might not have voted. The effect of it is to disfranchise a large number of negroes.

A $50,000 monument to the memory of General John B. Hood, of Confederate fame, was unveiled in Austin, Texas, on October the 26th. It consists of a huge shaft of Georgia granite, surmounted by a life-size bronze statue of the distinguished soldier. The survivors of Hood's Texas Brigade took a prominent part in the ceremonies of the day.

It is stated that the United Steel Corporation earned over $115,000,000 during the past nine months of the current calendar year. Of this amount about $95,000,000 is said to represent the net income of this colossal company. These figures are positively appalling. Beyond question the greatest problem that confronts our citizenship is that of curbing the power of corporate wealth.

Ex-Governor A. D. Candler, of Georgia, died at his home in Atlanta on October the 26th after an extended illness. He served as chief executive of the Empire State of the South for two terms, and was held in high esteem in that commonwealth. He was a member of the noted Candler family, so many of which have achieved distinction in life, and was seventy-six years of age.

Theodore Roosevelt was fifty-two years old on October 27. Many messages of congratulation were received at his home at Oyster Bay, but the ex-President was too busy campaigning for the Republican ticket in New York to take any notice of the anniversary of his birth. What a prodigious amount of labor he has crowded into the past twenty years of his life! His career is one of the most remarkable in American history.

The Department of Agriculture has estimated the rice area of the United States this year to be 717,300 acres, 67.3 per cent of which is devoted to the Honduras variety, and 29.3 to the Japanese kind. Louisiana, according to this report, plants 371,300 acres, and Mississippi, 3,000. The acreage in other States is as follows: North Carolina, 1,200; South Carolina, 17,300; Georgia, 4,000; Florida, 900; Alabama, 1,000; Texas, 264,800; Arkansas, 53,800.

Oysters grow only during summer, and especially during long, warm summers at that, and are scarcely big enough for the mouth before the third year. It is easy after looking over a bunch of shells to tell how old an oyster is. A summer hump and the winter sink come across the shell every year, but after the seventh or tenth year full growth comes; then, by looking at the sinks between the humps, it is hard to tell anything more about Miss Oyster's age. Oysters live to be twenty years old.—The Daily States.

The elections which are to be held on November the 8th are of great importance. Thirty-six Governors are to be chosen, and thirty State Legislatures elected. The members of the Lower House of Congress will also be determined by the ballots cast. Interest is centered upon New York where celebrities of world-wide note are figuring in the contest. The outcome will decide the political complexion of the next national House of Representatives, and may have much to do in forming the lines for the struggle over the presidency in 1912.

The Rockefeller General Board of Education met in New York City on October 25th and made conditional appropriations to six institutions of learning, which aggregate $725,000. The donations promised are as follows: Baylor University, Waco, Texas, $200,000; Trinity College, Durham, North Carolina, $150,000; University of Chattanooga, Tenn., $150,000; Meredith College, Raleigh, North Carolina, $50,000; Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., $100,000; Amherst College, Amherst, Mass., $75,000. Each of these institutions will have to raise a certain specified sum before it will be able to obtain the amount pledged to it.

Thirteen American Universities have a combined endowment of $135,340,000. Leland Stanford Junior stands at the head, with $24,525,922. Then comes Columbia, with $23,512,264. Next is Harvard, with $20,272,740; then Chicago, with $13,999,900; then the University of Pennsylvania, with $12,325,687; and Yale, Cornell, Washington, Johns Hopkins, California, Northwestern, Princeton and New York in the order named, with endowments ranging from $9,200,000 down to $1,149,728. These thirteen institutions had a combined attendance of 46,186 during the collegiate year of 1908-9. Only one, Columbia, had over 6,000 students. Three, Harvard, Chicago and Cornell, had over 5,000 each.—Central Christian Advocate.

A recent investigation by Hon. St. Clair Adams, district attorney of New Orleans, resulted in disclosures which call for more stringent measures in the regulation of the cocaine traffic. It has developed the fact that peddlers are growing wealthy on the profits accruing from the illegal sale of this nerve-destriving drug. It is stated that one vendor sold in the course of a year a greater quantity of the narcotic than should legitimately be sold by all of the drug stores of New Orleans combined. These peddlers ply their nefarious trade principally among the habitues of the restricted district and the ignorant whites and negroes. The campaign against the evil is already bearing fruit, several vendors of the white powder having been apprehended. The Louisiana State Board of Health has taken the matter up, and it is stated that at the next meeting of the Board stringent measures will be adopted, regulating the sale of cocaine and placing the responsibility for its enforcement on the wholesale druggists, where it properly belongs.

A method of felling trees with no other tools than a taut wire and a motor has been devised by a clever German inventor. The use of a wire heated by an electric current, to burn its way through the tree, we are reminded by a writer in Cosmos (Paris, September, 17th), has long been known. The Berlin inventor, Hugo Gautke, has simplified this process by causing the wire to become incandescent through the work that it does itself. We read: "This result is obtained in his system by the friction of a steel wire one-twenty-fifth of an inch in diameter, which experience has shown, may traverse a trunk 20 inches thick in six minutes. The wire, which is given an excessively rapid to-and-fro motion by an electric motor, becomes heated by the friction to a temperature high enough to burn the wood and penetrate it rapidly. The result is a neater cut than that made with a saw. The wire severs the largest trunks without the necessity of opening the cut with wedges, and the tree may be cut at any desired place, even below the ground, so that no protruding stump is left. The electric current may be brought to the place from a distant station. Such a station may be established at the border of the forest; a gasoline motor of 10 horse-power and a dynamo are all that is needed. By this means the huge trees that are met with in tropical forests, whose diameters often exceed ten feet, may be felled by a single executioner. The method has, in all cases, the immense advantage that it prevents the loss of wood that results from the use of the ax."—The Literary Digest.

FROM BROTHER MCINTOSH.

Dear Mr. Editor: I am now at home for a few days taking a needed rest, having just returned from Weatherford, Texas, where the Lord gave us an old time revival. The meeting was notable for its deep conviction and clear-cut conversions. Over one hundred joined the Methodist Church, and many joined the other churches of the city.

It is a great pleasure to get home and worship with Brother Randolph and his good people.

Brother Randolph and his cultured wife are very much beloved by not only the Methodist congregation, but by all the people of the community, and they are so well suited to this work that we would be delighted to have them another year.

Brother Randolph has not only been a blessing to us spiritually, but he has greatly built up the church along all lines.

He has one of the best Sunday schools I know of anywhere for the size of the town. There are over three hundred names enrolled on the Sunday school register. Both the Senior and Junior Leagues have been more than doubled in membership, and the interest is at high tide. He has also been a great help to us by improving our financial system. He persuaded us to adopt a weekly envelope system, and it is working like a charm. We expect to pay all claims in full by Conference. We realize that our present system is so complete that it will not be necessary to make any special effort on the closing days of the year, as we have done heretofore.

We have one Home and four Foreign Missionary Societies, and they are doing a splendid work. I have often said that our luka church pays more according to her ability than any church with which I am acquainted. When Brother Randolph, who is a strong preacher and a wise leader, makes his report at Conference, listen and see if it is not one of the best.

Mr. Editor, you are giving us a splendid paper, and it seems to me it gets better and better with each issue. The Lord bless you in your great work.

Yours fraternally,

W. M. MCINTOSH.

THE SOUTH'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE NATION.

The following brief but suggestive statement we take from the Fourth of July oration of Judge Emory Speer, delivered in Macon. May the record incite our younger men to noble deeds and high aims. Judge Speer said:

Fellow Citizens: This is the birthday of our great Republic. So far as I know this is the first time it has been formally celebrated, as of yore, by an organized camp of Confederate Veterans. The Confederate soldiers, of whom the veterans of to-day survive, were Southern men—that is to say, they were and are Americans of the Southern States. Of all others, it seems to me that we should celebrate the Fourth of July, Our Country's Natal Day.

A Southern man, Patrick Henry, before the old House of Burgesses, in Virginia, thrilled mankind with the undying words: "Give me liberty or give me death."

A Southern man, Thomas Jefferson, penned the Declaration which you have just heard through the musical eloquence of our friend and comrade.

A Southern man, George Washington, against the most adverse fortunes, led the patriot forces of our forefathers to final victory.

A Southern man, again, by the Louisiana Purchase, added to our country all that territory comprising the states of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming and Oklahoma.

A Southern man, Andrew Jackson, commanded the fathers and grandfathers of the veterans of Lee and Forest, Wheeler and Johnston at New Orleans, inflicted the bloodiest defeat upon a proud and disciplined British army ever sustained, where such army was not totally destroyed.

A Southern man, James Monroe, uttered these momentous words which gave to the powers of Europe conclusive warning that any future attempts to establish their colonies upon any foot of that hemisphere discovered by Columbus would not be tolerated by the American people.

A Southern man, John Forsyth, of Georgia, added to our territory the Riviera of the New World, the "Land of Flowers," the vast empire of Florida.

A Southern man, Sam Houston, at San Jacinto, won from Santa Anna the empire of Texas.

A Southern man, Winfield Scott, of Virginia, planted the Stars and Stripes above the hills of the Montezumas. A Southern man, Zachary Taylor, of Louisiana, led the gallant volunteers of our country from Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, via Monterey to Buena Vista, and thence on the bloody slopes of that famous field the Mississippi Rifles, with unflinching valor and deadly aim, for hours rolled back and swept away the charging columns of Mexico.

In command of the American regiment stood their colonel, a Southern man. His name, Jefferson Davis. As the result of these victories, under the presidency of a Southern man, James K. Polk, through the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, to our country was annexed the territory comprising the vast States of California, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico and Arizona.

It will thus be seen, except in the acquisition of Alaska and Hawaii, which are to be credited to Northern diplomacy, and of the Insular Possessions, in which the participation of Confederate veterans and their sons were surpassed by none—every foot of that vast empire, much more than half of our territory, which has been acquired since the peace with Great Britain, is directly ascribable to the statesmanship, the constancy, the foresight or the daring of Southern men.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

CONFERENCE ENTERTAINMENT.

To the Preachers and Members of the North Mississippi Conference:

Many applications have been received to provide entertainment for visitors. A few have been provided for. No more can be accommodated, either in private homes or hotels. Every place is occupied. All persons who come not having received a card notifying them that they have been provided for, will be disappointed. This does not apply to preachers or delegates. Fraternally,

Concerning Missions.

WHAT ONE CONFERENCE IS DOING.

By R. B. Eleazer.

The Missouri Conference is a striking illustration of what may be done in the way of special missionary support. The work now being carried on in this connection by the Sunday schools of that Conference is surprising in its magnitude, and ought to be inspiring in the highest degree to all our people who desire to undertake larger things for the world's evangelization. Mr. A. C. Johnson, a layman who has been appointed Conference Missionary Secretary, made a study of the Sunday school statistics of the Conference, and found that the schools were doing very little for the cause of missions. He noted further that, if each attendant on the Sunday schools had paid an average of two cents per member each month, the amount thus contributed would enable each district to undertake a special of from six to eight hundred dollars and still have a large margin. With this thought in mind, he visited the district meetings and presented his plan.

The results have fully justified his faith. Every District in the Conference unanimously adopted the plan and undertook the following work respectively:

The Sunday schools of the Chillicothe District will support twelve personal teachers for missionaries in China, at a cost of six hundred dollars.

The Fayette District will take six hundred dollars on the support of W. A. Davis, a missionary in Japan.

The Gallatin District will pay six hundred dollars on the support of W. R. Weakley, another Japanese missionary.

The Hannibal District will support W. J. Frost, of Granbery College, Brazil, at a cost of seven hundred and fifty dollars.

The Macon District will support M. W. Hester, a Cuban missionary, at a cost of seven hundred and twenty dollars.

The Mexico District undertakes six hundred dollars for Rev. M. B. Stokes, one of our best Korean missionaries, and two hundred dollars additional for the Anglo-Korean College at Songdo.

The Plattsburg District takes ten personal teachers for missionaries in Korea, at a cost of seven hundred and fifty dollars.

The St. Charles District will contribute six hundred and ninety-five dollars to the famous Hiroshima School for Girls in Japan.

The St. Joseph District will invest seven hundred and fifty dollars in the education of young men at the Anglo-Korean College.

The plan is simple. One Sunday each month in the Sunday school is set apart to missions and an offering of at least two cents per member is asked. Once a quarter a report from the field will be read to the school relating to the special work which it is supporting. This will provide a valuable missionary education for the pupils. If necessary, every dollar raised for these specials can be counted on the regular assessment of the church contributing.

This plan seems thoroughly practical and easy of accomplishment. It would seem that there is no district in our whole connection which might not do as much, while many, in fact, might do vastly more. Many districts and churches are already taking hold of special work of this character under the auspices of the Board, thus joining themselves to the mission field by living links, which are invaluable in the promotion of intelligent missionary interest.

At a later date, we will give the readers of the Advocate some statistics along this line which cannot fail to be of interest.

BATTLE FOR THE RIGHTS OF THE CHURCH BEGUN.

To determine the control of Vanderbilt University and to oust three members of the Board of Trust of that institution, who were seated in the face of the election of others by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the College of Bishops of that denomination Tuesday morning filed a bill in Chancery court at Nashville.

Without going into the merits of the case, Chancellor Allison granted several temporary restraining orders, on a showing that the Board of Trust had planned holding a meeting Tuesday morning, at which matters concerning the disposal of certain real property of Vanderbilt University were likely to come up for settlement.

The temporary restraining orders enjoined the Board of Trust and its executive committee and the executive officers of Vanderbilt University from executing or delivering and consummating any sale or exchange of real estate or contracts between Vanderbilt University and Peabody College. The court enjoined the defendants, R. F. Jackson, Claude Waller and J. A. Robins, trustees elected by the Board of Trust in opposition to those elected by the General Conference, from acting or participating in the meeting of the Board called for Tuesday morning, or acting as members of the Board of Trust until further orders of the court. The complainants gave an injunction bond of $5,000.

No injunction was issued against the holding of the meeting of the Board of Trust or against action by the Board upon matters concerning the relation of Vanderbilt with George Peabody College. Only the consummation of any such transactions was enjoined.

Decrees Prayed For.

The bill filed against the Board of Trust prays, among other things, for the following decrees:

That the M. E. Church, South, by and through its General Conference, is entitled to select, nominate or confirm, either by itself or through its General Board of Education, members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

That the action of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, as taken on June 11 and 12, 1910, in refusing to recognize the men elected by the General Conference, as members of the Board of Trust, was illegal and contrary to the fundamental law of the corporation and ultra vires the authority of the Board of Trust.

That Waller, Jackson and Robins have no right or title to the office of trustee, and that judgment be entered excluding them from such position.

That Harris, Godbey and Biggs, who were elected by the General Conference, be adjudged to be entitled to exercise the office of members of the Board of Trust to fill the vacancies caused by the deaths of Samuel J. Keith, Bishop Seth Ward and John B. Ransom.

That an injunction issue against the Board of Trust restraining it from holding or attempting to hold any special or regular meeting of the Board without notice to Godbey, Harris and Biggs, and without permitting these three men to participate in the meeting.

That an injunction be granted restraining Waller, Jackson and Robins from meeting with the Board of Trust or exercising the duties and privileges of members of the Board.

That the Board of Trust be enjoined from selling, transferring or disposing of or exchanging to George Peabody College for Teachers, any part of the real property belonging to Vanderbilt University.

Affirmed by Bishops.

The bill is affirmed by Bishop Collins Denny and Bishop James H. McCoy. It is signed by Fitzhugh & Biggs, of Memphis; P. D. Maddin, of Nashville; Harris & Harris, Judge Edward C. O'Rear, of Frankfort, Ky., and A. B. Anderson, Attorney General of the Tenth Judicial District. Percy D. Maddin and A. W. Biggs are security for costs.

The bill is seventy-four typewritten pages in length and gives a history of Vanderbilt University, as well as of the controversy between the College of Bishops and the Board of Trust. By records the bill shows that the educational institution now known as "Vanderbilt University" was chartered as "The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," and that it was the creature of the Southern Conferences of the Church, but not of the Church as such. The first Board of Trust was made up of members elected, some by one Conference and some by another.

After showing the development of new by-laws of the Board of Trust, the bill says: "And this by the action above quoted and similar action by other of the patronizing Conferences, Vanderbilt University was launched by the said Conferences as the member of said corporation, and acting as such, and for twenty-five years the Board of Trust and the patronizing Conferences acted in harmony, the Conferences agreeing in almost every instance to every recommendation or request of the Board of Trust, but with no thought upon the part of either the Board of Trust or of the patronizing Conferences the latter should surrender their rights as members in the corporation, and said rights have not been surrendered."

The bill sets forth how the several Conferences finally ceded their rights in the university to the General Conference of the Church, and that it then became the law of the institution that the Board of Trust submitted nominations for the election of trustees to fill vacancies to the General Board of Education of the Church, which then acted on such recommendations. The history of the present controversy is then set forth in full, it being shown that the Board of Trust attempted to change its by-laws, providing for a slightly different method of filling vacancies on the Board.

All the members of the College of Bishops are made complainants in the bill with the exception of Bishops E. R. Hendrix, O. P. Fitzgerald and J. S. Key. Bishop Hendrix is made defendant, while Bishops Fitzgerald and Key are neither joined as defendants nor complainants. These two Bishops are superannuated members of the College of Bishops, but the General Conference has relieved them of active duties as such.

In addition to the Bishops, the complainants are: N. E. Harris, of Georgia; V. A. Godbey, of Texas, and Albert W. Biggs, of Memphis, who were elected by the General Conference to fill vacancies on the Board of Trust, but who were not recognized by the Board.

The defendants are the members of the Board of Trust, named individually, and including Bishop E. R. Hendrix, president; W. R. Cole, secretary, and Chancellor Kirkland, together with Claude Waller, of Nashville; J. A. Robins, of Carroll County, and R. F. Jackson, of Nashville, who have been acting as members of the Board of Trust by virtue of their election to that position by the Board.

The attorneys for the Board of Trust are Vertress & Vertress, John Bell Keeble, Stokes & Stokes, J. C. Bradford and C. G. Trabue.—From the Nashville Tennessean of October the 26th.

PRAY FOR FLORIDA.

Mr. Editor: It has been more than two years since I dropped a message to your paper. Then we were in the midst of a great campaign, trying to elect a prohibition Legislature. How we succeeded in getting a prohibition amendment to the State Constitution submitted to the people by an overwhelming majority, is a matter of history known to all close readers. Our present State Constitution is such that it is generally admitted that we cannot have State-wide prohibition without a constitutional amendment. The campaign is now on. Tuesday, November 8th, will close it. That day the ballots will tell which side has won.

Since Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama went dry, Florida has become the home of many of their liquor leeches, and we have greatly suffered therefrom.

If the liquor forces lose Florida, it will not only be a State lost to their business, but more. Florida is now the greatest supply station adjacent to dry territory, the brewers and distillers are from here, so far as possible, supplying the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama with their commercial poison. Besides, for Florida to go dry, and Nebraska to win county option, would give the emphatic denial to their oft-repeated statement that the prohibition wave is receding, and would injure them throughout the nation.

The whiskey dealers know that they have much involved just now, and I doubt if they have so exerted themselves in any other States as they are now doing in Florida. Of all the Southern States we have the largest per cent. of foreign population. So our struggle is great, but our hope is in God.

Dear readers, this will reach you only a few days before our election, but I write it as a basis upon which to request and secure your prayers in our behalf. And would it be too much to suggest that the preachers on Sunday, November the 6th, might in a few sentences lead their congregations in prayer in our behalf? I feel that it would not be without its influence. Our needs are great, and all prayers of all good people are desired just now in behalf of the Land of Flowers. The South is just now at the beginning of an invading tide of foreigners. No State will feel this more than Florida. So now is our best time to win against the liquor forces. Pray for us.

GRANDMOTHER'S LOVE APPLES.

Has another tomato," urged Johnny's grandma, as she saw the last red slice disappear from Johnny's plate. "I think you like tomatoes."

"I do," said Johnny. "I like them raw and stewed and baked and most any way."

"Didn't you like tomatoes when you were little, grandma?" Johnny asked, as he saw grandma looking down at her plate with a smile in her eyes.

"No," grandma said, "but that was because I was a big girl before I ever tasted one. I never saw any until I was thirteen years old."

"I can remember it so well. A peddler who came by our farm once a month, bringing buttons and thread and such things to sell, brought the seed to mother."

"One spring morning he came, and after mother had bought all she needed, he began fumbling about in his pockets for something. Finally, he drew out a very small package and handed it to mother."

"I've brought you some love apple seed," he said. "I got them in the city, and gave my sister half and brought half of them to you."

"Thank you, kindly," mother said, as she looked at the little yellow seeds. "What kind of a plant is the love apple?"

"Well," said the peddler, "the man who gave the seeds to me had his plants last year in a sunny fence corner. The flowers are small, but the fruit is bright red, and is very pretty among the green leaves. You can't eat the fruit, though—it's poisonous. It's something new; the man who gave me the seeds got them from a captain of a ship from South America. They grow wild there."

"So mother planted her love apple seed in a warm fence corner, and they grew, and the little yellow blossoms came, and after them the pretty red fruit. We children would go out and look at it, and talk about it, and wonder if it would hurt us if we just tasted it."

"One day mother heard us talking about it, and she called us away, and told us if we could not be satisfied with the pretty red fruit just to look at, without wanting to eat it, she would have to pull up the love apple vines, and throw them away, for the peddler had said they were poisonous."

"We knew she would hate to do that, for no one else about had them, so we kept away from the fence corner, and the vine grew and blossomed, and the red showed in new places every day. The birds did not seem to be at all afraid of the poison fruit, but ate all they wanted of it."

"One day, in the early fall, my uncle came from New York. When he went out in the garden he stopped in surprise. 'Why, Mary,' he said, 'what fine tomato vines you have!'

"We call them love apples," mother said, and then she told him how the peddler had brought the seed. But when my uncle found that we were afraid to eat them, he had a hearty laugh. And then he showed mother how to get some ready for supper. And that was my first taste of tomato. Johnny," grandma said, "and you shall have some fixed for supper, in the same way, with cream and sugar."—Youth's Companion.

THE LADY WITH THE LAMP.

By Floyd Hardin.

It is the late summer of 1854, and all England is in arms. Two months have passed since the English fleet, under the command of Sir Charles Napier, sailed for the Baltic, sped on its way by the cheers of a hundred thousand spectators, shouting as one man the final words of the commander-in-chief to his soldiers: "Lads, sharpen your cutlasses and the day is ours." And now that vast acclaim of voices is heard again in the land, for news comes of the splendid victory at Alma; and as the people read of how hundreds of brave men here protested with their blood against the occupation of the Holy Land by the Czar, there arises a vision of the army returning in triumph, as Wellington had returned victorious forty years before.

But what is this dismal report that like a black cloud comes out of the tropical East? News of terrible want and suffering at the front—the wounded neglected, the sick uncared for, the dying uncomfited? At these descriptions of the filth, pestilence, disorder, and incompetence reigning in the army hospitals, the cry of victory turns to a cry of indignation that brave men who have offered their lives for their country's defense should die in neglect and squalid misery, with no woman's hand to soothe them and no effort made to save them.

"Are there no devoted women among us," wrote William Howard Russell from the seat of war, "able and willing to go forth and to minister to the sick and suffering soldiers of the East in the hospitals of Scutari? Are none of the daughters of England, at this extreme hour of need, ready for such a work of mercy? And all England takes up the cry, 'Whom shall we send and who will go for us?'"

Straightway there steps forward a tall, fair woman with eyes that speak tenderness and gentleness, answering in a voice of soft, rich quality. "Here am I, send me." Pray, who is this woman with the voice of velvet, the heart of compassion, and the will of steel? Read the history of the Crimean War; peruse a thousand tributes that do her praise; or search the affections of the British people, for their very heart-throbs speak her name.

Scarcely has a crying human need found its fulfillment with greater felicity than in the mission of Florence Nightingale. Inclined by nature and instructed to the work of nursing, and carefully trained in the hospitals of Germany, France, and England, no woman in the land, or indeed in all the world, was better fitted to carry out the great work that lay at England's door. Only a week later, on October 21st, Florence Nightingale and her band of forty-one nurses left London for the perils of the far-off Eastern hospitals, with the benediction of all England upon her head. After a short stop at Paris the brave company set sail from Marseilles, and on November 4th reached Scutari.

News of the approach of this band of mercy spread rapidly before them, and the sufferers in the hospital anxiously awaited their arrival. Upon seeing them for the first time, one poor fellow in the wards burst into tears as he cried: "I can't help it; I can't, indeed, when I see them. Only think of English women coming out here to nurse us! It seems so homelike and comfortable." Another, wounded "Tommy," described the beneficent effect that Florence Nightingale and her "Angel Band" had on the rough soldiers in these words: "Before she came there was such cursin' and swearin', and after that it was as holy as a church."

Never did a band of women, arriving in a strange land, weary with travel, meet a more gigantic task than confronted this brave contingent of English nurses. The great Barrack Hospital at Scutari, in which the wounded soldiers were sheltered, was an immense quadrangular building, with a tower at each corner, and situated on a green hill overlooking the blue waters of the glittering Bosphorus. But the beautiful exterior of the stately structure gave no suggestion of the filth, misery and confusion that reigned within. On both sides of the endless corridors, four miles in length, were packed sick and wounded soldiers, devoid of the barest decencies of life. Nolan, in his history of the war, says: "There were no vessels for water or utensils of any kind; no soap, towels, or clothes; the men lying in their uniforms stiff with gore and covered with filth to a degree and of a kind no one could write about; their persons covered with vermin which crawled about the floors and walls of the dreadful den of dirt, pestilence and death to which they were consigned." The greatest suffering was at night, when, at 10 o'clock, the lights were put out, and no one came near the helpless patients until the morning, despite the agonizing cries for water, the groans of the dying, and the ravings of the delirious.

It was a heart-rending experience when Miss Nightingale made her first round of the wards of that Augean stable, which she and her nurses had to cleanse. No time to discuss theory or initiate carefully planned reforms; the time called for heroic action. Less than twenty-four hours after her arrival upon the dismal scene nine hundred wounded men were sent from the bloody heights of Inkerman. The inmates were now numbered by the thousands, and every inch of available space was occupied. Now came the testing moment of Florence Nightingale's life. Had she failed at this moment to rise to the great task before her, her history would have been the story of a benevolent futility, rather than a noble and heroic achievement. Mattresses, cooking utensils, bandages, and food supplies were needed at once. Many of these stores were close at hand, but not readily available without tedious formalities. Miss Nightingale was informed upon inquiry by the guard that three days' delay was necessary before orders could be received for disposal of the goods. And now, our lady-in-chief, illustrating that rare executive power in which lay the secret of her success, determined to cut the swathes of red tape that had proved shrouds to hundreds of the wounded men, and upon her command the sergeant of the guard broke in the door of the magazine, and the necessary supplies were made immediately accessible.

Various reforms were quickly inaugurated throughout the hospital: libraries, schools and laundries were established; a sanitary kitchen was installed under the management of M. Soyer, a distinguished French chef who volunteered his services; and a system of nursing was instituted which in six months reduced the death rate from sixty per cent. to a little above one per cent.

Our heroine now took advantage of the quiet order, and efficient service that reigned in the Barrack Hospital to push on into the Crimea and inspect the hospitals at the actual seat of war. It was here, while in pursuance of her duty in the trenches before Sebastopol, that she was stricken with the Eastern fever and for twelve days lay in her little hut on the Genoese heights dangerously ill. In London the papers heralded her illness as a national calamity; and when the sad news was told at the Barracks Hospital at Scutari, sick men turned their faces to the wall and cried like children. But fortunately England was not yet destined to lose so indispensable a helper at the seat of the war. The lady-in-chief rallied from her attack, and, returning to her labors at Scutari, remained there until the close of the conflict.

Upon her return to England after the cessation of hostilities, Florence Nightingale was accorded every honor. England had to bestow a gift of $250,000 was presented her, with which she established the Florence Nightingale Training School for Nurses; later the King bestowed upon her the degree of the Order of Merit, and in 1908 she was granted the honorary freedom of the city of London. To-day the whole world mourns the quiet passing of her life on the fourteenth of last month.

Long after the memory of Inkerman and the Almas, and the awful charge of the "Six Hundred" shall have faded into forgetfulness, the name of Florence Nightingale will be cherished, for she has built herself an enduring monument in the hearts of the British people. In the hallway of the Florence Nightingale School for Nurses in London stands a statue of our lady in a nurse's dress with a lamp in her hand; and while she is remembered for her benevolence and her valued writings on the art of nursing, it is as the "Lady with the Lamp" that the English people love to think of her. A soldier thus describes her midnight rounds with her little nurse's lamp, when all was still in the hospital at Scutari: "She would speak to one and another and nod and smile to many more, but she could not do it to all, you know, for we lay there by hundreds; but we could kiss her shadow as it fell, and lay our heads on the pillow again content." It was Longfellow who put this tender picture into enduring verse.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

REPORT OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, representing the three Annual Conferences, met in the Advocate office Oct. 27th to consider the interests of the paper. It was gratifying to ascertain that all things were in a prosperous condition. All financial obligations have been promptly met, and the outlook is most encouraging. The number of subscribers has increased more than eight hundred during the year, and now has reached nearly eight thousand. The number of copies circulated during the year were three hundred and ninety-two thousand, seven hundred and forty-five (392,745) and the average weekly circulation was seven thousand five hundred and fifty-two (7,552). This is attributable to the loyal and faithful efforts of its many staunch friends among the preachers and also to the enterprise of the publisher, Mr. C. O. Chalmers. It gives us pleasure to say that in all respects, Mr. Chalmers fulfills his contract with the Publishing Committee, and that the paper could not have fallen into better hands. He is most competent and devoted to the interests of the Advocate, and enterprises for it large things. He has a vision of a still greater paper that shall meet the ever-growing demands and do noble work in this important field. It is to the interest of the Church and the cause of religion that this large-hearted and self-sacrificing publisher be given cordial aid and co-operation in the upbuilding of the paper.

Dr. Meek took charge as editor last January, and with what success he has done his work, all who read the paper know. His work thus far shows that he is worthy to rank among the great and chosen editors whose writings have adorned this paper and made it a powerful agency for more than fifty years. His style is clear, forceful and chaste, while the matter of his utterances is important and instructive. He is true to the doctrine and polity of the Church and has proved himself an able defender of both. He fights no dead devils, but finds enough to engage his zeal and effort in the world of to-day. He is at once conservative and properly progressive. We admire the fine courtesy and charity displayed toward Christians of other communions, and also the genuine loyalty exhibited toward his own. Any one may see in the pages of the Advocate manifested its spirit of true religion. The editor has a large acquaintance with public matters, and men and affairs pass under his judicious review. Thoughtful people read the paper with approval. It is a fact, too, that the quantity of original reading matter has been much increased, until now it is not excelled in this regard, nor in any other, by any published by the Church. We think that there should be more communications from the body of the Church, from busy preachers and busy laymen. Let our women, too, write more for the paper. Other things may easily be found to fill up all the columns of the Advocate, but they would not be relished so much, as they would lack the flavor of personality. Brevity in all articles is needed, as this is one of the chief graces in a writer.

Our paper, useful and efficient in all its past history, and never more so than to-day, sits in this great gateway of our land, and looks out upon the thousands of the three Conferences, and beyond, and asks their support. We trust that the appeal will be heeded, and that upon all alike may come the blessings of our Heavenly Father. E. H. MOUNGER.

BERATING THE CHURCH.

It seems to be the fashion of the day to find fault with the Church—to discover its deficiencies and hold them up to the public view. Reformers, riding some special hobby, talk as if it were antiquated and no longer a potent force in combating modern evils. Evangelists in conducting their revivals spend much of their time arraigning those who are of the household of faith, and charging them with the responsibility for all of the immoralities and religious indifference existing in the community. So severe are their denunciations at times that one is led to wonder what advantage there is in belonging to such an organization. And the constant sowing of such seed broadcast over the land has produced a harvest of suspicion and distrust as to the sincerity and uprightness of the membership of the Church, which has come to constitute one of the gravest difficulties to be overcome in reaching and saving the people of the outside world.

What basis in fact has this oft-repeated allegation that the Church is now more apostate than it has been in many decades? As we discern existing conditions, such an assertion is utterly unwarranted. There has never been a time when the Church was wholly pure—when all of its members were holy in heart and life and aflame with evangelical enthusiasm. Those possessed of such an idea need only to read attentively the epistles of Paul to be thoroughly disillusioned. Nor is there any promise that a congregation of perfect Christians will ever exist upon this planet before the Master. In power and glory, shall come again. On the contrary, the parable of the wheat and tares would seem to teach that the good and bad will exist together in the outward and visible kingdom until the end of time. It is right, of course, to preach plainly to the disciples of Christ, pointing out their inconsistencies, and when necessary discreetly to administer discipline, but the notion that all evil may be extirpated from among them is but a Utopian dream. Perfection in any universal sense belongs not to earth. It was lost in Eden, and will be found no more until we enter the gates of Paradise.

To exchange the crozier, the symbol of pastoral care, for the "big stick," and belabor the flock of God, is a poor performance for any minister. If Zion is to be rebuked, let it be in utterances whose undertones echo the sentiments of love. Persuasion is more powerful than denunciation. The Judean shepherd did not drive, but led his flock, and the crook that he carried was more a weapon of defense than an instrument to chastise the sheep. The pulpit scold is not a preacher after the Scriptural pattern, but a degenerate later variety. It takes no courage to rail at a whole congregation about current evils. What tests one's bravery is to go direct to the individual whose deeds are wicked and remonstrate with him face to face. This was what Nathan did, when he said to David, "Thou art the man." It was what John the Baptist did, when he said to the enraged Herod concerning his brother Philip's wife, "It is not lawful for thee to have her." A tactful, personal interview with a man will usually accomplish more toward his salvation than any amount of stacy public invective.

One deplorable result of inveighing against the Church is that it lowers it in the general esteem of the people. With a depreciated sense of its importance and value, they are little inclined to attend its services, and less disposed to join it. May not this in some measure account for our empty pews and the seemingly weakened influence of the Protestant Church among our masses? With the Roman Catholics it is different. They teach that the offices of the Church and the mediation of the priest are absolutely essential to one's spiritual life and salvation. Hence, Rome's votaries dare not wander away from her altars, because they believe that to do so is certain destruction. Herein lies the secret of her tremendous grip upon those who accept her teachings.

Of course, we would not have Protestants entertain for the Church that superstitious awe and misconception which characterize the adherents of the Vatican. But we do think they need a more exalted conception of its dignity and worth, of its ministry and mission. It is a divine institution—God's appointed agency to save the world. There is no other organization comparable to it in existence. It represents Christ upon earth, and has the Word, the sacraments, and the promised ministrations of the Holy Spirit. It supplies to sinful humanity needed assistance nowhere else obtainable. Membership in it is a part of that confession which Jesus requires of his disciples. What inspiration there is in its glorious songs! What strength in the communion of its saints! What blessing and uplift in the prayers that ascend from its altars! What exultant hopes are implanted in the heart by the outlook it opens into the future!

Nor are we despondent over the present condition of the Church. Never before was its ethical standard so high. A century ago rum was frequently handed around at the ordination services of some of the denominations, but now the preachment among all Christians is total abstinence. Church members are in the forefront of every movement for moral reform; they are conspicuous in the peace councils of the world. Never since the apostolic period has the missionary spirit of the Church been so dominant and aggressive, and the outflowing stream of its philanthropy is deeper and wider to-day than ever before. True, the Church has its dangers and temptations now, as it has had in every age. There are those who would beguile us into a repudiation of our faith in the divine and supernatural, but the great masses of our people are yet untouched by this new form of skepticism, and we doubt not that there will come a reaction against the present tendencies. Many lack spirituality, but in every congregation there are some who live in conscious touch with the risen Lord.

What we need to do is to exalt and honor the Church instead of disparaging it—to rejoice in its privileges, and make others see that there is no place like the courts of Zion. No cause is helped by cynicism. The plaint is the language of retreat, not of advance. It was the optimism of Caleb that led to the winning of the promised land. A conquering religion must necessarily offer the inspiration of hope. The strength of the disciple is the joy of his Lord. "We are able," has ever been the talismanic slogan of Christianity. Let us talk more of the glories and infinite resources of the Church, and less of its weaknesses and imperfections. With all of its faults and failings, it is yet the Church of Christ, and beneath its banners still abide the best and noblest of the race.

"O where are kings and empires now,
Of old that went and came?"
But, Lord, thy Church is praying yet
A thousand years the same.

"Unshaken as eternal hills;
Immovable she stands,
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
A house not made with hands."

REPLY OF THE VANDERBILT BOARD TO THE BISHOPS.

Elsewhere in this issue appears the reply of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust to the communication addressed to them by the College of Bishops last July. In that response occurs the following sentence: "But the Vanderbilt Board of Trust desires to assure the College of Bishops and all parties interested, that no action has been taken, or will be taken by them, except as they believe it to be legal and equitable and designed to promote the highest interests of Vanderbilt University."

That they will do nothing except what they believe they can find law to sustain, is, it seems to us, a rather unnecessary assurance. They know full well that they have camping upon their trail several of the best lawyers in the South, and no one would suppose that they would attempt to do what they consider illegal. The highest interests of Vanderbilt University these gentlemen also seem to have in mind, but not the slightest reference is made to the interests of the Church. Or is it to be inferred that the word "equitable" is a vague reference to them?

The rights of the Church in the University seem never to have had much place in the thoughts of these gentlemen. If they have ever concerned themselves seriously about them or sought to safeguard them, there is no public record of it. When any decision from any quarter would weaken them, they have quickly acquiesced in it, and when anything was proposed that would strengthen them, they have promptly challenged and resisted it. In the original Charter was contained the following language: "The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are hereby requested to act as a board of supervision of the University, and jointly with the Board of Trust to elect officers and professors, and prescribe the course of study and the plan of government." This provision was approved both by the Annual Conferences which protected the institution and Commodore Vanderbilt. What has become of it? It is no answer to say that it was illegal and now has no force. The main intention of the founders of Vanderbilt University was that the Methodist Church through her Bishops should have an active part in the management of the affairs of the institution. There is a moral obligation, weighty and imperative, upon those charged with the execution of this trust to carry out the expressed will of those committing it to them. If a legal technicality has tended to thwart that will, they should have sought to have the construction in the law removed, or to find some other way of putting the intent of the founders into effect. What have these gentlemen done to maintain the designed authority of the Methodist Church in Vanderbilt University? They have done nothing. On the contrary, they have apparently sought to destroy it. Even now, if we may believe what we hear, they are challenging what little remains of the supervisory power of the Bishops.

And if a contest had to come between the donors of the University and the Church, why did not these gentlemen let Mr. Vanderbilt raise the issue and fight his own battle? Why have they felt called upon to take the cudgel for him against their own Church which they were placed upon the Board to represent? Why are they so jealous of his rights, and so indifferent as to ours? Why should the exponents of a sacred trust become partisans and seek to carry out only such parts of the Charter designed to govern its administration, as meet their approval? And now that the battle is on, let the issue not become confused. It is not a contest merely to determine by what method the University shall be operated for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. If the Trustees win, the Church will have left not a vestige of real authority in the government of the institution. The Trustees may, if they wish, fill the Board with those who are not Methodists. They may elect an Episcopal Bishop president of the body if they desire. In fact, so far as the management of the University is concerned, they will be free to do what they please. And in that event the Methodist Church will likely wash her hands of Vanderbilt University and address herself to the task of building another great institution that will be amenable to her authority; and her insurgent members who have wrought this work of alienation will be left to contemplate the record which they have made, and face it before the bar of enlightened public sentiment and in the judgment.

"CONSCIENCE AND ITS CULTURE, OR THROUGH CONSCIENCE TO CHRIST."

This interesting volume of 216 pages is just from the press of the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville. It is neatly printed on choice paper, beautifully bound, and presents a most attractive appearance. The author is the Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B. D., the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Indianola, Miss. He is a graduate of Drew Theological Seminary, and a young man of uncommon gifts and acquirements. The volume does not purport to be anything like a complete metaphysical discussion of the nature and functions of Conscience, but rather deals with the subject with a practical end in view. The author does, however, in the first four or five chapters discuss in a manner highly interesting and instructive the following subjects: "What is Conscience?" "An Analysis of Conscience," "Conscience as a Guide," and "The Education of Conscience." And having developed the underlying laws of man's moral sense, he proceeds to illustrate them impressively and point out the course of training which will result in the establishment of worthy character. Some of the chapters covering this part of the discussion are particularly striking and suggestive. The one entitled "One Mother's Way" outlines the system of home teaching and training observed by his own mother, Mrs. W. L. Lipscomb, of Columbus, Miss., who is widely known for her deep spirituality, and who reared to Christian manhood and womanhood a large family of children, distinguished for their piety and usefulness in the service of the Master. Some of the other significant chapter-headings are: "Journeying Upward," "The Man in Christ Jesus," "The Mountain Top—A Conscience Vold of Offense," "Of One Who Missed the Way," "The Place of the Revival." In preparing this volume, Brother Lipscomb has rendered a distinct and needed service. The subjects discussed are pertinent and timely, the work throughout is well done, and the young author has reflected credit upon himself, his Conference, and his Church. The price of the book is $1. It may be had either of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or the Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss. It deserves a large circulation, and we trust that it will soon find its way into the homes of many of our people, blessing them and lifting their aspirations to higher and holier things.

RESIGNATION OF BISHOP HENDRIX.

Though the dispatches bearing upon it have been somewhat vague and indefinite, we infer from his letter, published in this issue, that Bishop Hendrix has resigned both the presidency of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust and his membership in that body. We think that in doing this he has pursued the proper course, and we commend his action. He retires affirming his full belief in "the righteousness of the cause represented by the Board," and states that what moved him to withdraw was his "delicate relations as an executive officer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose Bishops are authorized and empowered by the General Conference to institute legal proceedings."

It is not to us a pleasant task to criticize Bishop Hendrix. For his scholarship and ability, we entertain great respect. He is a preacher of eloquence and strength, and as a presiding officer and administrator, the Church has not had his superior. But, as we see it, it is a matter of serious regret that the Bishop did not perceive at an earlier date the grave impropriety of the conflicting relations which he has allowed himself to sustain at one and the same time to the Church and the Vanderbilt Board of Trust. What he has been so slow to discover, others saw in the beginning, and it was this that surprised his brethren and evoked their expressions of disapproval and protest.

Nor has Bishop Hendrix' retirement undone the evil effects of his regrettable previous course. He stood with the Trustees in their attitude of rebellion against the authority of the Church, and sheltered them with the influence of his great name and office until they became organized into an insurgent body. He leaves them in hostile array, challenging the rights of the General Conference and forcing upon the Methodists of the South a gigantic and expensive lawsuit. Who knows whether, if he had declined to stand with them as soon as the supreme authority of the Church had spoken, they would have assumed their present position of independence and defiance?

And the Bishop's belated action also falls to extricate him from the charge of having openly and flagrantly disobeyed the instructions of the General Conference. What he has done will doubtless tend to soften the feeling of indignation existing in the Church toward him, but the record which he has made will stand and may yet have to be reckoned with. Such an example as he has set will likely be regarded as too serious a thing to be lightly passed over. The effort of some of his friends to shelter him and his associates under the footnote appended to our Twenty-Third Article of Religion, which affirms the supremacy of civil authority, has been positively pitiful and ludicrous. There is no requisition upon the part of the State that any member of the Board of Trust shall continue to serve thereon. Any one of them has a perfect right to resign at any time. And if Bishop Hendrix can retire now without moral culpability, he manifestly could have done so in the beginning.

We wish Bishop Hendrix well. We have no disposition to question his sincerity or impeach his motives. But we think that he has made a grievous mistake, which has irreparably hurt Southern Methodism and greatly impaired his own influence and usefulness. If his large capacity shall enable him to regain the prestige which he has lost and win anew the confidence in his leadership which he now seems to have forfeited, we shall be sincerely glad. His stand in the Vanderbilt matter has been to us the occasion of genuine sorrow, and what we have written concerning his course has been impelled by a stern sense of duty to the Church, whose servant we are. Not a particle of pleasure have we found in this unfortunate controversy, in which we have sacrificed friendships for principle, and stood openly and fearlessly for what we conceive to be right. And having done our duty, as God has given us to see it, whatever may be the outcome, we hope to have the approval of a good conscience.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, of Starkville, will report the proceedings of the North Mississippi Conference for the New Orleans item.

There is talk of having a district evangelist in the Corinth District next year. $500 was subscribed for this purpose at the recent missionary rally at Booneville, Miss.

Dr. Alfred F. Smith, the new pastor of the First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., is in high favor with that interesting and active congregation. This information has reached us from a number of sources.

An appreciated caller at our office this week was Rev. Mr. Gregory, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Moss Point, Miss., who was in fine health and spirits. He reports favorably of the Master's work in his section.

We thank the Rev. H. M. Ellis, our popular pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., for work done for the Advocate, as well as commendatory words and good wishes. No interest of the Church is allowed to suffer in his hands.

In sending in some subscriptions, for which we thank him, Rev. W. W. Perry, of Terry, Miss., adds: "We have had a good year. We have had some good meetings, some conversions, and some accessions to the Church. We hope to report all of the collections in full."

Mr. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, is advocating the formation of another District in the North Mississippi Conference. He thinks the people are anxious to see more of the presiding elders and hear them oftener in the pulpit. He must have a good variety of them up his way.

Dr. F. N. Parker, the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, preached at Plaquemine, La., last Sunday. That he gave the people a strong and helpful message, goes without saying. He is universally popular throughout his district, and there is general regret that this is the last year of his quadrennium.

Rev. Walter G. Harbin is having a gracious revival at Slidell, La., where he is conducting a union meeting. A note from him, dated October 30th, stated that thirty persons had already united with the churches. We trust that our pastor there will give us a full account of the services and the results for our next issue.

From a note from Rev. I. D. Borders, dated Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 27, we learn that he has been transferred by Bishop Waterhouse to the Pacific Conference and stationed at Stockton, Cal., where we have a very substantial Church and a fine constituency. Brother Borders says: "I love the brethren of my home Conference, and yearn to be with them, but am impelled to believe my work is here in this great and needy field."

In renewing his subscription to the Advocate, Mr. Wiley G. Griffing, of Eufaula, Oklahoma, says: "I take no paper that I prize more highly than yours." Thank you, brother. We hope that Mr. Griffing will not forget to tell us occasionally of the great West of which he has become an honored and successful citizen. It is the habit of Mississippians to succeed wherever they go, as is now attested by the large number of them who have found their way into the United States Senate.

Those interested will please note that the date of the Laymen's Meeting of the Ruston District is November the 26th, not the 19th as one announcement stated. We thank those having the program in charge for an invitation to be present and deliver an address. But the time is so near the date of the next session of the North Mississippi Conference that we shall have to forego that pleasure. We hope, however, to visit that part of the Advocate's territory in the not far future.

We were delighted to have our long-time friend, the Hon. Charles Firmar Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., drop into our sanctum last Monday morning. He is one of the foremost lawyers of the Volunteer State, has traveled widely, and is a man of large and liberal culture. We have never known a more entertaining and agreeable converser, and when one is with him the moments speed with lightning wings. Mr. Smith was en route to Mexico, whither he has gone on a business trip. He expects to be absent from the States about a month.

The Pine Flat Sunday school on the Paris Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, is making a fine record. It was organized last spring with 30 pupils and has grown to 56. Not a Sunday has been missed, and the interest on the part of both parents and pupils has been marked. Special stress has been laid upon reading the Bible, a strict record being kept of the chapters read by each class. The secretary of this school is Miss Effie Ray, and the pastor is the Rev. W. J. Wood. Much credit for what has been accomplished has been due to the capable superintendent.

We have learned with sincere sorrow that the health of Dr. M. O. Shivers, of Greenville, Miss., has for some months been far from good, and that he has decided in consequence to make his home in the West. This will be a distinct loss to Methodism in that goodly city and to the medical profession in that State. Though scarcely more than thirty years of age, Dr. Shivers has built up in Greenville a large and lucrative practice, which it seems unfortunate that he should have to abandon. But we trust that in his new field he will soon grow strong physically and achieve a large measure of success. The prayers and good wishes of a host of friends will follow him wherever he may go.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate met in our office Thursday of last week to review the work of the year. All of the members were present except the Rev. W. W. Drake, of Lake Charles, who was in the midst of a revival meeting and could not come. The report of the Committee, from the facile pen of Dr. Moulter, appears in this issue. It was a genuine pleasure to have these brethren with us, our only regret being that they could not remain longer and allow us to see more of them. With the end of the Conference year almost in sight, it is a busy time with all of the preachers of Louisiana and Mississippi, and they are eager not to lose a single day.

Notwithstanding the recent action of the Triennial Episcopal Convention in Cincinnati in voting down the open-church canon, some of the brethren of that faith in Mississippi are disposed to be quite catholic and fraternal. Especially is this true of those at Aberdeen, Miss., who have invited the Rev. J. T. Murrah of the Methodist Church of that city to conduct his services in their house of worship while his congregation are constructing the new church which they have projected. In order to keep his Sunday school together, Brother Murrah has adopted the plan of preaching at the Courthouse every Sabbath morning, and having his evening and prayer meeting services in the Episcopal Church, which has been so kindly placed at his disposal.

Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian, attended the Sixth Annual Convention of the Holiness Union, which was held at Little Rock, Ark., October 18-23. He is the president of this body, having presided over it for the sixth time in succession, and during his long incumbency in the chair no appeal has ever been made from one of his decisions. At this last meeting Brother Brown delivered a deeply spiritual and stirring address, which elicited much favorable comment both from the members of the Convention and the press of the city. He is a member of our Central Church of Meridian, was a delegate to the last General Conference, and is regarded by all who know him as a man of holy heart and life, who knows the way into the Father's presence, and who is never so happy as when doing good.

"A-LE-THE-IA."

This is what the W. C. T. U. State President of Tennessee writes about Mrs. C. C. Miller's novel, "A-le-the-ia":

"I am sure, if widely read, it would do good. It treats of a subject live with interest at the present time. Its ideals are high, the thoughts pure, the motive good all the way through."

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the cold air. It was like a giant hand reaching out to grab me.
 I shivered and pulled my coat tighter around me. The ground below was a patchwork of fields and forests, stretching out as far as the eye could see. In the distance, a small town was visible, its buildings huddled together for warmth. I took a deep breath, the cold air filling my lungs. It felt like a new beginning. I had come here for a reason, and now I was here. The journey was long and tiring, but it was worth it. I had finally reached my destination. The town was small, but it had a charm of its own.
 The people were friendly, and the food was delicious. I had found a place where I could start over. I had found a home.

Macdon, M.B.

It has been said a long time since I have not had any report from Madelon. That probably some of our friends are wondering if we are still in the Missions Conference. We are, and will be glad to return there, provided they return to be our present minister. Rev. J. W. Ware, otherwise we shall make an effort to transfer. We favor altogether a removal of the time limit, that we might never have removed from our midst one who has now broken us on the bread of life. Some of us are thinking that he ought to be kept for a long preacher. All of the denominations are thinking that he is retained, and those few circles who have been influenced as to be under his ministry can easily see why. He is greatly gifted as a preacher or rather teacher, for we think of him not as our own preacher, but as one who practices. He is also gifted with a personality that inspires in those who know him something of a deep reverential love. When he emphasizes the great truths of the gospel we feel that behind this teaching is his life as a reinforcement of what he teaches. He never deals in non-essentials, but ever with the great fundamental truths as taught by the Master. Surely Madelon has had opportunities which very much increase her responsibility, but having been exalted, as Capernaum, she may, even as Capernaum, long out in the end, simply through failure to make use of the great enlightenment which has been hers. Whatever her fate, the watchman has been faithful. The Master's teachings were rejected and neglected, and he himself said, "Straight is the gate and narrow the way, and few there be that enter there in," meaning, of course, the way of

TAKING MEN

Luke-v, 10.

I. The Call to the Work.

The divine Son of God and Savior of men had just passed through the forty days of solitude and fasting in which he had met the archfiend of night, the author of sin, the enemy of souls, and by conquering him and putting him to flight without calling to his aid any miraculous power he had taught the gratifying truth that every soul may conquer by the power of God-given grace.

Then he had begun the preaching of his marvelous gospel and the establishing of his glorious kingdom.

Now he begins to gather about him that sacred little inner circle which is to form the nucleus of the kingdom, that he may train them for the work to which he has honored them with a call.

Then comes the incident of the reference, the calling of these humble fishermen and commissioning them to be "fishers of men."

Why did he call them? was it because he preferred the poor, the unlearned, the weak, to the rich, the scholarly, the mighty? No: "Mau looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Riches and scholarship and worldly prestige are not to be condemned, but rather to be desired. But they are only some of the incidental conveniences of this life: there are better things and things of vastly greater importance. A man may possess these things and be worthless, or he may be without them and be a prince of earth and an heir of heaven.

So, in his superior wisdom, the Son of God brushed aside these child-like human distinctions, and called the cabinet of his kingdom on a solid and loftier basis: that of real worth and trustworthiness—Character.

First, they were busy men: men with a purpose. It is not the man who is hunting a job that the world wants, but the man who has one and is giving satisfaction in it: he is the man that there is always promotion for. Not the man who spends his time in telling what he can do, but the one whose work shows what he can do.

Even so in the kingdom of God, it is the consecrated, faithful, zealous worker that our Lord can use. And he who was walking that day by the sea of Galilee looking for fishers of men, is still looking to-day for the man or woman, the boy or girl who is willing to be busy in some good work, ready to honor them with this high calling of being "fishers of men" for his kingdom.

In the second place Christ saw in these men the element of faithfulness. It is not only necessary that we have faith in God, but also that we be so trustworthy that he can have faith in us. Then will he trust us with the great and important affairs of his kingdom.

The young man or woman who will stand by the League when others are indifferent and when the work seems unfruitful, the one who will continue consecrated and faithful and zealous, undiscouraged by seeming failures, is the one whom God can use as a successful minister of the gospel, a princely leader of the host of laymen, a foreign missionary, or a deaconess.

The call is a compliment to any individual.

1. It is a recognition on God's part of the elements of capability in the one whom he calls.

2. The call implies the assurance on God's part that our every need in adequately accomplishing the work to which he has called us shall be supplied. Therefore, you should not hesitate to humbly, trustingly accept any task to which God calls you; for, although you may feel your utter inability, yet God knows the latent resources with which he has endowed you, and he will not fail you in their development and in supplying all your need (Phil.-iv, 19.)

3. Every one may be called. Every one is called to salvation (Titus ii, 11). Every one is saved for service. The greatest and sublimest service is the winning of souls.

II. The Work.

Every task of life is sacred and should be done to the glory of God, but, in the last analysis everything else is incidental to the one supreme achievement of saving human souls for whom Christ laid down his life on Calvary.

Your work in the various departments of the League is all important and interesting and useful, but it is not an end within itself, but a means to the higher end of saving the unsaved souls about you: taking them for Christ.

Not only is this the supreme work in the kingdom of our Lord and the chief business of every saved soul, but it is pre-eminently important. It is a work of rescue from an awful peril. There are poor, lost souls and wrecked lives all about us rapidly sinking down into eternal dark despair. There are others at the parting of the ways of good and evil, in the most imminent peril of being led into this wreckage and ruin of degradation and death.

There was a time when under a clear sky and an undimmed sun the newly launched vessel of humanity sailed serenely over the placid sea of life. But satanic pirates put out to sea and disturbed the elements of the mighty deep of life, hiding beneath its surface dangerous breakers and whirling vortices of ruin, filling the sky with clouds and the elements with storms. In the midst of the darkness and the raging sea the vessel was lost, was wrecked, and humanity was left adrift. Then there came to the rescue from celestial realms a divine Pilot on the grand old Ship of Zion. He it was who called these humble fishermen of Galilee to launch the lifeboats and pick up these stranded human wrecks. He it is who still calls to-day to you and to me to hasten to the rescue.

"Throw out the life-line! Throw out the life-line!"

Some one is drifting away: Throw out the life-line! Throw out the life-line!

Some one is sinking to-day."

The greatest achievement of any life is that of "Taking a Man" from the degradation and death of sin for the kingdom of our Lord. "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." (James v, 20.)

It is even more than saving a soul from death: it is introducing it into the glorious realm of eternal life. The winning of a soul for Christ involves the sacred privilege of leading it into the council chamber of the King of kings and Lord of lords and there introducing it to him whom to know is life eternal.

Dear fellow-Leaguer, don't you want to be a winner of souls? Will you not let our blessed Lord have his way with you, that he may develop and equip you for the sublime achievement of "taking men?"

TO PROTECT THE WALLS.

When you want to keep a piece of furniture from scratching or defacing the walls or woodwork, and are not able to get the little rubber buttons or guards, take the fingers of an old kid glove, stuff hard with cotton to the size you need, fasten on the back of the article in question, with tiny tacks at each end, and they will answer the purpose splendidly, and are quite inconspicuous.—From Woman's Home Companion for October.

Memorandum

State-wide prohibition is now the aim of the State legislatures in practically all of our twelve principal States. Some states are commencing to order State-wide prohibition of people living in substantially dry portions of some forty millions. Temperance societies under official auspices are being organized in many countries abroad. The latest international conference independently in Europe and in America show a remarkable falling off in the average use of alcohol. In medical hospitals, practically no use at all of the wine. These and many other interesting facts will show up in an article called "The Advance of the Water Wagon" in the November Century in which Henry Smith Williams, M.D., author of "Alcohol," discusses the notable change of sentiment in regard to liquor drinking and the significance of this lesser use of alcohol.

The Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B.D.

FOURTH QUARTER. LESSON VI. NOVEMBER 6.
THE LAST SUPPER.

Matthew xxiv. 17-30. Parallel Passages: Mark xiv. 12-25; Luke xxii. 7-30; John xiii. 1-30; 1 Corinthians xi. 23-25.

17. Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him: Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the pass-over?

18. And he said: Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him: The Master saith: My time is at hand; I will keep the pass-over at thy house with my disciples.

19. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the pass-over.

20. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.

21. And as they did eat, he said: Verily I say unto you: that one of you shall betray me.

22. And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him: Lord, is it I?

23. And he answered and said: He that dippeh his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.

Golden Text: "This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me." (Luke xxii. 19.)

I. The Lesson's Story.

So numerous and so varied are the accounts of the Last Supper given in the New Testament that it is interesting and clarifying to our understanding of just what transpired for us to weave them together into a connected narrative.

As Matthew states it was the Paschal season—Thursday evening, April 6th, A.D. 30, our lesson is dated—at which time for 1500 years the Jewish nation was accustomed to celebrate their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the most important rite of which was the eating together of the Pass-over Feast, in families or in groups.

The disciples well knew that Jesus would conform to this national custom, though it was doubtless the first and only time that he ever offered the sacrificial lamb as the head of a group of worshippers; so they inquired of him: Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the Pass-over? The question may have arisen, also, out of a direction probably given to Judas the previous day to purchase the lamb and have it inspected in the temple, as it would have been hazardous to have waited until the very afternoon of the feast. In answer to the question Christ directed Peter and John (Luke tells us) to go into the city to "such a man," (Matthew) naming him evidently; but the name not made public—and ask of him the guest-chamber for himself and his disciples. Mark and Luke suggest a direction indicating "miraculous foreknowledge on Christ's part: 'there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water; follow him,' and enquire as above. Edersheim ventures to suggest that this householder, evidently acquainted with and in full sympathy with Jesus, was Mark's father, as he was known to have a house in Jerusalem in which at later times the Apostles, possibly at the Pentecostal hour, assembled.

However this may be, we know at least that after receiving the "large upper room," furnished and ready, about the first thing the two apostles did in preparation for the feast was to take the lamb to the temple at the appointed time, between three and six o'clock in the afternoon, that it might be slain; its blood poured upon the altar, and its body prepared for the roasting, which must have occupied the remainder of the afternoon. The fact that the upper room was furnished and prepared suggests that all else needed for the supper—the cups, the wine, the cake of unleavened bread, and bitter herbs—had been provided by the generous host.

So, all things being ready, just as the first three stars became visible, a three-fold blast of the silver trumpets from the Temple Mount rang out, announcing the time for beginning the Passover feast. Doubtless then Christ and the twelve entered together the Upper Chamber, and assembled around the festal board. But here, as the elaborate Jewish ceremonial was about to be entered upon, Luke tells us that a disgraceful scene occurred, doubtless over how they should be arranged at the table. "There arose a contention among them, which of them is accounted greatest," for this they thought must be determined in order that they might be placed aright. In families the order was easily recognized. We must not judge them too harshly, accustomed to Jewish decorum as they were, it appeared a serious problem. There followed an incident, recorded by John alone, which otherwise might not have occurred at that hour. Christ rebuked them for their contention after place, and, as a lesson in humility, girded himself with a towel and washed the disciples' feet.

24. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him; but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed. It had been good for that man if he had not been born.

25. Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said: Master, is it I? He said unto him: Thou hast said.

26. And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples; and said: Take, eat; this is my body.

27. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying: Drink ye all of it.

28. For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

29. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.

30. And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

given for you: this do in remembrance of me." (Luke xxii. 19.)

In order to most clearly understand the incidents which follow, especially in connection with the betrayer, we must study the arrangement at the table even more closely. Edersheim—whose account of all this is very vivid and clear—gives a diagram of the elongated table, with couches around in the form of a horseshoe. Jesus, he locates at the well-known seat of honor, second from the end, with John to his right at the end and Judas to his left, with Peter opposite at the foot, whither he had doubtless impulsively and generously gone after Christ's rebuke of all for seeking pre-eminence. Such detail may seem unnecessary, but see how it opens up the narrative. Christ sorrowfully remarks, "One of you shall betray me," and one after another, in griefed astonishment, the disciples reply: "Lord, is it I?" in the original implying strong negation; surely it is not I. John tells us that then, "The disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake. There was at the table reclining in Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved: Simon Peter therefore beckoneth to him (evidently from across the table) and said unto him, Tell us who it is of whom he speaketh. He leaning back, as he was, on Jesus' breast saith unto him, Lord, who is it?" The answer is: "He it is for whom I shall dip the sop, and give it him." The reply was evidently made in an undertone to John, as were the words following the taking of the sop by Judas. "Thou hast said," in reply to his question, "Master, is it I?" else the disciples would have known that Judas was the traitor. But words could only be whispered to the one nearest. So we have Judas nearest Christ at the left, John at the right, and can understand why the other disciples knew not with what intent Jesus said, as Judas arose to leave the table: "That thou doest, do quickly." How fine the concluding words of John, as Judas passes from the scene, "And it was night"—night indeed in the soul of Judas in the history of Jesus; and in all nature round about.

But the traitor having gone, Christ, in divine consciousness of the significance of his death, proceeds solemnly yet simply to transform the old Jewish Passover into a Christian sacrament. "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it; and he gave to the disciples, and said: Take, eat; this is my body. And he took a cup, and gave thanks,

LARGEST VEHICLE MAKERS IN THE WORLD

THE STUDEBAKER PLANT COVERS 101 ACRES

The Best Wagon Value

Studebaker stands for honest wagon value. Today over one million are in daily use—many of them from 25 to 30 years—and still giving good service.

There is a reason for this—Studebakers have been making wagons for over half a century—the reputation of their products is in the hands of men who have been in their employ for more than half that time—that is why the Studebaker Quality is proverbial. Every kind of material going into the Studebaker product must measure up to Studebaker specifications—every vehicle going out must be up to the Studebaker standard.

That is why the Studebaker wagon meets the Southern Planter's requirements as no other wagon does—it is built for his particular needs.

See the Studebaker dealer and talk to him about your individual requirements. He is competent to advise you. Our Studebaker 1911 Farmer's Almanac telling all about the Studebaker products will be mailed free on request. Write for it today.

and gave to them, saying, Drink ye all (each one) of it: for this is my blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many unto remission of sins." Luke adds: "This do in remembrance of me;" and St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 25): "This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me."

"And when they had sung a hymn, (the great Hallel, Pss. 113-116) they went out into the Mount of Olives." So ends our lesson story; simple, natural, beautiful, sublime, divine, yet with one dark figure lurking in the background.

II. The Lesson's Meaning.

What was and is the significance of this Last Supper, which Christendom regards as its most sacred sacrament, and which the Roman Catholic Church almost deifies in its adoration of the Host as the actual presence of Christ's body and blood in the Church?

It is, adapting the language of a recent writer, a memorial of the past sacrifice of the Son of God for our salvation; a symbol of His abiding presence in the Church and with his people; a food of sacramental grace, as by faith we feed on him in our hearts; and it is a prophecy of a triumphant future, "till he come."

Of, in the familiar language of Watson's Institutes, it is a sign and a seal. As a sign, it exhibits, (1) "The infinite love of God to the world, who gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." (2) The love of Christ, who "died the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." (3) The extreme nature of his sufferings, which were unto death. (4) The vicarious and sacrificial character of that death, as a sin-offering and a propitiation. (5) The benefits derived from it through believing, "remission of sins" and the nourishment of the soul—by virtue of a vital communion with Christ. As a seal, it is a constant assurance, on the part of God, of the continuance of this covenant of redemption in undiminished force from age to age; and it is a pledge to every penitent who believes in Christ—that he is an object of merciful regard and acceptance; and it is a constant exhortation of Christ as the spiritual food of the soul, to be received by faith, that he may grow thereby.

What then should be our attitude toward this sacrament? Plainly, in obedience to Christ's command and in appreciation of the gracious privilege which it offers, we should, as opportunity presents, "draw near with faith, and take this holy sacrament to our comfort, and make our humble confession to Almighty God, meekly kneeling upon our knees."

In conclusion, we would urge all to ponder these words of Christ—not in their bare literalism, but in their deep spiritual significance. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." "He that eateth me, even he shall live by me." (John vi. 53-57). Do you know what this means?

This Home-Made Cough Syrup will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. The recipe makes a pint—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaicol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

HARRY WILBUR PEARCE.

Brother Harry Wilbur Pearce was born in Woodville, Wilkinson County, Miss., Aug. 9, 1845, and passed away from his earthly home and associations on Jan. 11, 1910. His father was the Rev. Levi Pearce, for many years an active and leading member of the Mis-issippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His mother prior to her marriage was Miss Maria Henderson. The family lived at various places according to the pastoral appointments given to the father. They lived several years at Sharon, Madison County. There Harry got the substance of his education, and there he was converted and joined the Church, in his early youth. He was sixteen years of age, and then desired to join the Confederate army, but his tender age led his parents to object. When he approached the age of eighteen they yielded and he joined Armstrong's Brigade near Brandon, Miss. Though General Armstrong offered him a place on his staff, he declined, preferring to stay in the humbler place with the men. He was a punctual, courageous soldier.

At the close of the war, he returned home to begin hard, manual labor for a living, but emigrated with his father in 1867 to British Honduras. The family were well and firmly settled in Toledo on an ample plantation and engaged in the cultivation of sugar. Harry took a leading part in the production and marketing of the crop. Miss Mary Pearce, the eldest child, after a time, returned from Honduras and took a home school for young ladies in Jackson, La. Both the parents came to that home in after years and there ended their days, and lie buried in Jackson, La. Harry Pearce came over to Sharon in 1876, and, on October 26th, of that year, he was married to Miss Catharine J. Magruder. He returned with his bride to Honduras and established his family in the old Toledo home. His father had gathered a small pastoral flock to which he ministered and in which Harry became Sunday school superintendent. After his father passed away, Harry became the mainstay of the flock, still managing the Sunday school and doing what a layman could to hold the little company together and provide them a shepherd.

He was a noble man—a good boy; he grew to manhood a good son; was a tender, loving husband and father and a devout, consistent Christian. He was a man on whose sincere and friendly advice his neighbors could implicitly depend, and whose ministry of kindness and friendship was always ready in time of need. He lived and died a brother-man, a devout Christian, without reproach. He was laid to rest in Toledo. A large company of neighbors and friends assembled at the burial to take part in the service conducted by the Rev. Thos. Peers, a Wesleyan minister, who hears hearty testimony to his high character and noble Christian fidelity. We do not doubt that he has found his home in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The bereaved wife and daughter and the three sons may take in full the consolations that the glorious gospel of Christ affords to the bereaved. Here we have no continuing city—we seek one to come. In the splendors and glories of that city, where God is the light and joy and life, we shall see each other again, and never part. Our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

Jackson, Miss.

Misery in Head

"I had misery in my head, was irritable—wretched. A druggist recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine. From the first I improved, and I continued until I was entirely well again."

MISS VIOLA BAKER,

Orange, Texas.

If you are subject to headache, hackache, neuralgia, epilepsy, weak stomach—the chances are your nervous system is run down. All the organs get their energy from the nerves, and when they are out of order, it is because you lack nerve force.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

restores nervous energy and consequently strengthens the action of the organs.

The first bottle will benefit; if not your druggist will return your money.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a tonic. It does not stimulate. It does not make you feel better one day, then as bad as ever the next. There is not a drop of alcohol in it. You have the steady, even gain that comes from a strong tonic. Ask your doctor all about this.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE

BY

REV. WALTER G. HARBIN.

Rev. C. K. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate:

"I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of The Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations,' by Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

Price, 75 cents, postpaid. Order from C. O. Chalmers, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

Obituaries.

Mrs. KATE ELLIS WILLIS was born June 27, 1850, and died Jan. 7, 1910. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. G. H. Galloway, of Port Gibson, Miss. I am glad it has ever been my privilege to know so good a Christian woman as was Sister Willis. It was a pleasure and an inspiration to be in her company. She was evidently a Christian, for this name she bore in the community in which she lived. Sister Willis united with the M. E. Church, South, and ever lived a consecrated Christian from early life. She left a husband and five children to mourn over her departure, but it was not long until her devoted husband followed her to the place where they are to rest and await the final call in the morning of the resurrection. May the children ever live after so exemplary a life as that set by the loving mother. Weep not, dear ones, as those who have no hope, but rejoice in the fact that, if we are but faithful, we shall again meet where parting is no more, where all tears are wiped away, and the weary are forever at rest.

W. L. BLACKWELL,
Former Pastor.

The subject of this sketch, W. H. BARRETT, was born April 22, 1841, in Elbert County, Ga., and died Oct. 3, 1910. He, with his parents, moved to Mississippi in the fall of 1858; in August, 1861, he joined the army, Company B, 5th Mississippi regiment, and served until May, 1864, when he was wounded at the battle of Resacca in Georgia. He then settled near Decatur, Newton County, Miss., where he lived until death. He joined the Methodist Church in 1869, and lived a consistent life until the end came, when he said, "I am ready to go." He missed two Quarterly Conferences in thirty years; he was a trustee in the church when he died. The church misses him, and the community misses him. He had a host of friends. On December 21, 1865, he was married to Susannah E. Rowzee. God blessed this union with ten children. Four, with their mother, preceded him to be with God. One of his sons, now living, is a local preacher and the other one is a steward in the church. May God help them to live as he did, in the faith. His pastor,

H. E. CARTER.

Mrs. MARY SUSAN ELLIOTT, daughter of Allen and Mary Ayers, was born in Tiptah County, Miss., May 10, 1843. She professed hope in Christ when quite young, and joined the Methodist Church in which she lived a consistent member until the day of her death, which occurred after a lingering illness, that she bore with courage and patience, at her home in Hickory Flat, on July 11, 1910, where she was surrounded by a loving husband and children and many sorrowing friends. Five children were waiting for her on the other side and six suffer the loss of a good mother. The living are: L. M. Elliott, Rolling Fork, Miss.; P. G. Elliott, Greenwood; Mrs. J. A. Crawford, Ashland; Mrs. Frank Willis, Tupelo; Mrs. P. C. Johnson, and M. L. Elliott, of Hickory Flat. The husband, Brother L. H. Elliott, who survives, has now reached a good old age and suffers a severe loss in the death of his companion, but he feels the ever-blessed presence of God by whose power alone he is sustained. While the happy home is now broken up, loving and dutiful children (noble men and women as they are striving to make the bereaved father enjoy the remainder of his stay on earth. The Lord, in taking away our loved ones, only makes heaven more attractive to those who are left behind. Sister Elliott was an earnest Christian worker, thus proving her faith in the Lord. She was intellectually, as well as morally, strong. Though she was in her manner refining, her influence for good was much felt by all her associates; especially was this true of her in the home, and many a weary traveling preacher has enjoyed an abundant repast at her table. There had for years been an open home to all God's servants who chanced to come that way. A large congregation gathered at the Methodist Church in Hickory Flat to attend the funeral service, which was held by the writer, after which the remains were laid to rest at the Ayers family cemetery near Myrtle, Miss. WALTER W. JONES.

Mr. LUKE T. NORWOOD was born Aug. 2, 1855; was married to Miss Katie Willis, Feb. 2, 1890; joined the Ingleside (Shiloh) M. E. Church, South, Aug. 3, 1901, and lived a consistent Christian life, serving as steward of the church until his untimely demise, Oct. 3, 1910. Brother Norwood was one of the best men it has been my privilege to know. He was a friend to the pastor, ready to do his best in whatever service he was called upon to do. The deceased leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. He was a good provider for his home; lived as he professed, that is, he had family prayers, trying by that means to train up his children in the way the Lord would have them go. Weep not, dear loved ones, as those who have no hope, but rejoice in the fact that he has gone to rest from his toils until the resurrection morning. May you ever remember that "His grace is sufficient for you," and by trusting the Lord you will some day join him who has left loved ones behind.

W. L. BLACKWELL,
Former Pastor.

A few miles from the city of Memphis is a home where peace and plenty dwell. True, care and toil, pain and sickness, have all been known in the sacred precincts of that dwelling place, but until very recently the grim destroyer had passed by. The angel, Death, approaching this home, chose one of its inmates, fair in face and sweet and kind in disposition, beloved by all who knew him. Just approaching the first birthday, when disease intervened, and, in all too brief a time, the voice of JOHN CURRIE THOMAS was hushed and his body became cold in the embrace of death. During five weeks' sickness and intense suffering, he was so patient and gentle, and passing from earth to heaven left behind only sweet memories to those who loved him so devotedly. On Aug. 17, his body was borne to Forest Hill cemetery, and the little casket containing the precious little body was gently consigned to the bosom of mother earth. The many friends who were present during the last sad rites evinced the respect and sympathy felt for the stricken father and mother. In tenderest love, TOTTON.

Mrs. M. CAROLINE LOCK, the daughter of A. V. and Ellen Montgomery, was born in Maury County, Tenn., April, 1835, and was translated to be with Christ from the home of her only surviving daughter, Sept. 18, 1910. She came to Madison County, Miss., with her parents when a child, grew to womanhood, and was married to Alfred M. Lock in February, 1854. By her attractive and exemplary life, she adorned and beautified that precious place called home. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the age of thirteen years, and gave sixty-four years of consistent service to the Church she loved, and willingly and cheerfully supported it with spotless fidelity. Few have been permitted to live an age in one community and go down to the grave with the universal testimony that their lives were of unimpeachable purity; yet this was the lot of our sleeping sister. She longed for death to open the portal to eternal bliss, and, amid bodily pain and dimness of vision, scintillations of the immortal, blood-bought spirit within her ever and again gleamed forth. She is not dead, but enthroned on high in perfect peace. Let the surviving son and daughter join her spirit in heaven.

THE PEOPLE WHO LIFT AND THE PEOPLE WHO LEAN.

Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D.

I came across a poem the other day in an English paper that was new to me, which I think carries a message of wonderful value to the rank and file of the average Christian church, for my observation is in harmony with the poem, that the two great classes in every church are composed of the lifters and the leaners. When the leaners are in a great majority the church is completely stalled, and who of us does not know of stalled churches, mired down on the muddy hillside because there are more people leaning than lifting? But here is what the poet says:

"There are two kinds of people on earth today;
 Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.
 Not the good and the bad, for 'tis well understood
 The good are half bad and the bad are half good."

"Not the noble and proud, for in life's busy span,
 Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.
 No! the two kinds of people on earth I mean,
 Are the people who lift and the people who lean."

"In which class are you? Are you easing the load
 Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
 Or, are you a leaner who lets others bear
 Your portion of worry and labor and care?"

This poem awakens some very interesting thoughts. What is it that inspires a Christian to become a good lifter in the church? In the first place I think it must be a sense of gratitude to God for the blessings he has received. Take the case of Naaman, the Assyrian general, who was healed of his leprosy by washing in the River Jordan under the direction of the prophet Elisha. The first thing he did was to drive back to Elisha as fast as his horses could bring him, and beg the prophet to accept a present at his hand. But how much greater gratitude should there be awakened in our hearts for our redemption from sin and its condemnation through Jesus Christ, our Savior.—Central Christian Advocate.

MRS. ALWILDA LUCY FLY.

Alwilda Lucy, daughter of Rev. T. L. Beard and Lucy Fant, was born in Marshall County, Miss., Jan. 25, 1842. Losing her mother when eleven years of age, she was for some years the inmate of the home of her uncle, Col. J. B. Fant, near Holly Springs. She graduated at old Marshall Institute, in its day a famous school in North Mississippi. She was also for a time a pupil at Franklin Female College in Holly Springs.

On January 16, 1861, she was married to Rev. M. D. Fly, who was then stationed at Memphis, where her father lived.

At the age of nine years, she became a member of the church, a relation sustained by her for fifty-nine years of fidelity to her Savior. Next to her Lord she loved her Church, and she never wavered in her allegiance to both. Her fidelity was such that she suffered no one to disparage either in her presence. She was gifted in prayer and loved the old-fashioned meeting of altar work for which she had special aptitude. She served as a Sunday school teacher over half a century, and in this field perhaps found her greatest usefulness as a Christian worker.

For nearly fifty years, she was a devoted and faithful wife. Her domestic life was fine. She was kind, thoughtful, and devoted as a wife. She was a loyal, true and loving friend—such was the kindness and gentleness of her nature that I never knew her to have an enemy.

After a long, devoted, godly life, she preceded her venerable husband to the better land to which she had ever tried to lead others, while he waits in sorrow the summons to join her to whom so much of his life was given.

If duty done can afford comfort to hereaved hearts, he can take to his sorrowing heart the comforting reflection that he was true to her, for a more loving, tender and considerate husband than Brother Fly I have never known. The loneliness of separation after life-long companionship is his; the grief that comes to the heart as its dearest ties are sundered is his; but his also is the comfort of gentleness, friendliness, faithfulness and godliness to be remembered. And he has the comfort of a hope that after a short waiting, there is to be a reunion that shall never end.

May heaven bless his remaining years with a divine assurance of the blessed hope!

In common with many friends, I, too, feel the sense of a personal loss.

MRS. W. M. SULLIVAN.

"The truest friends must part, they say,
 But friendship's bonds may last for aye,
 And memory live forever."

It has pleased God to call from our midst a beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. W. M. SULLIVAN. In her death the Woman's Home Mission Society of Centenary M. E. Church, South, of McComb, Miss., has sustained a great loss; yet we realize the Master's work must go on, and we earnestly pray that her mantle may fall on us, that we may prove faithful to our trust and be worthy to receive the plaudet, "She hath done what she could."

We as a Society do earnestly desire to express to our beloved pastor and family our sincere and loving sympathy in their sad bereavement, and commend them to him who alone can comfort in their sorrow. "God is our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble."

We may not always understand his ways, but the time will come when we shall realize that "He doeth all things well."

Our prayer is: that this great sorrow may be sanctified to your and to our good in bringing us nearer to the tender, sympathizing Savior, and in confirming that blessed hope of reunion.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Rolling Fork, Miss., on the death of Mrs. ANN FOOTE CLEMENTS.

We have been called in the providence of God to part with our dear friend and fellow-laborer, Mrs. Ann Foote Clements, who had since its inauguration been a member of this Society, and who shared willingly in all its work and sacrifice. Whatever success there has been in the work of our Society has been due largely to her loving efforts and care. We delight to remember what she was and still is to us and to all who knew her—a true follower of Christ, adorning his cause by a godly life, a faithful friend, a kind-hearted neighbor, and one who loved and prayed for the success of all that is good and right.

We thank God for the memory of her beautiful life, for the example of purity and goodness which she has left, and for all she was permitted to do in our Church and community. We shall rejoice to think of the noble, gracious woman who was our friend, and of the gentle, beneficent and helpful life that has just closed. Long will its influence and light remain with us to do good.

We think of her now as one who has ceased from the tasks of earth and entered into the everlasting rest, and to whom the Master has said: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Signed: Mrs. Addie G. McCaul; Mrs. J. H. Cortright, Mrs. Sallie M. Mounget, committee.

WHY? WHY? WHY?

Why use anything else for Fever but Johnson's Tonic? It is the supreme remedy for any phase of Malarial poisoning. It is 100 times better than Quinine, and does in a day what slow Quinine cannot do in 10 days. It will drive out every trace and taint of Malaria from the blood, and do its work quickly. Its cures are in striking contrast with the feeble cures made by Quinine and remedies based on Quinine.

It cures so quickly that there is no loss of time, no waste of money, no watching by the bedside of the sick, no heart-breaking, wretchedness in the family which is doomed by the use of Quinine.

Use it—use nothing else—nothing else is needed.

THE PASTORAL ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS.

We give thanks to God always in your behalf for the steadfastness of your faith in Christ and the zeal which ye show for his cause and kingdom. The record of the past quadrennium proves, to our great joy, that the unrest in all the circles of this world's life and the aggressive intellectual movements antagonistic to the Church of God have not shaken the minds of the great body of our people nor caused them to swerve from their allegiance and devotion to their Lord and Savior. Nor has your faith been unfruitful. At home and abroad the work of God's grace has been seen in enlarged and more intense missionary effort, in increased facilities for worship and service and in benevolent and humanitarian enterprises projected upon a broader basis and with surer aim than at any time in our Church's history. We are beginning to find ourselves.

But we feel impelled to call your attention to some of the perils to which we are exposed by the conditions of our modern life. Temptations of various sorts make their appeal to different classes of minds, many of them so subtle that it is difficult to distinguish them from the impulses of righteousness and the demands of a true manhood. Satan is transformed into an angel of light.

We recognize our ministry as a call from God, the one purpose of which is to save men. The man who enters upon it is, by his acceptance of it, pledged to lay aside all selfish considerations. The temptations which approach our ministry from the intellectual and social sides of life lead some to magnify secular forces beyond their true value and power, and to forget the exclusively spiritual agents and aims which should occupy the first place in their plans and lives. Scholarship and social ambitions take the place of due appreciation of the power of the gospel and the Holy Spirit. The bold, aggressive assaults upon the Word of God, and even upon the fundamentals of Christian life, have led some to put into their preaching a note of uncertainty and even doubt, and not infrequently the message of the gospel is given in a tone of such indifference and apathy as that the people fail to realize that it has any authoritative bearing upon their characters and destinies. To make full proof of our ministry we need a deeper sense of personal relation to God, more absolute conviction of the things not seen, and a more fervent spirit in the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of men.

In our membership it is too easily taken for granted that formal acceptance of the faith and decencies of deportment constitute a valid passport into the kingdom of God. To be born again of the Holy Spirit has lost much of its divine meaning, and the personal assurance of salvation has been substituted by an easy acquiescence in a testimony of a rather blunted conscience or assent to the more conventional view of religious life. Because of these things—a lax ministry and a mere secular form of piety in the membership—the evangelic, compulsory power of our gospel has been largely lost sight of. In consequence of this we have the extensive disclosures of indifference to truth and even morality which greet us by day in the public press, and these things are found often among men who hold places of trust and responsibility in the Church of God, and who are set forth as examples of Christian life to the masses of our people.

We feel bound to admonish you that only a more faithful adherence to the obligations involved in the Christian profession, and the more direct and earnest and bold utterance of the terms of admission into the kingdom of God, can counteract these appalling evils. Especially is it needful that the Church as a whole, in all her extent, unite in an earnest effort and effectual, fervent prayer for such a manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit as will convict the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment. Nothing less than this will avail to meet the demands of the times. If the Word of God, upon which our hope is built, is to be believed, great multitudes with whom we associate daily, by the very conditions of their life, are excluded from the kingdom of God. All their culture and worldly successes and attractiveness will not justify the setting aside the plain terms of the sacred Scripture that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of Christ and of God. They are dying, and dying eternally; and it is only a question with the Church whether she will let them pass down to their graves unforgiven and unsaved, or whether she will direct all the energies of which she is capable, securing all the fervor and power of the Holy Spirit to the salvation of the people.

In many places the indications are favorable to the awakening of communities to a sense of their responsibility, and local revivals of more than ordinary interest and success assure us that God is willing even now to favor his Church with something like the gracious visitations of former days. In our foreign fields, notably in Korea, where a mighty supplication arises to God for the salvation of a million souls, there is a great and importunate prayer for such, and an outpouring of the Spirit. Certainly in the home field united prayer cannot be made without avail for such an unspeakable blessing.

The General Conference at its last session, representing the entire Church, made special appeal for such a universal and concerted effort to this end. In compliance with its expressed wish, and in obedience to the irrepressible impulses of our own hearts, we follow up this appeal with an earnest cry to the entire Church to join with us in prayer to Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he would grant us yet again the gift of his Spirit in its largest measure. Let this be understood as a call upon every man in the ministry, and upon every congregation throughout our entire connection, and let unceasing and importunate prayer go up from every household until the answer shall be given. Do not lay it aside as a vague, indeterminate official demand, but rather heed it as a message from God. We request all our people to unite in special prayer on Sunday, January 1, 1911, that God will revive his work in all our borders. On that day let the services in all our churches be directed to this end.

And now, brethren, we commend you to God and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.

HIGHER CRITICISM.

Bishop Paret was asked by a young clergyman how he should preach about the higher criticism. To this question the Bishop replied as follows:

"The best way for preaching about the higher criticism is not to preach about it at all. In what is called a thoughtful city congregation, say of 600 people, not five would be able to follow you intelligently. And, in the vain hope of helping those five, you would be suggesting doubts and difficulties to the five hundred and ninety-five. If there are any among your people who are really troubled on such criticisms, you could not treat those subjects at all helpfully by preaching about them. The mere statement of the many theories needs volumes. Go to such persons personally; find out just what their points of difficulty are, and, if you are able to do it, try to clear them up, one by one. But, even so, you will find very few, if any, who will be willing or able to give the serious thought required. And for the average rural congregation such preaching would be a harmful absurdity. The theories of modern criticism are matters for the clergyman's study, but not matter for sermons. One of my own experiences will illustrate my counsel. I was spending a few weeks at a popular summer hotel, near which was a pleasant chapel, served by one of our clergy. He was said to be a very learned man and the 'Higher Criticism' was one of his pulpit hobbies. Among the hotel guests were several thoughtful men, who told me they were communicants. But they did not go to the chapel services. I said to them: 'You told me you were churchmen, and that you went regularly to church; but you do not attend while here. Why is it?' After consulting together, one of them, speaking for all, said: 'Bishop, we did go as long as we could, but when we found that we came away every time with less faith than we had when we went, we thought it was time to stop.'

"This recalls an incident in the teaching of that wise and faithful man, Dr. Kinloch Nelson, in lecturing to his class on Pastoral Theology. He was asked this same question, and replied with an illustrative anecdote:

"A young clergyman had undertaken to state the theories against the Bible and reply to them before an ordinary congregation. He stated the theories strongly, and then replied to his own satisfaction. As the congregation disbanded, one intelligent business man was asked what he thought of the sermon, and replied: 'The little man may argue against inspiration as much as he wants to, but for satisfactory reasons I believe in it, and he has said nothing to alter my opinion.'

"The 'little man' had stated his opponent's side so much stronger than his own that his audience had mistaken which side he was on."

Possibly, Bishop Paret's answer and Dr. Nelson's anecdote both contain very wise teaching for the present juncture. The average congregation wants from its pulpit something to live by and to help in the daily struggle of life; not futile discussions of utterly impracticable theories.

"It may possibly be in our day, as in the time of John Milton: 'The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed.'—Southern Churchman.

MAY METHODISTS PRAY FOR UNION?

By Rev. T. H. Lewis, D. D.

We Christians are not too bold in these latter days. In some of our Eastern States we have had a prolonged drought, until it has finally caught the attention of the pulpit, and I have observed that a number of preachers have been discussing the question whether we may pray for rain. The hesitancy seems to arise from an overload of science. We know so much more than we used to know that the sphere of faith is constantly contracting, and we have to be careful not to expose our ignorance of natural law to the Almighty. Some may insist that the Greek does not warrant the new version of the old instruction on prayer proposed in the name of Science; but as Greek is universally conceded to be a dead language, that should not prevent us from reading: "But if we hope for that we see not, then are we unscientific. Likewise, the Spirit also has become superfluous, for we know perfectly well what we should not pray for." And so the drought continues.

I cannot see, however, that the union of Methodists invades the sanctuary of Nature; and, therefore, I should think we might pray for this. "In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God," is a broad charter, even if it must not apply to nature. I have learned an interesting fact from the dictionary about the Greek word which is translated here, "requests." It appears that this word differs from several others, having the same general meaning, in that this indicates a desire for something which is to be given, rather than for something which is to be done.

This fits our case exactly. Methodist union is emphatically a thing to be given, and not a thing to be done. To go about to scheme for it, to force it, to elaborate and plan and build it by the mechanical devices of human wisdom and strength, is to fail, or at least to accomplish only a temporary, superficial union. But the union that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy. Its blessed appearing is as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. So, then, if Methodist union is from above, and is something given to those who ask for it, we not only may pray for it, but we will never get it any other way. It is for those who want it.

Here we come to the real source of any hesitancy we may have in praying for Methodist union. This matter belongs in the sphere of human nature. If we imitate the scientific Christians who refuse to pray for rain on the ground that it would interfere with the laws of nature, and refuse to pray for any interference with or overruling of human nature, we will not pray for Methodist union, and, therefore, we will not get it.

Nobody standing outside of Methodism can see any reason for our divisions. No doctrinal differences, no differences in modes of worship or religious activity, no radical differences in administration of temporalities—that is the way it appears to an outsider; and he is bound to conclude that we remain apart because we don't want to unite. Of course, this is a very superficial way of looking at it, but I suppose that even those inside will admit that if we wanted to unite, we could easily unite, and that our "want" in this matter will be the measure of the extent and sincerity of our prayers.

If Methodists are interested in union only to the point of watching "whereunto this thing will grow," waiting for some commission to venture out with a plan which they can fall upon and debate world without end; or if they will commit themselves to union only on the condition that it shall be brought about by leaving out everything that anybody objects to and including everything that anybody wants: if, in other words, they refuse to pray for union except in subordination to the demands of human nature, they will never see Methodist union realized. There must be some waiting upon God: some hoping for that we see not; some venturing upon our desires even when we do not know how they are to be realized: some approach to the attitude that expresses itself in,

"nevertheless not my will, but Thine, be done." In answer to such prayer we have every reason to expect the union to be given. Without such prayer no union could be of much value if given. Wherefore, let us remember that Methodist union depends not so much upon the men who are on these commissions, as upon the men and women who are waiting upon God in prayer for it. And let us also take our full responsibility in knowing that nothing can prevent the consummation of Methodist union but the desire of Methodists to remain apart.

CHURCH BUILDING IN BRAZIL.

W. F. McMurry, Corresponding Secretary, Board of Church Extension.

After a somewhat careful examination of the immediate needs for church and parsonage building in Brazil, and having had full benefit of the advice of Bishop Lambuth and brethren on the field, I desire to make the following exhibit concerning the situation. It is not intended to set forth all the needs, but those that are now imperative.

I. Brazil Mission Conference.

1. Franca. Located not far from Bibeirao Preto. Here an Italian woman has been the soul of the church for a number of years. A $700 loan will complete the church building.

2. Piracicaba. Here a magnificent girls' school is located, with Miss Stradley in charge. A parsonage is in process of building. They need a donation of $250 and a loan of $750 to complete the building, and will repay the loan in three years.

3. Cunha. A small church in Sao Paulo District, which will cost $450. They have raised nearly $300, and will need a loan of $175.

4. Villa Isabel. This is a suburb of Rio de Janeiro, and the congregation is worshipping in a rented building. A donation of $5,000 and a loan of the same amount will enable this congregation to properly equip itself with the necessary building. Such an investment would meet the need for many years to come.

5. Juiz de Fora. Granbery College and a girls' school of the Woman's Board, both doing magnificent work, are located here. They have church and parsonage, but both are inadequate and badly located. A new site will cost not less than $5,000, and our people there can in all probability take care of this amount. There should be erected on this site a $15,000 building.

6. Quartel. A small church is needed at this point in Bello Horizonte for a military colony, the soldiers of which have been the most active Christians in all that region. Last year thirty of them went to Uberaba, where a Methodist church had about expired and brought together the embers with so much zeal and spirit that they kindled the flame not only there, but at several other points. The amount needed at Quartel is not large.

7. Sao Paulo. A $45,000 church is needed here. The congregation has secured a magnificent lot and paid for it. Of the $45,000 needed to build the house, $6,000 can be realized out of the old property, and the congregation can raise $9,000. This leaves $30,000 to be secured elsewhere. A donation of $20,000 and a loan of $10,000 would meet the situation. There is no more important point in Brazil than Sao Paulo. It is a modern city and growing, and some of the best citizens are among our members there.

II. South Brazil Mission Conference.

1. Porto Alegre, Central Church. We own a magnificent lot, centrally situated, fronting on two streets, and having on one side a park. It is on the highest ground in this city of 100,000 inhabitants. Not only is this one of the most important seaports of Brazil, but five rivers empty into the bay at this point, and the city is the southern terminus of the great Trunk Railway of the Republic from Rio to Porto Alegre. It will cost $20,000 to build the church needed, and that amount invested in a modern building will guarantee a self-supporting church in four years. The old building has been condemned, and our congregation must seek new quarters.

2. Alegrete. This is a good town, on the railroad, between Porto Alegre and Uruguayana. The congregation can buy a lot costing $2,000. The church needed will cost $5,000, for which they need a donation of $3,000 and a loan of $2,000.

3. Santa Maria. Here a lot will cost not less than $3,000, and they need a $5,000 church and a $2,000 parsonage. We have not prospered in Santa Maria because of lack of buildings.

4. Cahoelra. Here a lot can be had for $2,000, and our people will pay for it. They need $5,000 to build a church and $1,500 to build a parsonage.

5. Santa Anna. A lot here will cost about $3,000. It will take $4,000 to house the congregation and $2,000 to provide a home for the preacher. A good point with large promise.

6. Cruz Alta. Here a lot worth $1,500 can be bought by the congregation, and $2,500 is needed for a church and $1,000 for a parsonage.

7. Arroio. A lot has been bought here and $700 expended on a church building, which stands unfinished and exposed. Financial disaster having overtaken the leading members, they are unable to finish, and need at once $200 to finish and furnish the church.

In nearly all these cases, where we do not own the property, the heavy rentals now being paid would carry the loan necessary to build, and in a few years repay the principal.

It is hoped that individuals, churches, districts and Conferences desiring to do something special and permanent in the great mission field of South America, will consider carefully and prayerfully the above urgent needs, every one of which should be taken as a "Special" and the work speedily accomplished. It will give the corresponding secretary special pleasure to give additional information concerning any cases about which inquiry may be made, and to go in person to assist in presenting the need to any party or parties interested. The work in Brazil is growing, and the present embarrassment is on account of lack of buildings.

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

By a Circuit Rider.

(No. 3.)

In the twentieth chapter of St. John there is the record that Jesus appeared to his disciples on two different Sundays. The twenty-first chapter begins by saying: "After these things (probably several days after Sunday) Jesus sheweth himself again to his disciples at the Sea of Tiberias; and on this wise shewed he himself."

Then follows the account of those present (seven), of their fishing in the sea, when Jesus appeared and ate with them in a social way. The Bible nowhere says that this was upon the first day of the week, or that the disciples went fishing on Sunday.

It simply says "after" the events of the eighth day. "After these things Jesus sheweth himself." It might have been one day after Sunday, or several days. Further down, at the 4th verse, additional time is put forward by the statement: "But when the morning was now come Jesus stood on the shore." It is not true according to the statement of the Adventists that "the first day of the week was considered a business day by the disciples after the resurrection." The record does not say that it was on Sunday, but after the events of the eighth day.

Notice another passage used by the Adventists to prove that Sunday was a business day with the disciples: "And they returned and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Now, upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came into the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them."

The Adventists claim that the women prepared the spices on Friday, rested on Saturday, and made Sunday a business day by going to the sepulcher early that morning to embalm the body. They are hard put for proof that the disciples made Sunday a "business day."

We do not deny that the women at that time kept Saturday for the Sabbath. It was natural and right for them to do so. They had much to learn about Christ. Moreover, the gospel system was not fully ushered in, and the Mosaic was not fully closed.

Another passage the Adventists quote to prove that the disciples regarded Sunday as a business day is Acts, 20:7: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them, ready to depart on the morrow; and he continued his speech until midnight."

The Adventists say: "The meeting at Troas was held at night before Sunday morning, and continued even till break of day. At break of day, Sunday morning, Paul started on foot for Assos, nineteen miles away."

Now, suppose, for argument's sake, that Paul did walk nineteen miles on Sunday! Was it secular business? Did he not have the right, morally, to walk, in the propagation of the gospel?

But the statement of the Adventists is studiously sought and far-fetched. It is not an easy, or a natural deduction. If Paul started on foot for Assos early Sunday morning, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, how was it possible for their meeting the night before to have been on the first day of the week? The meeting of the disciples was not the night before Sunday morning, but, as the record says, "upon the first day of the week."

In order to sustain the theory of the Adventists the verse would have to read: "Upon the night before the first day of the week when the disciples came together," whereas it reads "upon the first day of the week," etc.

The New Testament does not represent the first day of the week as arriving until the evening or night preceding has passed away.

Matthew says: "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," etc.

Mark says: "And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, at the rising of the sun."

The disciples at Troas came together at some hour on the first day, and not some hour at night preceding the first day. The Adventists are guilty of the absurdity of calling day night; but when the New Testament says "the first day" it means what it says. "God called the light day" at the beginning, and there are a multitude of passages where a distinction is drawn between day and night, too numerous to mention.

The mistake the Adventists make is that they try to interpret every passage in the New Testament according to the way the Jews reckoned their Sabbath, "from even to even." The Bible does not in every instance represent time, or days that way. In some places a day of twenty-four hours is mentioned to indicate time, with no mention of night, or with night understood. Just as the Gentiles at present represent a day. (See Acts 20:6, 15, and others, too numerous to mention.) There are many passages where the idea is not present that the day begins the night before. In some places a distinction is drawn between day and night, so that one does not include the other. It is also true in some instances that day includes night, but space forbids the quotation of the passages.

The very passage the Adventists quote to prove that the disciples regarded Sunday as a business day, proves that they met upon the first day of the week to celebrate the Lord's Supper and hear preaching. If it were to read that they came together on Saturday to worship, the Adventists would never grow tired of quoting it.

1 Cor. 16:2: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him."

The Adventists say that the early Christians made Sunday a business day by "calculating" their business. Pooh! Not a word is said about calculating! The teaching is, after having done the calculating, lay by in store on the first day of the week. Adam Clarke says: "Let him put it in the alms purse, or in the poor's box." Put it there on the first day of the week, which is the Christian Sabbath. All should have their money ready on Sunday, prepared for any necessary collection.

The Adventists stand on tiptoe and make much noise when they reach Matt. 24:30: "But pray ye that your flight be not in winter, neither on the Sabbath day."

They say: "For forty years after Christ left them, his followers were to pray that they might not be compelled to break the Sabbath by taking their flight from Jerusalem on that day." This was the prayer of the Christians for forty years.

The Revised Version reads: "Neither on a Sabbath."

The word "Sabbath" simply means "to rest"; and the "disciples" were exhorted to pray that their flight would not be on their rest day. When forty years had passed they were observing the first day of the week for rest and worship, and the flight of the Christians from the city was upon Thursday. Christ did not exhort them to pray that their flight be not upon Saturday, or the seventh day, but "on a Sabbath"—their day of rest, which was then (40 years afterward) Sunday.

The fact that the first day of the week commemorates the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, as well as the creation of the universe, intensifies its sanctity and obligation. Seventh-day-ism in attempting to revive the Jewish Sabbath, "is guilty of dishonoring the risen Christ, and leaves him without recognition in the keeping of the holy day."

The whole system of Seventh-day-ism also goes upon the assumption that we have "a strictly correct chronology." The Jews passed through many changes before the time of Christ. There is also uncertainty now concerning the Christian era. Olmstead and Warner in their commentary say: "For some centuries after Christ's time, there was no calendar in general use, but each nation dated from some event in its history. Finally, in the sixth century, a learned monk, Dionysius Exiguus, was appointed to ascertain the time of Christ's birth, and it was ordered that history should be dated from that time. But Dionysius, who first published his calculations in A. D. 526, put the birth of Jesus about four years too late."

While "the first day of the week" has been kept regularly from Apostolic times, we have lost the run of the years, this being 1914 rather than 1910. After all has been said on the subject, the original command was not to observe the seventh day of the week, but the seventh day of our time. As near as possible there ought to be uniformity in the observance of the Sabbath; each nation and state should observe the same day, but it is impossible that the day everywhere begin and close with exact uniformity on account of the difference of earth's longitude and latitude. When it is midday in Mississippi, it is midnight in China, or nearly so. It is also true that a ship traveling west around the earth will gain a day. The Christian world is observing the day with as much uniformity as possible, but Seventh-day-ism is attempting to create the greatest confusion. Let Christians everywhere hold on to the first day of the week, and keep it holy, and the blessings of God will be upon them.

An old darky who heard the Adventists preach called them "the Seventh Avenue folks." There is no reason for anybody to be disturbed because of their ignorant statements. Like many systems in the world, they teach some truth, but many errors. The Methodist who gives up his religion to join them will have to be immersed, keep Saturday, wash feet, do without meat, deny the immortality of the soul, and contend for the eternal annihilation of the wicked.

"ONCE MORE."

By Rev. R. A. Ellis.

In the Advocate of October 27th I see an article which inclines me to write as follows:

It is said by Brother T. H. Lipscomb, B. D., in his argument in opposition to the idea of children being born regenerate, "that it is of vital importance to the integrity of her doctrines (Methodism) and the maintenance of the evangelical character of her ministry."

All have not yet seen that entertaining such views militates against evangelical preaching.

I submit the following questions, which I would like some one to answer; they mean a great deal in the discussion of this subject: On what authority is based the statement that "children dying in infancy are sanctified as well as saved through the atonement by Christ"? Does atonement in any case change the moral character of any for whom atonement is made? I insist on Scriptural answers.

We all agree that, since the fall, a new life from above is necessary in order to a place in heaven. Are we justified in saying that Paul said more than he meant in Rom. 5:18, when he said: "Even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life?" Are we to conclude that justification unto life was so short of the mark and so incomplete, that an extra work of extra grace is to be extended to the child in case of its death, to fit it for heaven? Do we not on this hypothesis logically affirm that Christ is only a provisional Savior? We have provisional salvation offered to the renegade from God; salvation from, or pardon of, personal sins; nothing is said, of which I know, of being relieved from inbred sin, if there be any such thing.

Let us not forget that life, of whatever form, is a gift from God and from an embryo state is to be developed by adjustment to law. Law does not develop or mature any form of life; but it is by adjustment to law that God has conditioned his presence in carrying forward all forms of life to their respective maturity.

I do not see why the term "saved" should be regarded as "ambiguous" when applied to man in his moral or spiritual nature. I think, without doubt, if one is saved, he is justified, regenerated and sanctified.

The existence of either one of these facts involves the existence of all the others.

If the race under the new covenant is born in a state "equivalent to a justified state," what is the difference between a child born in a state equivalent to justification, and an adult who by repentance and faith is justified?

If we admit that the race is born justified unto life (which none will deny), it seems to me that we have admitted congenital regeneration; that is to say, begotten of God unto life, which life is to be developed from this embryonic state by a correspondence to the law of its nature.

It is highly important to regard creeds; but one may be allowed to follow his convictions as to the teachings of the Word of God, though he be led in conflict with some of the long-standing beliefs and creeds.

This prevenient grace of which we read is the gift of God; it is the gift of life, which alone qualifies for responding to the law of life. Having been redeemed, begotten of God unto justification of life, it is now by this grace of life, this prevenient grace by which we are possessed with inclinations to God and righteousness, which was man's by nature originally, but since the fall is man's by grace.

Yazoo City, Miss.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

IX.

Calhoun County was in the main low and level; it had much woodland; little water-oak acorns were in abundance, thus affording a good range for hogs. Hogs were easily raised, but not so easily kept, as hog thieves were numerous. It was amusing to hear an old farmer named Dunn talk about the hog thieves. The old gentleman would become furious. He said in a crowd one day: "Neighbors, as old as I am I would ride fifty miles to-morrow to see the last hog thief in the county hung." There would "not be many of us left," he said, "but we would have a good country."

Fordyce, on the Cotton Belt Railroad, was a new town, rapidly growing, and was connected with Hampton, the county seat, and belonged to me. We had no church building there, but the Presbyterians had a nice new church, but no preacher, so we used their church, and they attended and aided us in our finances. It was an interesting place to go, the congregations were large and appreciative, sociable and hospitable. I had a little frail presiding elder that year whose name was John J. Jenkins, and, while I have had bigger preachers in size and in name, I never had a P. E. who could wield a greater influence for good over a congregation than he. We were very intimate, and he proposed to help me in a series of meetings at Fordyce, and we held the meeting in September, beginning on Saturday morning. On Sunday night Brother Jenkins preached from Rev. xx, 11-12, and the little man seemed to be transfigured in the pulpit, and the slain of the Lord were many. Help was called for after the close of the sermon, far back in the house, and I went back, and many sinners were so under conviction that they shook on their seats like so many cases of ague. Just such a sight I never saw before. We led as many as we could up front, and pretty soon a lady began, a few seats back, in a loud voice, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, I didn't bargain for anything like this!" Bro. Jenkins asked: "Who is that?" I replied that is Miss Mary Chandler, one of the first young ladies in town. Just then some one said to her: "Miss Mary, you shout just like a nigger." Two or three months before Miss Mary had gone to a country church to a District Conference, and some of the people there had old-time religion and got happy and rejoiced, and when Miss Mary returned she told her mamma that she heard white people at the Conference shout just like negroes. With my presiding elder's help and the Lord's help, I had some success during the year and money in hand to build a good church at the close.

The Little Rock Conference met that year in Hot Springs again. The first time in 1878, and this time in 1885, with Bishop C. B. Galloway presiding. More of the laity attended than usual at this session, the chief attraction no doubt being the wonderful springs. About the usual attendance of connectional officers were present—Dr. E. E. Hoss, again, and we were always glad to see him. On Friday night Dr. Hoss preached an interesting and edifying sermon to a packed house, and Dr. N. R. Winnfield concluded with prayer, and such a prayer! He had been pastor there four years, and the sight of so many old friends, the inspiring sermon—something seemed to arouse and stir his inmost soul, and as he proceeded with his prayer, first one and then another began to audibly give vent to their feelings, until the sobs, the groans and the amens, and finally the mingled noises rose into a storm, and the prayer ceased. A hearty and general handshaking followed, and many eyes glistened through joyful tears.

At this Conference the writer was appointed again to the Carolina charge, but found it much changed. It was enlarged, and we boarded that year (1887) in the little town of Rosston at a private house, where commercial men were entertained for $15 a month, horse included. As to visible results, this perhaps was the most successful year of my ministerial life. The people as a rule had neither poverty nor riches. They were well-to-do farmers, intelligent citizens, and they generally held the Lord's day, the Lord's people, and especially the Lord's ministers, in high esteem. When a revival meeting would close a number of workers and others would go to the next nearest meeting and encourage that, and thus revival fires were kept burning for weeks in succession. In my meetings I claimed one hundred conversions, and no doubt indirectly there were many more. These professions were not still-born, as a rule, nor doubtful, but the converts would work and pray in public like veterans.

Wife had been almost a cripple from rheumatism for years, and we decided to move South for a change. First chose Texas, but settled in Louisiana. I first wrote Rev. Joel T. Davis, at Lake Charles, and he referred me to Rev. S. S. Keener, at Rayne, and he wrote back that if I was willing to take "pot luck," to come on, and we reached Shreveport January 1, 1888, just in time for the opening of the Louisiana Conference. Bishop Key presided, C. F. Evans was secretary, and J. H. Scruggs was preacher in charge.

Church News

Bishop W. F. McDowell, accompanied by Mrs. McDowell, sailed for Bremen, Germany, on the Kaiser Wilhelm II on November 1. He has gone on a journey of official visitation to the Asiatic missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Canadian Methodism, with a membership of 338,466, raised for missions during their last fiscal year ending June 30th, $683,797.98—an average of $2.02 for every communicant. This was an increase of more than $61,000 over the year previous.

The Methodist preachers of Kansas City, Mo., are planning to inaugurate a co-operative evangelistic campaign in that city. We notice on the committee having the movement in charge the name of Rev. C. M. Simpson, who is a transplanted Mississippian.

Our Trinity congregation, of Los Angeles, California, have under way a movement to construct on a beautiful and well-located site an up-to-date church which will cost not less than $100,000. Its total seating capacity, when all apartments are thrown together, will be 2,500.

The Young Men's Christian Association in its recent session at Toronto refused to recede from its present evangelical basis, which provides that only members of the evangelical churches shall have a vote in the management of its affairs. This action deserves most hearty commendation.

Bishop Candler dedicated the spacious new church at Beaumont, Texas, on October 23rd, preaching a sermon of extraordinary power. Dr. S. A. Steel performed a similar service for the Methodists of Pensacola, Fla., who have succeeded in erecting a $75,000 house of worship, on the 30th ult.

Bishop Luther B. Wilson will soon visit Africa to study the needs and opportunities of that great field. Bishop W. R. Lambuth has been designated to perform a similar service for our Church. With the two great Methodisms of America turning their attention to the peoples of the Dark Continent, a more vigorous movement toward their evangelization may be expected in the near future.

The Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church met in Baltimore on November 2. It is said that this Board disbursed last year in thirty foreign countries $11,417,438, and that there are 700 missionaries seeking to extend the kingdom in the various fields in which it is operating. The evangelical enterprise of our sister Methodism is worthy alike of our admiration and emulation.

The program of the Ecumenical Methodist Conference, which will meet in Toronto, Canada, October 4, 1911, is now being arranged. All the Methodisms of the world are expected to be represented in that great gathering. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will send fifty-six delegates. Those who have been appointed to go from Louisiana and Mississippi are Rev. F. N. Parker, D. D., Hon. H. H. White, Dr. H. M. DuBose, Rev. R. A. Meek, D. D., and Mr. J. R. Bingham.

There is talk among the Sunday school leaders in Michigan of doing away with "rag time" music in the Sunday schools of that State. Such a reform has long been needed in all sections of the country. And it would not be a bad idea to extend the reformation to the church services also. With so many inspiring tunes and glorious songs available, it is a reproach for Christian people to trifle away their time on semi-religious jigs and ditties, which exert neither a refining nor helpful spiritual influence.

It is announced that there is to be a Woman's Missionary Movement of an interdenominational character, patterned after the Laymen's Movement, and that inspirational meetings will be held in many of the leading cities of the United States this fall and winter, closing with a great rally in New York City next spring. They will also adopt the banquet feature which has been so characteristic of the laymen's gatherings. One of the cities to be visited is Cincinnati, where the exercises will close with a banquet, costing a dollar a plate, to be given at the Grand Hotel.

The Young Men's Christian Association of America has become one of the potent missionary forces of the world. Eighty-two secretaries are now working in thirty cities of thirteen foreign countries. The other lands into which they have entered are as follows: The Argentine Republic, Brazil, Ceylon, China, Cuba, Hong Kong, India, Japan, Korea, Turkey, Mexico, the Philippine Islands, and Uruguay. The work in these centres seeks to serve both the natives and the English-speaking population. Those having it in charge are said to be men of splendid capacity, as they ought to be. Christianity should have only its best representatives on the firing lines.

The Nashville Christian Advocate states that the movement launched in that city some weeks ago to raise $20,000 for local church extension work has been a marked success, the amount aimed at having been exceeded by $300. It was decided, however, to continue the campaign with a view to adding $5,000 more to the fund. It is said that subscriptions had been secured from more than a thousand persons when the reports were turned in on October the 30th. We are glad to see the Methodists at the Hub setting our other cities so wholesome an example, and we hope that it will prove contagious. All of our strong congregations should feel obligated to assist in planting Methodism in new and needy fields.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, having finished his work in the Orient, has sailed for the United States on the steamship Siberia. Just when he is expected to arrive we have not been informed, but it greatly pleases us to know that he will soon be again on this side of the Pacific. This beloved chief pastor has been sorely missed during the several weeks of his absence, and his host of friends will accord him an enthusiastic greeting upon his return. There is no more majestic figure in American Methodism than this stalwart son of Tennessee, who is equally great in heart and head, and who excels in the use of both tongue and pen. We trust that his trip abroad has proven beneficial to him physically, and that he will come back refreshed for the work that awaits him in the home land.

Dr. Gilbert, the gifted editor of the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, suggests that it might be a wise thing for the two episcopal Methodisms to unite in building a great cathedral to cost, perhaps, a million dollars, in Washington city. Dr. Palmore, of the St. Louis Advocate, heartily endorses the proposal, and ventures the additional suggestion that the pulpit of this great church should be doubly manned, having as co-pastors one minister from the North and one from the South. Pioneers far out in the field of catholicity are these brethren, and the churches they represent may overtake them in fifty or a hundred years. But, considering existing conditions, we think they are proposing to move together at a pace somewhat too rapid. The children of Wesley are gradually drawing closer together on this side of the Atlantic, but, in our judgment, they yet lack much of being ready to be shepherded in one fold.

DR. WINTON VERSUS FEATHERSTUN AGAIN.

By Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Dr. Winton essays to answer mine of late date, but his efforts amount only to a rejoinder, not an answer. His remarks concerning my want of courtesy, etc., are not relevant, and, hence, are no part of this issue.

He says in explanation of his former statement to the effect that Tennessee's Constitution forbade ex post facto laws, that he was not alluding to real ex post facto laws, but to such as the statute of 1895, so much discussed; and insists that the "article and section of the Constitution of Tennessee to which I before referred (Art. ix, Sec. 8) distinctly says that when the Legislature passes statutes affecting the charters of corporations, such statutes shall not abrogate any rights conferred by existing charters. The concluding sentence of that section, referring to the laws above indicated, says: 'which laws may at any time be altered or repealed, and no such alteration or repeal shall interfere with or divest rights which have been vested legally.'"

Just so, but suppose an institution wishes to change its charter, conforming it to the law of 1895, may it not do so? Does Dr. Winton or any lawyer in Tennessee contend that the Constitution by this provision hinders every educational institution of Tennessee to a hard and fast charter out of date, however effete it may be? This would be the "dead hand" calamity in its very worst form.

The Doctor comes at last to the issue. "The other proposition of Dr. Featherstun, of which he writes as though it had been under discussion all this time, is that the Board secure an amended charter. Was any such proposal made at Asheville? Does anybody authoritatively make it now?"

Does it have to be specified? Is it not involved in what the Church did demand at Asheville? If I should telegraph to my boy at college, "Come home," and he should reply, "I can't, it is too far to walk," what would I think? To answer might be considered discourteous—I leave the Doctor to answer. The boy has money and there is a railroad home.

The Doctor gets a glimpse of the absurdity of his suggestion, and tells us that "the board greatly desires a new charter. But, having in mind the furor aroused when in 1905 it undertook to secure one, its members are naturally a little skeptical. To secure such a charter requires the petition of every member of the Board. In 1905, Bishop Hoss got two of the members who had signed the petition to withdraw their names, and the matter had to be dropped. Something like this would probably happen again."

The Doctor does not tell us what sort of a new charter the Board desires, nor anything of the kind of a new charter sought in 1905, which Bishop Hoss defeated. He confesses, by inference, that the Board will not, does not wish to get a new charter such as the Church demands. He indicates that it could be done if every member consented, but all will not consent. "Aye, there's the rub." This is just what the Church suspects: Vanderbilt has a Board which does not wish to obey the Church. This Board claims that its members must hold their places by vote of the Board. The Church, therefore, by the Doctor's argument, cannot help herself; and the Board may do just as it pleases with the Church's university; and proceeds to disobey and utterly disregard the Church's wish, and then complains at the Church because she will not tamely submit. You are right, Doctor, it is not at all a case of can't—it is a clear case of won't—unless forced to. Something like 1905 would probably happen again. Not in this case, where the Church has spoken, if all the members were true to their trust and loyal to the Church.

As to Bishop Galloway's attitude to this matter, we Mississippians do not believe that the presentation by Dr. Winton and those of his way is fairly put. Requiescat in pace! The Doctor is sadly in need of evidence to support his contention, when he must, perforce, resort to such appeals. To us it is little short of— I must try to be courteous. However, I should rather be true to the right and to the Church.

Dr. Winton says: "The whole tone of my critic's writing, as of that of others, is to the effect that the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University is a rebellious and contumelious body which must be coerced. Inasmuch as this entire controversy was raised by the impugning of motives and the attributing of purposes, it is not surprising that every action of that Board has come to be judged by the treasonable designs which it is alleged to harbor."

I have impugned nobody's motives. I demand proof that I have. I have simply made it plain that the Church has plainly spoken to this creature of hers, the Vanderbilt Board, and the Board has refused to obey. If this history means that the Board "is a rebellious and contumelious body," so it is. It is a matter of fact, and does not involve any question of motive, and I have raised no such questions. The Board says it can't; Dr. Winton, as quoted above, indicates that it does not wish to; and there we are. What the motive is I do not know, have not asked, and do not suggest. It is what the Board does and refuses to do that has enlisted my attention, and not its motives. I demand that Dr. Winton show one hint of mine at a sinister motive on the part of Kirkland & Co. or of the Doctor. I heartily for myself resent the baseless allegation.

DOUBTS ENDED.

There is a quaint legend which tells how, some years after the event, St. Thomas was again troubled with agonizing doubts as to our Lord's resurrection. He sought the apostles, and began to pour his soul's troubles into their ears. But first one, then another, looked at him in astonishment, and told the unhappy doubter that he was sorry for him, but really he had so much to do he had no time to listen to his tale. Then he was fain to impart his woes to some devout women. But they, as busy as Dorcas, and in like employment, soon made him understand that they had no leisure for such thoughts as these. At last it dawned upon him that perhaps it was because they were so busy that they were free from the doubts by which he was tortured. He took the hint, he went to Parthia, occupied himself in preaching Christ's gospel, and was never troubled with doubts any more.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Secular News and Comment

Mr. Horace Vose, of Westerly, Rhode Island, has made it his rule to supply the White House with a Thanksgiving turkey every year since the time of General Grant's incumbency in the presidential office. He is now reported to be engaged in searching for the best gobbler reared in New England to grace Mr. Taft's table on November the 24th.

Miss Clara Barton, whose humanitarian work has made her famous around the world, is ninety-one years of age. She is still active in the enterprises of the American Red Cross Society which she was instrumental in organizing in 1881. In her service to humanity she ranks second only to Florence Nightingale, and sustains to the people of the United States much the same relation that Miss Nightingale did to those of England.

The estate of the late Senator Dolliver has been appraised at $85,415, invested chiefly in two farms. Mrs. Dolliver was made administratrix. For a Northern man, the deceased Iowa Senator was in quite moderate circumstances—rather a good recommendation in this day when to too great an extent moneyed men are seeking to shape the legislation of the country. In some instances, honorable poverty is a thing to be coveted.

According to the press dispatches, the people of the new State of Arizona are planning to keep a firm grip upon their public officials. A measure has been introduced into their Constitutional Convention, now in session, providing that upon a petition of 25 per cent. of the voters, the question of recalling or deposing an officer shall be submitted to a test vote. This is undeniably more democracy, but the question is whether it is not an excess of it.

Within the last decade Iowa has shown material decreases in the total number of its farms, farmers and the extent of farm acreage; but these losses are overshadowed by the enormous increase in the value of farm lands, implements and buildings and the expenditures for farm labor. From 1900 to 1910 the total value of Iowa farm lands alone rose from $1,256,752,000 to $2,799,925,000, an increase of 122.7 per cent.; the value of all farms, including buildings, increased from $1,497,555,000 to $3,253,719,000, a gain of 117.3 per cent.

In a meeting of the trustees of Princeton University, held on November 3, resolutions highly commendatory of the eight years' administration of former President Woodrow Wilson were adopted. The degree of Doctor of Laws was also conferred upon him, and he was requested to continue in his professorship of jurisprudence and politics, which he had also resigned. The only action taken concerning the election of a new president was the appointment of a committee to consider the matter and report to a subsequent meeting of the Board.

The most vigorous and versatile ruler in the world to-day is Emperor William of Germany, who is writing a biography of Frederick the Great. A considerable part of this work is reported to be already finished, and the Kaiser is credited with treating his subject with marked impartiality, notwithstanding his ardent admiration for his illustrious ancestor. Evidence of this is his whole-hearted condemnation of Frederick's infidelity and enthusiasm for Voltaire. His majesty is said to contemplate a visit to all of the great soldier's battlefields before completing the volume.

A dispatch from Peking on October 31 states that it is there generally believed that the throne has decided to accede to the demand of the Senate and the Provincial Assemblies for the early convocation of a popular and representative Parliament for the whole Chinese Empire. It has been the purpose of the government not to call such a gathering before 1915, and if it is convened sooner, it will be in response to a clamor which the authorities deem it unwise to ignore. Everywhere the march of democracy is going on. It now looks as if within a few years such a thing as an absolute monarchy will be unknown.

Five of the leading universities of the South, according to report, have entered into an agreement to have their representatives compete annually in oratorical contests. They are as follows: Vanderbilt University, the University of Virginia, the University of North Carolina, the University of Georgia, and Tulane University. During the present scholastic year Georgia will send its representatives to Tulane, Virginia will meet North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Vanderbilt will go to Virginia, Tulane to Vanderbilt, and North Carolina to Georgia. A similar arrangement will also be carried out next year.

The peanut industry promises to be largely developed in Louisiana and Mississippi within the next few years, especially in those sections where the boll weevil has made cotton raising impossible. It is said that ordinary land will yield from twenty to sixty-five bushels per acre, and that the peanuts can be marketed for $1 a bushel, and the hay made from the vines sold for from $10 to $15 a ton. Some predict that the cotton seed oil mills will in many places soon be converted into mills for the making of peanut oil, which is said to command a ready sale in Europe, bringing a higher price than olive oil. The peanut oil cake is also stated to be an excellent stock food.

The Carnegie Hero Fund Commission met in Pittsburgh on October 31, and awarded thirty silver and twenty-eight bronze medals for acts of heroism. In addition to this, cash rewards aggregating $40,250 were made in thirty cases, the money to be used for educational or other worthy purposes at the discretion of the executive committee, while in twenty-three other cases of rescue or attempted rescue, where the heroes died, pensions ranging from $20 to $50 a month were made to the dependents, with $5 a month to be added for each child left. Of the rescues or attempted rescues from death, seven were from railroad trains or street cars, nineteen from drowning, one from a runaway horse, eight from suffocation in gas producers or wells, twenty from mine disasters, two from fire, and one from shooting.

Automatic drinking cup slot machines are to be installed in the corridors of the New Orleans Court-house building by the State Board of Health. Dr. E. S. Kelly received a telegram a few days ago advising that a shipment of 10,000 cups and several machines would be made soon. The board will place one or two of these machines with the cups in the corridor near its office. One cent dropped in a slot causes a cup to drop out and a supply of ice water will be at hand. It is expected that the cup will be destroyed as soon as used. The object of installing the machines and cups will be to demonstrate at least one way to do away with the common drinking cup and substitute the individual drinking cup. The board in its literature warns persons against the use of the common drinking cup, and it hopes that the use of the cheap individual cup will do away with the evil.—Times-Democrat.

The survivors of the famous Mississippi Constitutional Convention of 1890 met in Jackson on November 1, with thirty members in attendance, and effected a permanent organization by electing Col. H. M. Street, of Meridian, president, and Mr. R. E. Wilson, secretary. A number of interesting addresses were made, and some papers of historic value were read. Isaiah T. Montgomery, of Bolivar County, the only negro who sat in the Convention of 1890, was present, and was given a warm welcome. He was the boy-servant of Jefferson Davis during the Civil War, and, though he is a Republican, is said to believe that it is unwise for ignorant negroes to be given the right of franchise in the Southern States, where there are so many of them. Meetings similar to the one lately convened in Jackson will hereafter be held annually. Of the distinguished men who two decades ago sat in the memorable body which wrote the present organic law of Mississippi, fully one-half have passed to the sphere invisible. How fast do the generations come and go!

FROM DR. SULLIVAN.

Dear Dr. Meek: Will you allow me a little space to tell of a very pleasant trip I had in the fair weather of October? This pleasant trip was due to the warm invitation of Brother R. T. Nolen, preacher-in-charge of Harrisville Circuit. This is the second year Brother Nolen had charge of that work. Brother Nolen has wrought a good work in the six congregations amongst whom he has so faithfully labored. His people evidently show marked improvement in their spiritual life by better attendance on public worship, a deeper interest in the six Sunday schools of the charge, a closer co-operation in the affairs of the Church, and a more liberal contribution to expenses. A strong mutual affection has grown up between the preacher and his people, which makes it desirable and safe that he should carry on to its best result the good work which has so prospered under his faithful ministry. He has added one hundred members to their number in the two years of his labor. Besides extinguishing a heavy debt this year against the parsonage, he has made considerable improvement upon it by uniting his own labor with the contribution of his people. His genial, warm-hearted manner, and his plain, straightforward ministry of the Word have drawn the people to him and made him a special power amongst them. On Saturday afternoon I took train at Jackson and ran down to Star, twenty miles. There, as Brother Nolen had arranged, Brother J. T. Bell met me and took me four miles west to his house, where I had the kind hospitality of a Christian home. When the bright, beautiful Sunday morning came, he and his family took me two miles to Rexford Church, where they worship. The house is near the roadside, in an ample grove of small oaks. By the time the Sunday school exercises closed the gathered crowd covered the hill, more than enough to fill the house at the morning service. It is rare to find a more delightful and attentive congregation gathered from all directions in the country. It was a genuine enjoyment to the preacher. Especially did he enjoy the service of that country choir, who poured out their clear, distinct song with the spirit and the understanding. May they grow in grace and their tribe increase! A good congregation assembled again for the service in the early afternoon. This preacher is indebted to his Brother Nolen for a delightful visit to his good people, and for the opportunity to preach to a choice country congregation. He drove me back to Star himself and left me to spend the night in the home of Brother Miller of that place. That night I slept in a modest Star that shines with all the light it has, but it will grow till Methodist illumination rises from its foundation to make it glorious and memorable.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

MRS. F. A. SULLIVAN.

Flora Alma Overstreet, wife of Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of the Mississippi Conference, was born at Moscow, Kemper County, Mississippi, January 5, 1875, and died at the Methodist parsonage in McComb City, October 6, 1910. She was united in marriage to Rev. W. M. Sullivan April 30, 1907. One child, now an infant of thirteen months, blessed the union.

She joined the church when a girl, and later, while a student at Industrial Institute and College, she professed conversion.

The genuineness of her conversion was evidenced by her beautiful Christian character and its self-effacing ministry. She was truly a spirit of good. Her calm, gentle wisdom, her serene humility, her tender sympathy, fitted her to act instinctively in the home and in society, diffusing a tranquilizing influence, the preciousness of which is never fully understood till it is quenched. Her friendly greetings were without formality, and her words of praise—and she had a kind word for everyone—evidenced the noble spirit of a truly generous heart.

In her going the children of the home have sustained a great loss, the husband a crushing sorrow, and the church bereft of a potent influence for good.

We laid her to rest in the cemetery at her old home, amid the tears and sobs of a large circle of friends and relatives.

May the God of the living comfort the bereaved husband and the sorrowing relatives!

J. T. LEGGETT.

CALLED HOME.

We have buried here to-day Mrs. Addie Leggett Gale, wife of Rev. R. S. Gale, pastor at McHenry, Miss., and sister of Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference. She died at McHenry on Thursday afternoon, after a lingering illness. The funeral was held at the Methodist Church here this morning, conducted by Revs. H. M. Ellis, W. L. Linfield, J. C. Ellis, C. C. Gibson, and the writer. A good and true woman has gone to her reward. A more extended notice will be furnished you later. Sincerely yours,

PAUL D. HARDIN.

IMPORTANT.

Dear Brethren: For the convenience of those attending the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference at Homer, I am trying to secure a special train on the L. & N. W. from Hagen to Homer, Tuesday, December 6th.

All from the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts, and from part of the Lafayette District, can come via the L. R. & N., leaving New Orleans at 6:10 Monday, or Baton Rouge at 9 p. m. Monday, taking a sleeper for Hagen, arrive at Hagen at 5:10 a. m. Tuesday, take Homer special and arrive in Homer at 11 a. m.

All from the Monroe District can leave Monroe via V. S. & P. at 7:05 a. m. Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbsland.

All from the Shreveport District can leave Shreveport via V. S. & P. at 6:20 a. m., Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbs.

Owing to the reduced rate given, it will require a guarantee of one hundred passengers from the two points, Hagen and Gibbs, to secure the special. Therefore, let everyone who will come via either of the above-named routes, meeting the special at either Hagen or Gibbs. Please write me by return mail, stating at which point you will join the special.

Those south of Hagen and east of Monroe can make connection with the special via L. R. & N. only.

If we do not secure the special, all who do not reach Homer at 5:20 p. m., Monday, will be delayed in reaching here until 5:20 p. m., Tuesday.

By running the special it will give time for all work of the examining committees to be completed Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Awaiting your early instruction, I remain,

Faternally yours,

WM. H. COLEMAN.

Concerning Missions.

THE MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

A called meeting of the Board of Missions was held at the Publishing House in Nashville on Tuesday, October 18th. The following were present: Bishops A. W. Wilson, E. R. Hendrix, Collins Denny, John C. Kilgo and E. D. Mouzon; W. W. Pinson, E. F. Cook, Mrs. R. W. MacDonell, E. H. Rawlings, Mrs. A. L. Marshall, J. M. Moore, J. D. Hamilton, W. F. McMurry, J. W. Perry, F. S. Parker, A. F. Watkins, O. E. Brown, J. T. Daves, G. C. Rankin, G. B. Winton, H. K. Boyer, U. V. W. Darlington, J. B. Greene, J. B. Howell, A. B. Ransom, T. S. Weaver, F. M. Daniels, Miss Marla L. Gibson, Mrs. Luke Johnson, Mrs. E. B. Chappell, Mrs. W. F. Barnum, Mrs. H. R. Steele, Miss Mary N. Moore. Bishop Wilson presided.

The General Secretary reported the consolidation of the three missionary papers into one, and recommended that no additional editorial secretary be elected, the secretaries agreeing to do that work in addition to their other work for the present. This request was made for several reasons, not the least of which was an economic one. The General Secretary then read an elaborate statement setting forth the financial condition of the Board at the close of the General Conference in May; also its condition at the present time, and its probable condition on the 1st of next January.

This statement showed a steadily increasing deficit growing out of overdrafts on new enterprises, usually undertaken as specials, and also on account of appropriations to current expenditures. The causes leading to this condition were set forth and the necessity of the adoption of a financial method that would remedy this condition was strongly urged. It was shown that many specials undertaken were never paid out in full, and that the enterprises projected on the basis of those specials created a deficit for which no provision had been made; besides, each additional special increased the current expenditure without adding anything to the current income. The increase in income for a number of years past had been almost entirely on specials account, making a steadily growing annual budget without an adequate income to meet it; hence, the business of the Board had far outgrown its income. The remedy suggested was not to decrease the number of specials, nor to increase the annual assessment, but to so co-ordinate these two sources of income as to make them mutually helpful and not antagonistic. In order to do this the enlargement of the basis of the annual appropriations was urged. It was argued that to limit the appropriations to the income from assessments alone, necessitated either crippling the work already undertaken, or incurring an annual deficit. It was also urged that specials should be selected from the list of appropriations, so that they might be kept under the continuous oversight of the Board and guarded against entailing permanent deficits as in the past. It was urged that there should be a contingent fund appropriated annually to act as a protection against emergencies that are constantly arising on the fields for which there are no provisions made. The support of missionaries and missions already undertaken, it was declared in this statement, should have precedence in the expenditure of moneys and that new enterprises should be deferred in the interest of these current expenditures, rather than that enthusiasm for new enterprises should carry the Board beyond its resources to take care of the work already projected.

Reasons were given why the fiscal year should end with the calendar year instead of on the 31st of March. The most important of these reasons was that it would make the closing of the fiscal year more nearly coincide with the closing of the Conference year of the larger number of the Conferences, and thus lessen, if not remove, the temptations to draw heavily on the next year's resources in closing the accounts of the fiscal year.

To remedy these conditions the following by-laws were suggested, which, after full discussion by the Board, were adopted with only slight verbal changes:

1. All new enterprises and advance movements shall be considered by the Board on the same basis as current expenditures, and, if approved, shall be put on the list of appropriations.

2. The annual appropriations shall not exceed the income of the preceding year from all sources, excepting devises, bequests, annuities, and from sales of property.

3. All special objects to be put before the Church or assigned to individuals, churches and other bodies, shall hereafter be selected from the list of appropriations; and it shall be the duty of all connected with the Board to encourage and assist in the full collection of such specials.

4. Five per cent. of the sum appropriated each year shall be set aside as a contingent fund to cover such incidental expenses on the field as cannot be foreseen, and such emergencies as necessitate immediate outlay; provided, that no sum of more than one thousand dollars shall be expended on this account at one time until such sum has been authorized by the Executive Committee.

5. No person shall draw drafts, incur debts, or otherwise commit the Board to the payment of money without due notice to and authorization from the Secretaries. This applies to funds that have been appropriated, as well as to others.

6. The fiscal year of this Board shall end with December 31st.

These by-laws were referred to the Committee on By-Laws to adjust to existing by-laws. In the afternoon session this Committee reported and added the following by-law: "No person shall be allowed to solicit special gifts without authority of this Board."

It will be seen that the identifying of specials with the regular expenditures of the Board and the enlargement of the basis of appropriations will make it possible to count all specials thus undertaken on the annual assessments. This should popularize these specials, and at the same time render it much easier to raise the entire assessment, and in many cases go far beyond it.

Rev. E. F. Cook, Secretary of the Foreign Department, suggested the fixing of a basis for the support of superannuated missionaries, which was referred to the Executive Committee, to be reported at the next meeting.

The proposition to buy a property for the Woman's School work in Rio de Janeiro, to cost about $134,000, which had been referred to the Board by the Woman's Board before the consolidation, was discussed at length and referred to the Executive Committee.

Rev. J. M. Moore, Secretary of the Home Department, offered a resolution concerning the building of a new Central Church in San Francisco, which was referred to a committee composed of the General Secretary, Secretary of the Home Department, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, and the Bishop in charge of that field.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Secretary of the Educational Department, presented a request from the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions of the Virginia Conference, asking that that Conference be permitted to devote its surplus, after paying the entire foreign mission assessment, to the evangelization of Korea. It was announced as the intention of this Conference to raise a surplus which would take care of the entire advance movement needed for the evangelization of our share of Korea's population. This proposition was received with strong approval and was unanimously adopted.

These, and other items of business, required the entire time of two sessions, and the Board adjourned after what was regarded a most interesting and profitable meeting.

AN UNJUST INDICTMENT.

By Rev. J. R. Howorth.

When the Master began his holy ministry he selected twelve men from various walks of life. These men, his bosom companions, lived closer to him than any one else—drawing daily inspiration from him, and from this closeness of association should have been thoroughly imbued with the true Messianic spirit. Yet, in the end, we find one of these twelve betraying him with a kiss. When the storm came, when the crucial hour arrived, the rest forsook him, and the impulsive Peter denied him.

Humanity is fallible. Any effort that deals with humanity, in some instances will fail. Any effort that depends on humanity will also fail in some instances; thus it is that religion has ever been full of imperfections and its pathway strewn with derelicts. But that the Church as a whole should be denounced for these failures, or that religion should be condemned and cast aside as a thing worthless, is beyond conception.

That the following indictment of the Church by Edwin Markham in the October "Twentieth Century Magazine" is not only unjust, but untrue, can scarcely be denied. He charges that the Church is in a "hypnotic dream, under the hypnotic hand of mammon"; second, that she is "a stay and a support for injustice"; third, that she "excuses stock watering and the gambling in high finance"; fourth, that "she apologizes for the special privileges that enable the few to pick the pockets of the many," and fifth, that "she sits complacent, with cruel riches on the right and cruel poverty on the left."

The inference to be drawn from this attack is that we are still living in the dark ages; that governmental influences, allied with the devil, are still the potent, dominant factors in all religious circles; that there was ever such an upheaval as the Reformation in the sixteenth century which shook the world from center to circumference—transformed, rejuvenated humanity, revived the doctrine of grace, faith and charity—setting anew the mainspring of human development by putting into the hands of the human family the living Word of God, is ignored. And this wholesale indictment is lodged against the Church simply because a few of those who subscribe to its doctrines are venal, having sought the Church as a cloak for their sins!

Never before in the history of the world has there been such a general diffusion of knowledge as there is to-day. This general diffusion of knowledge is the direct result of the revivification of religion, and the light that comes to the world through the general distribution of God's Word into the homes of the people. Does the Church or the devil place God's Word in the hands and the homes of the people? Does the Church or the Devil stand for the education and enlightenment of humanity? Does the Church or the devil reach down in the gutter and pick up the poor outcast, supply him with refreshments, kindle anew the fires of hope, and start him in life anew? Does the Church or the devil found asylums for the care and training of the poor little waifs thrown upon the mercy of the world? Does the Church or the devil found homes for the care and maintenance of the aged and infirm? Does the Church or the devil stand for the suppression of the liquor traffic? Does the Church or the devil stand for the enforcement of the law? Does the Church or the devil stand for the preservation and purity of our homes? Does the Church or the devil preach the gospel of peace and good will to the poor? Is the Church or the devil behind the present "Laymen's movement," which has for its slogan the evangelization of the whole world? Can a Church that is "in a hypnotic dream, under the hypnotic hand of mammon," plan and labor for the Christianization of the whole world within the next thirty years?

Never before in the history of the world has the Church been so active or aggressive as to-day. Never before has the Church exerted the influence over the human family that she now exerts. Never before has the Church had such a ministry as she has at present. They lead the world of thought. No longer confining themselves to the preaching of the gospel on the Sabbath, they labor incessantly the other six days in the week, aiding, guiding, directing every undertaking of importance, every world-wide movement for the uplift of humanity.

Without any doubt the Christian ministry stands to-day the best educated body of men on the face of the earth. No occupation, no profession in the world, is equal to them in education and mental equipment. Such are the men who are guiding, shaping, directing the policies of the Church—leading her in the stupendous battle against sin, ignorance and venality. And yet it is lightly charged that "she is a stay and a support for injustice and the harbinger of pick-pockets!"

Forest, Miss.

IN FAVOR OF SMALLER DISTRICTS.

Dear Brother Meek: The fact that there is widespread and growing dissatisfaction with the work of our presiding elders reaches me from various sources.

Not with the quality of the work, which was never better.

Not with the amount of the work, for our elders are diligent men in labors more abundant.

The complaint is that their work is spread out over too much territory, and divided amongst too many charges.

Whatever may be true of a district composed of cities and large towns, a presiding elder cannot do the work expected of him, and necessary for the good of the kingdom, in a district comprising from twenty to twenty-eight charges, made up principally of circuits embracing four, six and eight churches. And that is eminently where the presiding elder is needed. Our Conference should make it possible for him to do this work. We are neglecting our work in the country to the hurt of the entire Church.

The North Mississippi Conference should have now nine districts—many prefer ten.

I have heard but one objection to another district—viz., now is not an opportune time. We are suffering now and should have relief now.

Many think that our presiding elders should not hold their Quarterly Conferences so as to require travel on Sunday trains.

Yours truly,

J. R. BINGHAM.

FACING THE EAST.

By Mildred Tate Wells.

The sun is slowly westerling—
One more day's race is o'er—
He throws last rays on plain and hill,
A flash from shore to shore,
Then sinks to rest; and shadows creep
Where sunshine's erstwhile been;
Now turn about, and face the east
Till morning comes again.

Yes, face the east—our hope of dawn
When shades of night are raised—
To carry in our hearts the light
Of western skies that blazed
In glory, at the close of day,
Is living at our best.
A star will light us thro' the night,
And Christ will give us rest.

Then face the east, what'er betide,
God lives—and rules the night—
The day will dawn in His good time
And pour her flood of light
O'er shadowed ways, where you and I
Have walked, thro' gloom increased.
God lives, and rules, and blest is he,
Whose face is toward the east.

THE MURDERED BLUEBIRD.

The bluebird was happily flying about the yard, dropping down into the grass for a worm and darting through the air in swift pursuit of a flying bug. Joe watched as she made her captures and flew twittering to her nest in a box nailed to a long pole on the garden fence.

Her young ones held open their gaping mouths and chirped frantically for each tit-bit.

Joe was fascinated by the swift flight of the mother bird through the air. He decided finally it would be great fun to see how near he could send a stone without really hitting her with the aid of his sling-shot.

He tried it several times, and was greatly delighted to see the bluebird turn swiftly and dodge the stones as they whistled through the air. Joe continued his sport till at last the bird became accustomed to the stones passing by her, and no longer dodged them.

A grasshopper flew by, and the bluebird darted after it with a swoop.

Joe fitted a smooth pebble in his sling, swirled it round his head, and sent the missile humming in her direction.

The whistling pebble struck her upon the head with a crack. Over and over she turned till she fell at Joe's feet with a thud, gasped once or twice, and lay still; and as Joe started at her body in horror he heard the young ones in the nest crying loudly for their mother, who was now long overdue.

Joe is a grown man now and has boys of his own, and whenever he finds them shooting or trapping the birds about the house he tells them the story of the bluebird.—Author Unknown.

WHERE SPOOLS COME FROM.

The United States Department of Agriculture is authority for the statement that the paper birch, often called also the white birch, or canoe birch, is one of the few timber trees in this country which seem to be holding its own against axe and fire. The average citizen, however, probably takes no particular interest in the paper birch. Yet it is doubtful if any other kind of wood on the face of the earth is found in so many households; for the paper birch furnishes most of the spools made in the United States.

Maine is the chief center of spool manufacture. Its factories turn out 800,000,000 spools yearly, chiefly birch. Few woods as hard as this can be worked with as little dulling of the tools; its principal recommendation lies in that fact. It is handsome in color and after the wood becomes seasoned, it shrinks and warps very little. That is an important consideration, because the delicate machinery that winds the thread would fall to work if the spool changed its shape in a perceptible degree.

The birch-wood for spools must be selected and handled with care. The tree's red disk heart-wood is objectionable because it will not turn smooth in the lathe, and the color is not desired. Few industries waste more wood in proportion to the quantity used, than spool-making. Heart-wood, knots and all other defects, frequently amounting to more than one-half of the tree, are rejected. From one-half to three-fourths of the remainder may go to the refuse heap in sawing the bars and turning the spools. Despite this waste, the paper birch does not appear to be threatened with extinction. It is a fire tree—that is, it spreads rapidly over spaces left vacant by forest fires. The most extensive paper birch forests of Maine and New Hampshire occupy tracts which were laid bare by the great forest fires which swept the region from 1825 to 1837.

The tree is short lived. At an age when the white cedar, for example, is just beginning to lay on useful wood, the paper birch has passed its prime, and is ready for decay. It is placed at still further disadvantage by being unable to compete with other trees for light and soil. It prospers when growing alone, but gives up the fight after stronger trees begin to crowd it. Nevertheless, it is believed that more paper birch is growing in the United States to-day than two hundred years ago.—The Presbyterian.

A COSTLY COMMA.

"Have you your examples all right, Tom?" asked Mr. Walker, as his son closed the arithmetic and came to say good-night. "Near enough," was the reply, "and I'm thankful, for they were a tough lot." "But I don't understand," said his father, "what you mean by near enough. Do you mean that they are almost right?" "Why, I mean they are as good as right. There's a point wrong in one, and two figures wrong in another, but there's no use in fussing over such trifles. I'm most sure the method's right, and that's the main thing." "Yes," returned his father, "I admit that the method is important, but it is not the only thing. Let me see how much difference the point makes in this example."

Tom brought his paper, and after looking it over, Mr. Walker said: "That point makes a difference of five thousand dollars. Suppose it represented money that some one was going to pay you. Then you'd be pretty anxious to have the point right, wouldn't you?" "Oh, of course, in that case I would have looked it over again," said Tom, carelessly. "But this is only an example in school, and it would never make any difference to anybody whether the point was right or not." "To any one but you," returned Mr. Walker. "For a habit of carelessness and inaccuracy once fixed upon you will make a difference all your life, and may prevent you from ever succeeding in the business world. You may not realize it, but what employers want, and must have, is accuracy in little things as well as in great, and, indeed, things that seem small are often far more important than they look. A comma seems about as unimportant as anything, but let me tell you a story about one. Some years ago there were enumerated in a tariff bill certain articles that might be admitted free of duty. Among them were foreign fruit-plants. What would that mean?"

"Why, I suppose," said Tom, plants that bear fruit. "Yes," said Mr. Walker, "but the clerk who copied the bill never had been taught accuracy, and instead of copying the hyphen, he changed it to a comma, making it read, 'fruit, plants, etc.' It was a trifling error—not worth noticing, you would say—but before it could be remedied, the government lost two million dollars, as all foreign 'fruits' had to be admitted free of duty. Now, whenever you are inclined to be careless, I hope you will remember that two-million-dollar comma."

Tom did not say much, but he went up stairs thinking that if a little comma could make all that difference, it might be worth while to fuss over trifles, after all.—Martha C. Rankin, in The Presbyterian.

"The good of human life cannot lie in the possession of things which for one man is for the rest to lose, but rather in things which all can possess alike, and where one man's wealth promotes his neighbors."—Spinoza.

ORPHANAGE CAR TO JACKSON.

Dear Brethren: We are going to run another Orphanage Car from Horn Lake through to Jackson Monday morning, November 21st inst. Brother Young, our presiding elder, has asked me to notify all our pastors in Sardis District and ask that they take the matter up at once, as the time is short. We desire each of them to appoint a committee at each of his churches and send them some of the literature I am mailing under separate covers. The only way now to do this work is through the pastors. We haven't time to get the names of committees and send them literature. Won't you please drop me a card advising me of what you are doing for this car? If you have a town paper get your editor to make announcement of same. Dear Brother, let's do this work heartily at once, and with great earnestness. I know you are deeply interested in our 181 orphan children at Jackson. So let's fill the car full. Sincerely and fraternally, S. L. POPE.

Senatobia, Miss., Nov. 1, 1910.

(Though Brother Pope writes only to the preachers of the Sardis District, it would be well for those all along the line to co-operate in this enterprise and make it a great success. We have no more worthy cause than that of taking care of the dependent orphan children among us.)

THE ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS.

We publish this week the pastoral address of the College of Bishops, which was authorized at their recent semi-annual meeting in New Orleans. It is an admirable paper in every respect, and, emanating from such a source, should be read, and re-read, and prayerfully reflected upon by every preacher and lay Methodist within the bounds of our vast connection. Our chief pastors are men of discernment, of clear judgment, and of ardent devotion to the cause of Christ, and when they thus unitedly speak, it behooves the Church to listen and weigh their message well.

No note of pessimism or wholesale arraignment of our church membership is contained in the communication of these faithful watchmen upon the walls of Zion. They pay tribute to the soundness and fidelity of the great body of our preachers and people, and utter no doleful prophecies concerning the future. Indeed, there is no occasion for a feeling of discouragement among the Methodists of the South. On the contrary, they have much to inspire them with hopefulness and confidence as they face the second decade of the twentieth century. The past quadrennium was in many particulars the best in the history of our denomination. It brought us an increase in numbers of more than 200,000, and a highly gratifying growth in material resources and equipment. Every setting sun witnesses the completion of new houses of worship to which we hold the title, and our "far-flung battle line" is every day being further extended. Despite the things which fault-finders tell us are militating against our success, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is steadily moving forward along all proper lines of Christian activity. Her achievements for the extension of the Master's kingdom are proportionately equal to those of any other religious organization in existence.

But notwithstanding our present prosperity and apparently encouraging outlook, this earnest message of our leaders is needed and timely. The Church has its peculiar perils to-day, as it has had in every age. Unwholesome influences, subtle and deceptive, are at work, and they are producing tendencies in the wrong direction. To discover and point these out in their incipency, with a view to their correction before they have wrought widespread injury, is wise action upon the part of our chief shepherds, and evinces a watchfulness that is most commendable.

We call especial attention to the insistence of our Bishops that the Word of God shall be preached from our pulpits authoritatively and in its purity. One does not need to be a careful observer to note that a scholastic skepticism is now widely prevalent. It is entrenched in theological seminaries, and is pouring forth a flood of literature. It airs itself in leading current periodicals, such as The Outlook, The Independent and Harper's Weekly, and through them is injecting its subtle poison into the minds of the people. It assumes an intellectual autocracy and dares to sit in judgment upon the various books of the Bible, accepting or rejecting them at will. It sneers at the scholarship of the past, scoffs at the faith of the fathers, and fastens the imputation of ignorance upon all who do not lend a willing ear to its teachings. It is to the credit of Southern Methodism that it has been less affected by this propaganda than most of the other churches. Still it is beginning to find a few adherents among us, and it is well that those in authority should have sent forth this impressive warning. Only when the certitudes of the gospel are preached may it be counted upon to move the people to penitence and holy living. An apologetic or speculative ministry is impotent to lead men to Christ. To sow the seeds of doubt is to produce a harvest of unbelief. Never was there a time when the essential teachings of the Bible needed more to be presented plainly, fervently, tenderly, by men who have verified them in the depths of their consciousness and have an abiding conviction that they have come from God. Unswerving loyalty to the divine revelation has been the strength of Methodism in the past, and any weakening of that adherence must lessen its power and efficiency in the days to come. We must continue to fight with the sword of the Spirit if we would conquer the enemies of the Holy One of Israel.

The Bishops, it will be observed, also stress the importance of a conscious experience of grace, as distinguished from a mere compliance with the outward moral proprieties. They emphasize the necessity of a genuine conversion, bringing the realization of sins forgiven and the joy of attested pardon. Most wholesome doctrine is this in this day when the tendency is to minimize human depravity and waive the necessity of regeneration. Kindness of nature, expressing itself in a generous outflow of philanthropy, is not Christianity. One may be humanitarian and benevolent in spirit, and yet utterly repudiate the claims of Christ as the Son of God. Conspicuous examples of this among living men might readily be cited. In reminding us that there is no other gateway into the kingdom than that of the new birth and that the attitude which one sustains to Christ must determine his eternal destiny, our leaders have performed a distinctly needed service. No human being, however vast his intellectual reach, has any authority to revise the conditions of salvation laid down by the Man of Galilee. They may not suit the rich, and great, and pleasure-seeking ones of earth, but they must conform to them, or share the fate of all who reject the world's only hope—the mediation of the incarnate God—the crucified, but risen and ascended Savior.

But let us not fail to lay to heart the evangelical call of our chief pastors. They proclaim the need of a great spiritual awakening throughout the land, and urge us to supplicate the throne of grace that it may come. Happily, the revival fires have not gone out upon all of our altars. Here and there throughout the Church they are yet blazing, and from many quarters continue to come tidings of refreshings from the presence of the Lord. But these need to become more general. We want to see the Spirit at work in every congregation and penitent kneeling at every chancel. We want to see people accepting Christ in every house of worship and telling in exultant tones of his power to save. Such a visitation would bring relief from all of the evils which now afflict the Church. It would counteract the influence of modern materialism, fill our empty pews with absent members, and make our people realize what peace and happiness are to be found in the fellowship and service of the Master. It would make us swift to enter the open doors about us, and strong to do the work to which the hand of Providence points.

Let us not, however, get the impression that this recognition of our inadequacy to fulfill our mission as a Church without the assistance of divine power is meant to disparage new and modern methods of work. By no means is this true. It is entirely proper that we should bring into requisition every reputable agency that may aid us in reaching and saving men. It is only essential that in these various enterprises we shall keep clearly before us an evangelical aim. When we minister to the bodies of the sick in our hospitals, let us not overlook the opportunity to perform a loftier ministry to their souls. When we teach the poor and feed the hungry in our institutional churches, let us not fail to tell them of the great Teacher who can satisfy the hunger of the deathless spirit. When we have great organs and trained choirs, let us not allow them to forget that the one purpose of sacred song is to win men to Christ and build them up in him. And in maintaining our institutions of learning, let us remember that the object of Christian education is to increase the capacity of our workers to serve and uplift humanity. Seeking the lost was what brought our Lord from heaven and was the passion of his life on earth. And in proportion as the Church is animated by the same spirit, is she faithful to him. Addressing herself to any other task and having lost her spiritual vision, she is apostate and has forfeited her true glory. Let us hearken to the call of our Bishops and heed the exhortations given. By so doing we shall bring the blessings of God upon us as individual Christians and as a denomination, and open the way for the accomplishment of larger things. There is no march to triumph except along the path of obedience and fidelity.

ROUNDING OUT THE FINANCES.

With the Annual Conferences only a few weeks off, our pastors and official members in every charge are busy with the task of raising the collections. In some places this will not be difficult, but in others it will be extremely so. We trust, however, that no board of stewards will fail to do their utmost to pay the preacher in full. The assessments for ministerial support are, with few exceptions, inadequate, and when a deficit is allowed to exist at the close of the year it almost invariably entails regrettable hardships. The cost of living is higher than it has been in a quarter of a century, and the salaries of our pastors have not kept pace with the increase of their necessary expenses. They are now having to stint and deny their families to a larger extent than usual to keep out of debt. It, therefore, behooves every congregation to see that the amount it has promised to raise is not allowed to come up short. A balance of $75 or $100 can easily be made up by all contributing a little more, whereas if the loss of such a sum is wholly borne by the minister it may considerably embarrass him. He may have been forced to incur obligations during the year which he expected to discharge when paid in the fall, and to report a deficit on his salary under such circumstances is a grave injustice. Not a few good men in this way have been caused to fall behind with their creditors, thereby seriously impairing their reputation and usefulness. And in such instances not a little of the responsibility rests upon the Church, which was ready to promise in the beginning, but proved delinquent in the end.

And the raising of the Conference collections is also a most important matter. Every assessment is for a worthy cause, and no one of them can be neglected without hurtful consequences. The funds thus raised are absolutely indispensable to the maintenance of connectional Methodism. Nor is it true that the amounts asked for are unduly large and burdensome. Considering the means of our people and the fact that these contributions are all they are requested to make for the extension of the kingdom outside of their own immediate localities, the apportionments to them are quite moderate. Many of them ought to subscribe considerably more than the sum assigned them. In every instance the assessment should be accepted as the minimum to be contributed, and no charge should allow itself to fall short of that low standard.

Too often the raising of these connectional claims is thrown entirely upon the pastor, who, unaided, has to perform the task as best he can. This is wrong. He should have in this work the sympathetic co-operation of his officials and entire membership. Every Methodist should count it both a duty and privilege to make an annual offering for the general work of the Church. Not to do so is to evade a necessary obligation. Were all the other members likewise to shirk it, it would completely paralyze the progress of Southern Methodism. Every wheel in its vast machinery would stand still, and everywhere there would be inactivity and retrogression. Giving is an essential means of grace, and he who refuses to open this channel of blessing defrauds and impoverishes himself. And usually our offerings are most unselfish when devoted to the larger and far-away enterprises of our great denomination.

A SAD DEATH.

In the tragic death of their sweet babe of four summers, Rev. and Mrs. Robert W. Vaughan, of Ruston, La., have the profound sympathy of a host of sorrowing friends. A full account of the sad occurrence has not reached us, but we have been informed that the mother in the performance of her household duties stepped aside for a moment, and that in some way, not definitely known, the clothing of the little one caught fire, and, before the flames could be extinguished, she was so severely burned that five days later she died. Brother Vaughan was in New Orleans at the time of the accident, and was hastily summoned by a telegram. All that loving hands and the best medical skill could do, was done for the little sufferer, but, as has been said, it was of no avail.

Crushing and overwhelming, indeed, is such a sorrow, and in its awful presence reason is perplexed, and even the strongest faith is taxed to its utmost limit. But though such happenings are inexplicable in the present life, we must trust in God and await an explanation in the fuller light of eternity. Out of the gospel, there is no solace for the present, and no hope for the future. But our Lord has told us that the pure and good who pass to the sphere invisible, enter the Father's house, and there we may cherish the expectation of meeting them again. That blessed home of many mansions—what reunions it will witness! There we shall see again faces long vanished, and hear again voices long hushed, and clasp once more to our bosoms, radiant with immortal life, the pulseless forms which amid blinding tears we committed to the darkness of the tomb. May the vision of that coming day cheer our friends in the desolation and loneliness of their great grief, and help them to press bravely on in life's pilgrimage until they, too, shall hear the Master's call to lay their burdens down and come home!

A CORRECTION.

In our editorial of last week on the Reply of the Vanderbilt Board to the Bishops appeared the following statement: "There is a moral obligation, weighty and imperative, upon those charged with the execution of this trust to carry out the expressed will of those committing it to them. If a legal technicality has tended to thwart that will, they should have sought to have the construction in the law removed, or to find some other way of putting the intent of the founders into effect." In the latter sentence the word "construction" should have been "obstruction." We so wrote it, but in some way the substitution was accidentally made. Such things occur occasionally, even in the best printing offices.

THE DEATH OF MR. T. H. BINGHAM.

A funeral notice, bearing date of November 4, 1910, unaccompanied by any other statement, brings the sad intelligence of the death of Mr. T. H. Bingham, of Carrollton, Miss. Concerning the nature of his illness and the circumstances of his death, we are wholly uninformed. This unexpected announcement is to us the occasion of sincere and profound grief. For two years in the beginning of our itinerant ministry, we lived in the same home with the deceased and formed for him a strong personal attachment, which has not weakened with the passing years. He was the elder son of Mr. R. L. Bingham, who a few decades since was one of the foremost citizens of Carroll County, and a half brother of Mr. J. R. Bingham, who is so widely and favorably known throughout the Southern Methodist Church.

Thomas H. Bingham was in every sense a worthy man. Faultless he was not, but he was genuine and true, and stood openly and fearlessly for what he conceived to be right. Of policy, he had little, and of duplicity, none. He was kind-hearted, sympathetic, and ardent in his attachments. He loved his friends, and would tolerate no criticism of them. And a fitting crown to all of his other admirable qualities, was his spotless integrity. For many years he had large commercial dealings with the people of his county, and in freely mingling with them we have never heard a whisper against his honesty or the probity of his character. And, best of all, the departed was a devout Christian. He had a strong faith and a conscious experience of salvation. He felt his religion. More times than we can number, under the influence of some moving sermon, we have seen the tears trickling down his cheeks and his face illumined with a light not of earth. His affection for the Methodist Church was intense, and he allowed no one to disparage it in his presence. But the final summons has come and he has responded to it. From the Church Militant he has passed to the Church Triumphant, leaving behind a record of upright deeds and helpful service, which memory long will cherish. May God comfort the bereaved widow and fatherless children, and bind up the wounds of every bleeding heart!

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. C. D. Atkinson returned a few days since from a pleasant visit to her sister, Mrs. A. G. Shankle, of Ruston, La.

Yale University has this year 1,226 students. The attendance last year was 1,229. The present freshman class numbers 364—a gain of 24 over the one of 1909.

Two Bishops—Hendrix and Atkins—recently addressed the Sunday school of Parker Memorial Church on the same morning. This was, indeed, an unusual distinction.

Dr. I. W. Cooper delivered the annual address of the Ladies' Floral Club at Hazlehurst on Tuesday of this week. To say that his remarks were appropriate and eloquent, is to make an unnecessary statement.

Rev. H. M. Ellis began protracted services in his church at Brookhaven last Sunday. He is doing the preaching himself this week, and next week he will have the capable assistance of the Rev. H. B. Watkins, of Magnolia.

Mrs. T. V. Ellzey, the wife of our stirring State Sunday School Secretary, after an absence of several months in the West, has returned to New Orleans. Her many friends will be glad to learn that her health seems to be much improved.

The Rayne Memorial congregation raised $3,000 for current expenses in a few minutes on Sunday, October 31. Dr. Rice and his worthy flock do not believe in "taking two bites at a cherry." We admire their way of doing things.

From the goodly town of Macon, Miss., Rev. R. H. B. Gladney sends several subscribers, and also cheers us with commendatory words. Thank you, brother. We appreciate your kindness, and pray that God may abundantly bless your labors.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb is closing a most successful year at New Albany, Miss. The work has prospered along all lines, and though the salary was advanced $300, the finances will be in full. Brother Lipscomb is one of the strong pulpit men of his Conference.

We are pleased to be informed that Mrs. H. N. Brown, the wife of our pastor at Morgan City, La., who recently underwent an operation at St. Louis, Mo., stood the shock well and is now convalescent. We trust that her health will soon be completely restored.

In a personal note Rev. W. D. McCullough, of Leland, Miss., speaks hopefully of the work in his charge. He thinks his Conference collections will be in full, though the Tribette congregation sustained a sore financial loss in the death of Mr. B. L. Lee last winter.

A card received from Rev. J. A. Randolph instructs us to change the address of his Advocate from Fort McPherson, Ga., to Fort Thomas, Ky. Brother Randolph adds: "I am sorry to leave Georgia, but they say Fort Thomas is delightful. There are too many officers here for the houses."

The Methodists of New Orleans will unite in a thanksgiving service at First Church on November 24. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. A. S. Lutz, the accomplished pastor of the Felicity Street congregation, and the offering will go to Epworth Church, which is struggling to erect a new house of worship.

Mrs. Amanda Hoyle, relict of the late Dr. J. M. Hoyle, of Tupelo, Miss., died at Winfield, Ala., on November 1. Her remains were interred at Tupelo, where the obsequies were conducted by Rev. M. H. Armbrist and Rev. W. L. Duren. She was a true and worthy woman, and was much beloved by her friends and neighbors.

Rev. B. E. Meigs, of Oak Ridge, Miss., has completed his list of twenty subscribers to the Advocate and we are most appreciative of the service which he has rendered. Though in the boll weevil district, his work is progressing favorably. He has built a new church, and the general condition of the charge is hopeful.

A letter from Mrs. T. M. Buley, written from Venice, California, to the Rev. W. W. Holmes of this city, states that her husband, who formerly was pastor at Plaquemine, La., and was forced by ill health to give up his charge some months ago, has fully recovered. This will be pleasing news to their many friends in this State.

The recent session of the Baptist State Convention of Mississippi at Greenwood was largely attended and characterized by much enthusiasm. When the Tri-State Hospital enterprise, of Memphis, was represented, that noble and well known layman, Mr. A. E. Jennings, contributed $10,000 to it. We rejoice in the large success of our sister denomination.

The Advocate office enjoyed a visit on Tuesday from Mrs. Rebecca Ellison Johnston, of Shreveport, La. Mrs. Johnston is the wife of Prof. J. S. Johnston, of Centenary College, and is President of the Louisiana State Music Teachers' Association. She reports that Centenary has a fine student body, and that splendid work is being done by that institution.

The presidency of Bishop Murrain over the German Mission Conference gave great satisfaction. The business sessions were conducted by the use of the English language, but much of the preaching and praying was done in German. English in its purity, however, flowed forth when our Mississippi Bishop expounded the Word. His command of our mother tongue is equaled by but few.

As is usual with him, Rev. O. L. Savage is having great success in the Ruleville charge. He went there the first of June, and since then has had 53 accessions to the church. He has also raised $154.50 for new pews, and says that all is moving along smoothly. The Advocate, too, has been the beneficiary of his commendable activity, for which we make grateful acknowledgment.

We acknowledge the reception from Rev. and Mrs. R. O. Weir, of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mary Orville, to Mr. Charles P. Hagewood at the First Methodist Church of Arcadia, La., on Wednesday evening, November 23d, 1910, at 7:30 o'clock. The Advocate extends congratulations in advance, and wishes the prospective bride and groom a long life of usefulness and unalloyed happiness.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, the capable President of Whitworth College, will join Bishop Candler in Jacksonville, Fla., on Jan. 17, 1911, and accompany him to Cuba. A careful study of that important mission field will be made, and both a pleasant and profitable trip is anticipated. We trust that Dr. Cooper will find time while on the journey to tell the readers of the Advocate of some of the things which most interest and impress him.

Rev. W. N. Dodds, of Tishomingo, Miss., has sent in 20 subscribers to the Advocate, which is a larger number than that charge has ever taken before. He says that he keeps busy trying to circulate the Conference organ and fighting blind tigers, and that he is happy in the work. We trust that soon the blind tigers will be routed and that the Advocate will find its way into every home. Why shouldn't it, with such a friend as Brother Dodds to press its claims?

The revival at the Second Methodist Church of this city has awakened considerable interest. The attendance has been large, and the services have been characterized by spiritual power. The strong and eloquent sermons of Dr. W. R. Hendrix, of Louisville, Ky., have made a profound impression. At this writing there have been eight applications for membership, and the Church has been perceptibly quickened. Brother Townsley is much pleased with the results and prospect of the meeting.

A card from Mrs. J. C. Lowe, whose honored husband was a member of the North Mississippi Conference and who passed to his reward some months ago, states that she is now in New York, where her daughter is attending the Damrosch School of Art and Music. She is pleasantly situated in the home of a lady formerly of New Orleans, and her address is 180 Claremont Avenue. She is interested in the church affairs of Mississippi, and anxious that the Advocate should reach her regularly.

Mr. D. V. Portis, of Wahalak, Miss., in remitting for some subscriptions, adds the following statement: "I appreciate the effort you are making to increase the circulation of our church organ; for I realize the fact that if there ever was a time when religious literature needed to be in the homes of our people, it is now." This is unquestionably true. Periodicals, freighted with poison, are going everywhere, and something to counteract their influence is an imperative necessity. What people read will have much to do with the formation of their characters.

Rev. R. I. Collins, the pastor of the Cleveland Circuit (North Mississippi Conference) and Miss Fannie Pettis, of Abbeville, Miss., were married at the home of the bride on October the 24th. Mrs. Collins has taught school at Cleveland and in the Shipman's Chapel neighborhood, and has many friends and admirers in Bolivar County. Brother Collins is finishing his quadrennium in his present charge, where he has proven himself to be a zealous worker in the Master's cause. We extend felicitations and best wishes.

Rev. W. S. Shipman, of Cleveland, Miss., sends a cheering message from the Boyle Church, which he is temporarily serving along with his other work. He says: "We had a great day there Monday (Oct. 31); we raised $900 for the church debt and the $500 we borrowed from the Church Extension Board. Everything is in admirable shape. This part of the Delta is prosperous, with twenty-cent cotton and a big corn crop. But the devil is yet loose." We regret to note the last statement. But we hope that the activity of our worthy brother and his coadjutors in that great field will soon make Satan flee to other parts.

The following friends have placed us under obligation to them by sending in clubs of subscriptions and renewals during the last two weeks: Rev. W. H. Mounger, Hollandale, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Perry, Terry, Miss.; Rev. A. F. Smith, Jackson, Miss.; Rev. T. J. Embree, Ringgold, Miss.; Rev. F. N. Sweeney, Baker, La.; Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Macon, Miss.; Rev. J. D. Nesom, Sulphur, La.; Rev. H. M. Young, Belzoni, Miss.; Rev. B. E. Meigs, Oak Ridge, Miss.; Rev. A. M. Bennett, Belden, Miss.; Rev. J. H. Holder, Booneville, Miss.; Rev. O. L. Savage, Drew, Miss.; Rev. W. F. Richardson, Drew, Miss. Others have sent in one or two subscriptions. We thank our brethren.

The fourth Quarterly Conference of the Covington Charge, where Dr. J. T. Sawyer is pastor, was an interesting occasion. He recommended the building of new churches at Covington, Mandeville, and Madisonville. The one proposed for the first-named town is expected to be a $12,000 structure. The stewards elected are as follows: For Covington, L. W. Alford, J. E. Smith, J. Braun, and J. A. Wadsworth; for Mandeville, Dr. R. B. Pain, and C. E. Tally; for Madisonville, Louis Gallatas. W. G. Evans was elected Recording and District Steward, and L. W. Alford was chosen superintendent of the Covington Sunday school. Resolutions commending the work of Dr. F. N. Parker as presiding elder and expressing regret at having to give him up, were unanimously adopted.

Henri Dunant, founder of the International Red Cross Society, died Oct. 30, at Heiden, a health resort in Switzerland. He was of Swiss birth and lived in Geneva. At the battle of Solferino, June 24, 1859, he witnessed the needless suffering and loss of life resulting from days of neglect to care for the wounded. Realizing that such conditions need not exist, he conceived the idea of pledging the nations of the earth to regard and protect as neutral all sick and wounded combatants and all persons giving them succor. He elaborated his ideas, and through the co-operation of the Swiss Federal Council brought about an international conference at Geneva in October, 1863. Sixteen governments were represented. This was followed by the Geneva Conference of August 8, 1864, which adopted nine articles of agreement "for the amelioration of the conditions of the wounded of armies in the field." These articles were signed by twelve governments and the signatory powers have since reached forty. A uniform flag made of a red cross on a white ground was adopted as a compliment to the Swiss Confederation, whose national flag is the reverse.

"A-LE-THE-IA."

This is what the W. C. T. U. State President of Tennessee writes about Mrs. C. C. Miller's novel, "A-le-the-ia":

"I am sure, if widely read, it would do good. It treats of a subject live with interest at the present time. Its ideals are high, the thoughts pure, the motive good all the way through."

Price, 25c. Address New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Tidings from the Field

Arkabutla, Miss.:

We closed our revival meetings some time ago, and we are glad to report some good results. We had revivals at all of the churches on the Arkabutla Circuit (five in all), but did not have the in-gathering of souls that we hoped for. We had about twenty conversions and seventeen additions to our church. Many of our people were revived and strengthened, while others were untouched. Yet we thank God for that which has been accomplished, and give Him all the glory. We were fortunate in securing good men to help us in our revival work, and are indebted to Brothers Q. C. Curtis, W. N. Duncan, S. A. Brown, S. L. Pope and Brother Knight for their able presentation of the gospel and their appeals to the unsaved. They have won a warm place in the hearts of our people. We have been unfortunate and hindered much since the revival season, but we hope to come to Conference with everything in full. Our consecrated presiding elder has been a benediction to us this year. Happy is the young preacher who has such a man to preside over him and give him such fatherly advice.—A. F. Moore, P. C.

Sumrall, Miss.:

Methodism is at high tide in Sumrall! This has been the most successful year in the history of our church at this place. We have received one hundred and thirty members, and every department of the church is doing fine work. We have one of the prettiest homes in the district for the pastor. This is a splendid people, loyal and kind. They take good care of their pastor. Besides the provision made by a generous and faithful board of stewards for our comfort and happiness, the good ladies come every few months and fill the parsonage pantry with everything that is good to eat. Last Saturday afternoon the ladies of our Woman's Home Mission Society, led by our lovable president, Mrs. H. V. Walts, came and showered the pastor's family with all kinds of nice canned goods, breakfast cereals, cheese, crackers, meats, flour, sugar, and potatoes, quite enough to last us until Conference. Many of our good friends say they do not think there should be any change in their pastor, and we sincerely hope that Bishop Mouzon will be of the same opinion. We have, indeed, spent two delightful years among these good people, and we are grateful to them for those beautiful tokens of appreciation of our labors among them. We pray that our Father may keep sweet vigil over each of their lives, and that love, happiness and prosperity may fill each of their homes!—Mrs. R. F. Witt, Sumrall, Miss.

Port Gibson, Miss.:

Dear Brother Meek: I rejoice to report that our church and community have recently been blessed with a gracious revival, which resulted in a goodly number of conversions and reclamations, in five additions to our church and two to the Presbyterian church, and in the quickening and enrichment of the spiritual life of the majority of our membership. The meeting began the fourth Sunday in October, and was conducted by Brother D. E. Kelly, our Conference evangelist, who remained with us eight days, and who stirred all hearts by his forceful, fervent appeals and pungent and pointed presentation of divine truth. The love feast which was held the second Sunday afternoon of the meeting was one of the most enjoyable I ever attended, a number of bright and cheering testimonies being given. Much interest was taken in the meeting by the faculty and students of Port Gibson Female College, who attended nearly every service. Many of the college girls were made happy in the love of God. We wish to thank Brother Hawkins and his co-laborers for their hearty co-operation. Our local Sunday school, I am glad to say, is one of the largest and best conducted in our Conference, Brother H. H. Crisler being the efficient superintendent. The Sunday school at the college is also doing fine work. I have never been associated with a nobler band of workers than those who compose the membership of our Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Societies. Though few in numbers, they do great things. Our Epworth Leaguers are true and faithful and ever ready to co-operate with the pastor. Thanks to the loyalty and generosity of a kind and devoted people, our finances are pretty well up, despite the stringency of the times, and we expect to pay all assessments in full. We thank God and take courage. M. M. Black, P. C.

Coldwater and Love:

Dear Brother Meek: We are closing out our quadrennium at Coldwater and Love. Our four years' stay among these good people have been the most pleasant of our lives, and the fourth has been the most delightful of them all. We were assisted in our meetings this year by Batesville's popular pastor, Rev. W. N. Duncan. He has extensive and accurate information that covers many fields, beautiful diction, graceful manner and splendid delivery; yet he presented the gospel message in a plain and pointed way. He called "a spade a spade." He won a warm place in the affections of the people and they will not soon forget his earnest appeals. Eight were added to the church on profession of faith. Our fortunate successor will find parsonage and church property in good repair, a delightful town in which to live, and as faithful and loyal people as the North Mississippi Conference affords.—V. C. Curtis, P. C.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Last Saturday morning at an early hour we heard with feelings of deep and heartfelt sorrow that L. W. Saucier had been removed from a life of honest, intelligent and useful citizenship. His loss is no ordinary one. Long will it be felt, not only by his bereaved family and friends, but by the community at large and the worthy causes he had striven to promote. Of him may be truly said he was one of God's noblest work, "An honest man." It is a source of pleasure and pride to his friends to recount these things. Therefore, as a token of our esteem and respect for his memory:

Resolved, That the members of the Sunday school and M. E. Church, South, of McHenry, Miss., are filled with the most profound grief at the loss of a faithful superintendent of Sunday school and Christian man.

Resolved, That, in his private and social life, he was amiable, confiding, and generous to a fault. Few men of our community have acquired more numerous and devoted personal attachments; few have descended to the grave more deeply lamented.

Resolved, That we affectionately sympathize with, and tender to his afflicted family our sincere condolence upon their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That we request the New Orleans Christian Advocate to publish these proceedings.

WISHED FOR DEATH

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering!

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardui, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardui.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Campbell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering."

"At last, I decided to try Cardui. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardui has stopped my suffering and made life worth living."

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardui. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable, and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old. Sold everywhere.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 13.

A CALL TO SELF-EXAMINATION.
(Hag. i, 5-6; II Cor. xlii, 5-7.)

Self-examination as a means of spiritual improvement was the practice of the Old Testament prophet and the New Testament saint. In the days of Israel's indifference to the claims of God, Haggai was raised up for the purpose of warning and encouraging the people. His challenge to them was to stop and think: "Set your heart on your ways," saith the prophet, knowing that the fruit of such thinking would be the turning of their feet into God's testimonies. "When we have sown much and it brings in little," it is a good time to ask: "What is the matter?" A few moments of serious thought have changed the current of many a life. Perhaps the greatest need of our strenuous age is deliberation. We do not stop to think, and so the prophet bids us "consider," literally, look on both sides. When Paul stopped long enough to look on both sides, he could no longer be a Pharisee. His past life and his motives could not bear that searching test, and so he cried out: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

He recommends the same method to the Corinthian Christians. They had freely put his claims to the test. Now he says to them, "Prove your own selves." In this respect "every man shall bear his own burden." Other men's failures will never save us. Their manifest failings are both an additional burden and a warning to us. An old poet says:

"If men have ulcers and their pride conceal 'em,
They must have ulcers still, for none can heal 'em."

Periodical self-examination was used to good purpose by the mother of the Wesleys. Rev. John Kirk in his admirable "Life of Mrs. Susanna Wesley" says: "A considerable portion of her hours of retirement was employed in communing with her own heart as well as in fellowship with God. She endeavored to keep her mind in a temper of recollection, often in the day calling it in from outward objects, lest it should wander into forbidden paths. 'Make an examination of your conscience,' she continues, 'at least three times a day, and omit no opportunity of retirement from the world.' This was her practice for many years, till, in consequence of increasing infirmities, she could not observe order or think consistently as formerly." The following quotation illustrates the searching manner in which she performed this self-inquisition: "You above all others have most need of humbling yourself before the great and holy God for the very great and very many sins you are daily guilty of, in thought, word, and deed against his Divine Majesty. What a habitual levity is there in your thoughts! How many vain, impure thoughts pass through the mind in one hour! And though they do not take up their abode for any long continuance, yet their passing through often leaves a tincture of impurity. How many worldly regards, even in sacred actions, with habitual inadvertence, seldom any seriousness or composure of spirit, the passions rude and tumultuous, very susceptible of violent impressions from light and inconsiderable accidents, unworthy a reasonable being, but more unworthy a Christian! Keep thy heart with all diligence—thy thoughts, thy affections—for out of them are the issues of life. Who can tell how oft he offendeth in this kind? O, cleanse thou me from secret faults! Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. How many unnecessary words are you guilty of daily? How many opportunities of speaking for the good of the souls committed to your care are neglected? How seldom do you speak of God with that reverence; that humility, that gravity that you ought? Your words as well as your thoughts are deficient. You do not conceive or speak of God aright. You do not speak magnificently or worthily of him who is the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternally, the Creator of the universe!" No doubt Mrs. Wesley, like her sons, was too severe upon herself; but she certainly sets us a good example of thorough self-examination.

Some Scriptural Examples.

When Job (xlii.) submitted himself to God, he gained such a vision of God and himself that he cried out: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

Isaiah's vision of God led him to examine himself with the result that he declared: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." (vi, 5.)

After the prophet Nathan spoke his parable unto David and said: "Thou art the man," the penitent king cried out: "I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me." Then follows the prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." (II Sam. xii.; Ps. li, 10.)

Some Questions for Self-Examination.

An earnest Christian troubled himself greatly over the question, "Am I one of the elect?" His fears were set at rest when it was shown to him that it was his business to be a "candidate" and God's business to elect him. According to the Scriptures, it is God's eternal purpose to save all who repent and unfeignedly believe his holy gospel.

1. Have I more power over sin than formerly? Do I overcome, or do I let sin overcome me?
2. Is my will to serve God stronger than formerly?
3. Do I take up my cross more readily?
4. Am I willing to be filled with the Spirit and to be led by the Spirit?
5. Do I share in a proper degree Jesus Christ's passion for the souls of men?
6. Look for the unfailing mark of a Christian, "Christ in us, the hope of glory."—Epworth Era.

The Sunday School Lesson

FOURTH QUARTER—LESSON VII. NOVEMBER 13.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE LESSON. Matthew xxiv, 32-44.

32. Now from the fig-tree learn her parable: when her branch is now become tender, and putteth forth its leaves, ye know that the summer is nigh;

33. Even so ye also, when ye see all these things, know ye that he is nigh, even at the doors.

34. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be accomplished.

35. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

36. But of that day and hour knoweth no one, not even the angels of heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only.

37. And as were the days of Noah, so shall be the coming of the Son of man.

38. For as in those days which were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark.

39. And they knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall be the coming of the Son of man.

40. Then shall two men be in the field; one is taken, and one is left.

41. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; one is taken, and one is left.

42. Watch therefore, for ye know not on what day your Lord cometh.

43. But know this, that if the master of the house had known in what watch the thief was coming, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken through.

44. Therefore be ye also ready; for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh.

Golden Text: Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

Lessons From Little Things.

Jesus had been drawing on the most magnificent imagery of the imagination to picture forth the terrible glories of the coming of the Son of man. He had just been speaking of how the tribes of earth would see him coming on the clouds of heaven; how the angels would bring together "his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Then he turned to the fig-tree growing by the wayside and gathered his finest lesson from this humble little creation in the vast universe of portentous signs. After all, the teaching of Jesus was spiritual; his references in this discourse to the sun, moon, stars, lightning, and powers of the heavens were symbolical of moral upheavals. The little tree was just as well or better adapted to serve as a vehicle of high truth as were the great things of creation. In fact, their very bigness made them coarser symbols. Our lesson does well to begin with the words, "Now from the fig-tree learn her parable." The other figures are passed over and we may better miss them than this. There is generally more to be learned from little customary things than from startling phenomena. We can become really acquainted with the things we see each day. So they yield to us the more intimate revelation.

"Every Common Bush."

Jesus saw great things in the fig-tree. As Mrs. Browning says, faith's vision makes "earth crammed with heaven, and every common bush afire with God." But the divine fires burn quietly. The voices of God do not resound through the halls of the soul; they are not heard there unless the eager listener is waiting. On the other hand, earth and heaven are filled with voices and lights for the faithful to perceive. Jesus' practical divinity—for the enlightening of men's faith—consisted in his infinite sensitiveness to the manifold voices of God. The whole universe was animated for him by the divine Spirit. Physical nature and human nature were the works of the Creator and Father. All things were drenched with the wisdom, the beauty, and the love of the all-embracing, all-fructifying life. This is the reason that Jesus mentioned so freely the lights and the shadows of nature. Every common bush was aflame with its message or its warning.

The Temperance of the Eye.

This is a good temperance lesson on account of its emphasis, for the first temperance is the temperance of the seeing eye. The primary requisite is to see clearly and well, whether we refer to the eye of the body or of the soul. Jesus speaking finger pointing swiftly to the fig-tree would be the first thing to attract the attention of the disciples. It is not necessary to bid people see. We live in a world of flashing lights. The only danger is that we be dazzled. Here is where the lesson of temperance becomes of paramount importance. But there are ten words said about the temperance of the tongue to one about the governing of the eye, and there are one hundred words spoken concerning the temperance of the palate to one word said in praise of the golden mean of seeing. Yet it is evident that the golden vision is of primal value. The eye is the lamp of the body. "When ye see all these things, know ye," says Jesus, significantly, in this lesson. The fascinated gaze discovers the pathway of death, but the vision beautiful leads upward to the very gates of heaven. It is more important to teach our children to love to look upon fair forms and high truths than it is to warn them in stilted phrase of the horrors of a secondary intemperance. "If thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

A Few Facts About The Future.

If the eye is made for seeing, what things are the legitimate objects of its vision? The things of the present, for the most part. The future is largely unknown. The day and hour of the coming of the Son of man "knoweth no one, not even the angels of heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only." On the other hand, there are a few facts about the future which are clear to the prophetic vision; that is, to the clarified common sense of every man. After all, the courses of nature and of history are arranged pretty satisfactorily. We know enough about the principles of time to live safely and well, and to do our duty faithfully. For what more could we reasonably ask?

To-morrow the Flower of To-day.

Time grows like the fig-tree. Life is organic. The new comes not by bodily accretions, but by assimilation and natural growth from within. This is the greatest fact about the future known to us. Writes Lyman Abbott, "As we judge from the presence of certain signs innate that spring is over and summer is nigh, so we are to judge when the advent of the Messiah is at hand, by no miraculous signs and portents, but by the development and progress of the world's travail and judgment."

The Signs of Summer.

But the signs of fruit are appearing everywhere. Summer is ready to blossom forth. Enough time has been spent in preparation. The season of fruits is at hand. God has done his part; let us do ours and realize the richness of the harvest. Moreover, we have to do here not with an opportunity merely, but with a necessity. The summer, the time of results and of great happenings, is bound to come; it is coming now. No one can escape the natural outcome of his life, the immediate unfolding of his ordinary behavior. The judgment consists in the benefaction of good deeds, or in the condemnation of ruined lives. Spiritual judgments crowd close upon the acts of a man. Here is the practical truth for us in the figure of the green-leafing tree, and in the solemn words of Jesus, "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all these things be accomplished."

The Precarious Hour.

The occupations of men are precarious. Apparent values are not valid indications of their permanence. Men have always liked "to eat and drink and be merry," but that does not prove very much. Jesus pictures this truth in the graphic imagery of the two men in the field, of the two women at the mill; and of the thief breaking into the house. Literally no man, not even the Master himself, knoweth "the hour." "Watch therefore." It seems to be a necessary factor in moral development—the coming of these unexpected moments, the tragic crisis of the unforeseen. However, there is no cause for worry. Faithfulness to the present insures the future's good.

The One Thing Sure.

The words of Jesus are eternal in their very nature. This is the highest truth of all and is equivalent to the eternity of life and growth, about which we have spoken. It seems then that the facts known to us about the future are few, but surely they are all-sufficient. We know a good deal about the coming years, after all. It is enough, at any rate, to enable us to go on, eagerly and bravely and wisely. —Western Christian Advocate.

QUININE CAN'T.

Fallacies die hard. Twenty years ago—even ten years ago—the victim of Pneumonia was shut in his room and the windows hermetically sealed. Except in scant quantities, water was refused to parched lips and ice was a sin. As a result of this treatment only the Heroes survived it. To-day the doctor who would practice such methods should be indicted by the grand jury.

But to-day they give Quinine for Fever. At best it is a feeble cure and those who survive it are only half-cured. The time will come when the Doctor will discard Quinine. As in the treatment of Pneumonia he will make a change.

Johnson's Tonic is a faultless and splendid remedy for fever. Its cures are splendid cures, and in striking contrast with the feeble cures made by Quinine.

Those who take it are safe, and those who refuse to take it place their lives in jeopardy.

Within an hour its good effect is felt, and within a day the danger point is passed.

Sample bottles sent free on receipt of this advertisement with a valuable booklet on Fevers.

No More Bald Heads?

Baltimore Specialist Says Baldness is Unnecessary, and Proves It.

BALTIMORE, [Special].—The intense interest in the wonderful work that is being accomplished in Baltimore and other cities by William Chas. Keene, president of the Lorrimer Institute, continues unabated. Many cases of baldness and faded hair of years' standing have been remedied by the remarkable preparation being distributed from Mr. Keene's laboratory, and its fame is spreading far and wide and thousands of persons are using this remarkable hair food with gratifying results.

What makes this treatment more popular is the fact that free trial outfits are sent by mail prepaid. Those who wish to try it are strongly advised to write to Mr. Keene at the Lorrimer Institute, Branch 574, Baltimore, Md. They will receive the full trial outfit free of charge and much useful information about the hair which will put them on the road to a rapid and certain improvement.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try it.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salves, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

NOTICE.

To the good friends of our Orphanage, and those interested in receiving the little paper we publish in its behalf, we must beg your indulgence. The great misfortune that has overtaken us in the burning and death of our precious child, has so completely overwhelmed us that we have not had the heart or disposition to prepare the material for the publication of the paper. Just as soon as possible, we will publish the paper and send to all the Sunday schools and friends who are interested a supply. Sincerely,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

NOTICE TO VETERANS.

Veterans of the Mississippi Conference who will attend the meeting of the Veteran Ministers' Association, at Sardis, Miss., on the first day of the North Mississippi Conference, will please write to Dr. J. W. Boswell, pastor at Sardis, so that he can procure Conference homes for them.

WORK DAY A SUCCESS.

Dear Brother Meek: In response to your request and my desire I send you herein a partial report from "Work Day." I write that with a capital because it is a big day with us. We have received to date from "Work Day" $2,102.73. Many of our pastors and superintendents of Sunday schools have taken quite an interest in this day and wherever observed it has been a success. There are many other churches to hear from yet. If half of the churches have observed "Work Day" we will receive the $5,000 that I was expecting from that plan. Many pastors do not heed my request and so the people are denied the opportunity of helping.

I send herein letter sent out by Rev. S. L. Pope in behalf of the free car that is run for the Orphanage. Please publish this. There will be several other cars run, I think.

We have the roof on our new dormitory. We are grateful to God and the good people for their co-operation.

Thanking you for your interest and assistance, I am your brother.

Don't Wear a Truss

STUART'S PLAS-TR-PADS are different from the painful truss, being made self-adhesive purposely to hold the rupture in place without straps, buckles or springs—cannot slip, so cannot chafe or compress against the pelvic bone. The most obstinate cases cured in the privacy of the home. Thousands have successfully treated themselves without hindrance from work. Soft as velvet—easy to apply—inexpensive. Process of cure is natural, so no further use for trusses. We prove what we say by sending you trial of Plaspao absolutely FREE. Write TODAY. Address—PLASPAO LABORATORIES, Block 132, St. Louis, Mo.

HEALTH BRINGS HAPPINESS— BULL'S HERBS AND IRON BRINGS HEALTH

THE CAUSE

To properly treat any disease, or ailment, it is first necessary to ascertain the cause, to get at the seat of the trouble before relief can be given. The cause, or root of the trouble is, ninety-nine times in a hundred, your blood, because the body receives its only nourishment from the blood; therefore, if you have impure blood in your veins, those impurities are distributed throughout your whole body, causing sickness and disease.

THE EFFECT

Sluggish, impure blood is the most disastrous thing the system has to contend with. It breeds disease germs and circulates them throughout the body; retards digestion; causes constipation; heart palpitation; dizziness; headaches; nervousness and wrecks the whole body generally. It produces that tired, reckless good-for-nothing feeling; brings on the blues and makes you feel as though life were not worth the living.

THE CURE

There are a number of remedies for bad blood, but there is only one cure—W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON. This is an ideal combination of medicinal herbs and Pyrophosphate of Iron, which makes it invaluable in all cases of liver, kidney and stomach troubles, and is especially recommended to women suffering from female weaknesses in any form. W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON makes pure, rich, red blood and strengthens heart action. Invigorates the nerves and restores all organs to normal health; laxative in its effects and insures proper digestion; creates a hearty appetite and eliminates uric acid from the blood. Mrs. T. Dilworth, Aberdeen, Miss., writes, "I have tried your Herbs and Iron and can vouch that it did me a great deal of good, especially in cleaning up my system and in putting new life and energy into my body."

HOW TO GET IT

W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON is carried in stock by all druggists in 50c. and 1.00 size bottles, and here is our guarantee. Get a $1.00 bottle, take two-thirds of it, and if you are unable to detect any general improvement in your health, take the remainder back to your druggist and he will refund your money—every cent of it. If your druggist can't supply you, send us his name and $1.00 and we will send it direct, charges prepaid.

DR. J. B. HEARRINGTON.

Among the many acquaintances formed through the long years of my ministerial life, I have found no purer, nobler Christian gentleman than was Dr. J. B. HEARRINGTON, who died at Crawford, Miss., June 13, 1910. During the fifteen years which have elapsed since I formed his acquaintance, it has ever afforded me sincere pleasure to claim him as a friend. He was born in Newberry, S. C., March 31, 1853. Early in life he came to Lowndes County, Mississippi. After studying medicine he began in 1878 to practice near old Prairie Hill Camp Ground. In 1879 he removed to Trinity, Lowndes County, where he lived until a short time before his death. December, 1886, he married Mrs. Vaughan, a daughter of the late William Murrah, and a sister to Bishop W. B. Murrah and Rev. J. T. Murrah of the M. E. Church, South. This was a union of two intellectual, refined and cultured people, and together they made a most attractive and beautiful home, into which their hospitable kindness brought many appreciative friends. Dr. Hearrington made a profession of religion under the pastorate of the Rev. T. B. Malone, late of the North Mississippi Conference. Having been reared in that faith, he joined the Baptist church, of which he lived a faithful and consistent member till his death. He was a well-born, well-bred, well-educated, thoughtful, studious, intellectual, refined, modest and courteous gentleman, preserving in his life and character the almost forgotten virtues of a better day long past. Among the many memories of my professional life none are more pleasant than those of the hours spent in his hospitable home. A brother in Texas, a sister in South Carolina, and a sister, Mrs. Chas. Kier, of Crawford, Miss., survive him. At the instance of the last, I offer this willing tribute to his memory. His community misses him as the intelligent physician, the good neighbor, the useful citizen, the upright man and consistent Christian. His immediate circle misses him as the refined, courteous, cultured, genial, modest, chivalrous gentleman. The writer misses him as a friend that he has loved and honored.

LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHAN-AGE.

We are very much gratified to make the statement that we have just paid one of the notes against the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and that our total indebtedness is now reduced to $8,000, and we are hoping to pay part of that by Conference. This is about $6,000 of our debt paid off this year, and we believe we can pay another thousand, which will be half of our entire debt wiped out this year, 1910. We believe it will be an easy matter to meet the whole of the debt next year, and with that out of the way our Orphanage will take a front rank with such institutions of the land. The "Work Day" returns were very gratifying. We have received nearly $3,000, with a number of places to hear from still.

We feel that our people are behind our great work now as they have never been before, and we are assured of a generous and hearty support. We praise God and take courage.

Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN, Sup't.

Dont Send Me One Cent

when you answer this announcement, as I am going to distribute at least one-hundred-thousand sets of the Dr. Haux wonderful "Perfect Vision" Spectacles to genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearers, in the next few weeks—on one easy, simple condition.

I want you to thoroughly try them on your own eyes, no matter how weak they may be; read the finest print in your bible even by the dim firelight; thread the smallest eyed needle you can get hold of; shoot the smallest bird off of the tallest tree top with them on, and put them to any test you like in your own home in any way you please.

Then after you have become absolutely and positively convinced that they are really and truly the softest, clearest and best-fitting glasses you have ever had on your eyes, and if they honestly make you see just as well as you ever did in your younger days, you can keep the ~~PAID~~ pair forever without one cent of cost, and—

by showing them around to your neighbors and friends, and speak a good word for them everywhere at every opportunity.

Won't you help me introduce the wonderful Dr. Haux "Perfect Vision" Spectacles in your locality on one easy, simple condition?

If you are a genuine, bona-fide spectacle-wearer (no children need apply), and want to do me this favor, write me at once and just say: "Dear Doctor:—Mail me your Perfect Home Eye Tester, absolutely free of charge, also full particulars of your handsome 10-karat ~~PAID~~ Spectacle Offer" and address me personally and I will give your letter my own personal attention. Don't let your eyes be annoyed and hurt by common glasses another day, but write me this minute for a brand new set of my wonderful "Perfect Vision" Spectacles. Address: DR. MARY PURVIS CORZ was born November 9, 1829, and died February 24, 1910; was married to Miles Corz (date not known), and was a member of the M. E. Church, South, for many years. She lived a faithful Christian life, and was a kind and true wife and mother. She said she was willing to die, and passed away in the triumph of the Christian faith.

Little JOSEPHINE FOREMEN, our little grand-daughter, was born Dec. 20, 1908, and died Oct. 28, 1910, at 1 a. m., age 1 year, 10 months, and 8 days. Her life was short but sweet. She was a great sufferer for eight months or more, but she has gone where there is no pain or suffering, but eternal rest, with God and the holy angels. May God abundantly bless the parents left behind, is the prayer of papa.

J. H. FATHER.

Liberty, Miss.

Mr. T. D. WILLIS was born Oct. 23, 1845, and died May 4, 1910. Just four months after the death of his loving devoted wife, Brother Willis was called to his final reward and laid to rest by loving, tender hands, the funeral service being conducted by the presiding elder of the Vicksburg District, a man in whom he had great confidence, and whom he loved. Brother Willis was wonderfully reclaimed from an indifferent feeling towards the Church in the summer of 1908, during a revival service, and lived a faithful Christian for the last two years of his life. His home was the home of the pastors, and always there was a place in his home for the servants of God. Brother Willis was the main supporter of the Church during the two years of the writer's pastorate. I looked on him as one of my best loved friends. But I shall yet see him in the home of the blest. Truly the children have been called to go through the deep waters, but He says that He will not let them overflow us. Thanks to the good Lord for his grace, which is sufficient for our every need.

W. L. BLACKWELL,
Former Pastor.

CARL WILLIAM KELLNER, son of William and Mrs. Emma Kellner, was born at Fernwood, Mississippi, April 7, 1910, and died at a sanitarium in New Orleans on the 25th of September. Though he lived less than six months, so bright and interesting was this babe that he won his way into the hearts of those who knew him, and his going from the household of which he was the pride and joy has left it indeed sad and lonely. Writing of her translated little one, the worthy Christian mother says: "He had grown so dear to us, and we all loved him so, that, when God called him home, we felt the loss keenly; but we have the comfort of knowing that Jesus said 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven.'" Sweet, indeed, is this consolation. Those who vanish into the beyond, only go home. Humanity's abiding place is not here, amid sin and sorrow and suffering, but above, where all is light and joy and love. There with the Master dwell the pure and good, and there we shall reclaim, to lose no more, those whom we have now "lost awhile." May God sustain the bereaved ones of this stricken family, and gently lay on every bleeding heart his healing hand!

CORNELIA C. MEEK

L. H. SAUCIER was born at Saucier, Miss., Sept. 14, 1875, and died at the same place Oct. 22, 1910. He was married to Miss Anise Noland, of Woodville, Miss., Dec. 21, 1897. Three children were born to them, two of whom survive him; one died in infancy.

He joined the Methodist Church when but a boy and remained faithful to it until his death, being superintendent of the Sunday school at McHenry at that time. He was a man of true piety, strong convictions, and many parts. He was always loyal to his God and to his Church, never being tainted with any degree of fanaticism. Nor did he for one moment turn aside from that line of conduct which he conceived to be his duty to the Church in which he had chosen to do his life's work. Genial in his disposition and temperament, he made many friends; strong in character and deep in his convictions, he made some enemies. But the multitudes were his friends. He chose law as his profession, and in 1904 he began the practice; and although he had but a few brief years in which to practice, he won for himself considerable distinction as a lawyer. A good man has gone to rest. Not only has the family suffered a great loss, but the Church, the town, and the county have also suffered by his death. He was a faithful son, a loving husband, a devoted father, and a true friend. He leaves a father and mother well-nigh broken-hearted in their declining years, and but for their hope of a speedy reunion the sorrow would be deeper still. He leaves behind also a wife, two bright boys, two sisters, one brother, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. But we do not weep as those who have no hope, for he left us a sweet message. "I am ready to meet the Father." He was not a great man as the world counts greatness, but I think when the records in eternity shall be read he will be counted as one of God's noblemen. May the mother into whose hands the care of the boys have fallen be able by the strength and goodness of her own character, and guided by the hand Divine, be able to make of these boys men good and great, of whom the world may some day be proud.

G. A. GUICE.

Miss LENA LIDDELL, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Liddell, was born in Jefferson County, Mississippi, on February 1, 1872. After having availed herself of the opportunity of attending the State College for Ladies at Columbus, she was happily married to Mr. J. W. Magee on February 18, 1891, the ceremony being performed by her cousin, Rev. J. A. B. Jones. This venerable man of God never joined two hearts together that beat more harmoniously than did these. Love was their capital and contentment their joy. As night cometh after each day, so death comes after each life. On Wednesday morning, September 28, 1910, at thirteen minutes past 6 o'clock, at Osyka, Miss., she breathed her last, and her spirit went unto God who gave it. Her unexpected passing away cast a gloom over the town. Sorrow was in the hearts of the people, because she was a friend to one and all, white and black, rich and poor. No hungry ones ever came to her but what they were fed; no one with sorrow but what they were comforted.

She was a loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a devoted Christian. The end was met with Christian fortitude. She fell asleep in the arms of her Lord to await the resurrection morn.

Her life was Christ-like; so when the end came, holy quietness did reign. Her parting message was: "Tell mamma I have gone home to heaven," a greater legacy than multiplied millions. May the God of love comfort and sustain her bereaved husband, parents and loved ones.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NOTICE, LOUISIANA PREACHERS!

Our Conference Secretary, Dr. Parker, has called my attention to the fact that a new set of statistical report blanks, ordered by the last General Conference, have been prepared, and all the preachers will be required to make their reports with the use of these blanks. Order at once from the Publishing House so that you can have your reports on hand at the opening of the Conference. I will try to have the Agent of the Publishers have an ample supply of the blanks at the Conference when you arrive. Be sure to use the new blanks, as some very important changes have been made.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Statistical Secretary.

FOR ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

Applicants for Admission on Trial in the Louisiana Conference will meet the committee at the M. E. Church, South, Homer, La., Dec. 6, at 10 a. m. The examination will be written. The subjects are: Discipline; Bank's "Manual of Christian Doctrine;" Wesley's Sermons on "Justification by Faith," and "The Witness of Spirit," and the ordinary branches of English education with special reference to "Book-keeping." The text-book in history will be "Swinton's Outline of General History."

Each applicant will present a written sermon of his own composition.

Good News For The Deaf.

A celebrated New York Aurist has been selected to demonstrate to deaf people that deafness is a disease and can be cured rapidly and easily in your own home. He proposes to prove this fact by sending to any person having trouble with their ears a trial treatment of the new method absolutely free. We advise all people who have trouble with their ears to immediately address Dr. Edward Gardner, Sult No. 480, No. 40 West Thirty-third street, New York City, and they will receive by return mail absolutely free a Trial Treatment.

FURNISHING THE NURSERY.

"The furniture in a day nursery should consist of a toy cupboard stained to match the color scheme of the room, and large enough for each child to have his own special compartment in it," says Lucy Abbot Throop in Woman's Home Companion for October. "If the children's initials are painted or burned on the doors it gives an added feeling of pride in keeping the toys in order. There are many designs of small tables and chairs made with good lines, and the wicker ones with gay cretonne cushions are very attractive. The tables and chairs should not have sharp corners, and should be heavy enough to tip over easily. There should be a bookcase for favorite picture-books. Beside the special china for the children's own meals, there should be a set of play china for doll's parties. A sand table, with a lump of clay for modeling, a blackboard, and, in the spring, window boxes where the children can plant seeds, will add vastly to the joy of life.

"And do not forget a comfortable chair for the nurse maid. White muslin curtains with side hangings of washable chintz or linen or some special nursery design in cretonne should hang to the sill."

DEBTS ARE DEBTS.

And They Must Be Paid. So Decides the Supreme Court of Michigan.

The Supreme Court of Michigan, in an opinion delivered September 28th, held that International Harvester Company of America is not debarred from collecting its outstanding debts by any plea that it is a "trust." The circuit judge decided the other way, but his decision was reversed; and the defendants will be compelled to settle their accounts with the Company.

This decision is not only of the utmost importance to all trading companies, but to the general public. Incidentally, it once more brings to view the streak in human nature which deems it defensible to steal rides on railway trains, to smuggle personal purchases through the custom house, and to break contracts with large corporations.

The facts in the case are that the International Harvester Company of America several months ago began action against some dealers to collect a balance long overdue. There was no equitable defense against the debt, but the defendants hit upon the novel plan of setting up the claim that the Company was a "trust," and that this was a bar to the collection of the amount due. Strange to say, a lower court sustained this claim, but on appeal the Supreme Court reversed the decision and ruled that the plea that a plaintiff is a "trust" is not a good defense.

A company selling an article or commodity bears precisely the same relation to the purchaser at the time the obligation falls due that it did at the time the purchase was made. If the decision of the lower court had been sustained, it would be impossible for any large company to continue in business except upon a strictly cash-in-advance basis.

Be patient, keep sweet. Do not fret or worry. Do your best and leave results with God. Believe firmly in God, in the fulfillment of his purpose and in the march of his providences. God's laws are immutable, and work with undeviating regularity. Walk in fellowship with God, and every year you will be a stronger, better, happier, and sweeter man. Do not mar your peace or power by needless worry. Live by faith in the Son of God, who loves you and gave himself for you. On some bright to-morrow you will come to anchor, under a haven of sapphire and a harbor of calm, with chimes ringing their welcome from the spires that sentinel the city of God, while from the battlements millions will shout, "Well done!" while God himself will say, "Enter thou into the joy of the Lord."—George B. Vossburgh, in the Living Church.

American Awarded Medal On A Rupture Device.

Mr. F. J. Stuart, an American residing in St. Louis, was recently awarded a medal and diploma showing certificate of merit of the first class, by a London Institute. Mr. Stuart is inventor of the STUART PLAS-TR-PAD for rupture. Letters patent have been granted by many governments on this form of Hernia support and medicine applicator. The purpose of this support is to securely hold the rupture in place, and also supply a soothing and healing remedy thereto, which will be taken up and absorbed by the pores to heal and relieve the parts of pain. When patent was granted in Great Britain, Mr. Stuart also obtained the Medal and Diploma. Truss wearers will no doubt appreciate an invention of such exceeding worth as to merit such notice. By addressing Mr. Stuart, Block 132, St. Louis, Mo., those interested will probably be furnished full information.

OUR HELPER AND PRESERVER.

By Matthias Claudius

(Translated by James M. Campbell.)

We plow the fields and scatter
The good seed on the land,
But it is fed and watered
By God's almighty hand.
He sends the snow in winter,
The warmth to swell the grain,
The breezes and the sunshine,
And the soft, refreshing rain.

He only is the Maker
Of all things near and far;
He paints the wayside flower,
He lights the evening star;
The winds and waves obey him,
By him the birds are fed;
Much more to us, his children,
He gives our daily bread.

We thank thee, then, O Father,
For all things bright and good,
The seed-time and the harvest,
Our life, our health, our food;
Accept the gifts we offer
For all thy love imparts;
And what thou most desirest—
Our humble, thankful hearts.

THE PRESIDENT'S THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

This year of 1910 is drawing to a close. The records of population and harvests, which are the index of progress, show vigorous national growth and health and prosperous well-being of our communities throughout this land and in our possessions beyond the seas. These blessings have not descended upon us in restricted measure, but overflowed and abound. They are the blessings and bounty of God.

We continue to be at peace with the rest of the world. In all essential matters our relations with other peoples are harmonious, with an ever-growing reality of friendliness and depth of recognition of mutual dependence. It is especially to be noted that during the past year great progress has been achieved in the cause of arbitration and peaceful settlement of international disputes.

Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, in accordance with the wise custom of the civil magistrate since the first settlements in this land, and with the rule established from the foundation of this government, do appoint Thursday, November 24, 1910, as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, enjoining the people upon that day to meet in their churches for the praise of Almighty God, and to return heartfelt thanks to Him for all His goodness and loving kindness.

In witness thereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at this city of Washington this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, nine hundred and ten, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.

By the President: Alva E. Adee, Acting Secretary of State.

GOVERNOR SANDER'S MESSAGE.

Gov. Sanders has issued his Thanksgiving Proclamation as follows:

Whereas, it has been the time-honored and long-cherished custom, handed down by our forefathers, to set aside one day in each year as a day of thanksgiving, especially to render thanks to our Creator for blessings received in that year;

Now, therefore, I, Jared Young Sanders, Governor of Louisiana, do hereby designate and appoint Thursday, November twenty-fourth, as a day on which I call upon the people of Louisiana to lay aside their usual vocations, and to assemble in their homes and their several places of worship, regardless of sect or creed, for the purpose of giving thanks to Almighty God.

This year has brought to our people a greater prosperity than they have enjoyed for several years, both agricultural and industrial. We have been free from pestilence, storms and calamities. The splendid growth and great possibilities of our State are attracting the attention of the world. We are on the threshold of an era of great activity and material growth, and our people are thoroughly aroused to the development of our latent and long-neglected resources.

While giving thanks for many blessings of a Divine Providence, let us not forget the unfortunate, the sick and the needy. Let us open our hearts to the tender supplications of sweet charity, for in no better way can we show our gratitude to God.

Given under my signature and the great seal of the State of Louisiana, at the State Capitol, in the city of Baton Rouge, this eleventh day of November, 1910.

J. Y. SANDERS.

By the Governor: Eugene J. McGivney, Assistant Secretary of State,
State of Louisiana,
Executive Department.

LET US GIVE THANKS.

We publish above the Thanksgiving proclamations of President Wm. Taft and Governor J. Y. Sanders of Louisiana. That of Governor Noel of Mississippi does not appear because it has not been given out at this writing. It is manifestly proper that those vested with civil authority should issue such a call to the people. The United States are pre-eminently a Christian nation. The territory which comprises it was discovered by the representatives of Christian powers, and those who first settled it were men of profound faith in God and his written revelation, who came to these western shores moved by a religious motive.

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine.

The colonists who laid the foundation of this vast Republic laid it deep and strong in the essential truths of Christianity. They recognized the existence and regnancy of the Supreme Being, and the Bible as containing the disclosure of his will to mankind. They invoked his blessings upon their work, and their confidence in his overruling providence was in the darkest hour their mainstay and hope. They called upon him when calamity threatened, and praised him with adoration and song when it had passed.

And happily for us the faith of the Pilgrim Fathers is still substantially our faith. The nation has grown from thirteen small States into a mighty empire, reaching from ocean to ocean, and extending from the lakes to the gulf, but it yet acknowledges its dependence upon the same God who watched over its cradle and infant years, and realizes that his favor is necessary to its continued growth and prosperity. The Bible sustains a unique relation to the American Government. All of our officials, from the highest to the lowest, take their oaths of office upon it. The sanctity of our Sabbath is protected by legal enactments, and the most eminent authorities have declared that the fundamental principles of the Christian religion are a part of the common law of the land. Hence, in recognizing by public proclamation our indebtedness to almighty God for his manifold blessings, and calling upon us to pay him the tribute of thanksgiving which is justly his due, our rulers are acting wisely and in perfect harmony with the history, the institutions and laws of the Republic.

Rich and copious beyond the power of description have been the benedictions and favors showered upon us during the past year. We have had an unbroken peace, both at home and abroad. Neither internal strife, nor serious foreign complications have disturbed us. We have been spared the scourge of pestilence elsewhere prevailing. Immunity has largely been granted from storm, and fire and flood. Bountiful crops have rewarded the labor of the husbandman, smiling plenty sits by millions of firesides, and want is scarcely known beneath our flag. The American workman is the best fed, the best clothed, and the best housed laborer on the planet. We are the wealthiest people of either ancient or modern times, and are still piling up treasure by leaps and bounds. We cultivate vastly more land than any other country; the world is our market, and ships laden with the products of our widening commerce now vex the waters of every sea. Of God's abounding goodness to our people, it may be said as it was of Israel in the olden time: "He hath not dealt so with any nation."

Nor have spiritual blessings been lacking. Revival fires have blazed upon many altars, and the churches apparently have reaped a larger harvest than usual. Fraternity and good will are increasing among the various denominations. Streams of benevolence continue to flow forth in wider and deeper channels. The spirit of Christ is coming more and more to be the spirit of his multiplying disciples. The passing months have contributed not a little to speed the coming kingdom of our Lord.

We dare say that no individual can introspect his heart and reflect upon the attending circumstances of the far-spent year without discovering much for which to be grateful. Has not his life been spared? Has he not had food and raiment and shelter? Have not the showers fallen, and the sun shone, and the birds sung, and the flowers bloomed for him? If a Christian, has he not had his precious hours of communion; and his opportunities for glorious service? If sorrows have come, has he not had sustaining grace? If loved ones have gone away, has he not been comforted by the assurance that, if they trusted in Jesus, they have entered into the Holy City, where no evil cometh? For these and the innumerable other gifts of his overflowing love, let us at the time designated repair to our places of worship and render to God the thanks and praise of appreciative hearts. Nothing is more beautiful than gratitude, and the absence of it marks the mean and selfish soul. And, as has been suggested, let us in this harvest season remember the poor, the sick, and the otherwise unfortunate. This is the noblest way to attest our appreciation of the blessings of a favoring Providence. The glory of Christianity is that it seeks to minister to the needy and uplift the fallen, and we best illustrate it when we strive to cheer the lonely, desolate lives about us, and to make lighter the heavy burdens of our fellow-men.

Some people seem to think that the way to let their lights shine is to obscure the lights of others. Hence they spend not a little time in finding fault with the religion of their neighbors. They appear to have the notion that if piety is depreciated and made scarce, theirs will stand forth the more conspicuous. Of a kindred species are they to those who run for office on the demerits of their opponents.

WHAT IS IT TO PREACH.

By Charles E. Jefferson, D.D.

But what is it to preach, and how can one make himself a preacher? Here again we are thrown back on the basal fact, that the sermon depends on the man. The sermon is, indeed, the man. The man himself must be a sermon.

Preaching is not an art in the sense in which sculpture, music and painting are arts. It resembles these, but it transcends them all. The work of the artist can be divorced from his character. In preaching it is the character of the preacher which is the preacher's power. Preaching is not a trick which can be mastered some bright morning, or a secret which can be transmitted from one man to another for a consideration. There is a stupid fellow mentioned in the Book of Acts, who supposed he could share in the apostle's power by the payment of a sum of money. Stupidity of that sort has not yet vanished from the earth. Even to-day there are men who think that the chief thing in preaching is an artful use of the voice, or a crafty combination of gestures, or a cunning carving of diction, or an expert jugglery of illustrations, or a dexterous maneuvering of ideas, or a clever and impressive display of learning. In this view, preaching is a sort of magic, a sleight of hand or of tongue, or an ingenious piece of legerdemain by which souls are mesmerized and the boundaries of God's kingdom extended. The sermon is a contrivance which can be wrought out by an adroit schemer, a strategist which can be laid by a long-headed intriguer, a device which can be created by an industrious artificer. Men who hold this view sometimes go to hear preachers preach in order to learn the secret of their power. They never find out. God hides certain things from the wise and prudent—and also from fools.

The man who thinks that preaching is a trick of voice, or thought, or language, never learns how to preach. No man is so wearisome in the pulpit as the man who knows they have good voices, and are evidently making an effort to let their hearers know it, too. The best thing that a preacher can do with his voice is to hide it. The best voice for preaching is the voice which no one ever hears. Gestures which are striking make an impression the first few times, but if they keep on striking they give pain. Eloquence is good occasionally when it comes by the will of heaven, but no congregation can endure eloquence every Sunday for four consecutive years. Manufactured eloquence is declamation, and declamation is not eloquence at all. It is a wooden imitation of celestial fire, and is a great weariness. A beautiful style, so beautiful that the rustling of the verbal finery drowns the music of the thought, also is a burden. When all the sentences roll out after the fashion of those of Macaulay or of Burke, men sigh for relief. The best pulpit style is the style which is not seen. Blessed is the preacher who succeeds in beating his style down into invisibility. Voice and language ought to be like the atmosphere—life-supporting but invisible.

Illustrations also are a nuisance, unless they grow up naturally like flowers along the path which the sermon takes. Expert illustrators grow irksome after the second year. Quotations also are gewgaws which entertain for a season, and then lose their charm. They never impress any but the unlettered, for all men who are acquainted with the world of books know where and how to get them. Stringing quotations is like stringing beads. It requires no intellect, and is hardly serious business for a full-grown man. It is only when the words of other men force themselves by sheer strength of undeniable superiority into the company of your sentences, and bend themselves wholeheartedly to the task of carrying on your thought, that they can be considered other than impertinent and mischievous interlopers.

As for ideas, a preacher can have too many of them. Great thoughts are oppressive if too abundant. It is not thoughts, but thought, that a congregation wants, and you cannot have thought without a thinker. The ideal preacher is not a retailer of beautiful thoughts, but a man who can bring to the discussion of every moral and spiritual question the illumination of a sane and discriminating mind.

Learning, also, is out of place in the pulpit. Learned sermons are the easiest of all to write, and the most fatiguing to those who hear them. Any one can write a learned sermon who is alone with an encyclopedia for half a dozen hours. Many a church has had its life crushed out by the learning of its pastor.

All these things—voice, gesture, rhetoric, illustrations, quotations, ideas, learning—have a certain value, but they are at best superficialities, and all of them, unless backed up by something better, soon grow thin and tame. After a little time artificial elocution becomes unbearable, rhetorical display unendurable, excessive illustration insufferable, the exploitation of novel or abstract ideas intolerable. Nothing wears but manhood. To remain ten or twenty years in the same parish, a preacher must be very simple and very true. Goodness never grows stale. Love never becomes monotonous. An industrious man in good health with disciplined powers, whose life is hid with Christ in God, can speak year after year to the same people with the dew of the morning always on his message.

Preaching is primarily a matter of manhood. The sermon depends on the mass of the man. His character must be massive, or he cannot do the work. One sometimes hears an expression which tells much—"He is not big enough man for the place." Is he not educated? Yes. Is he not clever? Very. Bright? Exceedingly. Brilliant? Often. And yet not big enough for the place. The world makes a distinction between a man and his gifts. The church of God must have the man. The variety and nature of his talents come up for consideration later. (From "The Building of the Church," Macmillan Company, New York.)

THE MORAL STATE.

By Rev. James M. Weems.

This writer has long thought the term, "total depravity," as applied to the moral state of man, a meaningless and misleading description. I cannot conceive of its rational application to any state of being, save that of fallen angels, and these are so far gone as to be beyond all remedial hope. How it can be applied to man in any consonance with the doctrine of free agency, I have never been able to understand. Nor have I ever heard or read any explanation that was not self-contradictory.

I have long felt that disability was the word that came nearest to a correct description of the moral state of man. Do any ask if by this I mean a total disability? There is a sense in which the answer is yes, and there is a sense in which it is no. Is it assumed there is also self-contradictory? Let us see about that. As I travel the highway I find a man in the hands of his enemies, and they have bound him hand and foot, so he can neither walk nor release himself. So there is a sense in which the man is totally disabled, and yet he is not in the entirety of his being disabled, because he desires, and asks of me, as an act of mercy, to release him that he might walk.

In the moral state of man there is such a disability as he cannot of his own will or works remedy. Yet there is an unbound ability, called the will, to which there is a direct and an insistent call through the Bible to become active, before enabling help can become efficient at the point of revealed and conscious disability.

A short distance on the way I find two infants bound in like manner as was the man. Neither of them can talk, nor does either of them offer any will resistance to the merciful offer of release from the untoward condition. I release one, and pass on, leaving the other to a fate for which it is in no sense responsible. A companion asks for an explanation, and I reply, I released one because it was dying, and left the other bound because it is in health.

Would that he good logic, good humanity or good mercy? And, failing in all these, can it be good theology? Certainly it is not the kind I believe and teach. It is not the creed I hold to, because I sincerely believe it is contradicted by the Word, which I hold to be above any and all other standards of belief and of teaching.

"And he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb." (Luke 1:15.) Not because John was going to die in infancy. Then why? Was it because he was to be a great man, and do a great work for the Master? Luke vii, 28: "But he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he." But how many special occasions can there be for granting the saving power of the Holy Ghost to children, and yet deny the universal application?

Our Lord had not discovered any when he said: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." In what respect is the converted adult like little children? And wherein are little children unlike the converted adult? If there is a difference we would be grateful to anyone able to do so to point out the inconsistency in the Master's strong and apt illustration of the converted state. I hold Mr. Watson is correct when he says: "Thus this previous relation of infants to Christ, as accepted by him, is an argument for their baptism, not against it, seeing it is by that they are visibly recognized as the formal members of his Church, and have the full grace of the covenant confirmed and sealed to them, with increase of grace as they are fitted to receive it."

THE HEAVENLY RACE.

By E. B. Partin, M. D.

So run that ye may obtain. (1 Cor. 9:24.) In the beginning of this verse the Apostle says: "Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain." In this Scripture the Christian life is represented as a race. In those heathen races there was offered a prize to the swiftest runner. The one who came out ahead at the end of the race received the prize. Now, it must have been evident that the one who won the prize was the one who put forth all of his energies and strength in running the race. And so the Apostle intended to teach a lesson of earnestness to the Christian in running the heavenly race. Now, they did it for an earthly, but the Christian for a heavenly prize. If the winner of the earthly reward had to exert himself to the utmost in order to win, how much more should the Christian exert all of his energies and time in running for the heavenly prize?

In Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" we have a beautiful representation of the Christian life or race. In one place in this beautiful allegory, Christian is represented as being on his knees praying; and when he had finished his prayer he arose and went in a run towards the Celestial City. How important, yea, how indispensable, is prayer in the heavenly race! And the next thing to prayer is action—doing, going in the direction of that prayer. He who prays earnestly for divine help and guidance, and then does his best to get his prayer answered, is the one who will win the prize and gain the heavenly home.

The trouble with a good many who profess to be running the Christian race is that they do not realize in the depths of their soul the great worth of the prize. Is it worth all our energies and time to gain it? To have a place at the right hand of the Father, to live with God and the angels, and to see him who gave himself for us, and to be with loved ones gone before? Is it worth more than the perishing things of this world and the pleasures of sin for a season? If so, "Why halt ye between two opinions? choose ye this day whom you will serve."

"Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on;
A heavenly race demands thy zeal,
And an immortal crown.

"That prize with peerless glories bright,
Which shall new luster boast,
When victors' wreaths and monarchs' gems
Shall blend in common dust.

"Blest Savior, introduced by thee,
Have I my race begun;
And crowned with victory at thy feet,
I'll lay my honors down."

"THE MISSIONARY OUTLOOK."

To the Pastors and Lay Leaders of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren—Beginning with January, 1911, our Mission Board will issue a new missionary periodical called "The Missionary Outlook," which will take the place of "Go Forward," "Our Homes," and "The Woman's Missionary Advocate." It will be a 64-page illustrated magazine, and will contain all the matter now being given in our three missionary papers, the subscription price being fifty cents a year. It will no longer be necessary to take three missionary periodicals in order to keep in touch with the missionary work of our Church, as each department of the Board of Missions as now unified will have full space and opportunity for news pertaining thereto. The combination of the three missionary periodicals into one is undoubtedly a decided step forward, since it will enable our Missionary Secretaries to give the Church a stronger and better missionary magazine than we have ever had before, and will furnish each reader with information regarding all the missionary interests and enterprises of the Church, thus giving a comprehensive view.

It is earnestly desired by our Missionary Secretaries at Nashville that an immediate canvass be made in each congregation for new subscribers to this magazine, so that they may get the benefit of the first issue. The unexpired subscriptions to the existing periodicals will be filled out with the new one. Will you not one and all kindly co-operate in this important matter, and thus render substantial aid in the great forward movement? Inasmuch as they are equally interested, the members of our Woman's Missionary Societies can be counted on to help in this canvass.

Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK,

"ARE CHILDREN BORN REGENERATE?"

By Rev. H. Walter Featherston, D.D.

I wrote an article entitled "Are Children Born Saved?" Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B. D., dissents in Advocate of October 27th. He says that my title "obscures the issue," and more than suggests that the words in the Ritual which declare that infants "are born into this world in Christ, the Redeemer," does not mean that they are born regenerate. The regenerate are most certainly the saved. Does my brother deny this? "In Christ" certainly means in a regenerate state. Paul distinctly says so: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Margin: "A new creation." If that does not mean regeneration, what does it mean? "The old things are passed away; behold, they are become new." (II Cor. v. 17.) I was on the committee of the General Conference that revised the Ritual, on the sub-committee that did the detail work, and voted in the General Conference for the revised Order for the Baptism of Infants, and I am sure that no one of us on the committee ever dreamed otherwise than that the Order commits the Church to the statement that infants are born regenerate. (In our conversations in the sub-committee and in the Committee on Revisals, the terms "in Christ Jesus" and "regenerate" were used as synonyms, and no one protested.) The General Conference—practically three hundred strong—voted for it. I recall no protest.

Did we contradict or set aside or change any statement of Methodist doctrine? Did we run counter to any Methodist standard? If so, why did not our Bishops veto our action?

Yes, I knew something of the Methodist standards. Evidently, my Brother Lipscomb does not know what they are, for he indicates that Watson's "Institutes" are included. The First Restrictive Rule forbidding any change in the Standards was adopted in 1808. Watson's "Institutes" were written in 1832, twenty-four years later.

Yes, Watson's "Institutes"—not a Methodist Standard—does deny that infants come into this world "justified and regenerate," but Fletcher, in his "Checks," written before 1808—yet not a Methodist Standard, though written in Wesley's lifetime and with his approval—does declare: "From Rom. v. 18, I proved the justification of infants. * * * Justification comes upon all men in their infancy. * * * All infants are by nature children of wrath, yet through the redemption of Christ they are in a state of favor or justification." (Vol. I, pp. 283-285.) Dr. Wilbur Fisk, on Rom. v. 18, says: "Through the grace of the gospel all are born free from condemnation"—i. e., justified. Dr. Miner Raymond says, alluding to Rom. v. 18: "Man does come to conscious being sustaining the relation of a justified, pardoned sinner." Bishop Tigert, editing Dr. Summers' "Theology," says and shows (Vol. II, pp. 43, 44) that Articles 2 and 20 of our Church support this teaching. Dr. R. J. Cooke, in his "Christianity and Childhood," says: "Children are justified before God in Christ. * * * are in a state of salvation, which is not different from the same state in an adult believer." Dr. D. D. Whedon, in Methodist Review of January, 1873, argues for this teaching, declaring that Fletcher, as above quoted, did assuredly teach "the doctrine of both the justification and the regeneration of living infants." He also earnestly insists that Wesley taught it in his "Notes": "We have, then, the syllogistic premises: All members of the kingdom of heaven are regenerate; children are such members." He further says: "The doctrine of infant regeneration * * * is not a new doctrine, but has been a dogma in all the great sections of the Church." He also insists: "The regeneration of the infant is nothing different in nature from that of the adult."

All of these are eminent Methodist writers. Paul must have been something of a Methodist, too, for he wrote: "As through one trespass the judgment came unto all men to condemnation; even so through one act of righteousness the free gift came unto all men to justification of life." If all men have "justification of life," it must be in infancy for millions of them do not have it in adult life.

Mr. Wesley emphatically declares, and no Methodist denies, that justification and the new birth are, in point of time, inseparable. * * * it being certain * * * that whosoever is justified is also born of God. So the terms are used in all Methodist teaching, with this understanding:

Brother Lipscomb charges that I somewhat agree with the Calvinists. Yes, somewhat. The Calvinists believe in the regeneration of elect infants—the Methodists believe in the regeneration of all infants.

I challenge Brother Lipscomb to cite one word or phrase or sentence in any one of our Articles of Religion which even intimates that infants are not born regenerate. I challenge him to point out any statement of mine contradictory of our articles. The language of our new Order for Infant Baptism is simple, clear and scriptural: "All men, though fallen in Adam, are born into this world in Christ, the Redeemer, heirs of life eternal and subjects of the saving grace of the Holy Spirit." What does it mean to teach?

First—it teaches the doctrine of our Seventh Article, that "all men" do inherit "the corruption of the nature of every man that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually."

Second—it also teaches that infants, who cannot appropriate by an act of faith, the regenerating benefits of Christ's death, applied by the Holy Spirit, are not to be left out, "but are born into this world in Christ, the Redeemer. * * * subjects of the ing grace of the Holy Spirit." Is the Order false to Methodism or the Scripture? Let us see. We all agree that dying infants go to heaven. Do they go there unregenerate? Assuredly not. Does Brother Lipscomb believe that infants are carried to heaven in an unregenerate state? Certainly he does not. Well, when is the infant regenerated? At death? No Methodist believes this. At his baptism? No Methodist believes this, although Mr. Wesley accepts this dogma in his sermon xlv. iv. 2. At what point between birth and death does this work of regeneration take place? Will Brother Lipscomb tell us? I say, with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in her Order for Baptism, that it takes place at birth. (Some, in trying to harmonize Watson with Fletcher and others, say, "not born regenerate," but urge that the regeneration takes place immediately after birth. This is simply trifling; a distinction without a difference.)

Dr. Adam Clarke and Dean Alford in their commentaries maintain that the interpretation I give to Mark x. 14, is the correct one. Paul in I Cor. vii-14 corroborates the interpretation.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

X.

This begins with the Louisiana Conference in session at Shreveport. The weather was warm and wet, and the streets impassable in places. Myself and wife, James A. Parker and wife, and J. B. Cassity and wife, enjoyed the hospitalities of that princely gentleman, Mr. Reynolds, at the City Hotel. We had a pavement walk to the church and enjoyed ourselves very much. It is sad to know that in the brief period of twenty-three years since that Conference so many in attendance there have been "gathered to their fathers." Some of our visitors were: Dr. Young J. Allen, J. D. Barbee, Dodd and Dunlap, of Georgia, and L. L. Pickett of Texas. The preaching was done as well as I remember by J. D. Barbee, John A. Pipes, A. E. Clay, J. A. Parker and Horace Kimball. Bishop Key's hour was filled on Sunday by Dr. Allen, who spoke to us very entertainingly of his first trip to China as a missionary, and of his labors there. We listened with patience and never tired. Dr. Barbee preached at 3 o'clock from "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." The ordination of elders followed, and Dr. Allen spoke again at night, after which a memorial service was held.

The Conference business was finished on Monday, and the appointments were announced at night. Mine was Delhi and Floyd, my first appointment in Louisiana, and as this and others until 1893 have been sketched, I pass on until my appointment to Franklin. Presiding Elder John A. Miller and myself lived in Lafayette two years at the same time. At the end of the second year Brother Miller asked me if I would prefer Franklin to Lafayette. I replied that I had nothing to say in the matter. Conference was held in Homer, with Bishop Key presiding. The weather was unsettled and unpleasant and la grippe was prevalent. On Saturday at 3 p. m. Dr. Ahrens preached from "The Master is come and calleth for thee." It was plain, pathetic and good. Dr. W. R. Lambuth spoke at night on Japan and his observations in the Orient, and to me it was very interesting and instructive. On Sunday at 11 o'clock Bishop Joseph S. Key preached on the "Burning Bush," a sermon characteristic of the man who preached it. It was plain, earnest, spiritual and very good.

I was sent to Franklin, St. Mary's Parish, and, after parting from true and loving friends in Lafayette, we arrived in Franklin at 3 p. m., December 29th, and found a number of ladies and girls awaiting us. They received us most cordially and showed us through the parsonage, which was well supplied with furniture, and the pantry was supplied with something good to eat. This was our home, and we felt at home from that hour until we left it three years later. I have served a more spiritual people, perhaps, but never served a more cordial, friendly people. The Ladies' Aid Society collected the pastor's salary, and, as the society met regularly, and worked systematically, the preacher knew what to expect. The Sunday school I found was doing well, and the attendance at preaching was very good, both morning and night, fifty-two Sundays in the year. Some others in town did not enjoy the popularity of Methodism there, and when the fine attendance at the Methodist Church was spoken of, the reply would be: "Yes, plenty go there, but they are trash; that is where the trash go." Soon after that I announced to a full house that "four weeks from that day I would preach a 'trash' sermon." I did not explain or hint at what had been said in making the announcement. The day came and with it a packed house. Some came from Centerville, five miles below. My text was: "I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say."

I first gave the historical account of the origin of Methodism, and claimed that God founded it and used John and Charles Wesley as instruments in his hands, and that some of the greatest and best of earth had conceded that the existing religious bodies were indebted to the Wesleyan revival for any spiritual life they had. I then discussed briefly the Methodist view of human depravity, the universality of the atonement, the office of the Spirit, repentance, faith, justification, regeneration, adoption and sanctification, Methodist Church polity and success, and closed with a statistical statement from the census of 1890, showing that the Methodists were the strongest Protestant church numerically in the United States; and as to the value of church property, the Baptists and Episcopalians had eighty million dollars each, the Presbyterians had ninety millions; and the poor, trashy Methodist Church one hundred and thirty-two millions.

But they are ignorant. Let us see: Did a Methodist ever produce a book calculated to profit and bless our fallen race? Yes, Adam Clarke, after thirty years of hard labor, with much prayer and many tears, produced his commentaries on the Bible. This is a work which has never been superseded by anyone anywhere. Joseph Benson produced a commentary which reflects great honor upon himself and Methodism. I have never seen Whedon's Commentary, but I am told that it is a work of high order. Thomas O. Summers' Commentary on the New Testament is a scholarly and a highly respectable production. W. B. Godby, of Kentucky, has also written a commentary on the New Testament, and there may be others. Some churches that un-church the Methodists have never produced a commentary that I have heard of. Watson's Bible Dictionary is second to none. Methodist Reviews and church papers are the peers of any found elsewhere. How about her ministry? Can Methodist ministers preach? I believe they can beat the world, and I do not believe that a greater preacher has lived in modern times than John Wesley. Who else could draw hundreds out every morning at 5 o'clock for fifty years? Who else could hold a thousand men one hour in a drenching rain to hear him preach? Could Spurgeon? Could Talmage? Did anyone ever have such power before Wesley's day or since? George Whitefield has been denominated the prince of preachers, and, while he had the greatest voice perhaps ever known, he said he felt insignificant in Wesley's presence. Have we any able men now? Have we had any in this nineteenth century? A great many of them. I name a few—Matthew Simpson, H. B. Bascom, H. H. Kavanaugh, G. F. Pierce, Lovick Pierce, W. E. Munsey, James A. Duncan, and time fails me. Methodism has fought sin harder and endured more abuse than any other church, and yet has left all others behind. This is a synopsis of my sermon on that occasion.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION.

Dear Brother Meek: I just read a few minutes ago in the Commercial-Appeal the sad, sad notice of the passing of that strong and noble man and Christian gentleman, Brother T. H. Bingham, of Carrollton, Miss. As a friend, a brother, and former pastor, I wish to mingle my tears with those of the dear heart-broken ones who knew him best, loved him most, and will miss him most sadly. In my ministry I have known hundreds of laymen, but none more guileless, upright, warm-hearted, true, generous, faithful, honorable and pure, in my estimation. His life was an open book—clean, honest and golden, from appearance to finished deed and character. He was high in his ideals, pure and transparent in his motives, simple and unstilted in manner; strong and courageous in his convictions—a man always among men. To his Lord, his family, his church, his pastor, and to all men, as occasion demanded, he rendered devotion, love, service and fidelity—the full and happy store of his manly endowments and God-filled and grace-crowned life.

His life was a blessing to me and I loved him as a brother in the flesh. God bless and graciously sustain and comfort the desolate companion and children and family in this their sore trial! I wished to drop a tear of sorrow and a flower of love upon his coffin lid.

Bishop J. C. Kilgo will preach the commencement sermon at Entory College next June.

Rev. G. W. Herring has been transferred by Bishop McCoy from the Arkansas to the North Mississippi Conference.

Ex-Vice-President Fairbanks has been chosen a trustee of De Pauw University, Indiana. He is a strong Methodist, as are also Senator Beveridge and ex-Governor Hanly of that State.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate of November 10 contains on the front page an excellent picture of Dr. John R. Mott, who is perhaps the foremost missionary leader in the Western Hemisphere, and a good Methodist. Dr. Mott is not a minister, but a layman.

Referring to the Chapman Alexander meeting in Chicago, the New York Weekly Witness says: "It is perhaps safe to say there has never been in any city so great a revival." Up to November 1, it was estimated that there had probably been not less than 150,000 conversions.

Founders' Day was observed at Wofford College on October 19th. The chapel was decorated with the college colors, and flowers were placed around the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Wofford. Appropriate addresses were delivered by Dr. Snyder and Senator E. D. Smith.

The four Presbyterian and two Methodist missions in Korea—four-fifths of the Protestant forces—have satisfactorily divided the territory so that there is no overlapping and no wasted energy. They are now planning a Union Christian University. All have joined in except the Anglicans.—Bishop M. C. Harris, of Japan and Korea.

Union Theological Seminary is now allied with Columbia University, and its new buildings, which were dedicated with imposing ceremonies on October 28th, are said to make its equipment superior to that of any similar institution in the United States. It is in its seventy-fourth year, and is reported to have enrolled 170 students this session.

Dr. J. W. Shoaff, who some time since was stricken with paralysis, was forced by his physical condition to take a superannuate relation at the recent session of the Los Angeles Conference. He is reported to have improved somewhat, but is still seriously ill. Rev. J. J. N. Kenny was transferred from the Pacific Conference and appointed to the Los Angeles District in place of Dr. Shoaff, who had served it for two years.

The Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, has announced that, beginning with its issue of January 4th, Bishop J. M. Thornton, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will publish in its columns a series of autobiographical sketches. The life of this great missionary has been singularly interesting, and we do not doubt that what he writes for our enterprising contemporary will command a wide circle of appreciative readers.

Rev. S. F. Collier, of the Wesleyan Mission in Manchester, England, is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his connection with that movement. He began with a congregation of forty-two; to-day the aggregate congregations of the mission average over fifteen thousand every Sunday. The mission also owns sixteen centers for religious and social work, and property valued at $1,500,000. The latest addition to the premises is a magnificent new hall and institute, erected at a total cost of $275,000, and which is in the heart of the theatre district of Manchester.—Northwestern Advocate.

WILLIAM WORTHY: A LOVING AND AFFECTIONATE TRIBUTE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

Years ago there lived in Covington County, Mississippi, a man by the name of William Worthy. If ever a real man deserved the name he bore, this man did, for he was as near a perfect Christian gentleman as any one I ever knew. True, he was a man—a human being, and, of course, had his faults, yet his faults were few and far between.

On one occasion, long years ago, long before I was his pastor, in 1865 the rich men of the Santee Church, where he held his membership, decided to build a new church, and that on a more eligible site. Accordingly, Brothers Graves, Laughlin and Terrell, men of means, got together, selected a spot of ground near a good spring of water, midway between Terrell's and Laughlin's, on a public road—a high and dry place, beautiful and level. There they built a nice church, located a camp ground, and gave it the name of Santee Camp Ground. Brother Worthy was not consulted. He ought to have been, and he knew it. He was a poor man, unable to furnish conveyance to ride to church for the large family he had. He felt the sting. The grounds selected for the new church, instead of being nearer his home than the old church, was, if anything, more remote. Well, the devil never loses an opportunity to do mischief. He is ever on the lookout for an opportunity to show up things in their worst light. He suggested to Brother Worthy that these rich people were altogether unconcerned about him and his convenience. No doubt, Terrell and others thought they were doing the proper thing, and they were, as the sequel proved. Yet, Brother Worthy could not see it that way. He was the praying man of the church, while the others were the paying ones.

Brother Worthy, after deliberately considering the matter, decided to stay at home, enjoy his religion, read his Bible, say his prayers, etc., and let the church take care of itself. So he stayed at home, or away from Santee Church one whole year, pouting—fully expecting the church would fall to pieces and come to naught on account of the way he had been treated. Instead of this the people were delighted to be able to enjoy preaching in a brand new, up-to-date house of worship. Preaching, singing, praying, shouting—for people shouted in those days—and all things moved smoothly and triumphantly on. Brother Worthy heard of it, shrunk under it, and saw his mistake. He felt it keenly, repented, got forgiveness, went back to the church, and was gladly received, and from that day on he was one of the best members "Old Santee" had. He said to me, after rehearsing the whole thing to me: "I learned this—the Church can live without me, but I can't live without the Church."

Brother Worthy was converted and joined the Church when he was thirteen years old. He was brought up on a farm and had to work hard. His guardian was hard on him, giving him a large task and requiring him to perform it. Preaching day was coming on. Most of the preaching in those days—a hundred years ago—was done on week days. He had resolved to join the Church a certain day. His large task was given him as usual. He got to his work early that morning, worked harder than ever, ran all the way to church, and got there in time to give his hand and name to the preacher for membership, and ever afterwards made a faithful, true follower of the Lamb. When I was his pastor in 1865-67, he was one of the best and most faithful stand-bys I had. He was a father to me. I was his pastor four years and his presiding elder three years.

He brought up and sent out to bless the world a large family of children; most, if not all of them, are doing well. One grandson out in Texas has grown to be immensely wealthy. He was very able in prayer. It was his delight and joy to kneel with a crowd of penitents at the altar and pour out his soul to God in their behalf. Scores, yea hundreds, have been converted, saved, made happy in Christ Jesus, while Brother Worthy wrestled with God in their behalf. He seemed to have the burden of souls upon him as he mingled with and prayed for his children, neighbors and neighbors' children. My! my! How I did love to hear him pray! It was no child's play with him as he held on to the precious promises of God in the presence of penitents, looking steadfastly by faith into the face of the blessed Master, pleading for those for whom He shed His precious blood.

Brother Worthy lived to a good old age, died in great peace and triumph some years ago, and went home to rest.

On one occasion he told me of an exciting time at a camp meeting in one of the western counties of our State. The captain of a company of soldiers and his men—about one hundred—determined to break up the camp meeting. The tent-holders, and others had been apprised of the fact, so they armed themselves with such weapons as they could get, and determined to make the best defense they could. Promptly at the time appointed the officer with his armed men came into the camp. In a little while the two parties were in arms, facing each other, ready for action as soon as word was given. A few of the old, steady men passed rapidly up and down the lines begging the captain not to fire upon the tent-holders, but withdraw with his men and leave the grounds. Fortunately, not a gun was fired. The captain yielded to the earnest pleading of the old men, withdrew, and left the neighborhood. After that the meeting was carried on without further disturbance. But what about the captain and his men? In less than three years they were all dead. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Dr. Blackburn, who died in Columbia many years ago, told me of the same incident fifty years ago, almost word for word.

(The subject of this sketch, William Worthy, was born in Lincoln County, Georgia, September 21, 1796, and died March 11, 1887. He moved with his parents to Mississippi in 1805; joined the Methodist Church in 1812. He was happily married to Miss Annie E. Langston, March 6, 1823. His descendants at the time of his death were 117.)

eager for a revival and had prepared the way by a week of prayer and preparation. A special feature of the meeting was the constant attendance and un-failing interest manifested by the stewards, trustees, Sunday school and Epworth League officers.

The preaching was done by Rev. W. R. Hendrix, D. D., pastor Methodist Temple, Louisville, Ky. Dr. Hendrix has a unique and attractive way of putting both head and heart into his sermons. His message is inspiring and uplifting. One man said to me after hearing him preach: "I never felt so worthless, and yet so resolved to do something for my Master, in all my life." The style and diction of Brother Hendrix are well nigh faultless. Free from mannerisms, simple and direct in appeal, tender yet bold in denouncing the wrong, he holds the attention of his congregation from beginning to end of his discourse. But the best of all is, he magnifies the Christ as the present Savior of men. Our people were so blessed by the helpful messages of the gospel as preached by Dr. Hendrix that a hearty invitation was given him to be with us again next year.

The singing was led by Mr. I. N. Neibergall, assisted by Mr. C. F. Neibergall and the choir of the Second Church. Miss J. Darsam and Mrs. Neibergall presided at the piano and pipe organ. Brother Neibergall is one of the most magnetic and successful revivalists in the country. After hearing him for two weeks Dr. Hendrix said: "I have heard Mr. Alexander, Mr. Sankey, Mr. Excell and the other great singing evangelists, but I do not hesitate to say that I have been inspired more by the singing of Mr. Neibergall than by any of these. It is a pity that the Church cannot have the benefit all the time of this gifted man in music and song."

As to the visible results of the meeting, several family altars were erected, the attendance in Sunday school has increased 15 per cent, several have united with the Church, and others have given their names for church membership, and the attendance on the services shows a marked increase. Our church is in better condition in every way than it has been in several years.

LAYMEN'S RALLY—RUSTON DISTRICT.

Gibbsland, La., November 26, 1910.

Encouraging notes are coming in from all over the district regarding our District Rally at Gibbsland on the 26th. "The program is good." "It is adapted to working out some of our problems." "I shall do all I can to make the meeting a success." "The program is fine." "I am very favorably impressed." "I want to get more in touch with this good movement." "I consider the program excellently arranged for the occasion, and feel that the movement will be greatly strengthened." These are some expressions directly quoted from the correspondence of the district leader.

Let every pastor send at once to Brother Staples at Gibbsland, or to Mr. J. P. Jones, our church leader there, the names of all who will attend the rally. The good people at Gibbsland will care for any who come on Friday or remain over Sunday. On Saturday the local committee, assisted by the elect women of Gibbsland, will serve a midday lunch at the church to all visitors free of charge.

Let every church leader and pastor please send in the names of their delegates and visitors at once to Mr. J. P. Jones, or Rev. C. F. Staples, Gibbsland, La.

Germany's proposed outlay for her army for 1912 is $203,941,814, and for her navy $112,639,849. No wonder that England feels apprehensive. Great is the pity that these vast sums are not put to a better use.

A plan is under way to develop the University of Illinois into the greatest school for railroading in the world. All the railway systems of that State are reported to be co-operating in the movement. President Taft sailed from Charleston, S. C., for the Isthmus of Panama on November 10th. He will make the voyage on the armored cruiser Tennessee, with the Montana as a convoy. He was accompanied by his brother, Charles P. Taft, his secretary, William Norton, two aides, a physician, and a stenographer. The trip is said to be a purely business one. The President will remain on the Isthmus only four days, and is expected to return to Charleston en route to Washington on November 22d.

The Chinese legislators attending the Imperial Parliament now in session in Peking are said to have learned already how to filibuster. Displeased with the failure of the throne to punish the Governor of Hunan for contracting a loan without consulting the Provincial Assembly, the members of the higher body are reported to have rebelled and blocked business for four hours. Does not this demonstrate that John Chinaman is capable of being developed into a typical American citizen?

The Interstate Commerce Commission Report shows that during the year ending June 30, 1910, 3,804 were killed and 23,374 were injured by the steam railways of the United States. Of those killed, 421 were passengers, as were also 13,856 of those injured. The number of employees losing their lives were 2,383, and the number wounded 68,818. The following are the figures for the eight years 1903-1910, inclusive: Killed, passengers and employees, 30,723; wounded, 511,064. A frightful exhibit is this. It proves that the commerce of the nation is carried on at a tremendous sacrifice of human life, and no effort should be spared to lessen it.

One of the amendments to the Louisiana State Constitution recently adopted is designed to do away with juvenile courts except in parishes which have an incorporated town of 7,000 or more people. It is claimed that many criminal young negroes endeavored to take advantage of the leniency shown youthful offenders, and also that the maintenance of separate quarters and officers was a large additional expense in the administration of the law. As to the wisdom of having juvenile courts we have no decided opinion, but we believe in the segregation of youthful criminals in prisons where an earnest effort can be made to accomplish their reformation.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union met in Baltimore on November 12th. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, who succeeded Miss Frances Willard as the president of this organization, is a woman of great gifts as a leader. She is also vice-president of the World's W. C. T. U., of which the Countess Carlisle is president. Mississippi has given to the national temperance work one of its most brilliant platform speakers in the person of Miss Belle Kearney, who was reared in Madison County, a few miles north of Jackson. Those who have not done so should read her interesting book, "A Slaveholder's Daughter," written some years ago. We presume that it may be had of the Methodist Publishing House, or of the Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss. Miss Kearney is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The parentage of the Hon. Ben W. Hooper, the newly-chosen Governor of Tennessee, is said to be unknown. He is reported to have been picked up a waif upon the streets of Knoxville a little less than forty years ago, and placed in an orphan asylum. When about ten years old he was adopted by Captain Hooper, of Newport, Tenn., who gave him an education and his name. He graduated with distinction in law before he had attained to the years of his majority, and has since acquired considerable prominence in the legal profession and amassed a fortune. He married Miss Annie Jones, a daughter of one of the wealthiest men in East Tennessee, and has four children. Mr. Hooper is reputed to be a man of noble character and marked ability. Personal worth is far better than illustrious lineage. We have seen not a few who bore a great name only to discredit it. We would not depreciate the blessings of upright parentage, but there is much truth in the familiar words of Tennyson:

"From yon blue heavens above us bent,
The gardener Adam and his wife
Smile at the claims of long descent."

The election on November 8th, as had been foreshadowed by the secular press for weeks, resulted in a sweeping victory for the Democrats, almost equal in magnitude to that achieved by them in 1892, when Mr. Cleveland was elected President for the second time. They carried the States of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Ohio and Indiana, and nearly everywhere throughout the North there was a decided reduction of the usual Republican vote. The next House of Congress will be Democratic by a good working majority, and that party will also have a much stronger representation in the Senate. The question as to what caused this remarkable political upheaval is now being generally discussed in all sections of the country. Our notion is that it was chiefly brought about by the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Bill and the high cost of the necessities of life. The average citizen is not a philosopher, and when he finds it difficult to make a living, he desires a change in the Government. We take no stock in the suggestion of many of the secular papers that the decisive defeat of the Republicans is to be construed as a protest against Mr. Roosevelt and what he stands for. On the contrary, we think the ex-President was a source of strength to his party, and that but for his influence its defeat would have been far more overwhelming. As we see it, the more correct view is that the course of the reactionaries and other things had so discredited the administration that not even the tremendous popularity of Colonel Roosevelt could avert the impending wrath of the people. We do not by any means agree with the great Republican leader in all that he advocates, but we think it must be conceded that he is right in antagonizing the bosses and trusts in his party, who are in politics for the purpose of securing special privileges and filling their pockets. Of course, there is nothing in the charge that Mr. Roosevelt aspires to make himself a king. It has not even been shown that he desires a third term in the presidential office, though possibly he may. The future procedure of the two great parties appears to us to be somewhat uncertain at present. The Republicans may charge their recent misfortunes to the radical teachings of the insurgents, and endeavor to enthrone again in power the plutocratic element. If such is their action, we predict that they will lose the Presidency in the next election. Or, following the leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, they may make war on the trusts and seek to be progressive in the legislation advocated. In that event, they may also cease to be dominant, though their chance of success would, in our judgment, be much greater than it would otherwise; and, even if defeated, they would be much more likely to have a speedy return to power. The great danger of the Democratic party is that it may, in its anxiety for success, be lured into an alliance with the corporate interests of the country. This temptation is apt to be peculiarly strong, if the reform element controls in the Republican party. With such an alignment it might elect a single chief executive, but its tenure in office would probably be of brief duration. We trust that our leaders will have the wisdom to safeguard us from this really grave peril. Our choice for the Democratic nomination for the presidency is Woodrow Wilson, and next to him we prefer William J. Gaynor. In our opinion the paramount question before the American people is the proper regulation of the trusts.

A POSTSCRIPT.

By Rev. H. Walter Featherston.

In my reply to Dr. Winton I overlooked the fact that he utterly ignores my statement, in my first reply, that there is absolutely no provision, no hint of such, in either the original or the amended charter of Vanderbilt, requiring her Board to be self-perpetuating, or forbidding the Church to fill vacancies therein. I have copies of both of these charters, and unqualifiedly declare that I find them both as I have above stated.

Why, then, this talk of a new charter? I only argued as an alternative that, if the charter should forbid the Board to obey the Church, even then the Board could obey by changing the charter. But the charter does not need amending, because it does not forbid the Board to obey the Church. Is this plain enough? Why does Dr. Winton ignore it?

A STRICKEN HOUSEHOLD.

My Dear Doctor Meek: Just a line to say that Brother W. H. Saunders and wife are in the midst of a great sorrow. Little William H., Jr., aged two years, and the only son, entered into rest this afternoon after a week's illness. Following the services at the parsonage to-morrow morning, the remains will be taken to Clinton for interment.

In addition to this sore bereavement, Ruth, one of the little girls, lies critically ill with pneumonia. I am quite sure it is not necessary to ask that prayer be made for our dear Brother and his stricken family in this time of their great distress.

Yours very cordially,

F. R. HILL, JR.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION OF THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

For One Year	$1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)
Eight Months	1.00
To Preachers	1.00
To widows of preachers	1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription, to cover expense of remitting, etc. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1, or to give the paper free when we are justified. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

THE MOSLEM HABIT OF PRAYER.

The impression is quite general that Moslems as a rule are very strict in their observance of the five hours each day appointed for their devotions. Many a lesson has been read to Christian people upon faithfulness to their religious duty from the example of Mohammedans. But Mr. William E. Curtis, the enterprising traveler and newsgatherer, has come to be very doubtful about it. In a recent newspaper letter he tells of what he observed on board a steamship in the Black Sea, where a large proportion of the passengers were Turks and other Mohammedans:

"I noticed," he said, "that none of the Mohammedan passengers, except the mullahs and one general, said their prayers when the time came. The other first-class Mohammedan passengers paid no attention whatever to the hours for devotion, which gave me a disagreeable shock, for I have always understood that a Moslem is so conscientious that he will say his prayers five times a day at the proper moment, no matter what happens to be doing, or where he happens to be. Many of the third-class passengers, who were compelled to sleep on the open deck, performed their duties regularly. They spread their prayer rugs carefully in the first open space they could find, and, turning their eyes toward Mecca, went through with the Mohammedan ritual, and cried that there is no God but Allah in loud voices. Several of the private soldiers said their prayers regularly and regardless of their surroundings, but the majority of them did not. Probably not more than one out of five of the Moslem passengers paid any attention to the hour of prayer.—Western Christian Advocate.

"Consent to be humiliated; silence and peace in humiliation are the true good of the soul. One might be tempted to speak humbly, and one might find a thousand and five pretexts for doing so; but it is still better to be silent humbly. The humility which still speaks is still to be suspected; in speaking, self-love consoles itself a little."—Fenelon.

MISSIONARY WORKERS MEET.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Hattiesburg District held a district meeting at Magee, Miss., October 27, 1910. The session of the Home Mission Society was held Friday morning, afternoon and night, with Mrs. Dan Gillman, of Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, presiding. A large number of delegates from the auxiliaries in the District were present, and encouraging reports of the work were given. The results show determined effort and the finances were in good condition.

Saturday was given up to the Foreign Missionary Society, with Mrs. Geo. H. Thompson presiding. The societies in the District were well represented, and reports showed great success, and a continual growth in membership. The union of the two societies made the session very pleasant and profitable. The plans of each were better understood and increased membership the result. A society for foreign work was organized at Magee; also a Young People's Society. It is most encouraging to know of so much activity in mission work among the young people and children of the church. Their reports were fine, and many delegates were present. Mrs. Lipscomb, the president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, was present, and addressed the gathering. The district conference meeting will be held at Heidelberg, Miss.

MRS. EMMA T. MCGREGOR,
Secretary of District Conference.

MISSIONARY ITEMS FROM THE MISSION ROOMS

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D. D.

Rev. L. C. Brannan, in company with Rev. W. G. Cram and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hosea Deal, will sail for Korea on the S. S. Siberia November 29.

Dr. Wightman T. Reid, son of Dr. C. F. Reid, Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and Miss Sidney Williams were married September 9th in Seoul, Korea. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. K. Gamble. Mr. and Mrs. Reid left immediately for Songdo. They have the cordial good wishes of hosts of friends both in America and the Orient.

Rev. W. G. Cram and family will sail for Korea on the Siberia November 29th, after a year's furlough. During this time Mr. Cram visited the World's Missionary Conference at Edinburgh. He has also done very effective work in advocacy of the needs of Korea before the Church. He was especially useful in the Laymen's Campaign of Cities last winter. May the blessings of God attend him and his to the field they love.

Miss Maud Bonnell, principal of the Lambuth Memorial Bible Training School, is at home on a furlough, and has attended the Oklahoma Conference at Ardmore. Miss Bonnell will be with her brother, Dr. A. E. Bonnell, at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Rev. J. F. Beasley, of Waverley, Tennessee (Tennessee Conference), left for Cuba November 2d. He goes to Santa Fe, Isle of Pines, to take the place of Rev. J. T. Redmon, who has been obliged to return to the States on account of Mrs. Redmon's health.

Rev. C. B. Moseley, principal of Palmore Institute, Kobe, Japan, writes that the new term has opened with attendance beyond his highest expectation.

Dr. W. C. Mayes, of Choon-Chun, Korea, reports that he has treated for the last quarter 548 new patients and 87 repeats, making a total of 635.

Mr. Carl Hosea Deal was married November 9th to Miss Caroline Jane Rhodes, of Dallas, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Deal will sail on the S. S. Siberia November 29th for Korea.

Rev. H. C. Tucker, after six months in the United States, sailed for Brazil October 20th on the steamship Verdi from New York. He goes back to begin his twenty-fifth year of labor in that great field, a labor in which he has rendered most effective service in the spread of the gospel.

Rev. J. M. Lander writes interestingly of the Brazil Mission Conference which met at Ribeirac Preto, the greatest coffee district of the world. One of the farms visited has 7,000,000 trees, and is owned by an English company.

A PLEA FOR MORE DISTRICTS.

By Rev. J. M. Alford.

Dear Dr. Meek and Brethren of the Louisiana Conference:

Two years ago I ventured to give through the Advocate my reasons why we should redistrict the Conference. My article covered more than a page. Dr. Boswell saw fit to publish every word I wrote.

Two or three issues following my article, the Advocate had something to say on the subject editorially, and also contributions from other brethren—all of them agreeing with me and some of them commending it from both logical and practical standpoints. I had many letters from brethren thanking me for the article.

I have just read the timely article in this week's issue of the Advocate of that wide-awake layman of the North Mississippi Conference, J. R. Bingham. If he, and all others interested, will read the article referred to of two years ago, they will see at a glance that Brother Bingham's recent article covers, in part, the same line of argument that mine did. I hope this communication from the leading layman of the North Mississippi Conference will be read by all the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, and that the matter will be referred to the Bishop and his Cabinet on the first day (December 7th) of the Conference.

I believe if it were put to a test at least three-fourths of the brethren would vote for more districts. Brethren, let's ask for what we want and for what we need!

Without going into details and practically covering the same grounds that have already been covered, I am giving below by numbers a few of the reasons, as they appear to me, why we should have four more districts in the Louisiana Conference:

1. It would enable the presiding elder to devote the entire day (or two days, Saturday and Sunday) to one church or charge.
2. It would eliminate the necessity of traveling on Sunday trains to meet the appointments.
3. It would give the presiding elder more time to be with the pastor.
4. It would give him more time with the people.
5. Instead of preaching just once (as is often necessarily true), he could preach three or four times during one Quarterly Conference occasion.
6. The presiding elder would not be always "on the run," hence, would have more time to rest, read and prepare sermons.
7. It would enable him to work on the intensive rather than the extensive plan, as in the present.
8. It would give the presiding elder a chance to study the conditions more and better, and, being among the people, would get in sympathetic touch with them, thus his influence would mean more to the Church.
9. The people would feel like they were getting "value received" when they pay the pro rata to the presiding elder.
10. The presiding elder would have time to help the pastors in revival meetings, and thus practically become the Evangelist of his own district.
11. The Districts being more compact, it would reduce the traveling and other expenses incidental to serving the District.
12. It would enable the presiding elder to spend more time with his family.
13. Instead of running in and preaching once and going through with the routine business of the Conference and leaving on the next train, he would come to us fresh and burdened especially for that particular charge. Instead of meeting a formal business engagement, as is often the case, he would meet with people who would be glad to see him. He would have the love-feast and the Communion of the Lord's Supper, and preach four soul-stirring sermons.
14. The presiding elder, being able to give more time to the weak charges, they would develop and get to be strong instead of dying out, as is often true.
15. It would be a much-needed help to the young pastor, especially if he is unordained.
16. The presiding elder, having more time with the pastor, and being among the people more, it would result in a spiritual awakening, and consequently more young men would enter the ministry, and the supply would equal the demand.

CORINTH DISTRICT RALLY.

On October 22 and 23 more than sixty preachers and delegates from over the Corinth District met in Booneville to pray and plan for greater things in the Master's work.

On Friday evening the Senior League of Booneville held its annual banquet, to which the delegates were invited. An informal reception was held in the Business Men's Bible Class Hall, where friend greeted friend and strangers were introduced. At 8:15 the reception committee ushered us into the new Epworth Hall lecture room, where a banquet dinner had been prepared. The newly-finished hall, the beautiful decorations of "white and gold," the neatly and daintily arranged tables made a beautiful sight. Dr. J. Y. Murray, one of our veteran Young People's leaders, gave thanks; then we were comfortably seated and proceeded at once to show our appreciation of the League's labors. Good music, a good dinner and good fellowship for an hour put every one in a happy frame of mind. Then Rev. Ben P. Jacob, who was the master of ceremonies, proposed a number of toasts, which were responded to by both visitors and home members. From seven to ten seems a long while, but every one went away refreshed.

Saturday morning was devoted to the Church's responsibility to the Young People. Rev. R. A. Clark led the discussion, then a lively informal discussion was engaged in, bringing out the need of the Epworth League, its field of usefulness, and some of its problems. Rev. K. P. Foust, of South Side, Corinth, filled the pulpit at 11 o'clock much to the delight of all. He is an eloquent and forcible young preacher.

At noon a spread dinner was served in the Business Men's Class Hall, to which everybody was invited. A most delightful hour was spent eating an abundance of good things and in royal good fellowship. During the short intermission the last quarterly Conference of the Booneville Circuit was held. Brother Shearer made a most gratifying report. He has done a great year's work, and is generally beloved both on his own charge and in the town of Booneville, where he lives. He has received about a hundred into the Church this year, and will bring up everything in full.

In the afternoon session the Sunday school work was pressed to the front, where it belongs. It was found that there was much Sunday school interest throughout the District, and much good work outside the great schools of Corinth, Iuka and Booneville. The Woman's Missionary Society is growing and is doing a great deal of local and confessional work. The afternoon's discussions reached a climax when the Laymen's work was taken up. While not a great deal had been done toward perfecting the organized Laymen's Movement, our men are waking up. The discussion of our mission territory in Corinth District brought an appalling picture to us. We will raise at once five hundred dollars to push special mission work within the bounds of the District. Our Mission Board cannot find a more needy or more fruitful field for its domestic mission money than in this District.

At the evening service Rev. L. M. Broyles, our popular pastor of First Church, Corinth, delighted and edified us with one of his strong sermons on Christ, the Foundation and Motive Power of our Church Life and Ambitions.

Sunday was a feast of good things. The many visitors were an inspiration. Sunday school met at the regular hour. After going from the opening exercises to the class room, the visitors were given the liberty of the entire school. Many of them visited the different classes and departments. The pulpit was filled at the 11 o'clock hour by our presiding elder, Rev. B. P. Jacob. His sermon was on "Unity in Christ." It was pronounced a great sermon by all who heard it. Those who have heard him at his best can understand the feast we enjoyed. We were not only delighted, but were fed and strengthened. It was good to be there.

In the afternoon a general rally was held, in which some special work of the District was discussed by Rev. W. W. Jones, Mr. H. E. Ray, and Hon. J. A. Cunningham.

The closing service was held Sunday evening, when Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Saltville, preached a most excellent sermon from "Lovest thou Me more than these?" It was clear, full of the Spirit, forcible, and was much appreciated.

We were much disappointed at not having with us Bishop McCoy, who was detained at the semi-annual meeting of the Bishops in New Orleans. The rally was, however, from first to last a success. There was enthusiasm, rush, and the whole-hearted interest in it all. Our presiding elder was much complimented on his business way of doing things and on the phenomenal success of the work in the District. There has been a remarkable growth both in the territory hitherto unoccupied and in the development of existing charges. In three years the District has grown from seventeen to twenty-eight charges, and has developed some of the strongest charges in the Conference. This has been accomplished without the bounds of the District being enlarged, and still there is much real mission territory in this section, some very, very needy. The Corinth District is at the front, and is resolved to stay there.

BOB WHITE.

By Bessie L. Putnam.

One day when Tommy was at grandpa's he heard some one calling "Bob White" distinctly from the meadow below the house. Three times the call came, clear as a whistle, and Tommy ran in to find out who "Bob White" was; for it had been raining, and maybe he was too little to be out in the wet.

Grandpa laughed, and said that Bob White was another name for the quail, and that it was calling its mate.

Tommy was very anxious to see the bird that could speak its own name so plainly, and grandpa said that they might see the whole family. If they watched sharp, for they spent much time on the wheat stubble picking up the grain. And sure enough, one morning grandpa hurried Tommy out to see them.

Tommy was much surprised to see a lot of birds with brown feathers, not nearly so pretty as the green parrot which he had at home, and which could say "Polly" as plainly as they could say "Bob White," though its voice was not nearly so clear and bell-like. "What homely birds!" said Tommy. "I don't see why they have no pretty feathers."

Grandpa soon explained to Tommy that God had been very good in giving them no bright plumage; for as their food is largely seeds which they get from the ground, they need the dull colors to hide them from the hunters and other enemies.

"Every one of these birds," said grandpa, "is worth five dollars to me on this farm just to eat the weed-seeds; and I am very glad that they can so easily hide from their enemies."

And Tommy went home wondering whether this was what was meant by the "not a sparrow falleth." —Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

TWO BRAVE BOYS.

Every boy who reads this magazine has heard the story of the sinking of the Republic and of how the lad who was the operator of the wireless telegraph stood at his post for hours until he had brought help to passengers and crew.

But there was a little sequel to the story which they may not have heard.

A week after the disaster, the manager of a vaudeville company offered this lad no less than a thousand dollars a month if he would appear on the stage.

"Me?" he said bewildered. "A thousand dollars? Why, I'm no actor! I'm a telegraph operator!"

This reminds me of a similar story which also is true.

A few years ago there stood in Penn Square, in Philadelphia, a high old building filled with offices and in a ruinous condition. When a neighboring house was taken down its foundations were weakened, and its walls began to fall. Some of the occupants of the upper stories escaped; then the stairways fell. But the frame of the elevator remained standing, and the engine continued to work.

A great crowd assembled in the streets, watching the lift as it jogged slowly up and down, bringing a dozen men out of the jaws of death. As it started up again the frame of the elevator shook.

The police interfered. "Stop!" they shouted to the boy whose hand was on the lever.

"But there are two women up there," he said. "The walls are going," they cried. "Come out!" dragging at him.

"There are women up there, and I'm the elevator boy," he repeated doggedly.

He went to the top story, took on the women, and came down slowly. When the floor of the elevator touched the earth there was a great shout of triumph. They caught the lad, calling him a hero, and praying God to bless him; but he shook himself free from them.

"Somebody had to go, and I'm the elevator boy," he replied, all unconscious of his bravery and unselfishness. —Rebecca Harding Davis, in St. Nicholas.

LUCY'S NUTTING ADVENTURE.

By Helen M. Richardson.

"I wonder what makes that little girl look so cross," mused Bushy Tail. Then he stood up in a squirrel's peculiar manner, and gave another inquisitive look at the disconsolate little figure upon the piazza of the Bacon cottage. "Perhaps she wants to go nutting. I should think she would this beautiful October morning. I could show her where nuts are dropping from the tree," he chuckled. Then he raced up and peered down upon her.

Now, it happened that Lucy was just as interested in Bushy Tail as the squirrel was in Lucy. In the few minutes he had been scurrying about her face had been clearing up until she suddenly sprang to her feet so noisily that Bushy Tail hurried to the top of the tree, scolding and twitching his tail all the way up.

But when Lucy came back and sat down in the chair again, he could not resist the temptation to find out what she was going to do—squirrels are such inquisitive little creatures—so he cautiously crept to the edge of a limb, and as he did so his bright eyes discovered a nut in Lucy's lap.

"Chut! chut! chut!" he cried, with a twitch of his tail. "She must know where the nut-trees are as well as I. I wonder what kind of a nut it is. It is a long time since I have tasted a peanut," mused Bushy Tail, with a twitch of his whiskers. "They are not my choice for a steady diet, but—I really would like to see how it tastes!"

By this time Bushy Tail was on the ground sidling along toward the motionless figure in the chair—creeping steadily nearer and nearer, until, before either he or Lucy was aware that it was going to happen, Bushy Tail was in her lap and had the peanut grasped tightly in two eager little claws.

"I might as well stay right here and sample it," Bushy Tail assured himself as the shell flew apart, leaving the crisp, sweet kernel in his clutch.

And this was why Lucy's face was wreathed in smiles an hour or two later when a group of merry children passed by with well-filled baskets on their way home from the nutting trip. Lucy had been debarred from joining on account of a sore throat.

"I've had a nutting adventure as well as you," she sang out to them. "I've had a squirrel in my lap eating nuts, right here on the piazza!"

And Bushy Tail, from his safe retreat among the sheltering branches of the tree, chuckled softly to himself about his lucky escape from such a band of noisy creatures.

"I've had just as good a time as if I had gone nutting," declared Lucy when she related to her mother the story of her little squirrel acquaintance.

"Yes, dear; the good times often come to us when we are least expecting them," was her mother's answer.

Lucy hung her head. "I hope the squirrel didn't know how cross I was feeling when he came to cheer me—I really hope he didn't mamma!" she confessed in a penitent tone. —Western Christian Advocate.

DIVINE GOVERNMENT.

One God and Father of all—who is above all and through all and in you all. (Eph. 4:6.) For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. (Rom. 13:1.) The world is slow in recognizing the being and authority of the Supreme Judge of the universe. Among peoples who do in theory acknowledge the existence and authority of God, there is a lack of the practice of the proper distribution of authority among men in the governments of the world.

In an editorial in the Advocate of October 20th, I read: "We look with not a little fear upon the movement toward a centralization of government which for some years has been going on in Southern Methodism. As we see it we are confronted by no graver peril than that of getting too far from the people." In the opinion of this writer the time has come to discuss this question of power in Church and State. The frequent appearance of such expressions in the literature of the times as "centralization," "big stick," "new nationalism," with the principles involved in them, is not without meaning.

Church governments are affected more or less by the civil governments under which they carry on the work of their mission in the world. If it is a fact that such a movement as that referred to is in operation in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it is because that principle has predominated in the United States Government for the last half a century. The question is one of great importance to the people of this country, and especially the people of the South, who are zealous for their civil and religious rights.

Civil governments will never be what they ought to be until they are willing to let God have his place in the government of the world. God's laws must have their force in human affairs, either in judgment or mercy. There is no real central power but that of God. The greater the effort on the part of men to centralize government, the less will be the enjoyment of individual freedom. The more attention there is given to strengthen a great central power, the less care will be given to the far-away needy, weak ones who are within God's dominion.

The great blessing of liberty is that it invites God to closer communion with men and opens the door for men to become God's temples that he may enter in and dwell with them. I have never seen the President of the United States. If we were alone together there would be a great contrast in us physically and otherwise, and our association might not be edifying religiously or politically. So with the Governor of Mississippi. I might lack congeniality in something that would mar our pleasure. We need not look for any far-away association to afford us the greatest good in this life.

If a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, is good for the conduct of our civil affairs, it is good also in the operation of ecclesiastical economy. Therefore, it should be guarded in this respect by constitutional provision against any and every encroachment from any source. The Church is sacredly committed to God and his Word, and through God the Spirit is universal in his operation. Why, then, is it necessary to give so much prominence to men and machinery in the work of the Church? The government of the United States is now no proper pattern for church government.

Jesus Christ is head over all things to the Church, and the chief thing for governments is to give him the right of way and let him come into the hearts and lives of the people, great and small, that he may rule and "reign till he hath put all enemies underneath his feet."

Brother Meek, I am glad you have mentioned this tendency in the Church, as you see it. It takes courage to speak one's opinions on some great subjects. But when a leader in the Lord's work has convictions it is his duty to be obedient to them "as unto the Lord."

BAPTIST STATISTICS.

For the Baptists of both the North and South we entertain great respect. Their marked loyalty to what they conceive to be the truth of God's Word and their evangelical aggressiveness have long challenged our admiration. They are a great people, and are contributing much toward the establishment of the divine kingdom on earth. We see in them so much good that we are loath to pass any criticisms upon them. But we sometimes wonder that so unwordly and spiritual a denomination should apparently take so much pleasure in a boastful parade of figures. As an illustration of this, we quote the following from the Jackson Daily News of November 7, which gives an interesting summary of a sermon preached in that city on the day preceding by Dr. B. D. Gray, one of the Missionary Secretaries of the Southern Baptist Church:

"He spoke of the strength of the Baptist Church and other Protestant denominations in the Southern States, in five of which the Baptists have a majority over all others. In Mississippi 56.9 per cent. of all church members are Baptists. In Georgia the Baptist Church has a membership of 500,000, or 10,000 more than all other Protestants combined."

One would think to read these statistics that the Baptist Church is about to capture everything south of Mason and Dixon's line, and that all of the other denominations are being left far in the rear. But an analysis of the official religious statistics taken in 1906 and issued last year by the United States Government by no means justifies such a conclusion. These figures show that what has given the Baptists their large lead in so many of the Southern States is their great strength among the colored people. For instance, in Mississippi there were at that time 123,357 white communicants under the jurisdiction of the Southern Convention, and 240,982 negro communicants connected with the National Convention. Of the more than 500,000 Baptists boasted of in Georgia, 333,000 are negroes; of the 415,000 in Virginia, the blacks number 268,000; of the 452,000 in Alabama, 259,000; of the 401,000 in North Carolina, 153,000; and of the 341,000 in South Carolina, 219,000. The largest Baptist body in the world is a negro body. Of the 5,662,000 Baptists in the United States, 2,273,000 are negroes. The Methodists outnumber the Baptists in the United States, with the negroes included, by about 80,000, and with them left out in the comparison of the two denominations, by more than a million and a quarter. As we have before observed in the Advocate, the Baptists own within the limits of the nation property valued at $139,000,000, while that of the Methodists is valued at $229,000,000; they have 50,000 houses of worship, with a seating capacity of 15,700,000, while we have nearly 60,000 houses of worship, with a seating capacity of more than 17,000,000; they have in their Sunday schools 2,898,000 pupils, while we have in ours 4,472,000.

We do not mean to convey the impression that we think it is a reflection upon a Church to have large numbers of colored people among its communicants. Far from it. The gospel is designed to save and uplift all the races of the world—the black man as well as the white man. There is a great work to do among the vast negro population of our country, and we bid our Baptist brethren godspeed in seeking to minister to these needy millions for whom the Master died. But when the representatives of a denomination seek to parade its numbers and influence to the disparagement of others, it is only just and fair to point out where its strength chiefly lies. The negro is ignorant and immersion wonderfully fascinates him; hence, the great majority of them have been drawn into the Baptist Church, giving it a vast body of illiterate adherents, who count numerically, but who add little to the real resources and working force of the denomination.

As we have said, we have little disposition to boast of numbers. Pitifully small are all of the Protestant sects when compared with the hundreds of millions of Roman Catholicism, Mohammedanism, and the various heathen faiths. The largest of them are a mere handful. We heartily commend the following sentiment recently expressed in an editorial in the Central Christian Advocate of Kansas City:

"The Methodist Episcopal Church began this calendar year with 3,442,631 members. That is a huge body. But bodies are large or small by comparison. The population of the globe is about 1,550,000,000. What are we among so many? One hundred and thirty millions speak the English language. What are we among so many? It were well if the spirit of the Crusaders and of the Goths could come upon us that we could count much we have as loss and dress for the excellency of world conquest, and gird ourselves and make it our business to evangelize the millions of humanity."

THE PRAYER MEETING.

The question is sometimes asked, "What shall we do with the prayer meeting?" A more pertinent enquiry would be: How can we do without the prayer meeting? It may be a problem to maintain a successful mid-week service, but it is a still grayer one to maintain the spiritual life of the Church when such a gathering is dispensed with. As a means of promoting religious growth and culture, this free and informal assembly stands unrivaled among the many agencies of modern Christianity. Those who attend it are quickened, strengthened, and enlarged spiritually, and generally become diligent and efficient workers for the Master. This is due doubtless to the fact that the exercises are usually more simple, afford more opportunity for testimony and the communion of saints, and are more largely participated in by those present than in any of our more stately church services. Activity is the law of life and health in the spiritual, as well as in the physical realm.

And the prayer meeting is also the place where united supplications are made for the general needs of the congregation and the interests of the Church at large. No other service affords such an opportunity for this. There is a tremendous power in the ministry of intercession. Throughout all their history, it has been the main reliance of God's people; and when most invoking it, they have been most invincible in the struggle for truth and righteousness. Therefore, the gathering which brings this power into requisition is invaluable. The prayer meeting is as old as the Christian Church, and it will last as long as the disciples of Christ believe that the Heavenly Father hears and answers the petitions of his children.

A wise pastor will lay himself out to build up his prayer meeting. No better investment of his time and energies can he make. It will tend to re-enforce and infuse life into every phase and department of his work. And he should guard against making this mid-week service too didactic. It is no time to expound the Sunday school lesson, or to teach a class. The one aim should be to make the exercises spiritual and helpful. Let the songs be stirring and evangelical, the talk brief, pointed, and practical, and prayer the chief and distinctive feature. Testimonies can often be brought in to advantage, and all times those in attendance should be made to feel free to make requests or offer suggestions. Perhaps one reason why our prayer meetings are so often dull and uninteresting is that so little preparation is made for them. One who is to conduct such a service should have his subject and his plan well in hand, and go to the place of worship with the conscious touch of the Holy Spirit upon him.

SOME INCIDENTAL OBSERVATIONS.

We have noticed in public print more than once a suggestion that the possible unconstitutionality of the Tennessee Statute of 1895, relative to the government of educational institutions, justifies the Vanderbilt Board of Trust in hiding defiance to the instructions of the late General Conference held at Asheville; that with that much-discussed Statute declared invalid, there would be nothing left "to protect the Board," had it obeyed the mandates of the Church. "Protect the Board" from whom? and from what? This is what we should like to know. Is it meant to be suggested that Mr. Vanderbilt, or Brother Cupples, or some other donor might by law undertake to hold the Trustees responsible for their administrative acts and institute a suit to recover moneys appropriated for the maintenance of the University? Or are the Methodists on the Board afraid that the outsiders, whom they have insisted upon making members, would charge them with maladministration, turn them out, and take possession of affairs? Just exactly what is the nature of the bugaboo which has frightened our brethren into an attitude of rebellion against the Church? They should fully uncover the scarecrow and let us see what it looks like. Perhaps we should then have more sympathy for them.

But granting all that the Methodists on the Board contend for concerning the Statute of 1895, it utterly fails to justify their course. For if they could not continue on the Board and carry out the instructions of the General Conference without jeopardizing themselves, they could at least have resigned and thus have remained loyal to the Church and respectful to its authority. And in doing this, they would have sacrificed no right of the donors or of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The rights of these two parties, whatever they are, would have remained in statu quo. As we see it, there is no constraint, legal or moral, upon any Trustee to continue to serve against his will. Will any man dare say that Bishop Wilson or Bishop Hendrix in retiring from this body has disobeyed the law or is guilty of any moral culpability? If so, let him speak out and fasten upon them the imputation. No, no; if there is any plausible excuse for the coterie of Methodists on the Vanderbilt Board of Trust slapping the General Conference and the Church in the face and setting themselves up against the constituted authority of the denomination to which they profess allegiance, it remains yet to be advanced.

But may not a college or university have a self-perpetuating board of trustees and yet be a Methodist institution? To be sure, such a thing is possible. But in that event the charter would need to safeguard the interests of the Church. It might, for instance, have incorporated into it a provision that the trustees could elect only Methodists. Or possibly it might be stated therein that the trustees are the agents of the Church, and must execute its will when declared by its supreme governing body. But in the case of the Vanderbilt Charter there are no such provisions. Give its Trustees the right to select their successors in a manner wholly independent of the Church, and it can be in no true sense a Methodist institution. The charter rights of the Bishops have been greatly whittled down and are being still further challenged. If the present contentions of the majority of the Vanderbilt Board are made good in law, the Church will have no dependable grip on the University. The bridle will be wholly off, and the Trustees will be at liberty to do what they please. They will not even be required to elect Methodists as their successors. And granting that we might with safety trust the men now on the Board, we would not have the slightest guaranty as to the loyalty of those who may come after them. Such are the facts, and those who think that the Church is fighting an unnecessary battle are woefully mistaken. Methodist preachers know very little about law; they may have left gaps down in getting out a charter, and in consequence we may lose in the pending legal contest, but that justice and equity are on our side, there is not the slightest doubt. And for our part, we preferred to fight and fail, rather than to have the control of our property wrested from us without even making an effort to save it. And as we see it, there were before the Church only these two alternatives.

REV. M. D. FLY DEAD.

A card from Rev. J. W. Raper, of Byhalia, written on the 9th inst., says: "Our dear brother, Rev. M. D. Fly died here last night at 8 o'clock. A good man is gone." We did not know of Brother Fly's illness until the news of his departure came, and we are unformed as to the circumstances attending his decease. He was one of the older preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, having been on the superannuated list for several years, and of late his health had not been robust. His wife passed away some months ago, leaving his last days lonely without the blessing of her companionship.

Brother Fly was a preacher of far more than ordinary ability, and was deservedly popular wherever he was sent as pastor. He had a brilliant imagination, the gift of voluble and forcible utterance, and large audiences waited upon his pulpit ministrations. As a man, he was much beloved by those who knew him best. He was brotherly in spirit, genial, and affable in manner, generous in his judgments, and charitable in speech. His life at all times was above reproach, and he has gone to his reward, leaving behind a good name and an unsullied record. We hope to have a more extended account of his life and labors from the hand of some friend, familiar with his career, in the near future.

AN ABLE DOCUMENT.

We are indebted to the Hon. Percy D. Maddin, of Nashville, Tenn., for a copy of the bill of injunction filed by the lawyers representing the Church in the Vanderbilt University case. It is a splendidly printed pamphlet of ninety-two pages, and sets forth the grounds of the suit at great length and in a most masterful manner. Particularly interesting is the history of the founding and government of the institution therein recited. It shows conclusively that the patronizing Conferences selected the first Board of Trustees and did not concede to that body the right of self-perpetuation. It demonstrates that in the beginning the Trustees did not claim the power to act independently of the Church in constituting their successors, and furnishes a list of Methodist contributors to the equipment and maintenance of the University. We are not a lawyer and we hazard no opinion as to the outcome of the pending litigation; but one thing, it seems to us, this able document ought forever settle, namely: that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through several of its Annual Conferences, founded Vanderbilt University, and by every consideration of justice and equity is entitled to control it. We trust that this pamphlet will have a wide circulation. It ought to be read by every preacher and lay Methodist in the connection. Our attorneys have performed a valuable service in preparing it, and we hope an edition sufficiently large for general distribution has been brought out. Those who have contended for the rights of the Church in this unfortunate controversy need want no more complete vindication for their course before the bar of public opinion.

MATTERS OF IMPORTANCE.

We request our friends in making remittances to the Advocate in small amounts to send money orders, or New York or New Orleans Exchange, or if local checks are used, to add ten cents to cover the cost of collection. The commission we have to pay on local checks amounts to a large sum annually. If we could stop this leakage, it would materially help the state of our finances, and go far toward paying for needed clerical assistance in our office. We also wish to state that matter which is intended for publication in the Advocate should be in hand by Thursday or Friday. If it is desired to have it appear in the issue following, we cannot undertake to print in the current number communications reaching us Saturday or thereafter, and only short and urgent notices can be inserted after Monday morning. Our paper goes to press Tuesday. Our correspondents will please take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Young Men's Bible Class of the First Methodist Church of Corinth, Miss., will give their annual banquet Friday evening of this week at 7:30 o'clock. The occasion promises to be one of much interest.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., is finishing four years of successful work at the Pearl Street Church, of Natchez. We have in hand an interesting account of his labors there, which will appear in our next issue.

Rev. R. O. Weir states that he will close the work of the year at Arcadia, La., with things in admirable shape. The new church at that place is said to be remarkably attractive. We thank this faithful pastor for keeping in mind the interests of the Conference organ.

Our energetic young friend, Rev. J. L. Nabors, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., has favored us with some subscriptions to the Advocate within the past few days. He reports his work as progressing satisfactorily. He has had some good meetings, and expects to carry a clean balance sheet to Conference.

The Parker Memorial Church of this city is being gradually carried forward to completion. The work of plastering the walls is nearly done, soon the new pews will be in place, and the interior will present a most attractive appearance. The pastor, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, will submit a fine report at Homer.

Two cars carrying contributions to the Methodist and Baptist Orphanages at Jackson, Miss., will be run on Monday, Nov. 21st: one from Horn Lake down the main line of the I. C. Railroad, and one from Tutwiler down the Tallahatchie branch of the Y and M. V. Let the brethren along the way see that they are loaded down.

We are informed that Rev. and Mrs. Robert Selby have another inmate—a fine boy—in their parsonage home at Natchez, who arrived last Sunday morning. We extend congratulations, and pray that a favoring Providence may watch over the little one, and bring him safe through the years of infancy and youth to a noble manhood.

Bishop W. B. Murrah passed through the city last Monday en route to his home at Jackson, Miss. He spent last Sunday with Rev. J. M. Alford at Bogalusa, La., where he delighted the people with his pulpit ministrations. Brother Alford installed his newly-elected officials, and the occasion was one of much interest. This charge is in excellent condition, and the outlook for the future is encouraging.

Rev. W. D. Bradfield, after a successful pastorate of four years at the First Methodist Church, of Dallas, has been transferred to the West Texas Conference and stationed in Austin, the capital of the commonwealth and the seat of the State University. Rev. A. A. Godbey, whom he succeeded, has been assigned to the Travis Park Church, San Antonio. Choicer young men than these are not to be found in the connection.

November the 6th was a great day at Ralney, Miss., where Rev. C. A. Northington is the pastor. Hon. G. L. Jones, of New Albany, and Dr. J. Y. Murry, of Ripley, were present and delivered stirring addresses on the Laymen's Movement. A similar rally was held at Black Jack last Sunday, with the Corinth District lay leader as the principal speaker. These efforts in behalf of the cause of missions are arousing much interest within the bounds of Brother Northington's growing work.

At the recent session of the Arkansas Conference Rev. J. H. O'Bryant, who has served as presiding elder of the Morrilton District with such marked success, was appointed to Rogers Station. Brother O'Bryant was one of the delegates to the last General Conference, where he stood for conservatism and the maintenance of Methodism in its integrity. He was born and reared in Mississippi, and is one of the many good gifts of that commonwealth to her sister State across the "Big Muddy."

Rev. J. L. Lay, of Bolinger, La., sends $5 to pay the subscription of Mrs. F. M. Purcell to the Advocate for four years in advance, and adds, "I think she is entitled to the blue ribbon." So she is. We are pleased to have this fragment of news from this good friend of the days ago. The Church had no more faithful servant than this elect lady when she resided in North Mississippi, and we doubt not that she works for the Master with equal fidelity beneath the sunny skies of Louisiana. There is no trace of alloy in her Methodism.

An exchange observes that the cemeteries of the world show no tombstone with the dollar mark upon it. This is an attestation of the fact that in their more serious moods, men recognize that there are other things more valuable than money. The true riches do not consist in gold, or bonds, or bank stock, or houses, or lands, but in faith and hope and love and the other elements of Christian character. The poorest man in all the world is one who has the least of God and holiness in his heart; the wealthiest is he who has the most of the mind that was in Christ.

We are pleased to note that the Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, our capable young pastor at Biloxi, who for some time has been critically ill at Columbus, Miss., is thought to be somewhat better, and that strong hope of his recovery is now entertained. A few days since his life was well-nigh despaired of, and an operation was resorted to, apparently with beneficial results. Let earnest prayer be made for this gifted young minister, who is so well-qualified for the Master's work, and who is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

In a recent communication, Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, makes the following statement: "Our registration to date is about 230. We ought to reach 225 this term, and go to 260 next spring." The success of this splendid institution is a source of pride and gratification to the Methodists of Mississippi. It has wrought nobly in the past, continues to grow with every passing year, and bids fair to become one of the leading colleges for the education of young ladies in the South. Indeed, in the character of the work done it already ranks with the best.

In a letter written on the 5th inst., Rev. H. S. Spragins, of Greenwood, Miss., says: "Dr. J. W. Price, of Clarksdale, spent a Sunday with me recently and preached two good sermons." Rev. J. R. Couniss, of Grenada College, was here last Sabbath. Our people were much pleased with his ministry. He reports everything moving on most satisfactorily at the institution under his care. Rev. W. L. Graves, who some time since was operated on here for appendicitis, is steadily improving. He left the hospital last Friday and will soon be able to resume his work.

Under date of November 12, Rev. L. A. McKeown, of the North Mississippi Conference writes: "Our Conference is near and the Shaw and Merigold charges are waiting to make a good report. All collections are in hand, the assessments for Home and Foreign Missions, having been paid last March. Improvements amounting to several hundred dollars have been made on the parsonage and church; we have had an increase in membership, and peace is reigning." This triumphant note from Brother McKeown does not in the least surprise us. He has the gifts and graces that command success.

Rev. A. I. Townsley has issued a neat card announcing a series of sermons under the general head, "Pictures of the Kingdom." His themes are as follows: "The Growth of the Kingdom," "The Opportunity of the Kingdom," "Partnership in the Kingdom," "The Kingdom and the Vision of Life," "Our Companions in the Kingdom," "The Kingdom and the Outsider," "His Love and the Kingdom," and "The Songs of the Kingdom." On the evening of December 4, just before going to the Annual Conference, Brother Townsley will dedicate the pipe organ procured by his congregation. The year has been one of progress at Second Church.

The following statistics were reported at the session of the Arkansas Conference, held at Fayetteville a few days since: Local preachers, 107; members, 26,716; infants baptized, 256; adults baptized, 1,454; Epworth Leagues, 60; Epworth League members, 1,961; Sunday schools, 229; officers and teachers, 1,765; scholars, 21,629; collected for Conference claimants, $3,413.75; collected for foreign missions, $5,096.12; for domestic missions, $3,753.25; for church extension, $2,109.91; for American Bible Society, $482.22. The net value of churches in the Conference is a little less than $400,000.00. There are 94 pastoral charges and 86 parsonages.

Rev. L. M. Broyles has been transferred by Bishop Omaha News.

McCoy from the North Mississippi to the Arkansas Conference and stationed at Central Church, Fort Smith. This is one of the leading congregations of that State, and is reported to pay a salary of $2,500. North Mississippi will give Brother Broyles up with great reluctance. His work at Corinth has been of a high order, where he is finishing his quadrennium in great favor with the people. The Western Methodist of the 10th inst., bids him a hearty welcome to his new field, and adds, "He is not new to the West. He was stationed at Oklahoma City several years ago, and left a good name behind him."

Rev. W. R. Harvell, of Grand Cane, La., delighted the heart of the publisher on the 9th inst., by forwarding a list of ten new subscribers and three renewals, accompanied by a check to correspond. We make grateful acknowledgement of the service thus rendered the Advocate, and assure Brother Harvell of our high appreciation of his kindly assistance. He concludes his letter with the following statement: "We have had a fine year, and are counting on going to Homer in December with everything in hand. We have had good meetings—some of the old-time type. The Lord is with us and we are happy." We have long observed that the man who takes care of one of the interests of the Church is apt to take care of them all.

The presidency of Bishop McCoy at the Arkansas Conference greatly pleased the brethren. From first to last he was a brother. He conducted all business with great good sense. His sermon on Sunday made a profound impression. So far as we have heard or believe, all the brethren credit him with having made the appointments of the preachers in goodness of heart and in fidelity to the Church. The Conference by a formal resolution, which was not mere idle flattery, invited him to make his home among us. Our readers know that the Western Methodist is not in the habit of indiscriminately praising a man simply because he happens to be a Bishop. But even a Bishop is entitled to that to which he is entitled. No more satisfactory Bishop has been among us for years.—Western Methodist.

A dispatch to the Commercial Appeal from Greenville, Miss., on the 11th inst. says: "The First Methodist Church was the scene of an impressive wedding ceremony last evening, when Miss Ella Lowry Jayne was united in marriage to Mr. W. Scott Watson. Mr. and Mrs. Watson left on the 10:30 Valley train for points on the Southern coast. Many beautiful and costly gifts attested the popularity of the young couple." The bride is the daughter of the late Hon. J. M. Jayne, a leading Delta lawyer, and a granddaughter of the late ex-Governor Lowry, of Mississippi. The groom is a brother of Hon. H. C. Watson, who is widely known in the legal circles of the Magnolia State, and is himself a promising young attorney of the Greenville bar. The Advocate extends felicitations and best wishes.

We acknowledge the reception from Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jackson Paxton of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Nellie Bowman, to Mr. William Ray Toombs at their home at Willmot, Miss., on Tuesday evening, November 22, at 7 o'clock. Miss Paxton belongs to one of the oldest and most distinguished families in Washington County, and is a young lady of many graces and charms and beautiful Christian character. Mr. Toombs is a brilliant young attorney of Greenville, Miss., where his superior attainments and exemplary course have won for him the admiration and confidence of the entire citizenship of that city. We extend congratulations in advance, and wish the contracting parties a long life, every moment of which is rich with love and ennobled by lofty aims and purposes.

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.

It is customary for the brewers, whenever fighting against restraint of the liquor traffic, to misrepresent facts and figures from States that are under a prohibitory or county-option law.

During the past year forty-eight of the 105 Kansas counties, with a population of 430,274, did not send a single prisoner to the State penitentiary.

Fifty-seven out of the 105 counties had not a single pauper.

Eighty-seven of the 105 counties did not send a single insane patient to an institution.

Kansas' death rate is the lowest in the world, 7 1/2 in 1,000 persons.

The State still boasts of the lowest percentage of illiteracy.

Kansas bank deposits have increased from $70,000,000 to $190,000,000.

All of this has happened under ten years of prohibition.

Not being compelled to use their money for taxes to support prisons, poorhouses and insane asylums, which are largely filled by victims of liquor, the people of Kansas are able to put their money in the banks or to buy automobiles, and to use their taxes in building schoolhouses and improving health conditions.

Prohibition has been a success in Kansas because that State has elected officials who enforce the law.—Omaha News.

Tidings from the Field

Dumas Circuit:

We have had a fine year on the Dumas charge. I have held seven revivals and had 140 conversions. Ninety-four have joined our church on profession of faith, and 27 by letter. I have built one new house of worship, organized one church with 55 members. We have four prayer meetings that are well attended, and five Sunday schools with good interest. We hope to go to Conference with all of our collections in full. We have 75 per cent. of them on hand. I have never served a larger hearted people in all of my work than I have on the Dumas charge. The man who may come to this circuit need not fear. He needs only to come and do his duty and the people will help him. I have been here two years and have added 254 members to the church. We have one fine Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at Dumas with 50 members, and it is doing fine work. The time is near at hand when we will all meet at Sardis to have our work reviewed and go forth to our fields of labor for another year. So let us all be sure to go in the Spirit of Christ. I am looking after the Advocate on my work.—D. M. Floyd, P. C.

Slidell, La.:

We closed a union revival here last Friday night. Rev. Walter G. Harbin did the preaching, and Rev. C. V. Breithaupt had charge of the singing. Three churches took part—namely, Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian. To say the least, we had a great meeting. I have received 16 into my church, the Baptist received 20, and the Presbyterian will receive about 12 or 15. There are still others to be received into the Church who have given their names for membership. The good done will long be felt in Slidell. There is great interest in God's work on the part of the church members of the town as a result of this meeting. Brother Harbin is a great preacher and a consecrated man. The Lord uses him in his preaching for the salvation of lost souls. He understands the people better than any one I have ever seen in a union revival. He had a great many of the Baptists believing him to be a Baptist until he said he was a Methodist. I think his lecture on "A Man Wanted" is the best thing in the way of influencing men to give their lives to God that ever "struck" Slidell (permit the expression). It is full of wit, pathos and oratory. It brings conviction to the sinner and edification to the saint. My work is getting along very well. I am getting ready for Conference, which you know is not far off now. Everything considered, I think this is the best year of my work in Slidell.—Yours in service, T. V. Peters.

Osyka, Miss.:

Johnston Station and Holmesville remain to be reported from the Osyka charge. Johnston Station is five miles above Summit. Our church here is not by any means noted for its numerical strength, but since true church popularity is not based so much upon quantity of membership as upon quality, the thirty-six men, women and children who make up this congregation are known for their consistency in spiritual and temporal efforts for the Master. With exception of a few, the adults are active in worship and service. Our meeting began here the fourth Sunday, the 28th of August. Rev. Otto Little, a local preacher of Caseyville, Natchez District, did the preaching. With an uncompromising arraignment of all sin he appealed to the lost, and with constructive affirmation of the necessity of scriptural holiness in this life, he caused the Christians to put forth more determined effort for our Lord. Johnston by October 1st had paid her Conference assessment and all the pastor's salary but $12.50, which has all been paid since but a few dollars. Her total assessment is more per capita than either of the other three churches. Holmesville, the old county seat of Pike, is interesting for the events and men who are connected with the history of the State and church. Here was Cavanaugh College, with Dr. H. W. Featherstun as its president. The old home of Brother H. P. Lewis, Sr., is still sheltering a large family. Mr. Vanorden is occupying the house. Our church is composed of a noble folk. Although the boll weevil has cut their cotton production anywhere from 10 to 40 per cent. of a usual crop, they have painted and covered their church, which enterprise was launched by Rev. E. L. Alford, paid for it, and gotten new lamps. The Ladies' Aid purchased the lamps and had the church painted, and the men had the house covered. Our meeting began here the first Sunday in September. Rev. J. E. Williams preached for us on Sunday and Monday morning; then Brother P. D. Hardin, of Wesson, took charge of the services and continued throughout the meeting. Brother Hardin, being a pastor-evangelist, and having wrought victory out of seeming defeat in his own charge all through the year, came in the fullness of the Spirit and did earnest work for several days. He is a scriptural preacher, proving his premises by the Word. Under such preaching, conviction fell upon the people, and it was a meeting of power, resulting in many conversions or reclamations, 17 accessions to the church, and the erection of several family altars. Holmesville has paid all her Conference assessments and all of the pastor's salary but $9.45, and this balance will be paid before Conference. I am here in the outskirts (?) of Hattiesburg, waiting for the day to come to move in for Conference.—T. Loyd Decell, P. C.

STORIES AT LESS THAN A CENT A PIECE.

In the fifty-two issues of a year's volume The Youth's Companion prints fully two hundred and fifty stories. The subscription price of the paper is but $1.75, so that the stories cost less than a cent apiece, without reckoning in all the rest of the contents— anecdotes, humorous sketches, the doctor's weekly article, papers, on popular topics by famous men and women.

Although the two hundred and fifty stories cost so little, they are not cheap stories. In variety of scene, diversity of incident, skill and truth in character-depicting, they cannot be excelled.

The announcement for 1911, beautifully illustrated, giving more detailed particulars of these stories and other new features which greatly enlarge the paper, will be sent to any address free with sample copies of current issues.

Every new subscriber receives free The Companion's Art Calendar for 1911, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold, and if the subscription is received at once, all the issues for the remaining weeks of 1910.

TO YOUNG WOMEN

You may be laying up for yourselves much future suffering, by not treating your ailments promptly, (before they have a chance to become chronic), with that well-known female remedy, Wine of Cardui,—about which you have so often heard.

Look ahead, and plan for a healthy, happy life, by preventing female trouble from getting a foothold.

Try it that famous medicine, Cardui, which has helped so many others, will help you.

For young girls just entering into womanhood and young ladies whose life duties have not long begun, Cardui is often of vital importance, giving them strength for daily tasks.

Read what Mrs. Mary Hudson, of Eastman, Miss., says about her young sister: "While staying with me, and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of Cardui and it helped her at once."

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay, if it had not been for that wonderful medicine."

"Now I am in better health than in three years."

Try Cardui.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 20, 1910.

THE FOREIGNER

(Matt. xxv, 35.)

Woman's Home Mission Topic.

I. The Foreigner in Our Midst.

One-third of the population of the United States is foreign by birth or parentage, and they continue to come to us at the rate of over a million annually.

Dr. Josiah Strong tells us that in 1890 of the male population of our eighteen largest cities there were two and one-half times as many foreigners by birth and parentage as Americans.

In New York City there are sixty-six different languages spoken.

In Texas there are three-quarters of a million foreigners of the four nations most largely represented.

Florida has forty thousand Spanish-speaking people, and Louisiana has a quarter of a million French and several thousand Italians, with almost every nation represented in the heterogeneous population of her greatest city.

II. His Condition.

In our great centers of population the conditions of crime and misery and vice are appalling; the mute appeal of poor, wrecked, crushed humanity with all its ignorance, cruelty, suffering, degradation and impending eternal doom, is pathetic.

In the crowded tenements of New York City, where poverty, ignorance, degradation and vice predominate, there is a population larger than that of four of the States of the Union combined.

In the slums of Chicago there is a population of sixty-five thousand people, mostly of the most degraded type.

In New Orleans there are over a hundred thousand "unchurched," not even reached by the Roman Catholic Church.

Similar conditions prevail in every city, while there is scattered throughout our country, a large rural population unevangelized.

Not only is it true that a majority of these are foreigners, but it is also a fact that these vile conditions in our country are made worse by the ignorance and criminal tendency of the foreigner in our midst, for illiteracy among our foreigners is three times as great as among the same class of native Americans, and the tendency to crime two and one-half as great.

III. How May We Help Him?

Much is already being accomplished by the institutional or socialized Church, the settlement home, the mission school, and the rural mission.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a number of these various institutions scattered throughout the South and West, such as our mission schools in Florida and Texas, the Sailor's Rest at Gulfport, St. Mark's Hall in New Orleans, and our French Mission in southern Louisiana. These, and other like institutions, are reaching thousands of foreigners annually and leading many of them to Christ and training them in Christian citizenship.

"The field is white unto harvest," and vastly more may be accomplished along these lines of evangelization.

In co-operation with this definite evangelistic work there could be and should be much good accomplished by civic righteousness and industrial and financial justice. Proper laws properly enforced would abolish the vile cesspools of degradation that are to-day destroying not only the foreigner in our midst, but thousands of our own people. Conscientious Christian employers and landlords can ameliorate much of the degraded condition of the masses in the factories and tenements.

We, as Leaguers, may help in all this good work. We should develop our fourth department, and systematic-cally study the interesting missionary literature at our command until we are familiar with the great needs and opportunities about us. Becoming familiar with the sublime work is a means of becoming intensely interested in the work. Then will we gladly contribute to it of our substance, pray for its success, and put forth our personal efforts for its enlargement and greater accomplishment. Some will get such a vision of the crying need of lost humanity, the glorious salvation of our Lord, and his call to sublimely service that they shall be led to say, "Here am I, O Lord, send me!"

May we not also expect some of our Leaguers to become the strong, fearless leaders in city, State, and nation that the world needs—for which the world is waiting, for reformation, for the uplifting of humanity, for the removing of the barriers to the speedy spread of the kingdom of our Lord, and the intensive as well as the extensive evangelization of the world?

FROM THE COLPORTER.

It is the joy of a preacher's heart to have all collections in hand before starting to Conference, that he may go up with a free mind, a clear balance sheet, and reports all ready to hand in at once. This item includes the colporter, who is one of the preachers, and who is even now in an amiable state of receptivity. To the wise a hint is sufficient.

I heartily concur with all the editor says in the Advocate of November 3rd of the new book, "Conscience and Its Culture," by Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb, B. D. Having recently read it with interest and profit myself, I sincerely commend it as more than worth the buying and reading. The price is $1.00, with the usual discount to preachers.

This, with "Cole Lectures" (1909 and 1910); Dr. Kern's "Christianity Organized"; Bishop Quayle's "The Pastor-Preacher"; Dr. Alexander's "Commentary on Ephesians and Colossians"; Beggie's "Twice Born Men," will be among the many books on hand at the Conferences at Sardis and Hattiesburg. Note, then, in your memorandum, also, any others that may be wanted. The new Discipline of 1910 is ready. Price, 40 cents. Send your orders.

G. W. BACHMAN,
Winona, Miss., Nov. 4, 1910.

WHY? WHY? WHY?

Why use anything else for Fever but Johnson's Tonic? It is the supreme remedy for any phase of Malarial poisoning. It is 100 times better than Quinine, and does in a day what slow Quinine cannot do in 10 days. It will drive out every trace and taint of Malaria from the blood, and do its work quickly. Its cures are in striking contrast with the feeble cures made by Quinine and remedies based on Quinine.

It cures so quickly that there is no loss of time, no waste of money, no watching by the bedside of the sick, no heart-breaking, wretchedness in the family which is doomed by the use of Quinine.

Use it—use nothing else—nothing else is needed.

Acts gently on the bowels and stimulates the functions of the kidneys. The temperature begins to fall as the mischief is undone. A million of users have testified.

Send for sample bottle. Cut this advertisement out and mail to us, and on receipt of it we will send valuable booklet and sample bottle free.

The Quietest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home.
Saves You $2.

This recipe makes a pint of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is—it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents' worth) in a pint bottle and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pine is one of the oldest and best known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in gualic acid and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

subjects are: Discipline; Bank's Manual of Christian Doctrine; Wesley's Sermons on Justification by Faith, and The Witness of the Spirit, and the ordinary branches of English education with special reference to bookkeeping. The textbook in history will be Swinton's Outline of General History.

Each applicant will present a written sermon of his own composition.

PAUL M. BROWN,

Chairman of Committee.

NOTICE TO VETERANS.

Veterans of the Mississippi Conference who will attend the meeting of the Veteran Ministers' Association, at Sardis, Miss., on the first day of the North Mississippi Conference, will please write to Dr. J. W. Boswell, pastor at Sardis, so that he can procure Conference homes for them.

SUPREME HAPPINESS.

"The first and the most essential condition of true happiness," writes Professor Hilty, the eminent Swiss jurist, "is a firm faith in the moral order of the world. What is the happy life? It is a life of conscious harmony with this divine order of the world—a sense, that is to say, of God's companionship. And wherein is the profoundest unhappiness? It is in the sense of remoteness from God, issuing into incurable restlessness of heart, and finally into incapacity to make one's life fruitful or effective.—Henry Van Dyke.

Sick Headache

"I have been a frequent sufferer from sick headache for years, yet never would use headache tablets. My son persuaded me to use Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills during one of these attacks, and to my surprise it gave me speedy relief."

MRS. LOUISE LEWELLYN,

Powell, S. D.

When the disturbance which causes headache affects the nerves at the base of the brain, which connect with the large nerves that run to the stomach, heart and lungs, it frequently causes headache with vomiting—sick headache.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

soothe the irritated brain nerves and the cause of pain is removed.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try it.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salves, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

INTEREST YOUR BOY IN MUSIC.

There once lived a boy," says Constance Osborn in Woman's Home Companion for October, "in a family where three members had gained musical recognition, who grew to be nineteen, without acquiring any interest in the refining art, beyond a mild pride in his relatives' achievements. Golden opportunities to take lessons on the already much-abused piano had been tossed aside. Then he went away to college, and one evening dropped in at orchestra rehearsal. It chanced on that fateful night that the student who played the snare drum was absent, and the boy was asked to try his hand. In a moment he found himself in the center of rising, vibrating tones and melodies, he himself a vital part, endeavoring to mark their rhythm and swell their volume, and his own heart swelled in response. From then on he became the most enthusiastic member of the orchestra. He began to board himself that he might save money for lessons in drumming, and he washed his socks and handkerchiefs to buy a metronome.

The family heard of these rumors with amusement and awaited his home-coming with some consternation. In due time he arrived and practiced drumming in the attic, and, moreover, taught a younger brother all he knew. He, in turn, became a drummer in the high school orchestra; but soon the boy's fancy took a melodic flight, and he became the owner of a clarinet. The younger brother began to throw longing eyes on the cello, procured one, and in a short time the clarinet and cello began to sing duets in the attic, and, later, trios with the piano in the parlor for company.

Now these boys did not grow up and become renowned musicians, but they acquired a proficiency that enabled them to play with pleasure for themselves and others. Through their awakened interest and understanding of music they gained one of life's greatest assets, from a very small and unusual beginning.

WINDOW CURTAINS OF THIN STUFF.

The thin stuffs are many and charming, and every need and taste can be readily suited," says Lucy Abbot Throop in Woman's Home Companion for October. "Muslin or Swiss cloth costs from twelve and a half cents a yard, and there are lovely patterns for twenty-five cents a yard. One of the many pretty ways to make muslin curtains is to cut out a flower border of some running design from cretonne and sew it to the muslin. The effect is indescribably attractive and very up to date. Net costs from nineteen cents to three dollars a yard or more. The inexpensive ones are usually only twenty-seven inches wide, and, as the price rises, the net grows wider until it reaches seventy-two inches, at about two dollars a yard. When wider than this it costs more. Net comes in many designs and is white, cream or ecru in color.

Scrim costs about fifteen cents a yard, cheese cloth about ten. Madras costs from about eighty cents to four dollars a yard and comes in beautiful colors and designs in the better grades. It is very effective in rooms where color is wanted and only one set of curtains is to be used. The bordered designs are beautiful, and there is also a lovely one-toned imported madras for ninety cents a yard. Cotton crepes are from nineteen to seventy-five cents a yard. It is really impossible to mention all the materials that can be made use of. Blue and white checked gingham or checked rowling I have seen used in camps with most charming effect, and they could be used in a boy's or girl's room and give a very smart, crisp air to it."

Well Again

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, Lykins, Ky., "to tell you what CARDUI has done for me. I was a chronic invalid, suffering from nearly every trouble that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal and traveled much in search of health, but got no better. Four months ago, I began to use CARDUI and have steadily improved ever since. I am now 46 years old and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give CARDUI the credit for it."

TAKE CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

If this were the only letter, enthusiastically praising CARDUI, it might not prove much. But similar letters come to us every day, from all over the country, telling the same story of benefit obtained from CARDUI. This great medicine is over 50 years old, and is more in demand today than ever. CARDUI has stood the test—it has become the standard, reliable medicine for women of every age.

Try CARDUI today. It can't harm you—its record shows it is almost certain to help you.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Brother Meek: Please allow me to express through the columns of the Advocate my sincere and heart-felt thanks to the many brethren and friends who sent me letters and messages of sympathy during these days of great sorrow that has come into my life. I greatly appreciate their kindness, and wish it were possible to reply to each one in person. Pray for me. The blow to me was severe and crushing. May our Father in heaven remember you all for your kind and tender words of sympathy.

Yours in great sorrow.

HIS LIKENESS.

There is a story told of a great sculptor who longed to carve a statue of Christ. He worked upon a block of marble for three years, and then, calling a little child, asked whether she knew who it was.

"No," said the child, "I don't know. It may be some big man; I don't know."

The sculptor knew that he had failed; and, falling on his knees in sorrow, he asked the Lord to help him try again.

Years longer he worked and prayed, and at last again he called in a little child of the household. "Do you know what it is?" he asked her.

She looked upon the marble face for a moment, and with tears streaming down her own, cried out: "It is the One who said 'Come unto me.'"

Then the sculptor knew that he had caught in his marble something of the divine likeness he sought for.

If we are Christians it ought to be possible for every one to see in us some resemblance to Christ. They should be able to point to our patience, our lovingness, our ready forgiveness, our faithfulness, and say: "That is Christ in him."

We could never bring out the likeness alone; but if we will let Jesus work in us and with us, he will develop it surely, so that, though we see it not, our friends can not fail to recognize his likeness.—Selected.

JAMES HAMPTON, son of J. B. and Susan J. Collier, was born near West Point, Monroe County, Mississippi, July 28, 1870, and died in New Orleans, La., where he had gone for an operation, October 1, 1910. From his residence in Leland, Miss., October 3rd, we buried his body in the Stoneville Cemetery, to await the resurrection at the last day. He was ill only a few days, and his death was a shock to the entire community. A few days before his death he said he was feeling unusually well, and in one week he had crossed the mysterious boundary between time and eternity. He was one of the leading business men of Leland, having engaged in planting and the mercantile business a few years ago as a poor boy, he rose rapidly, and at the time of his death he was at the head of one of the most prosperous firms in the little city. He professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. J. A. Bowen, in Durant, Miss., in 1881, and was an official member of the Leland Methodist Church, South, at the time of his death. He was happily married to Miss Mary Lusks. On the day of his burial we baptized his only child, James Hampton, Jr. He went away in the prime of manhood, at a time of business success; but said at the last that he was trusting in Jesus and not afraid to die. He leaves a grief-stricken wife, a precious babe, and a host of relatives and friends. Loved ones and friends, he cannot come to us; by the Lord's help let us go to him. W. D. McCULLOUGH.

Dr. GEORGE F. WILSON was born October 4, 1861, and died October 4, 1910, on his forty-ninth birthday. Dr. Wilson was a fine physician, a lovable man, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Blenville, La. He was gentle in his nature, a friend to every good cause, a great sufferer, and a constant friend. For years he lived in the town of Blenville, and for three years I was his pastor. During that time he was one of my stewards. I learned to love him very much. He was married to Miss L. M. Mills December 26, 1889. One dear little baby girl preceded him, and now his wife is all alone. We join with her to mourn her loss. His death occurred at Shreveport, where he had gone for treatment. His wife and other dear ones were with him. He expressed himself as unafraid to die, but said he would like to live longer, as he wanted to do more good in the world. At one time, seeing his lips moving, his wife cautioned him not to talk for fear it would make him worse. He smiled at her and said: "Why, mother, I was not talking, I was saying my prayers." He died without a struggle, and said at the last that he was in no pain. Many friends joined the sad cortege at Gibbsland, where they had a special train to meet them. When they reached Blenville it seemed that the whole town was at the depot to meet the train and every house was closed. This speaks the love and respect borne him at his home, where his kindly influence had shed its radiance for so many years. He lies beside the dear little baby girl that we buried six years ago in the "city of the dead," at Blenville. May the good, loving Father, who is "a father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow," comfort the bereaved wife in her deep affliction!

H. O. WHITE.

Miss MARY A. GOOD, the daughter of Joseph and Susan Beck, was born in the State of Georgia October 10, 1841, and passed to her reward October 1, 1910. She was twice married; the first time to J. S. Flanagan, in 1859. God blessed this union with three children, one of whom, J. T. Flanagan, of Greenwood, Miss., still survives. Her second marriage was to Joseph Martin Good, August 14, 1868. This union was also blessed with three children, two of whom, Dr. Joseph Martin Good, of Williston, Fla., and Mrs. Ida Ross, of Greenwood, Miss., survive. Mrs. Good, having moved with her parents from the State of Georgia to this country, near Greenwood, Miss., when quite a girl, the larger part of her most useful life was spent here in our midst. She watched, with ever increasing interest, the growth and development of this rich section of our State, and made herself felt in shaping and moulding the splendid moral sentiment of this community. Any community would have been the richer for her presence; and, while her going away has brought genuine sorrow to many a heart, we shall for all time to come be the richer for the influence of her godly life and the beauty of her Christian devotion. Mrs. Good was a woman of the most unbounded energy. To sit down and fold one's hands in idleness was to her a sin. Indeed, I have sometimes felt that she taxed her strength beyond its limit. But a woman of her thorough-going spirit could not stop. For her to live was to work. She was a woman, too, of the most splendid optimism. She saw the bright side of life. She knew what hardship meant, but no right was ever so dark as to exclude from her vision the star of hope. It was a genuine benediction to be in her home. You always turned away from her door with a bright outlook on the world. Hers was a well-rounded life. At the age of twenty she made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Church, and gave forty-nine years of consistent service to the Church she loved, willingly and cheerfully supporting it with spotless fidelity. One by one she saw her children safely gathered into the Church and well established in the world. When the summons came her house was in order; her lamp was trimmed and burning. She had not loitered away the day, and so there was no unseemly haste when the shadows began to gather. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

H. S. SPRAGINS.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. A. BLAKE SMITH COOPER, was born in Anson County, N. C., June 7, 1857, and died at her home in Lexington, Miss., June 22, 1910. Her father, (Samuel Smith) moved to Mississippi in 1868, locating on his place near Franklin, in Holmes County. In this refined and cultured community, she grew to lovely womanhood, with that grace of manner that won for her a place in the affections of a large circle of friends. In November, 1879, she was happily married to Mr. B. H. Cooper, a gentleman of fine character, who, with a little girl of six years, he only pledge of their love, one brother and two sisters and one foster sister, mourn her departure. It almost seems providential that this child was named Ray, as she was, indeed, a ray of sunshine and joy in their lives and the idol of her fond parents' heart. It was her wish to live to guide her young footsteps, and see her bloom and blossom into beautiful womanhood; but said she: "If God wills to take me now, I am not afraid to die." She was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Woman's Missionary Society of Lexington, Miss., and we doubt not that our loss is her eternal gain. Adieu, my dear sister; we hope to meet thee again in the sweet by-and-by, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Her brother,

Studebaker Quality

Is so well known that the best recommendation a wagon can have is that—it is a Studebaker. There are over a million Studebaker Wagons in daily use—many of these have seen from 25 to 35 years' service. We make wagons that are built especially to meet the requirements of every vicinity. That we do, is shown by the fact that every year for over 40 years more than 2,000,000 bales of cotton have been carried to market on Studebaker Wagons.

The name Studebaker stands for honest quality—experience—careful construction—greatest value. Go to a Studebaker dealer when you buy a wagon. Then you can be sure that the wagon you buy will give perfect satisfaction. See the Studebaker dealer and talk to him about your individual requirements. He is competent to advise you. LESSON VIII. NOVEMBER 20, 1910.
JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.

Matt. xxvi, 36-56.

Golden Text: The Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Matt. xxvi, 45.

Notes By Camden M. Cobern, D.D.

The Mystery of Mysteries.

The agony of Gethsemane is stranger than the agony of the cross. The Church from earliest times has seen in the cross the culmination of the atonement. It is "the cross" that Paul and all the apostles emphasize. So far as I remember no one of the early fathers ever spoke of the agony of the Garden as a crisis in the life of Jesus or in the history of salvation. Modern scholars however are unanimous in recognizing a crisis here, though no one seems to understand its meaning. The parallel between this experience and the struggle in the wilderness at the beginning of Christ's ministry is plain. This was shorter, but more intense. Was this also a temptation? If so, in what did the temptation consist? Most clear thinkers see that it could not have been merely a shrinking from physical death. The "Jewish Encyclopedia," of course, accepts this coarse and easy explanation, and therefore argues the weakness and imperfection of Jesus; but this makes Jesus too weak and too cowardly. This theory is not credible even to skeptics. Is the servant so much greater than his lord? Shall one apostle be beheaded, and another smothered in holling oil, and another ask to be crucified head downward, and all these walk up to their death shouting happy while the Master, to whom they ascribe their courage and joy, faints and cries at the approach of death? It is impossible. It is inconsistent with all the heroic past of this serene man of Nazareth. Modern psychology is against it. That this calm and wise teacher, who has in a hundred ways dared death during his life, and who has come to Jerusalem against the protest of his friends prophesying his death and rejoicing in its foreseen results, that such an one should at the last moment be changed in his entire personality is inconsistent with the best-established facts of mental science. The latest utterances of Jesus, as we have seen, expressed the most confident and triumphant faith in God, and clearly voiced his expectation that his coming death was part of a providential plan for winning the world to the gospel. It was not, therefore, mere fear of physical death that brought on this sudden collapse. What was it?

Were these cries due to his fear that he would die too soon to finish the work of atonement? So one or two scholars have recently maintained; but this is too strained and artificial an explanation ever to have received much favor from thinkers. It is incredible that Jesus could have feared that the Father would not support him till he had finished the work the Father had given him to do. This view is inconsistent with faith in the infinite power and in the infinite wisdom of God. It is merely a reaction against the former and more objectionable theory of physical cowardice.

Was, then, the agony due to the anticipation of the hiding of the Father's face while the Divine Son, as one with lost man, should feel God's disfavor and wrath on the cross? Is it before that awful hour when he should bear the pangs of the damned that he cries out and sweats blood? This has been a favorite explanation, especially with the Augustinian churches, which have accepted the mathematical theory of the atonement, supposing that the salvation of the cross consisted in the hearing by Christ of the exact penalty which divine justice had intended to exact from fallen and sinful humanity. On this view all the penalty of all the sins of all the elect from Adam down to the last man that shall ever live was in this dreadful cup from which the Savior drank. We acknowledge that this view does give a new sublimity to this agony, and saves the honor of the suffering Savior; but does it not strike a hard blow at the honor of the Divine Father? It is neither merciful nor just to exact every ounce of penalty, specially to exact it from the person innocent of the crime. No such act could be called "forgiveness" of sin. The conscience of mankind revolts against this explanation. Mr. Wesley and his followers have never decided that such a view was necessary to orthodoxy.

The Agony of Love.

The sorrow of Gethsemane and of the cross could not have been any other than an agony of love. It was a freely accepted agony. It was not imposed by an angry God wreaking his anger upon the sinless One instead of the sinning many. The atonement was not a balancing of accounts between God and man, much less between God and Satan. It was the natural outpouring of God's eternal nature of love. It was the "Divine heart-break" over human sins. It was the infinite God in the person of the Christ pouring out his soul unto death in suffering love for the race he was seeking to save. The joy of Jesus was always a joy in helping others. The sorrow of Jesus was always sorrow coming from the failure to help and save, notwithstanding all his struggles to do this. Count up the places in the life of Jesus when it is said he was "sorrowful" or "angry," or "indignant," and this is always because of the triumph of sin over his best efforts to lift man to faith and holiness. Count up the places where it is said he "rejoiced," and this is never because of personal individual success or pleasure, but always because sinners are yielding to the call of the divine love. The "cup" Jesus was afraid to drink was not the cup of personal suffering, but the cup of misery due to the failure of his plans of love for sinners. What caused the suffering of Gethsemane? To my mind it seems most probable that it was Judas and Peter and the possible defection of all the rest of the Twelve that rested most heavily upon the loving heart of Jesus at this crisis. Do not earthly fathers sorrow, speechless, over children who resist their love and run into evil? How much more did Jesus sorrow over those whom the Father had "given" him—and of whom already he had certainly lost one. (John, 17: 6, 11, 12.) Satan has also asked for Peter, and has "gotten him." (Greek, Luke, 22: 31.) Will he escape, as Job did? He would not, Jesus says, if he had not prayed for him. (Luke, 22: 32.) Do we not see in the Garden the intercessory prayer, with "groanings which can not be uttered," which results in the saving of this disciple? It was the Gethsemane agony that saved Peter! Satan had plucked one disciple out of the Master's hand, and had seized another. But "I prayed for you," says Jesus. And perhaps this saved the others also. No; no; it was not the death, but the way he had to die that shamed him. The cup is the cup of betrayal by one he loved and had hoped to save—the cup of loneliness and defeat, which he drank as he saw all his trusted friends leaving him, and the chief apostle publicly saying: "I do not know the man." If the struggle in the wilderness was a temptation, surely this was greater. "Let this cup pass," was the cry of a great soul who saw his dearest ones stricken with cowardice and spiritual ruin, who saw the enemies of goodness take new heart and make sport of the gospel because of this. How it must have shamed our Lord to find not even one of his nearest friends remaining true to him. And what infinite pain must have come with the foresight that the very act by which he accomplished man's salvation should become the means of increasing man's guilt! Verily, verily, it was enough to make the veins of the body, tortured by this thought, strain and break. Love seems conquered by hate. Satan has triumphed! He is dying to help men from sin, and yet, because of him, the guiltiest act of all the world is about to be committed! His whole life has been an attempt to save men from sin, and yet in this supremest effort to save from sin he is increasing men's sin! I have always trembled before the dark mystery of Gethsemane, but confess that it never crushed me with its unutterable agony of love as it does now when for the first time I think I see some hint of its divine meaning.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

The Power of a Single Little Germ.

The most dreaded and hardest fought creature in the world is the "germ." One tiny little germ can in a remarkably short time, destroy the human body and cause death in the most agonized form. For instance, you have a cut, or a burn, or a sore of any kind; it festers, the blood-poison germ creeps in, the suffering is intense and often times death. "Gray's Ointment" is a germ destroyer. It prevents complications from all kinds of skin eruptions. It promptly arrests all pain and permanently cures these skin troubles, which if left alone, are so disastrous. Get a 25c box of "Gray's Ointment" from your druggist, and keep it always on hand—you don't tell when you will need it. If you have never used it, and want to test its merits, write Mr. W. F. Gray & Co., 304 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you a free sample box.

"THE DEATH OF THE SUPERNATURAL"

Under this caption Col. George Harvey, the editor of Harper's Weekly, wrote a characteristic editorial in the issue of that periodical which appeared on October the 29th. He tells of a little old Irish woman in a small, out-of-the-way town, who by virtue of her prayers was believed to have influence in heaven, and whose supplications were sought by many who had faith in their efficacy. He then quotes from Light, a London publication "devoted to the investigation of all sorts of occult phenomena," an account of a mother, who, having lost an adopted child, placed in the hands of the corpse a note saying, "Pray for me in heaven" and who upon opening it later found, in stead of her own writing, in gold-illuminated letters, the statement, "Inasmuch as we have done it unto one of the least of these, my little ones." The Colonel then falls into his favorite mood of philosophizing and hands out to his readers the following:

"What one chiefly feels in ruminating across these odd bits of left-over medievalism is that man's whole attitude toward the supernatural is changing. Such things as this are interesting only as witnessing to a certain primitive fancy and undeveloped sense of fact. It sounds tawdry and cheap. If a person's prayers could affect Providence, the modern man, with his developed sense of justice, would think slightly of Providence rather than highly of the person who prayed. Necromancy may be interesting because it is skillful and cunning, but the laws of nature are too grave and awful for the man of to-day to consent to any juggling with them. The fact is, the supernatural is dying or dead."

The most striking thing in this oracular utterance is that the prayers of Christian people are placed in the same category as the superstitions of excitable or mentally unbalanced persons; and that with one sweep of his powerful arm this great editor would demolish as utterly useless all the shrines and altars of earth. According to his view, for a congregation to bow down and call upon the Heavenly Father is but so much wasted breath. He would hush the voice of the anxious mother who intercedes for her wayward son, close the lips of the prodigal who, coming to himself, pleads for mercy, and leave humanity in the hour of appalling calamity without any reliance save a stoical faith in the grinding laws of inexorable nature. The saint dying need ask for his orphaned child no special care and guidance; old age in its evening twilight need expect no whispers from above; God has no particular message for any man; He speaks to all alike through the uniform operations of natural forces. Such is seemingly the teaching of this intellectual (?) autocrat who sits upon the tripod of what was once a great journal.

There is really nothing new or novel in this position of Colonel Harvey. It has long been contended by skeptics that prayer is an impeachment of the divine perfections and has no place in a government of law—that knowing what is best, and being in the goodness of his nature disposed to do it, God needs to move him to action no prompting or appeals from finite lips. But this argument, if it proved anything, would prove too much. It would paralyze human activity in every sphere. If God will independently do all that needs to be done for his creatures, why should man concern himself to sow and plow and reap? Why not wait patiently upon his all-sufficient benevolence, instead of seeking to add our beggarly assistance? If it be an impertinence to call upon the Infinite One in prayer, why is it not equally so to proffer our puny aid to Omnipotence? Nor can the absolute invariability of the laws of nature be demonstrated. To say that the Supreme Being who established them can not modify or suspend them, is illogical and absurd. To say that he never does so, is an unwarranted assumption of knowledge of the ways of Deity. As the great Dr. Chalmers very properly observes, God does not always work in the sphere of the visible—upon an open plane where men can always see the movements of his hand. He may operate in secret, and yet perform all his pleasure; he may touch the hidden springs of the inner laboratory, and sway forces without humanity being conscious of it. There at the place of supernal command by the fountain-heads of influence, he can turn with never he will the machinery of our world, without the human eye detecting the least infringement of any of its processes, upholding at once the regularity of visible nature and the supremacy of nature's invisible God.

And even in the realm directly under human observation, the forces of nature, though their methods of operation appear unvaried, do not always seem to be exercised to the same extent and to produce uniformity of results. The same sun shines overhead, and the same oceans roll and surge, and evaporation goes on, but the rainfall is not precisely equal each succeeding year. Two farms are but a little distance apart; their owners cultivate them with equal skill and industry; upon one the showers fall, while upon the other drouth prevails; the one yields a bountiful harvest, the other but poorly requites the laborer for his toil. Two men are stricken with the same disease; the weak man recovers, the strong man dies. Who can explain these things? Are they due to a varying application of nature's forces by him who directs them, or to blind, unthinking chance? Is there not in this realm of uncertainty and seeming contingency ample room and justification for prayer? Moreover, if prayer is an absurdity, as Colonel Harvey suggests, how does he account for the universal instinct to pray? Does he hold that it is attributable to superstition? A queer charge that would be to make against the noblest and most intellectual of the race. And what has the Colonel done with the Holy Scriptures which from Genesis to Revelation teach the duty and effectualness of prayer? Has he flung them into the junk heap as a worn-out relic of the benighted past? Or has he, after the method of some of our modern interpreters, discarded such parts as do not appeal to him, and retained only those of which his judgment approves? He speaks appreciatively of Christ. What will he do with the Master's many commands to pray, and that matchless form of supplication that he gave to his disciples? Was Jesus himself deluded, or was he only mocking human hopes, when he taught that man in the hour of perplexity and distress may reach the ear and command the assistance of Him who sits upon the eternal throne?

But prayer is not the only thing against which this remarkable teacher pronounces his anathema. He tells us that the "supernatural is dying or dead," that the doctrine of eternal punishment has passed away, that dogma is in extremis, that belief has nothing to do with one's being a Christian—that that is determined by whether he has the spirit of Christ. The "supernatural dead?" Not a shred of proof of it does he furnish. The first great miracle was creation—it took forces beyond the ordinary to bring into existence the stupendous universe. What more astounding exhibition of presumption could one make than to proclaim that the mighty powers which God has used in the past shall never more be brought into requisition? What audacity is this which assumes to put restrictions upon the Infinite Jehovah? Eternal punishment reposing in the cemetery of dead beliefs? Upon whose authority has it been shrouded and laid away? Whose puissant breath has blown out the fires of gehenna? He who spoke as never man spake said: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous unto life eternal." Where is the man who has attained to such intellectual proportions that he can declare false this affirmation of him whose whole career attested his divinity? What does the feeble human intellect which cannot explain the simplest phenomena of visible nature, know of the things of eternity? Dogma well-nigh gone, and the only thing necessary to be a Christian to have the Christ spirit of self-abnegation, large tolerance, and mercy? Such talk is the emptiest and most stupid twaddle. For, if there is any one teaching that stands out more conspicuously upon the pages of Holy Writ than all others, it is the responsibility of men for their belief. And if there was ever a man upon earth who had convictions extending to the very depths of his soul, it was the Man of Galilee. No more preacher of philanthropy and humanitarianism was he. The substance of his discourses were the great cardinal doctrines of Christianity—the Fatherhood of God; the brotherhood of man, human depravity, a personal devil, the atonement, the necessity of repentance and regeneration, the resurrection, the judgment, and future rewards and punishment. There could scarcely be a greater misrepresentation of Christ than to depict him as the world's foremost example of altruism, and nothing more. Such a species of infidelity is its most despicable form; for, in seeking to place upon the Master's brow the crown of human excellence, while denying his divinity and repudiating his teachings, it virtually betrays him with a kiss.

There can be no truly religious life which is not girded and sustained by religious truth. To undertake to develop Christian character apart from the vital principles of Christianity is like attempting to erect a house without having a foundation—like expecting to have the outreaching branches and glorious foliage of the oak, without having the roots of its trunk imbedded deep in the soil. It will take more than Colonel Harvey's "great swelling words" to hush the voice of prayer, to destroy humanity's faith in a personal God who is not "belittled" by ministering specially to a single needy individual, to blot out the fires of perdition, and transform Christ from a revealer of the Divine Father and the things of eternity into a mere expounder of human philanthropy.

We think the Colonel is undertaking rather too much. To be the czar of the literary and political world is quite enough for one man. To extend his reign into the domain of theology is, we fear, liable to overtax even his most extraordinary powers. He has lately been sneering and scoffing at another nearby Colonel for essaying to play too large a role. The prescription which he has so freely given, he himself would do well to take.

There is much talk and writing concerning the need of a general revival throughout the land. This is well; but what is better is to do something to set the revival going. If it comes, it must be in response to heart-searching, penitence, and prayer. Everyone can at least promote it to the extent of mending his own backslidings and opening his heart for the incoming of the Holy Spirit.

We think that what is worth quoting is worth giving credit for. We do not like to see so many religious periodicals reproducing communications signed "Exchange," or "Selected." Certainly this is not conforming to the highest standard of journalistic ethics. When an editor or contributor has composed a good article, one who uses it has no right to discard his name and substitute a signature which utterly obscures the source from which it emanated. There ought to be no such parentless literature.

A recent number of The Presbyterian of the South contained the following pertinent comment upon the kind of preaching needed from our pulpits: "Martin Luther wrote in favor of plain, pointed, practical preaching, in contrast with ambitious styles and method, in these words: 'I must write a book some day against clever preachers. We ought to suit our preaching to little Hans and little Martin. Some preachers think they will shine if only they can get me into their audience.' Ah, no. This is done for the children's sake." By which we suppose the great reformer meant to say that he attended upon the ministry of some of his brethren for the sake of worshiping with the children rather than being edified by elaborate and learned discourses. The simple gospel, aglow with the spiritual power of the preacher, is the preaching that people want."

ONLY GIVE ME STRENGTH.

By Oliver Felder.

I know not what the years may bring
Into this path I daily plod;
I know not where I may be called
To be a witness for my God;
I know not who awaits to-day
The Master's love at my own hands;
So, Father, give such strength to me,
As I may need to meet demands.

I know not what the years may bring—
Perhaps some sorrow grim and cold;
I know not what there is in store
My life to slowly shape and mould;
But, Father, let there come what may,
For all is well from Thy dear hand;
I only pray that Thou wilt give Me daily strength, that I may stand.

I know not what the years may bring—
How great the joys of life to me,
Or deep depressions of the soul;
Upon life's rough and darkened sea;
I do not know the changing scenes—
Perchance some earthly wealth or fame;
And through it all I need Thy strength
To keep me true—each day the same.

I know not what the years may bring
To make my way what Thou dost will,
What gilded pleasures, cherished joys
May come to me this life to fill;
But this, I know, that death will come
And I must die that I may live;
Thus as I face this crossing o'er
I pray for strength, which Thou wilt give.

Jackson, Miss.

ONE SERMON I HEARD.

By Bishop Joseph F. Berry, D. D.

A pulpit is a throne. To preach is high honor. There is no greater or more responsible place in life. A man who does not appreciate his opportunity is unworthy of it. So thought I a while ago while listening to a noble sermon. What a treat that sermon was! It was not great intellectually. There was no profound logic, no splendid rhetoric. The speaker could not be called an orator. And yet the large congregation was thrilled by the message. You see, I have called it a "message." Some sermons have no message. This had. In four or five distinct respects it was most effective, and I craved the opportunity of telling your preacher-readers what made it so.

In the first place, the hymn and Scripture reading were admirably done. The preacher had evidently given to both most careful study. Over and over he had read them until the words were familiar to his ear and the meaning clear to his mind. And then, his simple, delightful elocution interpreted stanza and verse into marvelous messages of grace and love. The people listened with eagerness to the reading of the Word, and when we sang, it was almost a shout. This was all in striking contrast with the indistinct and slovenly manner in which some really good preachers read Scriptures and hymns. They slip over this part of the worship as though it were of no consequence whatever, and throw away the opportunity of making impressions which can not be made even by the best of sermons. I have heard young preachers lectured because they announced the number of the hymn and did not read the stanzas. But I would rather sing without reading than listen to some of the hymn-readings which congregations are compelled to endure.

But I was to tell you about this sermon. Well, first it was simple. The text was plain, and it instantly opened to us a vital gospel theme. The introduction was brief—just a paragraph. The divisions were natural. The style was colloquial. The delivery was affectionate and earnest. In no sense was it a "performance." A child could have understood every word. Louis XIV once paid Massillon the distinguished compliment that, while other fine orators who preached in his chapel made him pleased with them, the sermons of Massillon made him displeased with himself. This sermon was of that kind. The preacher took aim. There was no preliminary skirmishing. He got into the very core of his theme with one bound. Then statement and quotation and illustration and appeal all centered upon one vital issue. How could the impression have been anything else than profound?

Second, the sermon was finely illustrated. It was not over-illustrated. Two of the points were emphasized by a personal narration. These were the most effective. In no case did the illustration seem stuck in to brighten up the discourse. I noted how attentive the people became when the preacher spoke by parable; and I said to myself: "I wonder whether our young ministers really realize what power there is in a bright, brief, fitting illustration to illuminate and enforce a truth?"

Moreover, the preacher himself seemed to feel the force of what he said. His earnestness was not physical, but spiritual. It was not in the volume of voice used, but in the fullness of emotion. He was all alive. The truths he uttered seemed to him as awfully important as the spiritual well-being of those whom he addressed. His very life went out in his words. We were moved because the preacher was moved. It was not a ripple upon the surface, but a stirring of the depths.

Not least important was the fact that the preacher clinched the points of his sermon as he went along. The usual style is to leave all of the practical application until near the close. But at the end of each division of the discourse my friend drove the truth home to our hearts, striking with the force of a trip-hammer. These several short exhortations, piled one upon the other, seemed to gather force as they accumulated, and prepared the way for the appeal at the end. That final appeal was tremendous. I do not mean tremendous as a physical demonstration, or in the sweep of its thoughts, but in the way it gripped our very souls. The eyes which looked straight into ours were moist. The voice which spoke was mellow. Every power of the speaker seemed given up to the one task of compelling immediate results. How he did plead with half-hearted church-members and careless sinners! It seemed to me that if I had remained away from God up to that moment, I must have yielded to the winning tenderness of that call.

Then, the preacher had good terminal facilities. He preached just thirty-eight minutes by my neighbor's watch. He could have gone on for fifteen or twenty minutes longer had the theme and occasion demanded it. But he got through in thirty-eight minutes and then stopped. It is a great thing to know when you are through. Mind you, I do not believe in the current craze for sermonettes. The man who preaches a sermonette is usually a preacherette. And a preacherette is almost always a manette. How long should a sermon be? That depends. Indeed, a sermon is the most "dependable" thing in the world. How would this rule do? For an ordinary sermon, delivered upon an ordinary occasion, thirty minutes. For an ordinary sermon, delivered on an extraordinary occasion, or an extraordinary sermon delivered upon an ordinary occasion, forty minutes. When both the sermon and the occasion are extraordinary, the sermon may safely be lengthened to fifty, or even sixty minutes. This last rule applies to all Bishops' sermons, of course.

There were other things about this sermon I heard, but these impressed me most. As I left the church I said to myself: Almost any man can be a preacher, if he is only tactful and spiritual. It is not the thought so much as the unction, which tells. A simple sermon from a man aglow, luminous with spiritual life, standing before his audience like one transfigured, believing intensely every word, speaking like a man whose heart will break if others do not heed what they hear—such a man is always an effective preacher, and men will hear him gladly. The preacher's heart is, after all, the thermometer of his power.—Western Christian Advocate.

"FRIENDSHIP."

By Rev. D. M. Gean.

Friendship is an attachment between persons of congenial dispositions, habits and pursuits. It has its origin in the nature and condition of man. He is a social creature, and, naturally, loves to frequent society and enjoy the affections of those who are like himself. He is also, individually, a feeble creature, and a sense of this weakness renders friendship indispensable to him. Though he may have all other enjoyments within his reach, he still finds his happiness incomplete unless participated in by one whom he considers his friend. When in difficulty and distress, he looks around for advice, assistance and consolation.

No wonder, therefore, that a sentiment of such importance to man should have been so frequently and so fully considered. We can scarcely open any of the volumes of antiquity without being reminded how excellent a thing is friendship. The example of David and Jonathan, Achilles and Patroclus, Pylades and Orestes, and others, all show to what a degree of enthusiasm it was sometimes carried. Even the great Cicero deemed it of sufficient importance to form the subject of one of his masterly essays. But it is to be feared that in modern times friendship is seldom remarkable for similar devotedness. With some, it is nominal, rather than real; and with others, it is regulated entirely by self-interest.

Yet, it would no doubt be possible to produce from every rank in life and from every state of society, instances of sincere and disinterested friendship, creditable to human nature and to the age in which we live.

We can not think so ill of our species as to believe that selfishness has got the better of their noble feelings sufficiently to destroy their sympathy with their fellow-creatures and their love towards those whom God hath given them for neighbors and brethren.

After these remarks, to enlarge on the benefits of possessing a real friend appears unnecessary. What would be more intolerable than the consciousness that, in all the wide world, not one heart beat in unison with our own, or cared for our welfare? What indescribable happiness must it be, on the other hand, to possess a real friend—a friend who will counsel, instruct, assist; who will be a stay in our calamity and cordially rejoice when the hour of happiness returns?

Let us remember, however, that all who assume the name of friend are not entitled to our confidence. History records many instances of the fatal consequences of infidelity in friendship; and it can not be denied that the world contains men who are happy to find a heart they can pervert, or a head they can mislead, if thus their unworthy ends can be more easily attained. Caution in the foundation of friendship is, therefore, in the highest degree necessary. We should admit none to the altar of our social affections without closely scrutinizing their lives and characters.

We must assure ourselves of the uprightness and truth of those to whom we open our hearts in friendship, if we would not have a pernicious influence exerted on our own dispositions; if we would not, in the hour of trial, find ourselves forgotten and abandoned to the cold charities of an unsympathizing world.

THE TRANSFER POWER.

The above caption is also that of one which appeared at the head of a paragraph in a recent issue of this Advocate. Truly is it suggested that this is one of those delicate questions that attend our ecclesiastical polity, and in entering upon even a brief discussion of its efficiency among us, I may be rushing in "where angels fear to tread." Upon the theory that there is no argument against a fact, I wish simply to quote from the paragraph in question, and then give some facts: "Under our form of church government," says the writer, "it is an indispensable necessity." But is it always exercised to meet a necessity? Is it not more often used to meet a supposititious rather than a real condition? About twenty years ago a certain presiding elder—a true man, a consecrated man, and one of the best prepared as well as best informed among us—declared that the four leading appointments in his Conference must have transfers as pastors. Only one transfer could be procured, and he was appointed to the leading church within the district of the said elder. Before six months had passed this pastor was out of harmony with both people and the presiding elder. At the end of the year he was moved on to richer, wider fields, and a home man was sought to heal the breaches. The other three "leading appointments" were manned by home men, who filled out each his four years, leaving their charges harmonious and prosperous.

At another Conference, a transfer of "great preaching ability" was called for; the presiding Bishop had just such a man—one who could "stand on his head" and out-preach the average giraffe. Telegrams were sent as follows: "Two thousand dollars and parsonage." This bait caught. The transfer came. At the end of two years this transfer was moved, and the presiding Bishop said it was because he had not touched "side nor bottom" of the situation.

On two separate occasions a home man was urged, but a transfer was demanded and secured. In both instances, this writer has been told, these same congregations have had this same "home man" under consideration for appointment to their charges. If there is any argument in a fact, then do not these facts prove that it is more often the case of not giving the home man a chance? This writer is in hearty agreement with the statement that "the highest efficiency in our service" often requires the exercise of this power by the Bishops, and that it may be an "indispensable necessity," but that great discretion should be used in its exercise seems necessary. It might be wise, as suggested in the paragraph referred to, for the Bishops at their semi-annual gatherings to look into this matter, which has created "opposition in some (if not all) of our Annual Conferences."

If there is opposition to the too free use of this prerogative (and that there is all are aware), let preference be given to the home supply, and the "indispensable" will always meet a hearty welcome. This writer has no sympathy with the suggestion that this opposition grows out of a spirit of selfishness; but holds that to "deal justly" applies as much to the ministry as to "walk humbly," and that the golden rule is as applicable among preachers as among others.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

November 15, 1910.

(The "paragraph" referred to by Brother Holloman was an editorial in the Advocate of October the 27th.

With most of what he says we are in thorough accord. Our position is, that the transfer power under our economy is a necessity, but that it should be properly scrutinized and safeguarded from abuse. We heartily concur in the view that, other things being equal, "home men" should be given the preference. We think, however, that Dr. Holloman does us injustice—though, of course, it is unintentional—in stating that we suggested that the opposition to the transfer power "grows out of a spirit of selfishness." Nothing was further from our mind than such an insinuation. The only statement that could possibly have been so interpreted was the following: "But any restriction imposed should not, in our judgment, be vested in the Annual Conferences, for that might tend to produce a conflict in authority. Moreover, those bodies might be indisposed to vote in transfers to take their better appointments, even when they are needed." This has no reference to any condition of things, or "opposition," now existing, but is a mere speculative suggestion as to what might possibly result from legislation which may never be enacted. We did not make the slightest suggestion as to the cause of any opposition to transfers now prevalent. Nor do we admit that the intimation that the members of the Annual Conferences, if given jurisdiction over the transfer question, in handling it might, to some extent, be influenced by local pride or personal considerations, is in any sense a reflection upon them. Where is the human being who is not more or less affected by such influences? If one exists, we should like to know his name. We yield to no one in our admiration for Methodist preachers. How highly we regard them is attested by our utterances in the Advocate from week to week. From boyhood they have been our heroes, and it is our conviction that nobler men than they can not be found upon earth's wide surface. But to expect them rise wholly above their partiality for friends and patriotism for section, is to erect for them an impossible standard. And, indeed, if we could, we would not strip them of their local attachments, their Conference pride, and their preference for their intimate associates in the Master's work. These may somewhat hecloud judgment, but they are an essential part of the furnishing of every normal man, and humanity would be pitifully poor without them.—Editor.)

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

XI.

I was a little acquainted in Franklin before I was appointed there, having assisted my predecessor, J. B. Cassity, in a meeting. Early in the spring I held a series of meetings with Charles R. Montgomery, who was staying with me as helper. Montgomery had been a cowboy in the West from the age of eleven to twenty-two. He had an original and brilliant mind, but had only been to school four months, and yet, by his originality, fluency of speech and humor, he drew and held large congregations in the highly cultured town of Franklin for ten days and nights. Meantime, there were twelve or fifteen bright professions of saving faith and eleven accessions to the Church. These eleven applied for membership on Sunday morning, and I announced that I would receive them the same afternoon at 4 o'clock. There was a good attendance, and I fully explained the meaning of the Church vows and what church membership meant. They may backslide, but I do not believe they will ever forget my talk on admission into the Church. A part of my time in Franklin I was the only Protestant minister there, and for that reason I held more funeral services, united more couples in marriage, and baptized more infants, than in any preceding year of my ministry. In the autumn of my first year I planned a series of meetings, and said by letter to my neighbor preacher, Sam Bell, at Abbeville, "Come over and help us," and he replied: "I will not go over, but I will send you J. J. Smiley, who is far better help than I would be." Smiley came smiling and held a good meeting, which continued ten days and nights, and resulted in a number of accessions to the Church. Our Conference assembled on December 5th in the Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, with that modest, unassuming gentleman, Bishop Granberry, in the chair. The session was harmonious and went smoothly on to the close, only two incidents to the contrary occurring: An effort was made by a young preacher to down the cowboy preacher, Charles R. Montgomery, but failed. Then there was a strong-looking preacher physically, claiming to be of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and calling himself "Drover." He wished, I think, to unite with us, and preached on Friday night, December 7th, a fine sermon, from "How shall we escape?" I heard one of our preachers say that night: "These Yankees got the best of us in the Civil War, and I believe they can out-preach us, too." The sermon made a fine impression, and it was generally believed that Drover was one of us, when, lo! our S. S. Keener got an "inkling" somehow that there was something crooked with Drover's antecedents, and soon satisfied himself that such was true, and I heard of Drover no more. Detectives are necessary sometimes, even in a Conference. I heard J. A. Parker on Sunday morning in Carondelet Church. Dr. La Prade was pastor. Dr. Parker never scrapes the sky, neither does his banner ever trail in the dust, and that day, from my judgment individually, and from the receptive appearance of his hearers, great thoughts and orthodox theology went straight to the heads and hearts of his congregation.

At 3 o'clock, in the same house, Dr. T. L. Pierce preached, and he succeeded Dr. La Prade. I was returned to Franklin, and was welcomed most cordially. We had more visitors than at any other place. Old and young, and of the different churches, all seemed to love to make calls at the parsonage. We can never forget the oft-seen faces of Sister Martha Foster, Gov. Foster's mother; Miss Lizzie Lewis, Sisters Emma and Mary Crawford, Misses Julia and Mary Johnson, Miss Mollie Harris, Helen McKerral, Carrie Todd, Bennie Allen, and many more. A few children's names I also mention: Lena Foster, Delia Rosser, Mattie Bell, Emma Shipp, Lucy Knight, Pearl and Bessie Chadwick, Woodie Chadwick, Alberta Todd, Emma Fisher, Elvie Alpha, and many others.

During my second and third years there my salary was paid in the main through the envelope system, and it worked well. I emptied one envelope, and brought it away with me when we moved; I found written on the back, viz.: "Dear Brother Armstrong: The Lord has been very good to us, and I am able this year to pay you two dollars a month instead of one. God bless you.—Mary S. Crawford." The writer was the wife of a carpenter, and at that time had no home.

Our Conference assembled that fall in Jackson, La., with Bishop Hargrove as president. It was an interesting session. At that time I believe we got a lot of Mississippi preachers, and we have some of them yet.

Dr. Tigert was a visitor, and he talked Review and on missions, and at 3 o'clock one afternoon he preached a heart-searching sermon from: "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out," etc. I could see the color of his hearers' come and go while he talked. The grand man was honest and in earnest.

SOME THOUGHTS FOR CONFERENCE.

In a few days the forty-first session of the North Mississippi Conference will convene in Sardis, which will be its third meeting in this city. The first was in 1876, with Bishop Pierce presiding; the second was in 1894, Bishop Keener presiding.

This year we are to have Bishop J. H. McCoy, D.D., one of the new and youngest of the present Episcopal College. He is the son of the late Rev. W. C. McCoy, D.D., who was for many years an honored member of the North Alabama Conference. He graduated from the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., with the degree of Master of Arts in 1889. The same institution afterward conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He joined the North Alabama Conference in 1889, in which he served as pastor, editor, and college president until his election to the Bishopric last May. We most cordially welcome his coming to hold our Conference. He has already been among us at several places on different occasions, and has made a fine impression on all who have met or heard him as an able preacher, a wise executive and an affable Christian man.

We are anticipating a pleasant and profitable Conference session. For this let us all strive and pray. But amidst our joys there will be sadness, because of the absence of so many of our dear brethren who will no more meet with us on earth, but whom we shall expect to meet at the roll-call up yonder in the eternal home of the good and faithful servants of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

There will be many matters of interest, as usual, to be considered, and some of special concern, that should be thought and prayed over much before going up to the convocation. Every member of the Conference ought to review the Minutes of last session and the chapters in the new Discipline relating to Conference business before going to the Conference.

The article in last week's Advocate by Brother Bingham in reference to the need of one or two more districts has the hearty endorsement of a great many, both preachers and laymen, and it is hoped that the matter will be duly considered by those having that part of the business in hand.

Let all give due attention to every interest—business, religious services, and last but not the least, the Book Department. And may God bless us all together.

The Pryor Street Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. W. McF. Alexander is pastor, raised $14,210 for obligations due on their house of worship on November 6th. This is one of the strongest Protestant congregations in New Orleans.

Bishop H. C. Morrison dedicated the Hampton Avenue Church, of Greenville, South Carolina, on Sunday, November 13. The editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, who was present, writes most appreciatively of the sermon.

Pastor W. A. Borum, of the First Baptist Church, of Jackson, Miss., has an interesting revival under way. Dr. J. L. White, of Memphis, is doing the preaching. Brother Borum is one of the most evangelistic ministers in the South, and is never satisfied unless his flock is being built up spiritually.

The head of the Christian Catholic Church, of which the late Dr. Dowie was the founder, has decreed that every tenth child, whether male or female, must be dedicated wholly to the service of God. It is said that they will be trained and sent out as missionaries. This appears to be a human and wholesale call to the Master's work.

It is said that the English Wesleyans have built fifteen hundred new places of worship within the past thirteen years, and overhauled and improved as many. Within the last half century they have added sixty million dollars—over a million a year—to their property holdings. This shows that our Mother Methodism is yet virile and performing well her part in the religious activities of Great Britain.

The statistics given out at the recent meeting of the Mississippi Baptist Convention, for that State, by Rev. S. G. Cooper, the statistical secretary, are as follows: 828 Sunday schools; 1,431 churches; 142,197 members, and 8,898 baptisms during the year. Their Orphanage plant at Jackson is valued at $150,000, and the Home is now caring for 190 children. When the enlargement under way is completed, its capacity will be increased to 300.

It was stated at a meeting of the Presbyterian preachers of Chicago a few days since that the majority opinion of the Illinois Supreme Court excluding the Bible from the public schools of that State was delivered by justices who are members of the Church, and that the dissenting opinion of the minority was written by non-churchmen. Rather queer is this. The so-called breadth of many nominal Christians is more pernicious than outspoken infidelity. An effort will be made to secure a new ruling of the Court upon this important question.

The Red Cross Society of the United States will undertake to raise an endowment of $2,000,000, with a view to placing the organization in America upon an equal footing with the branches of it existing in other countries. The plan agreed upon is for each city to raise ten cents per capita for its entire population, and it is expected that New York alone will contribute $500,000. It is stated that from various sources $400,000 of the desired amount has already come into the hands of the committee.

The sixty-second annual session of the Louisiana Baptist Convention met in the First Baptist Church of New Orleans on Friday, November 18. Words of greeting were spoken by Mayor Behrman, Dr. J. C. Barr, president of the Protestant Ministers' Association, and the Rev. W. H. Brenzle, of the St. Charles Avenue Baptist Church. Mr. J. W. Parsons was re-elected president, and Rev. F. C. Flowers, of New Orleans, secretary. The reports showed the work throughout the State to be in a healthful condition.

The Arkansas Conference adopted resolutions asking the Methodist colleges of that State to conform their charters to the legislation enacted by the last General Conference. That legislation is that the trust clause in the Discipline shall be incorporated into these instruments, and that, if necessary, they shall be so amended as to have the trustees either elected or confirmed by some representative body of Methodism. This was wise action. The Church needs to secure a firm grip upon all of her educational institutions.

The Seventh Day Adventists of Louisiana, according to a dispatch to the New Orleans papers, have purchased 140 acres of land just outside of the corporate limits of Hammond, and will proceed to build thereupon a denominational college. Lots will be sold, and it is expected that a large colony of this faith will soon be attracted to that locality. This means, doubtless, a more aggressive warfare upon the Christian Sabbath in this section, and it behooves the ministers of the orthodox evangelical churches to get ready to contend unflinchingly for the preservation of God's holy day.

The Presbyterian Synod of Mississippi assembled in West Point on November 16th, with a good attendance. Dr. J. J. Chisholm, of Natchez, was chosen Moderator, and Rev. S. C. Caldwell, of Hazlehurst was elected Clerk to succeed Rev. J. E. Jones, who resigned on account of ill health. A committee, with Dr. William Erwin, of Greenwood, as chairman, was appointed to raise $20,000 for the endowment of the Chamberlain-Hunt Academy at Port Gibson. This amount will enable that institution to command $80,000 additional, pledged on the condition that $100,000 for the endowment fund should be raised.

The Louisiana Presbyterian Synod held its annual session in the Methodist Church at Morgan City last week. Rev. B. L. Price, of Alexandria, was elected moderator, and Rev. H. M. McLain, of Belcher, temporary clerk. Rev. J. W. Caldwell was named as trustee of the Palmer Orphanage, at Columbus, Miss. A plan to establish a French school at Plaquemine, with Rev. J. H. Paradis as principal, was endorsed. The following editors of The Presbyterian of the South were appointed: Dr. George Summey, managing editor; Rev. Louis Voss, associate editor; Dr. T. M. Hunter and Rev. H. M. McLain, corresponding editors. The next session will be held at Ruston.

The ter-centenary of the King James Translation of the Bible will be generally celebrated throughout the English-speaking world next year. The exercises will be under the auspices of the American Bible Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Canadian auxiliary of the latter. The day and the month when the King James Version was first given out are not known, and in consequence the time for the celebration will have to be arranged by international agreement. It is expected that colleges, churches, and schools will participate in the ceremonies, and that there will be exhibitions of rare and specially interesting copies of the Scriptures.

Harold Beghle, the author of that popular and passionately evangelical book we lately reviewed editorially—"Twice-Born Men"—curiously enough began his journalistic career as the purveyor of a column of jokes for a London evening paper. For some years this lighter side of journalism claimed him, and through Punch, the Strand, and other periodicals, he poured out his witticisms and verses. But finally he became an earnest thinker and expositor of current thought, expounding to the average reader and in popular style the contributions of the profoundest thinkers of our time. He now holds his place in the front rank of English journalists, and enjoys the intimacy of many of the makers of modern thought—Western Christian Advocate.

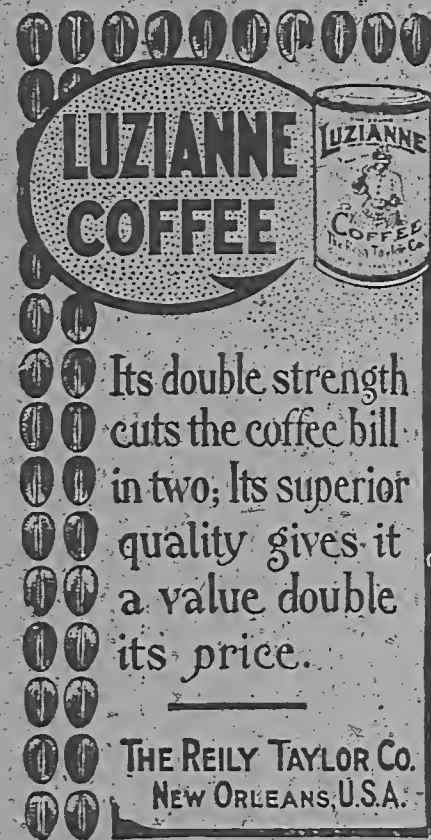

Virginia Methodism has had a year of large prosperity. The Annual Conference, which adjourned a few days ago, was presided over by Bishop Wilson, who is represented by the Richmond Virginian as having spoken as follows in his concluding remarks: "We are making history these days, and the outlook is exceedingly radiant. He also predicted the consummation of church unity at no distant date, but he doubted whether it would be altogether good for the church as a whole. He said that God glories in infinite variety, and perhaps it would be better if the churches continued separate, working to the same end." The Bishop had to leave before the closing session in order to reach the seat of the North Georgia Conference in time for the opening of that body. Some of the appointments are as follows: Dr. B. E. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Norfolk District; Dr. W. A. Christian, presiding elder of the Richmond District; Dr. G. C. Kelly, First Church, Charlottesville; Dr. W. J. Young, Main Street, Danville, and Rev. R. H. Bennett, Court Street, Lynchburg. The statistics show 109,211 members of the church; 774 infants, and 3,543 adults, baptized; 3,548 Epworth Leaguers; 30,817 Sunday school scholars, and $20,000 added to the endowment of Randolph-Macon College, and $28,000 to that of the Woman's College. The question of how the trustees of Randolph-Macon College shall be constituted led to a spirited debate, which terminated with the adoption of the following resolution:

"Whereas there is a great desire that such action shall be taken at this session of the Conference as will result in the final settlement of the question at issue between this Conference and the Board of Trustees of Randolph-Macon College by the most brotherly and peaceable methods possible, be it

"Resolved, That a committee of six be appointed by this body, which committee shall request the Board of Trustees of Randolph-Macon College to appoint a committee of nine of their number, and shall request the Baltimore Annual Conference to appoint a committee of three of their number to meet together in conference at Ashland, Va., at such time as may be mutually agreeable, for the purpose of considering the adjustment of differences existing between the conferences and the Board of Trustees and of reaching a satisfactory settlement of the same, and said committee to make report at the next Annual Conference."

PREACHING HERE AND THERE.

By the kindly courtesy of the brethren, it has been my privilege to preach a number of times since our last Annual Conference—nearly fifty times in all. Not fifty sermons. No; for after the manner of

THE REILY TAYLOR CO.
NEW ORLEANS, U.S.A.

Bishops, presiding elders, and most other preachers, I suppose, some of my sermons have rendered service on several different occasions. To mention in detail the charges in which I have preached, the friendships renewed, and the kindness received, might occupy more space in the Advocate than this letter is entitled to. Besides a single Sabbath here and there, I have assisted in several protracted meetings, preaching twice a day repeatedly during the summer heat. The exercise of preaching, instead of having a prostrating effect, proved a tonic to the body, as well as mind and soul.

It was my great privilege to be with Rev. W. F. Rogers, at West, in a meeting beginning Saturday night before the second Sunday in July, and continuing until the Friday night following. The opening sermon was by Rev. W. L. Stormont, of Black Hawk. Brother Stormont is a young preacher of much promise. He remained several days and rendered good service. The congregations were attentive and responsive. Children's services were an interesting feature of this meeting. Some of the children expressed a desire to become members of the church, and, lasting good, we trust, resulted to the church and community.

I was kindly entertained during the meeting by the pleasant family of the pastor. The people of West were cordial and abounding in their hospitality. Brother Rogers is the faithful pastor of an excellent people, not only at West, but also doubtless at each of his four churches.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. W. R. Goudelock, I assisted him at Andrew's Chapel, Columbus Circuit, in a meeting beginning on the morning of the fifth Sunday in July, and continuing till the afternoon of the following Thursday. We had two services during the day, an excellent dinner, being served on the ground. I like this plan. It brings the people of the neighborhood into closer and kindlier touch with each other, and strengthens the bonds of social life, under the benign and sacred influences of religion, and the church. While most of the preaching was done by the writer, some of it was well done by the pastor. Christians were edified and revived. We had a responsive and good children's service. The meeting closed on Thursday afternoon. Following a sermon by the pastor, there was a very gracious season, and an old-fashioned Methodist shouting time. There were several additions to the membership of the church. Brother Goudelock is in favor with his people, and will make a good report at Conference. I was entertained during this meeting at the homes of Mrs. Eunice (Nelson) Hutchinson and Mrs. Sallie (Erwin) Hearne, pupils of mine at Verona Female College in the years gone by. Their kind ministries to their former teacher were greatly appreciated by him.

I was with Rev. L. B. Hankins, of Starkville Circuit, August 24-26, at Steel's Chapel. I found a live church and a good meeting already in progress. A goodly number of persons were added to the church. I was with Brother Hankins again at Sessums, and occupied his pulpit morning and evening Sunday, August 28; also preached again Monday morning. Rev. O. L. Savage was expected to conduct the meeting, and came Monday afternoon in time for the evening service. Brother Savage, of genial spirit and gifted as a preacher, needs no commendation from this scribe.

Starkville Circuit has taken on new life and has greatly improved under the ministry of Brother Hankins. His people want him back, and promise a raise in the salary if he is returned to them.

State-wide prohibition will not be incorporated into the Constitution of the new State of Arizona, but, separate from that instrument, the question will be submitted to the people. Dispatches from Panama represent President Taft as being much pleased with the progress made in the construction of the canal. It is now thought that it will be practically finished by the close of the year 1913, but there seems no disposition to celebrate the completion of the great waterway before 1915, as it will take some time to get things in readiness for ceremonies of such magnitude as would befit so memorable an occasion.

Mr. John E. Redmond, the well known Irish leader, who, with some associates, has been campaigning in the United States to secure funds to promote the cause of "Home Rule for Ireland," is reported to have returned to England carrying with him $200,000. This money is more than likely to prove a veritable boomerang, as the Unionists, led by Mr. Balfour, have already begun to call attention to it and raise the cry of "foreign interference."

A late dispatch from Pittsburg, Penn., states that Mr. Andrew Carnegie will celebrate his seventy-fifth birthday by a gift of $3,500,000 to the schools of technology which bear his name in that city. His prior benefactions in that municipality for these schools, libraries, and a museum and concert hall are said to foot up $20,000,000. Report has it that Mr. Carnegie considers his philanthropic investments in Pittsburg the most satisfactory that he has made.

Iowa, the greatest agricultural State in the Union, is shown to have sustained an actual loss in population within the last decade. This is doubtless due chiefly to the high price of lands and the natural drift of immigration southward and westward. Another census surprise was the announcement that the population of Memphis is only 131,195. It had been predicted that it would not be less than 175,000. Its growth within the past ten years has been 23.1 per cent.

Governor Sanders has issued a call to the Louisiana Legislature to assemble in extraordinary session on November 28. The meeting will last twelve days. The call recites a number of important matters to be dealt with, among which is the election of a United States Senator. Judge J. R. Thornton, of Alexandria, who had been named by the Governor for the position before it was known that the Legislature would meet, has made a formal announcement of his candidacy, and it is generally believed that he will be elected, though there is talk of the anti-administration forces putting forward a man to oppose him.

United States Senator A. S. Clay, of Georgia, died in a sanitarium at Atlanta on November 13. He had been in a precarious state of health for months, but had seemed somewhat better prior to his decease, and his end was sudden and unexpected. Senator Clay was fifty-seven years old, and had been thrice elected to the Senate. He did not possess the gift of eloquence, but was a strong, painstaking, conscientious public servant. His home was in Marietta, and his obsequies were conducted in the Methodist Church of that city. Ex-Governor J. M. Terrell has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the Senate caused by the demise of Mr. Clay.

Women now have the ballot in five States of the Union: Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Idaho, and Washington. The amendment to the Constitution giving it to them in the last-named commonwealth was carried in the election on November 8. The States of Oregon and Arizona, however, have lately declared against such action. In the late election four women were chosen to seats in the Colorado Legislature; one was elected to the office of treasurer, in Ashland County, Wisconsin, and one county clerk, in Angelina County, Texas. We have never looked with much favor upon the participation of women in politics, it having always seemed to us that in "setting the solitary in families," God made the home rather than the individual the unit of society; but we frankly confess that it appears to us that woman suffrage is making headway, and whether for good or evil, that it may ultimately come to prevail throughout the United States and England.

The returns of the recent election continue to be the occasion of much philosophizing and speculation. The lower House of Congress, which now has a Republican majority of 40, will next March have a Democratic majority of approximately 60. The Republican majority in the Senate will be reduced to 12, and possibly less. The following Republican Senators will have Democratic successors: Mr. Depew, of New York; Mr. Beveridge, of Indiana; Mr. Hale, of Maine; Mr. Warner, of Missouri; Mr. Keane, of New Jersey; Mr. Scott, of West Virginia; and Mr. Burkett, of Nebraska. In Illinois nearly half of the men who voted for Senator Lorimer in the State Legislature were re-elected, including: Lee, O'Neill, Brown and Robert E. Wilson, who are accused of having handled the corruption fund, and Mr. Broderick, who is under indictment. The Socialists claim that they polled a vote throughout the country of 750,000, a gain of 300,000 over that cast in 1908. They elected several men to State Legislatures, and sent one representative, Mr. Victor Berger, of Milwaukee, to Congress.

Count Tolstoi has always been regarded as quite eccentric, but in leaving his home at the advanced age of eighty-two to spend his remaining days in solitude, thus shocking and deeply grieving his family, he gives evidence of a more decided mental aberration than he had before been thought to possess. The passing years not infrequently accentuate abnormalities of mind. Not a few remarkable men have dimmed the luster of their fame at the close of their career. So great is the danger of this that we have sometimes thought that a great man should be counted fortunate who passes away before his powers have begun to wane. The Count left home on November 10, and, after a journey of some length, took refuge in the Szamorodinski Monastery. The reports as to the condition of his health are conflicting, though all admit his feebleness. His wife and children have hurried to the place where he is stopping, hoping to induce him to return home. Their devotion to him seems to be complete and beautiful.

(Since the above was written, the press dispatches have announced Count Tolstoi's death, which occurred on the morning of November 20th.)

METHODIST, INDEPENDENT, NON-SECTARIAN, WHICH?

Dear Brother Cannon: Who reports the statistics of the colleges and universities to the United States Commissioner of Education? How is it that Randolph-Macon College, at Ashland, is therein reported to be a Southern Methodist institution, and has been so reported for several years?

How is it and why has the Woman's College at Lynchburg heretofore been reported as under the control of an independent board, and in the last report, 1909, is classed as non-sectarian?

I understand both institutions exist under the same charter, and both are controlled by the same Board of Trustees. How, then, can one be Methodist and the other non-sectarian? Can both of these statements be true?

Fraternally,

J. R. VAN HORNE.

Christiansburg, Va.

(The above letter from Brother Van Horne asks certain questions which the editor cannot answer. He does not know who reports the statistics to the United States Government. Of course, the Randolph-Macon institutions are all held in trust by the same Board of Trustees, under the same charter, and there is no difference in their relation to the M. E. Church, South. Both were established by our Church. The Conference records set forth clearly and plainly similar action taken by the Virginia Conference concerning the establishment of both of them. The original charter was secured by leading members of the Conference in accordance with instructions received from the Conference. They acted as agents of the Church, and they secured the best charter the State would grant at that time. The Virginia Annual Conference was declared by the Board in 1870 to be the creator and owner of Randolph-Macon College. The Academies and the Woman's College were all established by the Board of Trustees, acting as agents of the Conference, and the Chancellor of the State always declared that all the Randolph-Macon institutions belonged to the Virginia and Baltimore Conferences until August, 1906, when, in order to secure the benefits of the Carnegie Foundation, a resolution was passed declaring that in the selection of the trustees of these schools there is no denominational test.

From the date of the passage of that resolution, which was a contradiction of all the past history of the relation of these institutions to the M. E. Church, South, there has been contradiction after contradiction, and the one referred to by Brother Van Horne is not at all surprising, nor any more glaring than other statements in connection with this matter. In fact, the most serious thing in connection with this whole discussion is not the question of how the Trustees of these institutions shall be selected. A letter received by the editor a few days ago intimated that this was a fight against brethren about the mere ways and means of carrying on God's work in the world. This brother and many others appear to think that the only issue involved is a matter of method of selection of Trustees. But that is not the great question.

The editor of the Advocate holds that the most important question is not whether an institution is independent, State, or Church school. The most important question is that sincerity and fair dealing shall be exemplified by those in charge of all educational institutions, and especially by this of vital importance among professing Christians. He feels, along with thousands of other members of our Church, that the rights of the Church have been disregarded and to some extent violated by the Vanderbilt as well as by the Randolph-Macon Boards of Trustees, and this opinion seems to be shared by not only the Virginia Conference, but by the General Conference also. A few men who hold positions as Trustees, in virtue of the fact that they were supposed when selected to be loyal Methodists, and that they would represent the Conferences, have denied the rights of the Church, through its organized agencies—the Conferences—to a voice in the control of the schools, and yet still insist that these schools are Methodist schools, and that they should have Methodist patronage and support.

The time has come when the exact status of the Randolph-Macon institutions and of the Vanderbilt University must be defined. If they are not independent, but are truly Methodist institutions, and are the property of the Church, then that fact should be established beyond question, and the Trustees should be required to acknowledge the control of the Church through the Annual and General Conferences, and should recognize that they are the servants of the Church, speaking through its organized agencies. But if they are independent, then that fact should be openly declared and the membership of the Church should know it, and the Church can determine whether she will give them any further support, or whether she will decline to contribute to institutions over which she can have no control, or whether she will establish schools whose charters are framed in accordance with the disciplinary regulations.

It is contended by some that the Randolph-Macon institutions are the property of the Church and are controlled by the Church, because the members of the Board are Methodists, and the Board is spoken of as an agency of the Church, just as the Conferences are agencies of the Church. Indeed, the idea is advanced that the Board is co-ordinate with the Conference, and carries on the work of the Church in the educational field as does the Conference in other departments of Church work. But such statements ignore the methods of Methodism. Methodism is a great organization, and all the work of the Church is under the direction and control of some one of its Conferences. Independent boards are not recognized among us, and all our varied forms of activity are originated by and report back to some form of Church Conference.—Baltimore and Richmond Advocate.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, W. F. M. S.

Mrs. M. N. James, District Secretary of the Alexandria District, has charge of the Membership Campaign in our Conference. This campaign began in October, and is to be continued through December. We trust the auxiliaries are earnestly endeavoring to enlist new members, and that we will not be satisfied until every woman in the Church has a part in this great Mission work.

Mrs. R. P. Amacker, who was District Secretary on the Baton Rouge District, has removed to California, and Miss Fanny Reames of Kentwood has been made District Secretary in her stead. Miss Reames is now planning for a district meeting, and we sincerely hope the auxiliaries on that district will rally to her, and the woman's missionary work be strengthened, and the new secretary encouraged by your interest and co-operation.

We are nearing the close of the third quarter of our fiscal year. We would like to remind the auxiliaries to be prompt about sending in their quarterly reports, so that a full statement can be made to the Annual Conference, which convenes early in December. Begin now to send your reports to the proper officers.

We trust that most of our auxiliaries have observed the Week of Prayer, which was set for October. If any have not done so, will you not arrange for this season of self-denial and prayer as soon as possible? All offerings should be sent to the Treasurer, Mrs. R. C. Holt, Rayne, La.

Mrs. A. J. Peavy, District Secretary on the Shreveport District, has been very ill, but we rejoice to say, is now better. However, on account of her health, she will be obliged to be absent from home for several months, and finds it impossible to do the district work. Will the auxiliary Corresponding Secretaries on that district please send their reports for this quarter to the Conference Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Crow Girard, Lafayette, La?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, W. H. M. S.

Some weeks ago we received a fine report from Mrs. Barbour, the Recording Secretary of the H. M. S. of the Central Church, Meridian. They have a wide-awake, active society, the average attendance being about forty-five or fifty. Collections are better than ever before, and on the whole they are confident they are moving upward.

Mrs. Barbour writes: "At the regular time for election of officers we elected a bright, talented, consecrated woman, Mrs. S. A. McCaskill, for our president, but more than a month ago she was forced, because of failing health, to resign. We were peculiarly fortunate in the election of her successor, Mrs. J. A. Gully, and I am confident that under her efficient management only favorable reports may be expected from the society."

The city mission work constitutes the largest factor in their work at Meridian. A regular, trained deaconess, Miss Alice Scheider, of the Nashville Training School, began work September 1st, and they are expecting the work to go forward rapidly, especially in the cotton mill district, where she hopes soon to establish a Wesley Home. The free clinic has already been opened through the goodness of one of the Methodist women physicians, Dr. Sarah Allen Castle, and many have been reached in that way and much good has been done. The suburban churches, as well as the Central Church, have a share in this work, Mrs. J. R. Whitaker being president of the Board.

Plans are about perfected to establish a Travelers' Aid there, the agitation and financial arrangement having all been made by the City Mission Board. They hope soon to be able to employ two women to look after this work, one for day duty and one for night, but as yet arrangements have only been made with our former city missionary, Miss Clara Cope, to serve at night.

A new feature to Meridian was added a few weeks ago, to be known as the "Methodist Union," the object being for the women of the various churches to meet once a quarter and give an account of their work, to become better acquainted, to foster a feeling of church fellowship and unity of purpose. The newly-elected president of the Central Church proposed and established the scheme.

The merging of our three missionary periodicals, "Go Forward," "Our Homes," and "The Woman's Missionary Advocate," into one splendid missionary paper, is a fact that is of vital interest to all missionary workers. This change takes place in January. All subscribers to any one of these periodicals will be entitled to the new paper at the same price, fifty cents a year, up to the time their present subscription expires. Isn't this a good time, agents, to solicit new subscribers? Much can be done. I am sure to arouse interest along missionary lines at this time. For the encouragement of all agents, I call their attention to the splendid work done by the agent of "Our Homes" at First Church, Jackson. About a month ago it became necessary to elect a new agent for "Our Homes." Mrs. Pollack, who has always been an enthusiastic, consecrated Home Mission Worker, was appointed by the president to fill this vacancy. At our last regular meeting fifty subscriptions were reported, and those were gained by the use of odd moments. Mrs. Pollack hopes to be able to report another fifty at our next meeting, so that the hundred mark may be reached. This shows what can be done by a faithful, enthusiastic worker.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT WOMAN'S MEETING.

By Mrs. Dell Kelso Mohlenhoff.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missions of Greenville District convened at Shaw on the evening of November 5, 1910. The session was opened by a song and prayer service, conducted by the Conference President of Foreign Missions, Mrs. S. M. Thames, of Pickens. Mrs. Thames is a woman of charming personality, and held captive the hearts of all with whom she came in touch from the moment of her first appearance until her last word was spoken three days later.

With four sessions on Sunday, the day was full of good things, the chief of which was a most felicitous sermon by the much loved pastor of the local church, the Rev. L. A. McKeown.

In the afternoon Mrs. J. E. Thomas, of Columbus, Conference Superintendent of Young People's Work, held an enthusiastic meeting, in which she outlined her plan of work for enlisting the young people of the church in the cause of missions. Although Mrs. Thomas is a grandmother, she is quite the youngest juvenile in the Conference, and is making herself a power for good among the youth by the vim and enthusiasm she brings to her work. To this delightful quality of youthful outlook, Mrs. Thomas adds the wisdom and grace of maturity. At the evening session a cordial welcome was tendered the visiting delegates and friends by Mrs. A. E. Graham, of the local church, and responded to in an appropriate manner by Mrs. Ed. B. Hill, of Cleveland, and from local Baptist and Presbyterian congregations were extended by Mrs. Doughty and Mrs. Gibert, after which came the principal feature of the evening, an address by Mrs. L. M. Short, of Como, Conference Vice-President of Home Missions. Mrs. Short is a woman who combines with a fine enthusiasm for her work a thorough understanding of its needs. She is a forceful speaker and possessed with a keen sense of humor. She gave an interesting account of the various schools and institutions for bettering conditions among the poor and unfortunate girls in Southern territory, and pleaded for more consecration to this cause among Methodist women. Mrs. Short very justly deprecates the enormous amount of nervous energy wasted by women on their embroidery, "punching holes in cloth and sewing at them," as she aptly describes it, and expressed her concurrence in the sentiment of Elizabeth, of German Garden fame, that fancy work is an invention of the evil one to keep the foolish from learning wisdom.

Monday forenoon was devoted to the work of Home Missions, and was ably presided over by Mrs. Taylor, of Cleveland, Secretary of Home Missions of Greenville District. Mrs. Taylor is an efficient officer, a consecrated woman, and unselfishly devoted to her work. After the business of organization and the reports from auxiliaries were disposed of, much meaty matter relating to home work was presented and some interesting discussions launched. Among the papers read, that on "Our Rescue Work," by Mrs. J. W. Rodgers, of Coahoma, deserves special mention. In the afternoon Mrs. Ridgway, of Boyle, spoke lucidly and illuminatingly on the work among the sailors along the Gulf Coast. After a helpful symposium on how to secure new members, conducted by Mrs. Short, the officers of the Home Society retired and the Foreign Workers took up the business of organization and hearing of reports.

The session Monday evening was well filled with an exhaustive paper on "Our Schools," read by Mrs. J. L. McKeown, of Leland, followed by a fine address on foreign work by Mrs. Thomas. Mrs. Evans, of Canton, Conference Superintendent of Press Work, made an eloquent plea for the girls in training for foreign fields at the Scarritt Bible and Training School in Kansas City, resulting in a liberal collection for the scholarship fund of that institution.

The Tuesday session was entirely devoted to the foreign work, but the little time left for this shortened many interesting discussions. The new district secretary, Mrs. Brister, of Shaw, presided, and though a new recruit, exhibited all the grace and tact of a veteran. The membership crusade received further consideration, and Mrs. Thomas explained the plans and purposes of the Study Circle. A paper on "What Opportunities Has the Church for Doing Work for the Master," by Mrs. Mohlenhoff, of Shaw, was well received.

An altar prayer service, a last word of admonition and home by the Conference officers, the farewell of many new-made friends, and the annual meeting of the Greenville District Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies passed into history. But the great results for good which cannot fail to grow out of this meeting will make history for the future.

Delegates were present or reports read from thirteen auxiliaries of the Home alone. The proceedings of this body of consecrated women brought out the interesting fact that, whereas the Home Societies are for the most part flourishing and doing a fine work, the foreign work languishes. About $4,000 has been raised and expended by the thirteen auxiliaries represented. Of these, Clarksdale leads with $795.51, with Boyle following, with $650.15, and the little town of Robinsonville at its heels, with $635.22. This latter is perhaps the most remarkable society in the district, if not in the Conference, and owes its ability to do great things not to members, nor to wealth, but largely to the consecration and unselfish devotion of its guiding spirit, Miss Julia Jones, the village school-mistress. Miss Jones came over one hundred miles, at her own expense, and at considerable self-sacrifice to attend this meeting, that she might carry the inspiration that these meetings always engender back to her little band of co-workers at home.

It is the spirit exhibited by this noble woman that is needed in all lines of missionary work—the spirit which finds joy in service to others and in the losing of self. It is, in fact, the only spirit which brings joy and contentment to a human soul if we but know it. What a pity, both for ourselves and for the many, unfortunate, that we might help, that our eyes remain blinded to this great truth.

A THISTLE IN JACK'S HEART.

"If I were a farmer," said Jack, "I wouldn't let any old thistles grow in my fields."

"But how about the field you do own?" asked the mother, seriously. "I thought I saw a thistle sprouting up in it the other day."

"The field I do own?" asked Jack.

"The other day I heard you say, 'Plague take it!' an expression I never heard you use before. I said: 'Some one has sown a thistle in Jack's heart.'"

"Our hearts are fields given us by God. We should sow golden seed in them, so that nothing but what is good may grow in them. Are we doing this?" Junior World.

HOW HE GAINED IT.

To a great many readers of Dr. Alexander MacLaren's expository writings, the query has suggested itself: How did the great expounder gain the penetrating spiritual vision which marks his examination of the sacred Word? The New York Christian Advocate quotes one who in his early ministry was an assistant to the great Baptist preacher, and who once asked him what had contributed most of all to his success. Dr. MacLaren, after deprecating the idea that he had attained "success," said that he owed all that was in himself and in his ministry to the habit, never broken, of spending one hour a day "alone with the Eternal." The hour which he took was from nine to ten in the morning. His assistant says that he was sometimes allowed to be in the room with the pastor, "but no word passed between us." In his well-worn armchair he sat, with his long Bible on his knees, sometimes reading its pages, more frequently his hand over his face. During that hour he did not allow himself to read even the Bible for texts, or as a student. It was read as a child would read a letter from an absent father; as a loving heart would drink in again the message from a loved one far away.

What is our life? It is a mission to go into every corner we can reach, and reconquer for God's beatitude his unhappy world back to him. It is a devotion of ourselves to the bliss of the divine life by the beautiful apostolate of kindness.—Faber

THE TOAD AND THE LITTLE GREEN BEETLE.

By Edith Havens.

"Well, you are a homely thing," said the little green beetle, as he spied the little toad sitting all alone by the side of the garden path. "What are you doing here, among all these beautiful flowers?"

The toad, a bit surprised, blinked his eyes and didn't even look at the newcomer.

"I say, why are you here, old homely face?" continued the beetle, as he came nearer.

The toad turned slightly. Then he noticed the beetle.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," he said. "Are you talking to me?"

"Yes, I am," said the beetle crossly.

"So you think I am homely," said the toad, blinking his eyes once more.

"I never in all my life saw such an ugly-looking thing," answered the beetle.

"I am sorry you feel that way," said the toad, hopping a bit farther away. "It seems to bother you more than it does me. I bid you good morning."

Now, just above the beetle's head, perched on the tip of a sweet rose, a butterfly sat, and her face was sad, for she had heard everything the little beetle had said.

She was a wonderful little butterfly, kind to everybody and loved by everybody, and as the little toad, with two great tears rolling down his cheeks, hopped away, she flew lightly down beside the little beetle who was starting away in the opposite direction.

"I want to talk with you, little beetle," she called. The beetle paused and turned about.

"Do you know that you did very wrong a few moments ago?"

"What about the toad?" asked the little beetle guiltily.

"Yes, about the toad," said the butterfly in a sad voice.

"Do you know that the little toad helps to make this garden very beautiful; that without him the flowers could not grow at all?"

"Why, no," answered the little beetle, surprised and ashamed. "Is that true?"

"Yes, very true," answered the butterfly. "You see he eats all the bad bugs that come to the garden to destroy the flowers. The flowers love him very much."

The little beetle hung his head.

"Oh, I did not know—I did not know," he moaned. He was so ashamed when he thought how very unkind he had been.

"Do you know," continued the butterfly, "when I first saw Mr. Toad, he looked very homely to me; but I thought and thought, and decided that God made him for some purpose. Now, he looks quite beautiful to me. He leaves everyone alone and is so kind."

Later in the day the little green beetle again met the toad on the garden path, and apologized for his rudeness.

And the beetle came to love the toad as much as the butterfly.—Times-Democrat.

A CHANCE FOR BOYS.

It is a good thing to be a hero and we all wish we had the chance. What dreams we have of how we would carry the enemy's breastworks, the dead and dying all around us, and fall at last ourselves, our faces to the front, our country's victorious banner waving over our dead bodies!

Or, we wish we could win the Carnegie medal for heroism, or belong to the immortal Legion of Honor. If a fellow only had a chance!

You have a chance boys—a chance to serve the world and your fellowmen as none of your friends who will be lawyers, engineers, merchants or teachers, will ever serve it. Have you guessed it?—the ministry! But it does not sound attractive, does it? The ministers, you know, don't look like heroes. They look like they had a hard time, and you know they never can make money, and they always have to be looking out for other people instead of themselves; so that, if that is being a hero, just please excuse me.

It is all true; and yet, boys, here is your chance—the glorious chance to be a hero which you have all been wanting. I think it is like that beautiful old story some one has told us of Gaston de Foix.

In the year 1512 the Spanish and the French were fighting each other on the sunny plains of Italy. The Spanish army had won famous victories on almost every battlefield of Europe. The French army was only the broken half of the great force Louis XII had sent to Italy. But it had at its head Gaston de Foix, the nephew of the king. He was hardly more than a boy, but so brave, so bright and dauntless, that his scared and battered soldiers worshiped him.

One day there came a crisis in the battle. Two battalions of Spanish infantry that had conquered in every fight were about to break through the French lines, and Gaston de Foix determined to lead a charge against them. His men pressed close about him, begging and pleading with him not to throw his life away. But while they still urged he suddenly broke away, crying: "Let him who loves me, follow me!" and spurred his horse towards the enemy's lines.

They hesitated a moment, then every nobleman of France, every rude hired soldier, every peasant with a lance, followed with that cry, "Let him who loves me, follow me!" ringing in his ears.

The Spanish were not used to giving way, but they gave way before that onslaught. The lilies of France waved above the lions of Aragón and a great shout of triumph went up from the victorious French.

But the gallant boy-general lay dead on the field, and above him—nobleman, peasant, soldier—lay those who had answered that brave call with their lives. You would have followed him, too, wouldn't you boys? Then listen—for still that cry rings out, and in the forefront of the battle stands Christ, that Christ who understands all a boy's thoughts and longings, and He calls: "Let him who loves Me, follow Me!"

So clear, so sweet, rings out that call, and as in that other battle fought so many hundreds years ago, the brave, the strong, the loving will answer: "Will you be among them, boys?"—Mildred Welch, in Christian Observer.

THE BOY SCOUT.

Mr. Ralph D. Blumenfeld, of the London Daily Express, writing in the Outlook, says of the effects of the Boy Scout movement in England: "It has wrought a revolution in British manners and ways of thought. The discovery of the boy has not only changed the nature of the boy for the better, but has so improved him that he now sets a national standard."

"There is the point of honor. A scout's honor is to be trusted. It is the old law of the knights newly revived, gloriously resurrected. There is the matter of day-by-day helpfulness. It was common to hear, in the days before the scout movement, how people were drowned in rivers, ponds, or canals, with crowds helplessly looking on. Now, that all scouts are taught to swim and to rescue the drowning, they have set a new fashion in life-saving. Every day in England the papers report some fresh deed of scout gallantry or heroism, a deed to be traced back to the age-old ideal of chivalry newly set up before Britain's boyhood. In the first four months of this year eighty-four medals were awarded to scouts for gallantry in saving life."

"One is conscious also in England to-day of a new spirit of love for wild creatures, of pity for the helpless animals. All scouts are trained to be merciful to beasts of burden, to be prompt in interfering if a man is working a lame horse, to respect the sanctuaries of the birds in trees and hedge."

"Wherefore, in building their own characters, in learning self-respect, the scouts are slowly strangling that curse, and that old-age menace of English liberty—the foul thing, servility. The boy becomes a man. What he is taught in his impressionable age he carries with him through life; and so we see in this Boy Scout movement the reflection of the knights of chivalry; we see him going about the world looking for the chance of helping others."

There are nine points in Scouts' Law, as follows:

1. A scout's honor is to be trusted. If he declares: "On my honor it is so," that settles it.
2. A scout is loyal. The obligation of loyalty embraces country and rulers, parents, employers, and scout masters.
3. A scout's duty is to be useful and to help others. He must try his best to do a good turn to somebody each day.
4. A scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other scout, no matter to what social class the other belongs. He must eschew snobbery and cultivate democratic good-fellowship.
5. A scout is courteous. He must, furthermore, take no reward for his courtesy; this means "no tips."
6. A scout is a friend to animals. He must not give pain to any creature unnecessarily.
7. A scout obeys orders. He must, too, render obedience without question; but, after carrying out an order, he may state reasons for objecting to it.

A scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances. The duty of cheerfulness is second only to that of obedience.

A scout is thrifty. He opens a savings bank account.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

HIGHLY COMMENDS IT.

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE," by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., is one of the most helpful and stimulating books on the devotional line that I have read in many a day, and is worthy of a wide circulation among both preachers and laymen. The vital theme treated of in this meritorious little volume, not, however, in a controversial or theological, but in a practical way, is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose divine office and mission are, alas, too often lost sight of, or minimized in this day of multiplied ecclesiastical machinery and dependence upon organized effort. The fundamental verities regarding the agency and operation of the Holy Spirit are here presented in such a clear and forceful way that the reader is sure to feel the kindling of holier aspirations, and be led to recognize as never before the only true source of righteousness, and peace, and power, yea, of complete victory over sin. I have seen some larger and far more pretentious volumes on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit that are not half so illuminating and desirable as this booklet, which is a gem of its kind.

The author strikes the key-note in the opening chapter when he says: "Each life may have its Pentecost. Paul found his on the Damascus road. John Wesley found his on a rainy night in Aldersgate street. But not even the coming of the Holy Spirit into the life of the believer is the goal of the atonement. This, too, has a further purpose." Jesus said: "I go to prepare a place for you." The Holy Spirit comes to prepare us for that place. While our Lord makes heaven for the soul, by his Spirit he makes heaven in the soul. The earnest reading of this little book will in many cases mark an epoch in the life of him who reads it. M. M. BLACK.

The sales of Brother Harbin's book, "Modes of the Heavenly Life," have been such as to justify a reduction in the price of the book to 50 cents. Order from the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

It is a saying often forgotten, yet none the less important: "Better mend one fault in yourself than a hundred in your neighbor." Work on one's own faults is hard, quiet, and thoroughly unattractive work to most fault-finders; yet its results are certain, and its reward cannot be taken away.—Author Unknown.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CONVENTION.

The American Federation of Catholic Societies which assembled in New Orleans last week was a notable gathering. Representatives came from all parts of the country, and the attendance was large. The city papers devoted much space to the proceedings, as was to be expected in a municipality where the population is largely Roman Catholic. The want of space forbids us to discuss the enactments of this great assembly. We can only mention in the briefest manner possible some of the more striking things that were done. A strong protest was made against divorce; the Portuguese authorities were condemned for religious persecution and maintaining a government which is a republic only in name; the necessity of church education was maintained, and the justice of public appropriations to parochial schools by the State, contended for; conducting Commencement exercises in Protestant churches was disapproved; Mayor Nathan, of Rome, Italy, came in for his share of attention and was severely scored; enlarged educational work among the Indians and negroes was favored; respect was paid to the proselyting methods of the sects, and the press was rapped for printing conspicuously unjust statements and reports injurious to the Catholic Faith; it was suggested that, considering their numerical strength, the Roman Catholics are entitled to have more men in public office; sympathy was expressed for labor, but Socialism was shown little quarter. The following resolution, which to some extent we sympathize with, was adopted:

"We protest against propagandas which embitter the workman, preach a gospel of class hatred, of confiscation of private property, make marriage a mockery, deny paternal rights and responsibility, and proclaim State control and even ownership of the child."

Those who think that the adherents of the Vatican are not to be reckoned with in the establishment of true religion in America are tremendously mistaken. The Romish Church is old, but the weight of years rests lightly upon her. There is no halting in her step; no indication of infirmity in her movements. Her methods of operation have changed somewhat, but her spirit is yet that of the olden time. Despot, dogmatic, intolerant, alert, aggressive, she yet presumes to set forth her claims of supremacy and lay her plans for universal conquest. The brethren who at the General Conference at Birmingham four years ago wanted to expunge from the Methodist Discipline the Articles of Religion dealing with the errors of Romish teaching, need, if they have not already done so, to open their eyes and ears and discover the fact that this semi-pagan denomination lacks much of being a spent force—a thing of the past. A laxity that stands ready to fellowship with every ism in existence that may have in its propaganda a trace of truth, is no proper substitute for true Christian tolerance.

WHY SO?

Some of the church papers have taken the position that because legal proceedings have begun in the battle between the Church and the Vanderbilt Board of Trust for the control of the University, the press of Southern Methodism should lapse into a state of silence. That justice or propriety demands such a course in the present instance, we fail to see. We can readily understand how in the adjudication of cases where the facts remain to be developed and the inflaming of public sentiment might result in injustice being done, it is wise for the press to refrain from discussion. But certainly in the legal contest to which the Church is now a party, no such conditions exist. Both sides have set forth their contentions at great length. The issue has important moral aspects. It is to the interest of the Church that the justice and equity of her cause shall be kept clearly before the general public. Those acting for her desire to withhold nothing. They have issued a ninety-two page pamphlet that the people may become informed as to the salient points of the controversy. They doubtless would be glad to have the various organs of the Church disseminate this information among the people. Wherefore silence when so righteous a cause needs a voice? For our part, we propose to speak out and make such comments as we think are needed from time to time. And a little later we hope to publish for the information of our constituency, the entire Bill of Injunction filed by counsel for the Church. Meanwhile, those specially interested may obtain a copy of this most able and interesting pamphlet by writing to the Methodist Publishing House, at Nashville, Tenn. The price, postpaid, is fifteen cents—the actual cost of printing and mailing. Every preacher should procure a copy, and read and preserve it.

FROM LABOR TO REWARD.

In our last issue reference was made to the critical illness of the Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of Biloxi, at the home of his brother, Dr. J. W. Lipscomb, at Columbus, Miss. At that time he had just undergone a serious operation, and some hope of his recovery was entertained. But the seeming improvement was of brief duration. The dread malady that had fastened itself upon him would not yield even to the skilled surgeon's knife, and it soon became apparent that the brave and patient sufferer was fighting a losing battle. At 8:40 o'clock on Thursday night, November the 17th, 1910, the expected end peacefully came. The illness which thus brought to its earthly close this bright and promising life was of several months' duration. Two or three times since last winter the stricken pastor had been forced to leave his "loved employ" to seek rest and recuperation. But little was it dreamed that he would so soon put off his armor bright and join the victorious host above.

The Mississippi Conference and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have sustained a great loss in the decease of this gifted young minister. His equipment for service was of a very high order. He was born and reared in a home in which the atmosphere was deeply spiritual. A noble Christian father and mother taught him from earliest infancy to hush the Master's name, and laid deep and strong in his youthful soul the solid foundation of upright character. He was well educated, having been graduated from the literary department of the University of Mississippi and the theological department of Vanderbilt University, winning at the latter institution the Founder's Medal. Nature also had richly endowed him. He had a pleasing presence, a winsome personality, and the gift of impressive utterance. His preaching both attracted and helped the people. Though scholarly and conversant with current theology, he yet held firmly to the teaching of the evangelical churches, and his faith in the efficacy of the gospel was strong and unshaken. A consecrated and tactful pastor, he knew how to mingle with his flock and point them to the upward way. For only five years was he permitted to toil in the itinerant ranks—a time all too brief, viewed from a human standpoint, but long enough to be a blessing to many and prove himself a workman that needed not to be ashamed. Before the sun of his life had reached its meridian and while the shadows were yet westward falling—at thirty-one years of age—the summons came, and he went fearlessly forward to meet his Lord and lay the trophies that he had gathered at his blessed feet. Writing of him the day before he went away, his brother, Rev. T. H. Linscomb, who was at his bedside, said: "His faith and hope are inspiring, and his spirit is as sweet as an angel's. He said the other day that he couldn't be happier if already in heaven." And to-day, "The Lord knows my heart. I know him and rejoice in him—my precious Savior, my precious Savior!" Shall we not praise God for a religion that can sustain a dying man like that? These messages floating back from those sweeping through the gates—how they have cheered and heartened the fearful, doubting souls of men! Such a death chamber is less a place for lamentation and tears than for a feeling of triumph and the song of coronation.

Brother Lipscomb was married three or four years ago to Miss Mary Clare Brown, a daughter of Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian, who, with one child, survives him. His remains were taken to the home city of his wife for interment, and there laid away to await the Master's second coming and the trumpet call. May God watch over the bereft, little one, sustain the young widow in her desolation and loneliness, and comfort every heart upon which the shadow of this sorrow has fallen.

REMEMBER THE ADVOCATE.

We trust that the brethren in rounding out the finances for the year will not forget the claims of the Advocate. We have over-due subscriptions in nearly every charge, and we shall greatly appreciate anything that the pastors may do to collect them for us. Our main reliance is upon them at all times. And we urge readers who are in arrears to be certain to hand the money due us to their preachers before they leave for Conference. We invariably have a representative with our books at each of those annual gatherings, and it is a good time to square accounts. A sprinkling of new names upon our files would also tend to make us happy. The Advocate has tried to be a faithful servant, and would like to be able to join with other successful workers in reporting, "Collections in full."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Important Conference notices will be found on Pages 12 and 13.

Mr. and Mrs. T. V. Elzey have changed their residence from New Orleans to Shreveport, La.

Dr. F. N. Parker preached two strong and helpful sermons at Rayne Memorial Church of this city last Sunday.

Homer is making ready for the Louisiana Annual Conference. This will be the third session held in that progressive city.

The Oklahoma Conference at the recent session in Ardmore voted in favor of a division. As now constituted, it embraces fifteen districts.

The enrollment in the Industrial School at the First Church, New Orleans, has reached 399. Additional teachers are needed for this work.

It is Bishop J. M. Thoburn's autobiography which is to begin in the Western Christian Advocate next January—not Bishop Thornton, as it appeared in our "Church News" column last week. We know of no Bishop Thornton.

The new head resident dressmaker at the Wesley House at Biloxi is Miss Mae Long, formerly of Sulphur Springs, Tex., who has been accorded a warm welcome. Miss Drizno, who formerly held this position, has gone to Dallas, Tex.

Rev. L. A. Sims is doing a monumental work in that part of the city in which the Epworth M. E. Church, South, of which he is pastor, is situated. Read the account of what he has accomplished which is given elsewhere in this issue.

We are indebted to Sister T. S. Randle, of Gilbert, La., for subscriptions lately sent the Advocate, and for cheering words. Blessings on this good friend and all who belong to our reading circle in that community.

President Hull of Millsaps College was slated to occupy the pulpit at Long Beach last Sunday morning, and to preach at Gulfport in the evening. As an expounder of the Divine Word, he is forceful and impressive, and the people hear him gladly.

A public meeting of the Mississippi Historical Society will be held at the Methodist Church in Sardis on Tuesday evening, November 29th, when Rev. G. W. Bachman will deliver a semi-centennial address. The occasion promises to be one of much interest.

Rev. H. M. Ellis has been having gratifying success in his meeting at Brookhaven. The general condition of this church is good, and he has been rejoicing in some fine additions. Through the pastor who can see the Lord's work arising in his hands.

We regret to learn that Rev. R. A. Tucker, of Moscow, has been somewhat unwell of late. He has been four years in his present pastorate, where he has wrought successfully and won his way into all hearts. He is one of the growing young ministers of North Mississippi.

Again Chaplain L. A. Randolph has been given marching orders. This time he goes from Fort Thomas, Ky., to Fort Barrancas, Fla. We think that Uncle Sam must evidently be a Methodist. At any rate, he seems to maintain an efficient system for the preachers amenable to his authority.

Rev. W. W. Graves, of Homewood, Miss., reports that things are at high tide in his charge. Good! This means that there has been faithful labor during the preceding months of the year. It is the husbandman who sows and cultivates in the springtime and summer to whom the autumn brings a golden harvest.

A preacher can have no better recommendation than to be able to hold a successful meeting in his own church, doing the preaching himself. This is what the Rev. J. T. Abney has lately done at Twenty-ninth Street, Gulfport. Pastor-evangelists have long been one of the great needs of Southern Methodism.

For some time prior to his death, Rev. E. W. Lipscomb was unable to fill his pulpit at Biloxi. This interesting congregation, however, has not been allowed to go without preaching, the nearby pastors being brought into requisition for this service. The Methodist Church believes in taking care of every flock.

An industrious toiler is the Rev. W. T. Griffin, who has supervision of the missionary work along the Mississippi Gulf Coast. In addition to the responsible duties of his position, he has done considerable revival work during the summer and fall. A short time since he assisted Rev. L. E. Darrow in an interesting meeting at Pascagoula.

Rev. J. E. Denson, presiding elder of the Lafayette District, held the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Lake Arthur charge last Saturday and Sunday. Good reports were made, and all financial obligations will be met. Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir has been in charge of this work for three years, and there is said to be a general demand for his return.

Rev. T. W. Lewis and Rev. R. A. Clark have been transferred from the North Mississippi to the Mem-this Conference, and both stationed in Memphis, the former at First Church, and the latter at Second Church. We heartily congratulate the Methodists of the Bluff City.

Rev. J. M. Morse is rounding out his quadrennium at Gulfport in great favor with his people. He has just closed a successful union meeting in which all of the denominations of the city participated. Brother Morse is one of the most capable and efficient men in the Mississippi Conference, and the charge which secures his services next year may count itself fortunate.

Rev. Theodore Capland is in the midst of a fine meeting at Murphysboro, Illinois. Great throngs are attending the service, and the interest is deep and widespread. Dr. Capland is much impressed with Murphysboro and the surrounding country. His own work at Chicago, St. Louis, has been most auspicious. The congregation recently gave the Doctor and Mrs. Capland a splendid public reception.

The following are some of the appointments of the Oklahoma Conference: Dr. G. B. Winton, presiding elder of the Tulsa District; Rev. J. E. Carpenter, Lawton; H. Rogers, Davis and Oak Ridge; Rev. W. L. Anderson, Ryan. Brother Carpenter preached a sermon before the body which made a profound impression, and by a formal vote the Conference requested its publication in the Methodist Review.

Rev. G. D. Purcell conducted a fruitful meeting at Jena, La., a short time since, in which he had the valuable assistance of Rev. R. H. Harper, of Natchitoches. There were 25 conversions and sixteen additions to the Church. Brother Purcell expects to report in full at Conference. Why shouldn't he? With a good pastor and good people working in co-operation, it is the logical result for success to crown their labors.

The Methodist pulpits of the city were filled last Sunday by Baptist ministers attending the State Conventions as follows: First Church, 7:30 p. m., Rev. C. T. Alexander; Louisiana Avenue, 11 a. m., Rev. J. U. H. Marton; 7:30 p. m., Rev. J. S. Campbell; Carrollton Avenue, 11 a. m., Rev. J. S. Kendrick; 7:30 p. m., Rev. F. Stubblefield; Second Church, 7:30 p. m., Rev. D. P. Lawrence; Parker Memorial, 7:30 p. m., Rev. H. H. Shell.

Rev. W. C. Martin recently held a profitable meeting at Alexander, La., where the Rev. H. R. Singleton, its pastor. Much interest was apparent, and there were twenty-seven accessions to the Church. Brother Singleton is finishing his fourth year in this excellent charge, with 400 people wishing that the time limit had been removed at Asheville. The Louisiana Conference does not contain a more acceptable pastor.

Rev. W. R. Cooper, who has lately been serving the Baptist Church at Itabana, Miss., has received a call from the First Baptist Church at Grenada, one of the choicest congregations of that denomination in the Bayou State, and has signified his acceptance. He is one of our subscribers, and lately had the kindness to commend strongly the work of the editor. We wish Brother Cooper much success in his interesting new field.

The Rev. and Mrs. Isaac L. Peebles, of Meridian, have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Eunice, to Mr. Alva Leslie Brothers. The ceremony will be performed at the South Side Methodist Church, at Meridian, Miss., on Tuesday evening, the twenty-ninth of November, at nine o'clock. The Advocate extends congratulations, and wishes the contracting parties a life of large usefulness and the highest possible earthly happiness.

Rev. W. M. Young, the faithful presiding elder of the Sardis District, states that the charges under his jurisdiction, with one or two exceptions, are in admirable condition. We regret to be informed that Rev. A. F. Moore, of Arkabutla, has been somewhat hindered in his work by sickness in his home, his wife having been ill for some three weeks. We hope that Sister Moore may soon recover from her indisposition and enjoy again her customary strength and vigor.

President J. R. Comptiss, of Grenada College, in an interesting note received a few days since, says: "School is going on remarkably well. I am more than pleased with the character of work being done by our students. The teachers are giving satisfaction. I get out and preach for some of the brethren occasionally and enjoy the privilege. Brother Freeman is suffering with la grippe. Brother Cunningham preached two good sermons for us on Sunday, the 12th inst."

Rev. J. W. Chisholm had a fine day at Camden, Miss., on Sunday, November 13th. Two choice young men were converted and united with the Church; two others also came in by vows, making four in all. We like the ring of this report. A continuous revival is the best variety. Brother Chisholm has been lifting things to pass throughout the year. He has baptized two Enworth League, baptized 40, in-fants, received 26 into the Church, and sent in a number of subscribers to the Advocate.

The many friends of Miss Mary Abarr, of Long Beach, Miss., will be grieved to learn of her death. She is said to have been an exemplary Christian, and was a writer of note. For a time she served as correspondent of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and later of the New Orleans Picayune. Memorial services in her honor were held Sunday evening, November 12, by the King's Daughters and the Woman's Home Mission Society. A sermon appropriate to the occasion was preached by the pastor, Rev. L. E. Alford.

Meridian Woman's College and the Meridian Male College have lately united in a series of revival services which were attended by extraordinary spiritual power. They were conducted by the Rev. E. L. Hyde, of Pennsylvania, who is highly commended by President Beeson both as a man and as an evangelist. Nearly the entire student body was reached by the efforts put forth during the meeting. Dr. Beeson's statement is that when it closed there were perhaps a dozen young ladies and two dozen young men who remained outside of the kingdom.

A personal note from Rev. R. S. Lawson, of Clinton, Arkansas, formerly a member of the North Mississippi Conference, brings the information that he has been unwell nearly ever since his transfer to that State. He feels a keen interest in Mississippi affairs, and says that he must have the Advocate to keep him posted. We trust that a favoring Providence will soon restore our brother's physical vigor and make the outlook brighter for him. If he doesn't improve in the near future, perhaps he had better come home and see what effect the warm welcome of old friends will have.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Carrollton Avenue Church, of New Orleans, observed the "Week of Prayer," from November 14th to the 18th, with gratifying success. All of the services were held in the afternoon, except those on Wednesday and Friday, which were conducted at the evening hour. The attendance was good, and much interest was manifested. Those who led in the exercises were Rev. H. T. Carley, Mrs. Jacob Cohen, Mrs. J. D. Bryson, Mrs. D. C. Worrell, and Mrs. S. A. Mudgett. The missionary spirit of the Society was greatly quickened by this interesting series of meetings.

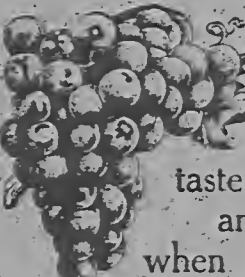

Writing from Oxford, Miss., on the 16th inst., Rev. J. C. Park says: "We will soon meet at Sardis. Our work has gone forward. We have had 65 additions to the Church, and have expended about $2,000 on the parsonage, giving the University charge easily the best preacher's home in the Conference. There are two stories, nine rooms, two large halls, and the house is fitted with all modern conveniences and comforts. This record of success is not unusual with Brother Park. It is his habit to achieve substantial results. We note that he also states that Brother Cunningham, the genial presiding elder of the Oxford District, has been spending himself freely to carry forward the work under his supervision, and that it is his expectation that the charges in his territory will break the record in their reports at Conference. Most cheering is this note of optimism from a section which has been much hurt by immigration within recent years."

Felicity Street Church of this city has been observing the Week of Prayer since last Sunday, under the auspices of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies. The pastor, the Rev. A. S. Lutz, preached an interesting sermon last Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock on "The Call of the Century," and at the evening hour a lecture was given on "Christ as a Missionary," which was illustrated with stereopticon views. Monday night Mrs. Geo. S. Brown gave a talk on "Korea," and Rev. N. E. Joyner by means of the stereopticon presented some views of St. Mark's Hall. Tuesday evening Mrs. J. A. Rice talked entertainingly of "China," and Dr. George S. Brown lectured on "Habit-Forming Drugs." The exercises Wednesday night consisted of an address on "The Responsibility of Parents," by Miss V. Leetham, and an entertaining lecture on "The Moslem World," by Rev. A. I. Townsley. These services throughout were of a high order and awakened much interest.

A dispatch from Marion, Miss., to The Meridian Star on the 12th inst. says: "The people of this community are deeply grieved to learn that Rev. J. W. Ramsey, pastor of the Methodist Church, will preach his farewell sermon here to-morrow. Mr. Ramsey, when the Mississippi Annual Conference meets at Hattiesburg on December the 7th, will on account of ill-health resign his work as a pastor, and will devote himself to out-of-door work in order that he may thoroughly regain his strength. Mr. Ramsey has been with us for only a year, but during this time he has ingratiated himself into the hearts of the people here, and it is with keenest regret that we learn he will be unable to further pursue his work as a minister. His people are united in wishing him a speedy return of good health, and that it will be but a very short time until he will be able to again take up the work that is so dear to his heart and in which he is such a pillar of strength, both to his flock and to his church."

DEATH OF REV. E. W. LIPSCOMB.

There came to this home in Laurel this afternoon, to Steward M. Jones, the sad announcement, by telephone, of the death of Rev. E. W. Lipscomb. I thought of the time when "Wad" entered my Junior class in chemistry at the University of Mississippi, coming from the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Starkville. At the same time there entered Miss Sarah Gillespie, who afterwards married Rev. Isaac D. Borders. They both were bright and accurate students and represented most creditably the two colleges which prepared them for my class. Miss Gillespie had been a very diligent and brilliant student at the I. I. and C. The work and character of both these students commended them strongly to me, and I hold them to this day in most affectionate regard and esteem—one of them as a pure and most talented minister of the gospel; the other as a pious and pure wife of a minister of the same gospel of God. She has removed to the farther side of the continent, going into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature, and he has gone to heaven.

When the Mississippi Conference convened in the Methodist Church in Laurel two years ago, held by the lamented Bishop Ward, Wad Lipscomb and Rev. T. B. Clifford were invited by us to share our hospitality. We can never express our appreciation of the altar services conducted by these two holy men of God, their chaste and ready conversation and their walk before us. Brother Clifford married Miss Lelia Clark, who was also one of my I. I. and C. girls, of whom when she married, Miss Calloway said, "She joined the Mississippi Conference."

LAI D TO REST.

We buried Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of Biloxi, yesterday afternoon in the Magnolia cemetery, Meridian, Miss., by the side of his little daughter who died about three years ago. The funeral services were held in the Central Methodist Church, the following, besides the writer, taking part: G. S. Harmon, W. H. LaPrade, W. H. Lewis, presiding elder of the Meridian District, and O. S. Lewis. His was a most useful life, and his death was triumphant.

W. B. JONES, P. E.

THE DEATH OF LITTLE WILL.

The death angel finds no welcome with us whether he comes in childhood, youth, or age. But, possibly, his visit leaves a deeper sadness when he claims the babe in its mother's arms. Little William H., Jr., the fourth child and only son of Rev. William Horace and Mrs. James Dunton Saunders, has entered into rest, leaving a great shadow on the home. Little Will was born in Gloster, Miss., October 10, 1908, and fulfilled his short life in Vicksburg, Miss., Friday at 12:10 o'clock, November 11, 1910, aged two years, one month, and one day, after a week's illness of pneumonia. All that loving hands and scientific skill could do, availed nothing against that fatal disease.

He was baptized in the faith of our Lord by Bishop W. B. Murrah, and, as a child of the promises, would, doubtless, have grown up to be a useful man had he lived to mature age.

Jesus, who loves little children, took this tender, heartful bud before the blight of winter could mar its bloom. Sin never touched this guiltless babe, who is now "safe in the arms of Jesus." In this confidence the sorrowing parents rest and are comforted.

EPWORTH METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH,
Now Under Process of Construction.

The story of the organization and growth of the little Methodist Church at the corner of Banks and Scott Sts. sounds like a romance. Three years ago the Louisiana Annual Conference appointed to this work its first pastor, the Rev. L. A. Sims. At this time the organization was incomplete. In the three years the "preaching place" has come to be a church with a hundred and twenty members. The Sunday school now has an enrollment of more than two hundred and fifty. The Epworth League is fifty strong. So rapid has been the growth of the church in all its departments that the little frame building will no longer accommodate the large congregations. When the church was first organized it was under the direction of the City Epworth League Union, and was for the large part supported by it. To-day the church has its own official board and officers. It will no longer look to the League for support. It becomes a regular church, and one of the best in the Louisiana Annual Conference. The little frame building is now being replaced by a handsome brick structure that will give a seating capacity of approximately six hundred people. It will be built after the latest model in church architecture. The furniture will all be of the very best. The church will be heated by means of a furnace. In addition to the auditorium and Sunday school rooms there will be special rooms in the basement designed for different kinds of institutional work, such as sewing school, reading room, gymnasium etc. As rapid as has been the growth of this church, and as promising as the future is, it still stands in need of the help that friends and other churches may give. The Methodists of New Orleans have a just right to be very proud of the Epworth Church. It needs help now, because of the greatness of its undertaking, but the time is near at hand when it will be in position to give help.

It is important that this request be complied with to the letter, if possible, so that there shall be no misunderstanding with any member of the class. Those members who will take an examination on any book will please be supplied with paper, pen, and ink.

ROBT. SELBY,
Acting Secretary.

FROM THE AUDITING COMMITTEE

Dear Brethren: The Committee has mailed to every preacher-in-charge in the Mississippi Conference report blanks for the Annual Conference, and it is hoped that these will reach you promptly; should you not receive one in due time, please notify the undersigned and another will be sent you. We have enclosed some suggestions which we earnestly trust will be observed, as it will save confusion and error. There is a great deal of labor connected with the auditing of the reports, and we feel sure that you are quite willing to make it as easy as possible. Fraternally,

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its misery. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, effective home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrhs successfully.

His method is unique, and other, it is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a simple, direct and thorough treatment of any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs, so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It breaks the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as usual medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. F. W. Blosser, 204 Vinton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, whether in the head, ears, throat, chest, lungs, or elsewhere. He will also send you a free illustrated booklet, "A Simple Home Remedy."

THE ART OF ETERNAL YOUTH.

Not to "live always," but to "always be young" should be the effort of every man, woman and child. To reach a ripe old age is not only a great privilege, but also commendable, but to carry with you into your later years a depleted body, unfit for anything, indicates neglect and is inexcusable. Even then, science has provided for this neglect, so it is no longer necessary for you to say "I am getting old," or to give up active life simply because they have piled up sixty or seventy years of age.

It is natural that a dissipated body, accustomed to irregular habits, should play out sooner than a body carefully guarded; therefore, if you would be well, strong and vigorous always, protect your health. You say, "I would, but I don't know how." Just a little common sense reasoning will tell you how. To illustrate, you know that had blood is the prime cause of all bodily pains and diseases, because the blood is the only agent that directly nourishes the body, therefore it is essential to keep the blood in perfect condition and this is the easiest thing in the world to do if you will simply use W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron. It makes pure, rich, nourishing blood, stimulates the liver and kidneys, strengthens heart action, invigorates the nerves, insures proper digestion, creates a hearty appetite, and is the secret of eternal youth, for both old and young. Get a bottle of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron from your druggist for $1.00, and if you don't see an improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of the contents, take it back and he will refund your money. If your druggist can't supply you, send his name and $1.00 to the Bull Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo., and they will send it direct, express paid.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

IMPORTANT.

Dear Brethren: For the convenience of those attending the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference at Homer, La., I am trying to secure a special train on the L. & N. W. from Hagen to Homer, Tuesday, December 6th.

All from the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts, and from part of the Lafayette District, can come via the L. & N. W. leaving New Orleans at 6:10 Monday, or Baton Rouge at 9 p.m. Monday, taking a sleeper for Hagen, arrive at Hagen at 5:10 a.m. Tuesday, take Homer special and arrive in Homer at 11 a.m.

All from the Monroe District can leave Monroe via V. S. & P. at 7:05 a.m. Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbsland.

All from the Shreveport District can leave Shreveport via V. S. & P. at 6:20 a.m. Tuesday, meeting the Homer special at Gibbs.

Owing to the reduced rate given, it will require a guarantee of one hundred passengers from the two points, Hagen and Gibbs, to secure the special. Therefore, let everyone who will come via either of the above-named routes, meeting the special at either Hagen or Gibbs, please write me by return mail, stating at which point you will join the special.

Those south of Hagen and east of Monroe can make connection with the special via L. R. & N. only.

If we do not secure the special, all who do not reach Homer at 5:20 p.m. Monday, will be delayed in reaching here until 5:20 p.m. Tuesday.

By running the special it will give time for all work of the examining committee to be completed Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Awaiting your early instruction, I remain, Fraternally yours,
 WM. H. COLEMAN.

ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

Applicants for admission on trial in the Louisiana Conference will meet the committee at the M. E. Church, South Homer, La., Dec. 6, at 10 a.m. The examination will be written. The subjects are: Discipline, Bank's Manual of Christian Doctrine, Wesley's Sermons on Justification by Faith, and The Witness of the Spirit, and the ordinary branches of English education with special reference to bookkeeping. The textbook in history will be Swinton's Outline of General History.

Each applicant will present a written sermon of his own composition.

PAUL M. BROWN,
 Chairman of Committee.

NOTICE.

Dear Brethren: If any member of the Louisiana Annual Conference has not received notice of his assignment for entertainment, please write us at once. It may be that we have not secured the correct postoffice address of every member and Conference official, and we are very anxious not to overlook any one.

Fraternally yours,

ARTHUR T. PIERSON.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 27.
COME, OUR LORD.

1 Cor. xvi. 22.

First Sunday in Advent.

The emphasis that was placed by primitive Methodism upon the appropriate observance of the important days of the Christian year was diminished, but is being recovered by present-day Methodism. This revival of observance of the Christian year has the advantage of making the calendar itself recall the gospel story. The season of Advent (the period including the four Sundays preceding Christmas), coming toward the end of the year, abounds in suggestion of much of the teaching that was characteristic of the closing period of our Lord's ministry. During his earthly ministry it became increasingly evident that it was no part of his program to fulfill those prophecies that had special reference to the kingship and glory of the Messiah. Against the remonstrances of his disciples he set before himself a way of suffering. (Matt. xvi. 21.) The current ideal of the Messiah was more nearly that in Isaiah lxiii. 1-6, than in Isaiah liii. 1; but Jesus identified himself with the suffering servant of the Lord rather than the king who should reign in righteousness. (Isa. xxxii. 1.) The Advent teaching couples the two parts of the Messianic hope: the despised and rejected Savior is to come again at the end of the world in his kingdom and with his Father's glory.

This is the thought of Advent—the Lord's coming again. Our topic text is a solemn warning: "Maranatha!" is a phrase preserved to us from the common language of the Palestine of Christ's day, meaning, "Come, our Lord!" The reason for the retention of the original is that the words were frequently on the lips of the early Christians, who lived in anticipation of the speedy return of their Lord. Here they are used in connection with an awful denunciation: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema!" The doleful prospects of judgment upon the wicked are connected with the same event toward which the righteous looked with anticipation of so great joy.

Love and Fear are Alternatives. One or the other predominates as we contemplate the coming again of our Lord. St. Paul says: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema! Come, our Lord." To those who love Christ his coming again will be the realization of a great desire; to those who have rejected his love the same event will be the revival of memories of their sin against him, the awakening of conscience. The re-deemed children of his love long to be with him; the wayward children of this world cannot calmly contemplate being where he is.

The Fearlessness that Comes of Perfect Love is a Corrective of the Over-confidence of Pride. One may contemplate the coming again of our Lord in a dry, uninterested way, and have no feelings at all with reference to the event. That is not because his heart yearns for the presence of his Savior, but because the whole matter of his personal relation to Christ is pushed from the region of consciousness into that of mere theory or impractical belief. One may recite the creed, "I believe that he shall come to judge the quick and the dead," and at the same time live as if there were no such prospect. Freedom from fear that is obtained in this way is quite different from that which one experiences in the consciousness of Christ's love. One is a purely negative state—like that of an idiot on a doomed vessel driven by a hurricane on a lee shore; the other is the assurance of the mariner whose anchor holds in the depths beneath the turpid surface. One may experience no fear because he denies his sins. This is the immunity of pride, and must soon pass when realities instead of the figments of our own brain appear. One may be free from fear while confessing his sins because conscious of the forgiving love of God in Christ.

The Prospective Coming of the Lord Does Not Create the Anathema Which St. Paul Pronounces to be the Lot of Those Who Love Not the Lord Jesus; it Brings to the Light that Which Is: A life without Christ is one chained to sin; it is without the touch of the infinite Spirit, by which it is endowed with eternal life; it is without the joy that comes of the harmony of the whole nature with God. Where the gospel has been sincerely preached to men; they have either received Christ or rejected him; to have rejected him is to have smitten one's own soul, to have inflicted a deadly hurt, to have started upon a downward course. Love divine having been rejected, one is launched upon a career in which love has no place; it is the curse of a loveless life.

Let Us Use Our Imagination, Aided By God's Word and the Holy Spirit's Ministry, to Picture to Ourselves the Lord's Coming Again. The teaching is in figurative language, but the prospect is real. It is thus we may test ourselves. Do I so love him that I should welcome him were he to appear to-day? If I fear his coming, why?—Epworth Era

ATTENTION, PLEASE!

I hereby request all the subscribers to the Endowment Fund of Millsaps College, to send me at once the amount now due. If this is impossible, please hand it to your pastor and he will bring it to Conference. We must have every dollar in hand by December 1st or we will lose much. This request applies to North Mississippi only. T. W. LEWIS, Columbus, Miss.

SARAH CUTRIGHT was born in Copiah County, Miss., Sept. 26, 1858, and departed this life May 23, 1910, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Carroll, near Mitchell, Sabine parish, La. After an illness of eight months, she quietly passed away. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when very young and lived a consistent member until death. Her conversion was bright and her life consecrated. Her end was peace. She leaves a large number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. But we sorrow not as those that have no hope. She has gone from us. Dear aunt, we miss you in our home. Since separation is our lot, meeting is our hope. We will meet you in the kingdom above. Her niece, LILLY CARROL.

Dr. G. W. MATTOX was born in Green County, Ga., Jan. 11, 1822, and died at his home near Homer, La., Oct. 1st, 1910, aged eighty-eight years, eight months and twenty days. Dr. Mattox's early manhood was spent in Alabama, where he began the practice of his profession. In 1858, he came to Louisiana and settled near Homer, at which place he continued to reside until his death. Soon after the Civil War he ceased the practice of medicine and devoted his time to agricultural pursuits, in which, as in his profession, he was very successful. Dr. Mattox was married twice; first to a Miss White, of Georgetown, who only lived for a few years. His second marriage was to Miss Harriet Hall, of Georgia, who also passed from him into that unseen realm near a quarter of a century ago. To these two unions God gave ten children, of whom six are living. In early life Dr. Mattox united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he continued loyal and faithful until his death. He was a good citizen who will be greatly missed. May the one in whom he trusted be the refuge and strength of the relatives and many friends whose hearts are made sad at his departure. His pastor,
W. H. COLEMAN.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. GERTRUDE ETHEL ELLIS PEARCE, was born at Harrisonburg, La., Nov. 22, 1888, and died at the same place, June 29, 1910. At the age of eleven years she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She early manifested a right conception of duty and willingness to do her best to make the world better. She was a charter member of the first Epworth League organized at Estherwood, throwing into all its departments her wise, untiring and zealous efforts in making its work effective. This religious characteristic marked her beautiful life throughout. Soon after entering her teens she became a teacher, in which vocation she delighted in brightening the lives of others. The society into which she entered was made purer and more elevated by her presence. She was married on the 23d of December, 1909, to Mr. Richard Isaac Pearce, which proved a happy union of hearts to the very last. She leaves a devoted husband, a loving Christian mother, and a brother and sister to mourn her untimely death. Her face will be seen no more by those she loved and helped. She will be seen no more in the home and in her place in the church, but we know where to find her. She rests with the Lord. God comfort the bereaved ones.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas God in his wisdom has transferred from his earthly abode to his celestial home Mr. WM. BRANTON, the founder and leader of the Methodist Church, of Hathorn, Miss., be it resolved:

First—That we, the members of said church, together with members of other friends, deeply deplore the loss of so great a power for good in our church and community, and especially our church, which is only six years old, and greatly in need of wise leadership; but we are thankful to have had Brother Branton's good influence for this length of time, and I feel that he is living the life which joy and happiness are forever.

Second—That his scholarly interpretations of the Scriptures and his fervent prayers were a benediction to all who heard them.

Third—That his liberal contributions to the church and his regular attendance are examples we should all strive to follow, and let his unoccupied soul remind us more and more of our duty to step forward.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

Dear Brother, Mark: Please announce through your columns the following:

In response to the call made upon the Sunday schools of Mississippi Conference through the Advocate, Sept. 8, 1910, and further by postal card addressed to each Sunday school superintendent, asking for aid for a needy church, I have received contributions from the following Sunday schools November 15th:

South McComb, Martin, Fernwood, Bentonla, Waterhole, Meridian, Taylor, Deasonville, Chicago, East McComb, Hernandville, Binnville, Daisy, Madden and Hazlehurst. Gross amount received—$37.50.

About 175 Sunday schools yet to hear from. How do you expect to erect this church unless you send in your returns.

To the Sunday schools of Mississippi Conference. Your brother, Z. Z. KINTON.

The EDISON PHONOGRAPH

gives just the right volume of sound for the home

The volume of sound produced by the Edison Phonograph, while perfect in its reproduction of the music or voice, is not loud, strident, noisy or ear-piercing.

If you have ever lived with a sound-reproducing machine that was too loud, you will know what it means to have an Edison which is just loud enough. Many sound-reproducing machines are sold altogether on the argument that they are loud. It is very easy to make a loud Phonograph.

It is an art to make a Phonograph which gives proper value to each kind of music and all within the compass of an ordinary parlor or sitting room. Go to any dealer and hear an Edison, but remember you are hearing it in a store, not in your home. If he tries to sell you any other make insist upon having both kinds sent to your home, with some Records of your own selection. Remember, too, that the Phonograph is the only Edison machine.

There is an Edison Phonograph at whatever price you wish to pay, from the Gem at $12.50 to the Amberola at $200.00. Edison Standard Records, 50c.; Edison Amberol Records, 50c.; Edison Grand Opera Records, 75c. to $2.00.

Brothers, let us not boast our cleverness, sin is another name for folly, folly is another name for sin. We are less wise than the fowl of the air, less wise than the beasts which perish. In some part of the Tyrol where the shooting has been very severe, the birds of passage are said to deflect from their usual line of flight so that they may avoid the dangerous districts; but we persist in crossing dangerous places although we know countless numbers have fallen victims to the fowler, and this we do from one generation to another. Darwin tells us that animals learn from experience, imitating each other's caution, and no animal can be caught long in the same kind of trap. But man is far less cautious. The devil keeps on using a few old traps smelling of the blood of ruined generations, and he has little need either to hide his traps or to change them; the same old baits—thirty pieces of silver, a wedge of gold, a rag of purple, a pretty face, a bottle, are abundantly and sorrowfully successful one age after another. If there is any acuteness about us, let us show it by letting evil things alone. Do not sup with the devil, no matter what may be the length of your spoon, the depth of your cunning, the energy of your defense; if you eat of his supper, be sure when the unclean carnival is over you will find you have got only the bones, the cayenne pepper, and the bill. A man is a fool the moment he departs from the line of severe righteousness, equity, pureness. If you are wise, be timid; you are safe in your sincerity; in sophistry and stratagem you are lost.

(c) Men blind themselves to the lessons of history by presuming on their strength. We conclude that those who fell, fell because they were weak, and we fondly give ourselves credit for decision and strength. "I know where to draw the line, where to pull up, where to put my foot down; they will find no weakness in me." Thus we perplex, deceive and destroy ourselves. Dear brethren, we may feel strong to-day. In the power of innocence and the preventive grace of God we may really be strong; but the moment we surrender ourselves to iniquity our strength begins to evaporate, and soon we are weakness itself. Men forget that once committed to a downward course they soon acquire a momentum not to be broken, not to be controlled. Dallying with gay society, with skepticism, with guilty pleasure, with sordid life, we are soon carried beyond all our calculations. Some time ago the papers told us about a California stage-driver, who was dying, and who in his delirium kept on exclaiming: "I am on the down-grade, and I can't reach the brake." Many a soul to-day is swimming down the dizzy steep and cannot stop. Men, in confusion and horror, are saying to themselves, "I am going too far, I ought to stop, I ought to have stopped some time ago," but they can't reach the brake; they cannot get the will-power into play, and so they dash on faster and faster until they, too, topple over the brink, and add another contribution to the mighty sum of the world's disasters. When a man begins to meddle with things of greed, and appetite, and passion, and vanity, he is no longer the man that he was—his vision is impaired, his imperial faculties are dethroned, he is carried away as with a flood. Brethren, to know where to stop in an evil course is to stop before you begin it. A drop too much of the cup of evil is the first drop.

Let us not presume on circumstances. Strange things, indeed, occur in the material world; men are horn who can drink deadly poisons with impunity; there are men whom serpents will not bite, whom fire will not burn. Nature has some strange caprices; she indulges in eccentricities which glaringly violate all that concerns the established order. But such rare violations of the law of the world are not repeated once in the realm of morals. God hath fashioned our hearts alike, and no extraordinary conjunction of circumstances can save us from the doom that hath overtaken the multitude of transgressors. Let us not presume on cleverness. The big blunder is always made by the clever. Be confident that the kingdom of evil has existed far too long, and attained a far too subtle perfection to be nonplussed by any diplomacy of ours. Let us not presume on strength. The strongest castle in which treason lurks has no foundation, it is already lost, and the thought of sin is treason, paralyzing the conscience, sapping the will. Amongst those who have gone down to ruin were men favored more than we are, wiser than we are, stronger than we are. May God save us all from presumptuous sin, which in our case is any sin at all.

If God had pointed us to one clear consequence of transgression it ought to have been enough for us, but we have before our eyes a thousand solemn admonitions. History teems with warnings. And you need not go to remote days for awakening convincing examples. Dante, in his vision of hell, tells how he saw sepulchers there in which living creatures were entombed, who Make themselves audible by doleful sighs.

In all our cemeteries are rich men, gay men, indulgent men, selfish, sordid, sensual men, who, being dead, yet speak, and who from their graves beseech us to shun those vices by which they were dishonored and destroyed. Let us not be blind, deaf, defiant. This time to put the glass to our blind eye has no suspicion in it of courage, has no presage of victory; it means, it means only, cowardice and crushing, eternal defeat.

Really, brethren, in the name of all that is sacred, what do we want with things of error, of license, of manages you? Is not the rational universe big enough for us, is it not rich enough? When the prodigal son came to himself, he said: "In my father's house is bread enough and to spare. Why did he not know that before? There were bread, fish, dainties, music, dancing, and everything else that was glorious and gracious in the father's house, but the foolish fellow left it for swine and swill. Therefore, our Father's house is big enough, there is bread enough, things of knowledge, beauty, music, friendship, liberty, blessing, hope, there is bread enough and to spare. Stay in your Father's house, do not go outside it for nothing; rejoice in the Father's love, use his gifts, and not abusing them, and you shall be satisfied as with the finest of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock." "This their way is a great folly, yet their posterity follow in their steps." Yes, there is a great procession where they take hold of the path that leads to hell. Oh, do not join them. "Be ye followers of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises." Join the noble procession that moves upward, and with them shine as the stars forever and ever.

THE TWELVE BEST BOOKS FOR A YOUNG PREACHER.

By Bishop E. D. Monzon.

A little more than two years ago, at the call of the Church, I laid down the pastorate and went to Southwestern University. At that time I wrote a letter to the Texas Christian Advocate in which I said this to say: "As everybody knows, we are living now at a time of considerable theological unrest. Many young men come upon certain questions after they have entered the ministry; and, because they did not have somebody to guide them, they are sadly confused, and their preaching loses its note of authority. As a pastor I have bought up every opportunity to read and learn the best that has been said and taught concerning the great questions of theology. The old theology I have read for many years, and I am not altogether unfamiliar with the teachings of the newer schools. I have learned that some things are worth while and some are not. The things which make for salvation; the things that support the soul in time of battle and trial; the things that give peace and victory in the hour of death—these are the truths which will save the world, and these alone are the things which are worth while. If, in these days of unrest, I shall be able to direct the preachers of tomorrow to a better understanding of the everlasting truths of the Christian gospel, I shall feel satisfied that there has come to me the greatest opportunity now offered by the Church in Texas."

My love of young preachers is greater to-day than ever, and my desire to be of service to them is stronger. John Wesley had some very plain things to say to his preachers. He told them that they were not more useful because they were not more holy, and more knowing. He urged them to spend at least five hours a day in study. "But I have no time for reading," he heard some men say. He replied sharply: "Contract a taste for it by use, or return to your trade." I believe in young men. "Never be afraid to trust young men," wrote Bishop Ashbury to Bishop McKendree. Our young preachers come with the highest motives to the door of the Conference. Their purpose is to make the most of themselves and to do the most possible for the extension of the Kingdom of God. For the benefit of these young men I am writing today. I wish to suggest the twelve best books for a young preacher, I am writing out of my experience as a pastor, not from the standpoint of a university professor. My list is as follows:

1. The English Bible. That is obvious enough; and yet it is of such importance that I mention it first. Concerning everything else the preacher can afford to be an amateur; but concerning the Bible he must be a specialist. Here is not merely our highest religious classic; here is God's supreme message to man. The King James Version, on account of the beauty of its English and by reason of centuries of reverent use, will, for many years to come, be the Bible of the people. The young preacher who desires to learn as much as possible about the Word of God will also use in his study the American Standard Revision, published by Thos. Nelson & Sons. And he will also find that "The Modern Speech New Testament," by the late Richard Francis Weymouth, is of greater value than an entire set of certain commentaries which he might buy.

The Bible is under criticism in these days. You will not accomplish much good by denouncing the critics, unless you yourselves know your Bibles.

Because of the importance of a knowledge of the Bible I will mention next a few books which will be of service in studying God's Word.

2. "The Days of His Flesh," by Prof. David Smith. Twenty-five years ago Farrar's "Life of Christ" was widely read. I recall now that, during my first year in the Conference, I read carefully that book, and preached on the great events in the life of Christ. Prof. David Smith's book is scholarly and devout. The young preacher who studies carefully through this book will not want for material for new sermons during the next year.

3. "The Pauline Epistles," by J. D. Shaw. St. Paul is the great interpreter of Christ. The gospel as Paul preached it is the gospel which has made the Christian Church. Whenever Christianity, under its inherent self-corrective power, has come to a revival, it has always been a revival of Christianity as Paul preached it. So it was in Luther's day, and so it was in Wesley's. If a preacher will study the epistles of Paul with this book in his hand, he will date time from that study.

The next two books I name are from the pen of a reverent and conservative Old Testament scholar. I would not be understood as endorsing all the views which are set forth in these two books; but since the Old Testament has been made almost a new book in recent years, that is to say, since its message is so much better understood and since from a literary standpoint the Old Testament is the greatest book in the world, I suggest the careful study of:

4. "The Divine Library of the Old Testament," and 5. "The Doctrine of the Prophets," by A. F. Kirkpatrick.

6. "The Church's One Foundation," by W. Robertson Nicoll. Our British brethren are far in advance of us in one particular. Many of our young scholars are using the new scholarship not to build with, but to destroy; our British brethren are using the new scholarship to grip more firmly than ever the fundamental truths of the gospel. Says Dr. Nicoll: "The Church cannot without disloyalty and cowardice quarrel with criticism as such; it is not held absolutely to any theory of any book. It asks, and it is entitled to ask, the critics, 'Do you believe in the Incarnation and the Resurrection of Christ?' If his reply is in the affirmative, his process and results are to be examined earnestly and calmly. If he replies in the negative, he has missed the way, and has put himself outside the Church of Christ. If he refuses to answer, his silence has to be interpreted."

7. "Jesus and the Gospel," by James Denney. Denney teaches that "not the Son, but the Father alone has a place in the Gospel as Jesus proclaimed it." Prof. Denney shows that not in primitive Christianity, but in the teaching of Jesus himself, Christ is central and supreme in Christianity. This is easily one of the greatest books of the last quarter of a century.

8. "The Spiritual Principle of the Atonement," by J. Scott Lidgett. To neglect the atonement in modern preaching is to neglect the central theme of the gospel—the very thing which makes it a gospel, "good news" to lost men. The religion of Christ is more than "the religion of the Incarnation"; it is specifically "the religion of redemption." The central message of the gospel is: "In Christ God is reconciled; he is reconciled to God." The most important work on the atonement since Dr. Dale's great book is the volume which I have just named.

9. "Lectures on Preaching," by Phillips Brooks. Preaching is the greatest work that God can intrust to man. Says Bishop Brooks: "Truth through Personality is our description of real preaching. The truth must come through the person, not merely over his lips, nor merely into his understanding and out through his pen. It must come through his character, his affections, his whole intellectual and moral being. It must come genuinely through him."

10. "The Tongue of Fire," by William Arthur. Have you never read this Methodist classic written by that true saint and fine scholar, William Arthur? I bought my copy when a college student. I have read and treasured it through these years. Buy it and read it, and pray that the promise of the baptism "with the Holy Ghost and with fire" may be fulfilled in you.

11. "Wesley and His Century," by Fitchett. This is more than a biography and history; it is an interpretation of Methodism. The careful reading of this book will quicken the intellect and make the heart to burn.

12. "Christianity and the Nations," by Robert E. Speer. My attention was just recently called to this great book. Methodism has been missionary from the first. Before the time of modern missions, had Wesley said: "I look upon all the world as my parish." In a statesmanlike and Christianlike manner, the great theme of the evangelization of the world is discussed in this volume. At the very opening of his ministry the young preacher should interest himself in this great subject. It will broaden his horizon; it will enlarge his faith; it will lift his people.

To study carefully a few great books is much better than to read carelessly many books. And nothing is more injurious intellectually than "systematic" reading—reading which follows the impulse of the moment, or springs out of the necessity of hastily getting together something for the next sermon. If one will carefully and systematically study the Bible and a few great books, one will never be at a loss for a text for the next Sunday's sermon. For reading makes a full man.

Every man must patiently abide his time. He must wait. Not in listless idleness, not in useless pastime, not in querulous defection, but in constant, steady, cheerful endeavor, always willing, fulfilling and accomplishing his task, that when the occasion comes, he may be equal to the occasion. —Longfellow.

AN OLD-TIME CAMP MEETING AND ELSE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

Some said that it would be a failure. The devil was with that crowd. Some hoped and prayed that it might be a failure. The devil is opposed to good, old-time camp meetings. Don't know that he is opposed to the way some camp meetings are conducted. Where God sits asking, rules in and reigns over his co-laborers; where the Holy Spirit has the "right of way," where those who minister in holy things from time to time come direct from a throne of grace into the pulpit, with a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost, with head and heart full of solid gospel truths, such as God would have them feed hungry souls on; keep themselves hid from view; preach Christ and him crucified; and not themselves; then trust God through Christ, by the agency of the Holy Spirit, to make the application, good will surely be the result. But if a little fellow tries to impress the people with the fact that he is a man of great learning, superior preaching abilities, wonderful oratorical powers, etc., the thing will dry up, fizz out, and the whole thing will be a flat failure. Then some brother will say, "The days of camp meetings are past," and another little fellow will say, "Amen," and the devil will skip and jump, and cry out, "I told you so."

But this camp meeting was run on a different plan. The pastor had supplied the people with new song books from our publishing house, "Revival Praises." Also, he had an understanding with the supporters of the meeting, and the singers as well. He had everything well in hand when the meeting began. A large crowd was on hand at the first service. A song was sung by the congregation, after which was a prayer by Brother Roberts, the pastor on the American Circuit. Then followed the consecration service. The singers were first invited to kneel at the altar. They responded promptly. Then local preachers and others were invited to come. Then followed the prayer of consecration by this scribe. We had a melting time. The revival spirit was there. Then followed some sweet singing by the choir. I suppose about fifty nice young people went from their knees; many of them weeping, into the choir, ready for service. Then followed the regular opening service, prayer and sermon by Rev. B. W. Lewis, of Scooba, Miss. The first service was a success, and we all felt good. I saw and felt that the old-time camp meeting fire was just the same to-day it was seventy years ago. When we go to God for help, in a proper spirit, we find that he is the same to-day that he was in the days of the "Son of man," the days of Luther, Wesley and others. When and where there is a failure, the trouble is with man, not from a lack of readiness and willingness on God's part.

The meeting ran from Thursday night, the 20th of October, to the 25th of October, 5 days and 6 nights. Every service was a success. The preaching was done by Brothers W. B. Jones, P. E.; L. A. Darsey, of Scranton; B. W. Lewis, of Scooba, and H. P. Lewis, of Jackson, and a local preacher, Brother Cox. The behavior from first to last was good. There were many conversions, exclamations, etc., and ten to twelve joined the Church. Some said that it was the best camp meeting that had been held at New Prospect Camp Grounds in fifteen years. Why? They started right. "Start out in life right, continue right, and you will go out right. Give a boy the right start in life, and in nine cases out of ten, if not ninety-nine out of a hundred, he will end his earthly career right. God is not slack concerning his promises as some men count slackness." Read Proverbs, 22:6.

New Prospect Camp Ground was organized in 1850. J. S. Calhoun was P. C.; Dr. T. S. West, P. E. Both were present. Rev. J. M. Weems played the first prayer and preached the first sermon. It has been destroyed twice by fire and once by wind. Yet it survives. Some one during the meeting said to the pastor, J. M. Lewis: "Who is running this camp meeting?" "I am," said the pastor. Then, said the other, "If it proves a failure, it is yours; if it is a success, it is ours." It was a success, so it was ours. The good people were so nice to the old superannuate and his wife that we fell in love with them.

BACKWARD GLANCES.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

XII.

There was a net increase in church membership during my pastorate in Franklin of fifty-two, and more than one hundred professions of saving faith, but convictions and professions were not as satisfactory as I had seen. Here arises a question: Why is it that convictions are deeper and professions brighter with a rural population than with the wealthier and more intelligent in towns and cities?

Our health, self and wife, was very poor the third year, and I requested a change, and was appointed to Opelousas to succeed Dr. J. A. Parker. We had a nice parsonage, which was well furnished, a good old church building, and a good salary and some apparent success.

Conference met in Crowley January 6th, with Bishop Hendrix as president. Before opening the Conference, the Bishop dedicated the new church at Lafayette. This church was built during the pastorate and under the direction of L. T. Reames, who is a church and parsonage builder, a good bicycle rider, and they tell him that he can preach, too. We had an interesting session of Conference. Doctors: J. D. Barber, Tigert, Atkins and Morrison visited us; yes, and Bishop Holsey colored. These visiting brethren each had a speech to say, and Dr. W. C. Black delivered his lecture one night on the "Immortality of the Soul," and we all listened. It was grand.

One of the connectional officers was announced to preach in the Methodist Church one night, and Bishop Holsey in the colored Methodist church at the same hour. R. P. Howell and myself plotted to slip off and hear Holsey, and he mumbled on entering the church we found Fitzgerald Parker, Tom Carter, and a dozen or more of our preachers there. We had a good sermon, and Tom Carter closed with prayer. While our Lord saves white men and calls them to preach, he saves the black and the red and calls them to preach, too. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." My next appointment was Natchitoches, and Ragan's Chapel, six miles in the country. Natchitoches Methodism had then a neat frame church, a weak membership, and no parsonage, and no help from any source. We spent a very pleasant year, but asked to be changed at the close. I had a few good helpers there. One of the most useful that I ever had was a teacher in the State Normal College in Natchitoches, Mrs. Lizzie McVay, a daughter of our venerable Dr. C. W. Carter.

My next appointment was "Valley," as it was called, lying on the E. & A. R. R. between Minden and Stamps. It was at that time "without form and void," right in the woods; no parsonage and no head. We stayed two or three weeks with the late E. C. Hodges and family. We finally settled in Springhill, a mill town, rented a house and went to housekeeping. We moved there in January in a severe spell of weather. Got moved late one afternoon into our little unceiled house of two rooms, and found a few lights out of the windows. I labored hard to get my heater adjusted, and a bedstead up, but failed, and as there was no way to lock up the house, we stayed there and slept on the floor. The next morning I had lumbago, and could barely dress myself and walk. We had no wood, and it was snowing, but some strange neighbors supplied us. Two or three days later we received a donation consisting of a delivery wagon load of groceries. February 12th was that wonderful cold weather, the mercury dropping to ten degrees below zero—the coldest time of my ministerial life and less prepared for it. Early in the spring P. O. Lowrey came by invitation and held a good meeting, resulting in ten or twelve professions and eleven joined the church. We had a good Sunday school and a fine singing class. For a bell to call the people together we took a broken circular saw and adjusted it to a small tree, and struck it with a piece of metal. The exposure that winter was hard on us. Wife was generally up, but not well during the year. I suffered greatly from lumbago almost half the time. One Sunday that year my appointment was four miles east of town, and I could only walk with my hands on my knees, yet I filled my appointment, walked back, rang the bell, lighted the schoolhouse and preached again. The first year I paid house rent, but the second year I was given my choice of houses free of rent.

Now, my work seems to be over, and by God's grace I have almost conquered self. One of my greatest faults has been when receiving injustice, as I thought from any of my brethren, to retort with sharp words, and if not convenient to speak words, to write them. If I have thus offended any reader of the Advocate, I beg pardon. My heart has nothing in it but love.

AS TO INCREASING THE NUMBER OF DISTRICTS.

By reference to the Louisiana Conference Minutes for 1909 it will be seen that last year the number of appointments were as follows: Alexandria District, 18; Baton Rouge District, 22; Monroe District, 18; Ruston District, 19; Crowley District, 22; Shreveport District, 24; making a total of 133. To divide this by 12, the number of Sundays in each quarter, we have 10.7. So, to have a Sunday at each Quarterly Conference as the appointments stood last year, we would have ten and one-half districts, without providing for this and next year's increase.

That such service from the presiding elder is very desirable, there can be no question, and the only problems to be solved in increasing the number of districts to that point is the question of manning and financing. When the office is properly magnified, every twentieth man engaged in superintending, holding revivals, helping to build churches, conducting institutes, etc., would not seem an extravagance in the use of men, and could be afforded. And, going back to the statistics of last year, we can get some light on the financing problem, these districts in order having paid the following to their presiding elders salaries: Alexandria, $1,609; Baton Rouge, $1,942; New Orleans, $2,261; Monroe, $1,909; Ruston, $1,972; Crowley, $2,668; Shreveport, $2,444, making a total of $14,805. Allowing that we could make a new district every time we could get a salary of $1,500, without any increase this year or next, we would have 9.8 districts, or, with the increase, easily ten districts—the Crowley, Shreveport and New Orleans Districts paying almost enough, at a normal growth, to support two men each, and the Ruston, Monroe and Baton Rouge Districts not far behind. But allowing that the divisions could not be exact, and that the question of a district parsonage would have to be looked after on the new districts, we could easily have two or three new ones, and thus let our ecclesiastical divisions in some degree keep pace with our growth.

P. O. LOWREY.

MORE DISTRICTS WANTED.

Dear Dr. Meek: I want to endorse every word that Rev. J. M. Alford says in this week's Advocate in regard to the need of new districts in the Louisiana Conference. I fear he has waited too late to begin the agitation of the matter for the next Conference, but hope it may be brought up and a demand made of the powers that be to create more. The Shreveport District Conference of 1909 passed almost unanimously a resolution memorializing the Annual Conference to make some changes in this respect, but for some reason, or through the negligence of some one, the matter was not brought up. I should very much like to see the districts smaller, and as a delegate to the coming Conference at Homer shall use my best endeavors to bring this to pass. Our charge pays the preacher in charge $1,000, and the presiding elder $150 annually. We like to get value received. Shreveport District can make two; if necessary, add Lake Charles, and make it the Lake Charles District.

Brethren, let us go up to Homer with this as one end in view, and if we do not succeed this time, keep it up until we get what we need, and I believe that Methodism will move upward in Louisiana as never before. I am Methodist from my shoes up, and pray God that all may be done for his honor and glory.

Mr. Editor, I am not afflicted with "Elderitis," but subscribe myself as "AN HUMBLE LAYMAN."

SOME CHANGES.

The kaleidoscope of time is full of surprising changes. An itinerant Methodist preacher soon learns that changes are essential to the service of spreading Scriptural holiness over the land, as entered by the ministry of John Wesley.

Superannuation is supposed to provide a prolonged period of rest; the privilege is granted the superannuate to provide for himself a resting place in any part of the world that may suit his fancy and bank account. Bishops no longer have the power to dictate where we shall dwell for a period of twelve months.

In 1898 I was informed of freedom to go where I pleased. Being homeless, I began seeking a permanent shelter. In 1903 Long Beach, Miss., became my postoffice address. A new six-room cottage, with floored attic, was built, and wife and I were soon snugly domiciled, where we fully expected to end life's pilgrimage. May 2, 1909, we deeded the new home to the Mississippi Conference Endowment Board to be held as a superannuate's home after our death. About June I became almost helpless, dependent upon an invalid chair for locomotion. September brought to wife the amputation of her right hand, thus spoiling all our housekeeping plans for the future. We found shelter in the hired house of our youngest daughter, living then close by. October, 1910, circumstances demanded that said daughter should move to Jackson, Miss., and this change compelled us to accompany her. I rejoiced to rent the home for twelve months to a brother superannuate, and after leaving Long Beach was made sad by a letter from said brother that embarrassing circumstances made it impossible to abide by his contract.

This makes opportunity for some other superannuate or Methodist family to secure a home at small rent in a healthy climate. The house is centrally located to cars, post office, school, churches and beach; artesian water and bath. It is situated three miles from Gulfport station, east, and seven miles to Pass Christian, west.

Mr. D. L. Hays, merchant, Long Beach, Miss., kindly acts as my agent, and has keys. Write to him or to me, addressing me at Wells Avenue, Jackson, Miss.

Church News

Dr. J. E. Godhey has been elected associate editor of the Western Methodist. He is a strong and fluent writer, and is a valuable addition to the staff of our Arkansas contemporary. We congratulate Dr. Anderson upon having secured his services.

Dr. Beverley Ellison Warner, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, and distinguished as a preacher, lecturer, and author, died at his residence in this city on Sunday morning, November the 27th. He came to New Orleans seventeen years ago, and was 55 years of age. His illness was brief and his death wholly unexpected.

Dr. W. F. McMurry, secretary of the General Board of Church Extension, spent Sunday, November the 13th, at Winston, North Carolina, and raised $28,000 for the building of the West End Church of that city. A beautiful and well-located lot has been secured for this new structure at an outlay of $9,000. The house of worship to be erected thereon is expected to cost $50,000.

Bishop Hendrix delivered his series of lectures on "Friendship" at the recent session of the Western North Carolina Conference. The number of Methodists within the bounds of that body is now 92,236, the net gain for the past year being 2,605. The Conference made provision for a missionary secretary, and Rev. H. K. Boyer, formerly presiding elder of the Charlotte District, was appointed to this work.

Miss Daisy Davies recently spent a Sabbath in Durham, North Carolina, and made an earnest plea for mission work in Brazil. Mr. B. N. Duke, who was in the congregation, was impressed by her vivid presentation of the needs of that great field, and donated $10,000 to help the cause there. It is said to be the purpose of the Board of Missions to spend $250,000 in Rio de Janeiro, and this contribution will be used to aid in carrying out the plans which they have formulated for the work in that city.

Dr. B. M. DuBose has been transferred to the North Georgia conference, and stationed at St. John's Church, Augusta. This is one of the leading congregations of that State, and will give the Doctor a great field in which to exercise his versatile talents. We congratulate the people of the parish to which he has been assigned. Their new minister is easily the peer of any pastor in Southern Methodism as a preacher, and few can compare with him in the reach of their attainments. Within the past few years Dr. DuBose has given to the public more stimulative and helpful books than any man in the connection.

At the late session of the Memphis Conference the joint hospital enterprise, in which the Mississippi Conferences have been interested for three or four years, was heartily endorsed, and the following commissioners were appointed: J. R. Pepper, H. E. Johnson, L. M. Stratton and T. K. Riddick. The resolutions adopted declared for building a $250,000 hospital in Memphis, the work to begin when $75,000 is assured. Despite the slowness with which this project has moved, it may yet be carried forward to success. Certain it is that such an institution located in the Bluff City would exercise a far-reaching influence for good.

Rev. J. A. Bowen is closing one of the happiest and busiest years of his ministerial life at Ensley, Ala. He was appointed one of the Conference evangelists of the North Alabama Conference last December, and had several hundred conversions and distributed 7,000 missionary tracts before he gave up that work to assume control of his present charge, which was made vacant by the election of Dr. J. D. Simpson to the presidency of Birmingham College, the position formerly held by Bishop McCoy. Ensley Station will round out the year with a great record. Two hundred and thirty members have been received into the Church, 120 of these within the past six months; $12,000 has been raised for all purposes, and $10,000 paid on the new church, which now has the roof on it. The Sunday school will report for the year an enrollment of 1,000, and all departments of the Church are wide-awake and active. We are pleased to be informed that Sister Bowen's health has been fully restored.

From the Times-Democrat of last Saturday we clip the following dispatch from Columbus, Miss., bearing date of the 25th inst.:

"Rev. J. W. Shoff died at Muskogee, Okla., this morning at 10 o'clock, according to a telegram received here. Dr. Shoff came to the Alabama Methodist Conference from Baltimore, Md., about fifteen years ago and took charge of the First Church at Mobile. He was largely instrumental in building the handsome St. Francis Street Church in that city. From Mobile he went to Opelika, thence to Montgomery, and from there to Columbus, Ga. He came here four years ago, serving two years with successful distinction, and left here to take charge of the First Church, Los Angeles, Cal. He suffered a paralytic stroke before leaving Columbus, which impaired his health. Six weeks ago he suffered a second stroke, and was placed on the superannuated list. He was visiting his daughter, Mrs. Dr. T. S. Begrafenreid, at Muskogee, when death came."

Dr. John O. Wilson and Dr. H. N. Snyder write interestingly of the inauguration of Dr. W. P. Few, President of Trinity College, in a recent number of the Southern Christian Advocate. Distinguished educators from all parts of the United States were present, among them Dr. Brown, United States Commissioner of Education; President Judson, of Chicago University; President Lowell, of Harvard; President Craighead, of Tulane; Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt; Dean West, of Princeton; Dean Jones, of Yale, and Dean Downey, of Minnesota. It is scarcely needful to say that the ceremonies were of a high order and will be long remembered. Dr. Snyder concludes what he has to say as follows: "In a sense the occasion was a sort of Wofford occasion. The retiring president, Bishop Kilgo, is a Wofford man; the new president, Dr. Few, is a member of the class of '89; Professor Wannamaker, the efficient member of the arrangement committee and professor of German; Dr. Wolfe, professor of biology; and Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt, who presided so brilliantly at the banquet, are Wofford graduates. So, the men who are leading and making the greater Trinity were first made ready for their work at old Wofford. In them their alma mater takes pride, and wishes them godspeed in the great task they have in hand."

BISHOP E. D. MOUZON.

THE SECONDARY SCHOOL

By Rev. Waldo W. Moore.

The great commission, "Go teach all nations," settles the question as to the duty of the Church to educate. It should give instruction at that period and stage when the child can best receive instruction and training. The Church should give an education which is both literary and religious, that mind and heart may be developed together. Christian education has for its end and aim Christ; therefore, no church should attempt to educate without making such education positively and definitely religious.

There is a childhood period. At this period the child is largely controlled by animal instinct, and it does not make careful moral distinctions. Because of its relation to the home, the Church cannot reach it except through the mother, pastor, or Sunday school teacher, and that through catechetical training in the elementary principles of religion. The Church cannot give much literary training to the child.

There is a period of youth. This second period is the new birth of the child—the birth of the emotional, moral and ethical nature, and it is followed by a new life, a second and higher life, a new epoch. This is called adolescence. There must be special training for this period, and here is the sphere and work of the "secondary school."

The school which gives instruction and training to the youth, the boy or girl, in the adolescent period—the moral formation period—should be regarded as the most important school. Such a school lays the foundation for the development of mind and heart, and has a God-given place in the evolution of the human race, and has also a place in our educational system. The primary school is for children; the secondary school is for the youth; the college is for young men and women, while the university is for mature men and women.

The mental and moral condition of those in the adolescent stage makes the work of the secondary school of more than ordinary importance. Less than one-tenth of the pupils who attend secondary, or high schools, ever enter college. Since the Church should educate for the good that it may do, and for the strengthening of its own cords, it is evident that it should maintain the secondary school, which reaches the great mass of common people, which touches the pupil in the adolescent period, at a time when it has the greatest opportunity to impress the youth with religious ideas and principles.

As a Church we have spent the greater part of our educational energy on our colleges, leaving the work of the secondary school in the hands of individuals. The development of the public school system has made it almost impossible for individuals to maintain such schools. There is a felt need in educational circles for first-class secondary schools. The different States have recognized this and are establishing high schools in many counties in order to supply this need. Our Church has revised its educational system, but we do not believe it has yet laid sufficient stress on the work of the preparatory schools. As a Church, we are confronted with new conditions for the maintenance of our colleges in the future will depend largely upon our secondary schools. If we have had no part in training the young in their formative period, what can we hope to do for them when their habits and characters are formed? The Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose, Miss., is the only separate and distinct secondary school which the Methodists have in Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana. We do not need more colleges to struggle for existence, but we need a few first-class preparatory schools.

When our Church needed a university, God found a Vanderbilt who made it possible. When Mississippi Methodism needed a great college, God found a Millsaps who made this possible. Can we not find another Mississippian who will enlarge and extend this most needed educational work of the secondary school?

REV. P. HOWARD DEAD.

Dear Brother Meek: I received a telephone message this morning that our dear brother and "father," Rev. P. Howard, died at his home in Holmesville, Miss., this morning at 8 o'clock. He is to be buried at China Grove to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock. Though in his eighty-first year, he often went with me in making pastoral calls, and has indeed been a great inspiration to me in this my first year in the pastorate. His last days were filled with the fullness of hope in the gospel that he preached so faithfully for a number of years.

Some one will furnish you with a fuller account of his life and labors.

The census gives Cleveland, Ohio, as the fifth largest city, with a population of 560,000, and Baltimore the sixth, with nearly as many.

Jackson, Miss., is to have a Carnegie library. It is expected that the building will cost about $60,000, and that the city by taxation will provide $6,000 annually for its maintenance.

Report from Washington says the Navy Department intends sending another war vessel up the Mississippi next spring, probably as high as Natchez, with the view of getting Southern recruits into the navy.

The mutiny, or rather strike, for higher pay in the Brazilian navy at Rio de Janeiro last week, which was thought might lead to great trouble, was settled by the government granting the demands of the sailors.

The Mexican revolution of ten days ago, which at one time looked serious, has been effectually quelled by the Mexican regular troops, after some strong fighting. The revolution was confined to the northern and western parts of the country.

The fastest ship in the world is the destroyer "Swift," launched recently at Portsmouth, England. This ship, which is of 1,800 tons displacement, has a speed exceeding thirty-five knots an hour. Her fires are fed by petroleum. The turbines give 30,000 horse-power, divided among four screws.

Fair prices for spot cotton now prevail in all the markets (13 to 14 1/2 cents for the average grades), with a certainty, so merchants say, of a higher rise, probably to 15 and 16 cents in two or three months. It is believed the census report due December 9th will estimate a 11,200,000-bale crop. Last year the yield and prices for the corresponding date were about the same as this year.

Arizona's Constitution will be the briefest written in recent years by any State. According to estimates, it will contain less than 10,000 words, as against 25,000 for New Mexico's Constitution, and 24,000 in that of Oklahoma. The Democratic members point out that the convention has followed the suggestion of President Taft, who, when in Arizona, advised Arizonians to make their Constitution as brief as possible and free from legislative details.

Dr. Charles F. Aked, the well-known pastor of Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of New York, has a favorable opinion of women's clubs as compared with those maintained by men. In a late utterance on the subject he is said to have given out the following statement:

"A man's club is for personal ease, good cooking and good company. The women's clubs, so striking a feature in our national life, are organized for work. It may be for education, charity or philanthropy. They have not always lived up to their professions, a peculiarity which they share with churches, but at least they have in view something more than a comfortable chair and a well-rooked chop. Our churches generally are manned by women. There is not a church in existence to-day which would be in existence but for the love and yearnings of a woman's heart."

The representatives of United South Africa met in their first general Parliament at Cape Town on November 4. The Crown was represented by the Duke of Connaught, who was accompanied by the Duchess, and was received with marked enthusiasm. There was exhibited in honor of the occasion an imposing pageant, the scenes illustrating important events in the history of the country. The address from the Throne was read by Mr. Herbert Gladstone, the Governor General. The head of the new government is General Botha and the leader of the opposition is the famous Dr. Jameson. Among the first things to be done by the authorities is to fortify and provide for the more ample protection of the country, and to devise a more complete educational system. We do not doubt that a great nation will ultimately be developed in the southern part of the Dark Continent.

A beautiful monument to Audubon was unveiled in the park in this city which is named for him, November 26th. The Times-Democrat thus describes the interesting occasion:

"Within the shadow of the oaks, filled with the birds he loved so well, John J. Audubon, the great naturalist and ornithologist, was honored yesterday afternoon at Audubon Park in the unveiling of a splendid monument erected to his memory, and in the words of high praise and reminiscences spoken by the friends who told of his work. Gratitude and appreciation were also expressed to the Audubon Monument Association, and particularly to Mrs. James L. Bradford, in recognition of their persistent efforts and enduring labors in obtaining the monument for the park that bears the name of the famous naturalist. The monument, of imposing bronze, stands to the north of the Horticultural Hall, and represents Audubon's standing with sketch book in hand and pencil poised, with his eyes gazing upward as though watching a bird in flight or in the trees. The figure is mounted on a pedestal of Georgia Stone Mountain granite, the gift of Mrs. Bradford, and which bears the name 'Audubon' in large letters, and below the inscription: 'John J. Audubon, of Louisiana, Naturalist and Ornithologist, Author of "Birds in America," 1826-1841. It is the only monument standing in the City of New Orleans erected to the memory of a native Louisianian.'

REV. C. A. NORTHINGTON,

Pastor of Ramey Mission, North Mississippi Conference.

Brother Northington said all of the assessments for the connectional claims six weeks ago. As he was the first man in the Corinth District to meet these obligations, his brethren rewarded him with a line hat. His record for the year has been one of industry and signal success.

REV. WILLIAM JOSEPH ECKLES.

Rev. William Joseph Eckles, son of Rev. and Mrs. Mary Jane Eckles, was born at Brandon, Miss., Oct. 8, 1862. Brother Eckles was baptized in infancy by Rev. J. H. Brooks. At 17 years of age he was converted and joined the Methodist Church at Pleasant Grove in Pandia County, eleven miles west of Sardis, Miss. When only seventeen years old he was elected steward in his church, and for many years served in that capacity. He was licensed to preach in 1887, in the same church where he was converted. He preached two years as a local preacher, and at the time of his death was in charge of the Wall Hill Circuit. Brother Eckles was happily married to Miss Lillie Stinnett of Lingo, Texas, January, 1893. Five children were born into the home of this family, three of whom preceded him to the heavenly home. Many years ago he was called to preach, but like the great majority of men who feel the call of God to preach, he hesitated and even resisted for many years, but the conviction grew steadily stronger until he felt he could delay no longer, and giving himself loose from temporal affairs, he was giving himself to the ministry of the Lord and the care of the churches committed to him with all the earnestness of his soul and life. He unhesitatingly went to his close and intimate friends that this his first year in the ministry was the happiest of his life. He was recommended by the Sardis District Conference at its recent session here in Senatobia for admission on trial into the North Mississippi Conference.

Brother Eckles was a sufferer for some time from rheumatism, but did not know the cause of his trouble until it was too late. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital the last of October and died from the effects of the operation, Sunday, Oct. 23d. His death was a triumph; he died in the faith, and gave his dear father, who sat at his side at the moment of death, every assurance of his salvation. He was buried at his old home at Pleasant Grove, a great comfort to his friends attending. Five of his brethren in the ministry took part in the burial service of our Monument Association, and particularly to Mrs. Young, presiding elder of Sardis District; Rev. B. Sullivan, pastor of Longtown work; Rev. J. W. O'Bryen of Cross-Hay; Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Clarksville, and the writer.

May our Father in heaven comfort and sustain the loved ones in their grief. Let us always think of him as having outridden the storms, crossed the storm line, and now at rest, safe in the bay.

THE TESTIMONIAL OF A FRIEND.

My Dear Brother Mark: The Commercial-Appeal of today contains the sad intelligence of the untimely home-going of my friend and brother, Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of the Mississippi Conference. As the friend and former pastor of this gifted young divine and Christian gentleman, I wish to express through the medium of our paper my sense of personal loss occasioned by his untimely going. A man of higher ideals, of purer motives, and of more guileless character, it has never been my privilege to know. After a year of most intimate association with him, I have seen no act of his that I did not fully endorse and commend. Strong in his convictions, clear in his perceptions, courageous in his advocacy of the right, yet without mock in spirit and pure in heart, his rich young life stood as the living exponent of all that was high and best in Christian character.

It was from my pulpit, while yet a layman, that he preached a sermon of rare strength and persuasive eloquence on the eve of his departure from the little town in which we were both living. That sermon abides today in the hearts of those who heard him as a sacred and saving memory. The power of God rested mightily upon the speaker, and many were moved to tears and to a better life through the ministry of the Word that evening.

As an interpreter of the real meaning of the Scriptures, he had but few equals. The Holy Spirit rested mightily upon him, revealing to him the deep things of God. Through the ministry of intercession he ever sought to know the mind of his Lord, and through the aid of the ever-blessed Spirit he ever sought to do God's will. Hence, his rich young life was one of prayer and service, for which the world is poorer today because he is not.

As his friend and brother I mingle my tears with those who mourn his going away, and with them look forward to that glad reunion on the other shore, where ties shall never more be severed and where parting is unknown. W. E. M. BROGAN.

SOME ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Dear Brother Mark: At the time of this writing Rev. E. S. Lewis, P. E., is making his fourth round and his fifth round of Quarterly Conferences.

It is deplorable to contemplate the amount of pastoral oversight that our people require from presiding elders, and from preachers in charge. It is gratifying to know that we have such capable and willing workers. Reports at the Annual Conference will reveal in a measure the results of their labors; but its real greatness will appear hereafter.

This has been a good year in the Winona District. Rev. T. E. Gregory has done a fine work in North Carrollton Circuit. The building of a thousand-dollar house of worship at Longview is a real achievement, creditable to pastor and people.

In our own charge Rev. W. M. Langley has wrought well and will report collections in full and a substantial increase in membership. Most of his meetings he held without ministerial help. More than forty have been received into the Church.

There have been twelve deaths, and removals of several by certificate and otherwise.

This has been an unusually sickly season. Every where Brother Langley has been an angel of mercy by the bedside of the sick, and in the hour of bereavement a comforter indeed.

In the great sorrow that has befallen us the brethren of the Conference have been quick to help us bear our grief. Each one has had an individual letter of thanks; but I wish to make this public acknowledgment of our debt of gratitude to so many who, amidst their own trials and burdens, yet have hearts to soothe and sympathize. Thank God for his love in Christ, and in Christians!

REV. L. D. WORSHAM.

The Rev. Lorenzo Dow Worsham, son of Henry and Sarah Worsham, was born at Pontotoc, in Pontotoc County, Mississippi, January 18, 1847. His family was one of the oldest and best in that part of the State. He received his education in the common schools of his native county, and was clearly and consciously converted and gave his life to God in August, 1868. As experience in conversion types one's theology and emphasizes certain vital phases of the gospel and turns the soul to steadfastly behold that which in its own knowledge is of first concern, so Brother Worsham's very radical and powerful conversion, so marvelously transforming his own nature, ideals and experience, gave him a profound sense of sin and salvation and made of him a stirring revival preacher of rare gifts and power. To him the gospel proclamation was ever the "new" old story "of Jesus and his love," the only potential call that can wake the world to life and hope. It was up to date and all sufficient to change the dry, dead stalk of humanity from root to flower. Jehovah of Sinai was the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Brother Worsham had an abiding and all-conquering faith in the power of salvation as set forth in Jesus. He knew from personal experience what it is and what it will do for lost men. His individual knowledge of redemption and his personal fellowship with Jesus Christ touched his voice, vision and message with the winning and convincing power of the gospel. His own life turned upon a clear noonday vision of his Lord in an unmistakable voice of forgiveness and peace from heaven to his soul.

Brother Worsham was licensed to preach October 29, 1869, at Shiloh Church, Pontotoc Circuit, A. C. Allen being presiding elder.

He was admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Conference at Water Valley, Miss., November, 1870. So he was a charter member of our Conference, the Conference being organized at that session. He was received into full connection at Corinth, Miss., November, 1872, and ordained deacon by Bishop Kavanagh, was ordained elder by Bishop Paine at Macon, Miss., December, 1878. Brother Worsham served the following appointments: 1871, Austin and Trotter's Landing; 1872, Mayhew Circuit; 1873, Vinton Circuit; 1874, Perkinsville Circuit; 1875-76, Bellfontaine Circuit; 1877, Fulton Circuit; 1878, Athens Circuit; 1879-80, Shannon Circuit; 1881-82, Emory Circuit; 1884, Starkville Circuit; 1885-86, Chester Circuit; 1887-88, Sturgis Circuit. In 1889 he was transferred to the Little Rock Conference and stationed at Cleveland, Ark., and in 1890 he served at Richmond Station, in the same Conference. At the end of that year his health was gone, and not expecting to live long, his mind turned back to the hills and dells, the warm love and fraternal comradeship he had left behind in his native State, and in the fall of 1890 he came back to his first love and was appointed to Newport Circuit. In a year his health was so far restored that he was enabled to continue his itinerant labors and served as follows: 1892, Ethel Circuit; 1893-94, Lexington and Tchula; 1895-96, Byhalia Circuit; 1897, Potts' Camp Circuit; 1898-1900, Eureka Circuit; 1901, Longtown Circuit; 1902, Main Street, Water Valley; 1903-06, Cedar Bluff Circuit; 1907-08, Hebron Circuit; 1909-10, Mathiston Circuit, where he fell at the post of duty June 20, 1910. He died of congestion after a few days' illness, honored and loved by all who knew him.

It was a sad and reminiscent day not only to his own beloved flock, but to all his brethren in the Conference and scores and hundreds of warm and loving friends whose pastor he had been during the forty years of his active ministry, when the news went out that he was gone.

On October 19, 1872, Brother Worsham was happily married to Miss Ella F. Hogan, of Starkville, Miss. Of this union one child was born, Rosa Lee, whose bright and sweet spirit filled the hearts of the parents with sunshine and fondest hopes, but alas! she was permitted to live with them on earth but eleven beautiful summers, and then God plucked the flower from their paradise of love and happiness and planted it in the changeless, fadeless garden of his love beyond the skies. This deep sorrow was a crushing blow, but through the dark cloud which received her out of their sight was ever left a golden rift in whose transfigured halo her happy face and shining form were still seen about the throne in heaven. Often have I heard him speak of that trial and loss with choking voice, and then of the assured joy of meeting her in heaven. Sister Worsham, a noble woman, a true helpmeet, a heroine indeed of marked strength, who was for twenty-eight years his worthy companion, who shared with him the privations, burdens, sacrifices, heartaches and joys of the itinerant life, still survives, with an adopted daughter, Hattie Bell, to mourn the loss of husband and father. The adopted daughter was taken from the Orphans' Home in 1898 to take the place of Rosa Lee, gone to heaven. Indeed, I cannot say that I have ever seen greater love, even for one's own child, than the adopted parents showed for this child. In fact, I know that Brother Worsham's earthly hopes, love and happiness were largely in the life and future of that daughter.

As an itinerant preacher Brother Worsham was true, faithful, loyal and heroic. No place was too hard, no people too poor, no trials too severe for his love and fidelity. He traveled the hardest circuits, poorest missions, compassed the widest fields and lived on the smallest salaries, and denied himself and family, oftentimes, the common necessities of life, and still kept young and sweet spirited, in love with his Church, his brethren, the itinerancy and the world. There wasn't a frown on his face, nor a shadow on his cheerfulness, nor a bitterness in his heart. He was a Methodist preacher, the child of a King, preaching the gospel of love and salvation to men and seeing them saved—in their faces a light that never was upon land or sea, on their tongues praises to God for new-born peace and heaven. This completed his happiness, atoned for all his hardships and made him wild with joy. As a preacher of the Word he was unique, powerful, and oftentimes well nigh overwhelming. He was a very gifted man, endowed nobly by nature with splendid mentality, fine voice and personal appearance, gifts of imagination and speech, a radiant soul, an impetuous spirit, an emotional nature, a consuming passion to see men saved. He was fashioned for rhythm, music and song. He saw visions that dull men never behold. He heard harmonies that never smite a heavy ear. He dwelt on mountain heights never attained by prosaic men. He possessed rare gifts, which, if he had used fully and aspired, would have put him in the greatest pulpits in his Church. But he coveted no high steeple places in Zion. As his presiding elder for four years, I know that all he wanted was what we call the hardest places—circuits and missions where a living is bare, but where there are lots of people, and he could have the opportunity of preaching to the neglected and lost in waste places, and have the joy of seeing them converted. Preaching in camp meetings and great revivals was his special forte. He was at home and happy as mortal could be when the people began to move toward God. He knew the way to the heart with his gospel call. He was mighty in exhortation, in prayer and in song. There were few crowds he could not stir from the pulpit or on his knees in prayer. I have sometimes seen heaven and earth come together while he was praying. Like an electric shock, all hearts would be thrilled at once—some to repentance and cries for mercy, others with joy and ecstasy would break into tears and shouting till all around was a tabernacle of the Most High.

He had a burning passion for seeing men saved and hearing them praise the Lord for the first glad time. Sometimes he could preach like a visitant from the upper world. His voice was like a clarion, but full and resonant and on fire with the flames of his consuming passion of love. His soul burned with the holy fervor of a Carvoso, his tongue was tinged with the real fire of eloquence. His speech was rapid, rhythmical and luminous—illustration, Scripture, poetry of the most fitting kind, all fell into their place by masterful touch in his sermons. Sometimes you passed, following him in his preaching, great mountain ranges of thought—peak after peak would round into view, all ablaze with the glory of eternal truth. At such times his soul and speech were as seraphic as a Hebrew prophet's. When he spoke of sin and God's law of death, oftentimes the mountain smoked and thundered with the realities of Sinai; and again he spoke in the soft, tragical tones of a dying Savior's love. During his forty years' ministry there is no guessing how many souls he led to Christ, but hundreds and thousands surely.

He was the greatest revivalist pastor in his Conference, had always been so, and it was indeed a hard place where he could not move the people and get a great number converted. Just before he passed away he recognized that the end was near. He called his loved ones to the bed and bade them farewell in the midst of tears and weeping, but assured them of his peace and trust and home on the other side. Then he looked toward the window and said: "What are those soldiers doing there?" Some one said: "There are no soldiers here." "Yes," he repeated, "there is one standing by the window."

"Soldier of Christ, well done.
Rest from thy loved employ.
The battle is fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

If a star is added to our crown for each soul we assist and help to save, oh, what a crown he wears to-day in the City of God! There were thousands of his converts gone on before him. What minister has had more? There must have been a stir in heaven that day when it was announced he was coming in. The thousands he had led to Christ must have shouted to see and shake his hand.

God be gracious to and abundantly bless his dear, sorrowing loved ones, at home, and help us all to meet him when our day is over in our Father's house above.

MRS. ROSANNA MINERVA AMES.

An Appreciation.

The subject of this sketch was born in Athens, Ala., Oct. 18, 1831. Her parents, Elijah and Mary Hogan, moved first to Columbus, Miss., and thence to Starkville, Miss., while she was yet an infant, or of tender years. Her parents being deeply pious, she was brought under religious influence, and joined the Methodist Church in early childhood. After a long life of devotion to God and of service to the Church, she died Nov. 25, 1909—Thanksgiving Day of last year. While there was gladness in many homes, and grateful service to God in many churches throughout the land, she peacefully passed away, though leaving her children in the valley of tears, and many relatives and friends in sorrow, there was yet much cause for gratitude to God in the life and character of Sister Ames.

She was married to the late Madison J. Ames, of Starkville, April 4, 1861. Eight children blessed this marriage, six of whom still live to cherish fondly the virtues and memory of their Christian parents. Brother Ames was a man of sterling traits of character, for many years a member and for forty years a steward of the Methodist Church. Of the surviving children, two sons and two daughters reside in Starkville, and a son and a daughter in Texas.

Mrs. Ames filled well her station in the various relations of life. Though of quiet and amiable disposition, she was yet constant and firm. She was a true and faithful wife, a loving and devoted mother, and a kind neighbor and friend. A family altar was a feature in the home life of Brother and Sister Ames. "God's Word" was read by every member of the family, and prayer was offered in the home for forty-five years. Serving the Church herself, the mother of this family trained her children to respect and love the Church.

For many years she took an active interest and part in Christian work. Some time she was a teacher in the Sunday school, was long a member of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and for a number of years she was its honored president. Her long and efficient service in the Society were recognized, and at the time of her death she had been made a life member of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. One of her daughters, writing of her sainted mother, says: "She was one of God's chosen children. The Spirit of Christ was ever reflected in her daily life."

In the summer of last year, 1909, being on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Richardson, at Mineral Wells, Texas, she had a fall, resulting in such bodily injury that she was confined to her bed during the remaining months of her life. This hurt, with other complications that came on, caused severe pain and suffering of body. After being most kindly ministered to for several weeks in the home of her son-in-law, Dr. J. S. Richardson, she was brought to her own Starkville home. Here she had the loving and tender ministry of children and family, but still suffered greatly; yet no murmuring word escaped her lips.

It was my privilege to visit Sister Ames on more than one occasion during her months of suffering. On one such visit, greeting me with gentle words and a placid countenance, she was understood to say, "I'll meet you in heaven."

Seventy years of Christian life and service. What influences for good went out from such a life! Intelligent, constant, faithful, she adorned her profession of faith, served her generation by the will of the Lord, and fell on sleep. There is cause for gratitude and thanksgiving in the life of our ascended sister. After appropriate funeral services, she was laid to rest by the side of her husband to await the resurrection of the blest.

THE OBLIGATION TO LIVE WORTHILY.

Incomparably the greatest thing on earth is man, who is alike the cause and crown of creation. All else was made to prepare the way for his coming, and, but for his presence, this planet and the other things that exist upon it would seem without adequate purpose. Vegetable and animal life, field and forest, were designed to minister to his needs. Of what rational use would be the fertility of the soil without man to multiply and appropriate its fruitage? Of what service would be the metals without his hand to mine and mold them, or the forces of nature without his brain to harness them and set them to worthy tasks? What are rivers and seas, for but to become his highways and bear abroad his commerce? Why fragrant flowers and singing birds and gorgeous skies, without the esthetic human senses to enjoy them? The truth is, all nature with one voice attests the greatness and majesty of him who is her recognized and honored head.

But in what does the glory of man consist? Not in his physical form, though even in that are indications of his superiority. He only among the animals walks erect and has an upward look. The gifts of speech and laughter and tears are his alone, and his unique and wonderfully constructed hand is a prophecy of mighty achievements. But it is chiefly in his intellectual and moral endowments that man's supremacy lies. The power of responsible volition, the God-like faculty of constructive thought, and a moral nature akin to that of his infinite Maker, are his. His pedigree is divine—he is not merely a creation, but is also the offspring of Deity. He wears the image and likeness of the great eternal Spirit, whose glory the heavens declare and whose praises the angels unceasingly chant.

With an origin so lofty and noble, and powers and capacities so extraordinary, there rests upon man a tremendous weight of responsibility. The doctrine of noblesse oblige—rank begets obligation—applies here in its fullest force. For an immortal being with a divine heredity and immeasurable abilities to cherish low ends and aims and live upon a plane largely animal and sensuous, is an indescribable degradation and the greatest conceivable earthly tragedy. The wreck of the equipment of armies or navies, or ruins in the wake of the storm, are not to be compared to a human soul despoiled of its true glory, its vision of God and the eternal gone, and groveling in the dust of earth, aspiring only after things temporal and material. It is not alone those whom the world pronounces vicious and outcast that are lost. Tremendously fallen also are they who no longer have a perception of the spiritual, and who live only for the enjoyment and exaltation of self. Such a life lowers well-nigh infinitely man's mission, in which the angels fain would share, and defeats the splendid destiny which the Heavenly Father intended that he should fulfill.

Many are the considerations—the command and approval of God, the good of humanity, the conservation of his own best interests, and the accomplishment of work that will endure, and in which he can rejoice throughout all the future—which appeal to man to seek to use properly his great powers and live to high purpose. And here let us inquire what are some of the essential elements of a worthy life?

1. Its foundation must be deep laid in the belief in the existence and reignancy of God and in human immortality. A career whose perspective does not reach beyond the tomb can never rise to a lofty height. The noble characters of paganism, like Socrates and Plato, had faith in deity and a hereafter. Such a conviction is necessary to awaken in one's bosom an authoritative sense of moral obligation and furnish an abiding constraint to right action. Epicureanism is the logical philosophy of skepticism. If death ends all, it is wise to "eat and drink and be merry," for to-morrow we shall be as the insensible clod upon the highway. But if one is under a moral government that is coextensive with the universe, and the Omniscient Eye is upon him, and there is to be a day of final reckoning when to each shall be administered his due reward or punishment, he may well tremble under the weight of his responsibility and gird up his strength to bear himself uprightly amid the temptations and trials of life. The thought of the judgment to come is the most potent prop to individual virtue and the fabric of society. It sustained Paul amid the gloom of the Roman dungeon, and made the heart of Felix quake upon his throne. It banishes sleep from the couch of the murderer, and, as the flames encircle him, lights with hope the face of the martyr. A vivid apprehension of personal accountability to God is one of the supreme needs of the world to-day. It is needed both to check the mad rush into vice, and to spur to swifter and more vigorous effort the votaries of virtue. The highest living is not possible without it.

2. A truly noble life must also be characterized by lofty and unselfish aims. It must not only aspire to achieve things that are worth while, but its aspirations must be prompted by right motives. The amassing of a fortune for selfish purposes only is not an acquirement that attests a proper expenditure of time and strength. The making of money is a praiseworthy pursuit only when it has some good end in view. The public man whose chief ambition is to enhance his own reputation, rather than to promote the welfare of his constituents, serves unworthily and is lacking in true patriotism. It is only when self is hidden out of sight that one in any sphere of action attains to majestic proportions. It is when he lives for others and for God that man is Christ-like. Then it is that he walks the upward way and dwells with the immortals upon the heights. Humbling himself, he is exalted; losing his life, he finds it.

3. A worthy life must also be a busy life. Dowered with capacities so remarkable, for man to leave them unused is to defraud alike God, humanity and himself. Darwin complained in his closing years that his exclusive exercise of the reasoning faculty had left him without any taste for music, art and poetry. In like manner, when neglected, the spiritual faculties become dwarfed and atrophied. The really great men of the world in every department of human endeavor have been toilers. This is true in literature, in science, in statesmanship, and also among the men of action. And it is doubly true of those whose names shine brightest in the history of Christianity—of Paul, Savonarola, Xavier, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Whitefield, Asbury, Spurgeon, and all the others. And he who spoke as never man spake, said: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." And the holy angels are "ministering spirits." The dignity of labor is everywhere recognized throughout the vast universe. Idleness is a reproach and a mark of unworthiness. If one does not have to toil from necessity, he should do so from choice. No amount of money can purchase exemption from the obligation to service. It is the duty of every human being to assist, as best he can, the struggling race, and thus contribute to making the world brighter and better. Tennyson's appeal to the English young lady of noble birth who spent her days in indolence and harmful flirting, might with propriety be made to thousands of idlers who languish in the homes of wealth and aristocracy and fashionable society to-day:

"Clara, Clara Veré de Vere,
If time be heavy on your hands,
Are there no beggars at your gate,
Nor any poor about your lands?
Oh! teach the orphan-boy to read,
Or teach the orphan-girl to sew,
Pray heaven for a human heart,
And let the foolish yeoman go."

GOING TO CONFERENCE.

With the Methodist preachers of Louisiana and Mississippi the work of another Conference year has practically come to a close. They are "winding up" their labors and getting ready for their great annual gatherings. Some are already at Sardis, engaged in the work of reviewing the past and preparing for the future. Next week others will wend their way to Homer and Hattiesburg to give account of their stewardship and to take counsel for the work of another year.

It is a time when naturally the preacher's mind turns to the future, and he thinks of what another year holds in store for him. Will he be returned to his present charge? Will he have to move? What kind of appointment will he receive? These and similar questions are agitating the minds of several hundred good men to-day. In view of our polity these questions are both proper and inevitable. It is a time of change, and change is a momentous thing.

But it may be well for us, at this time, to think more of the past than of the future. It is an excellent occasion for us to review what has been done, to formulate the lessons that have been learned, and to make personal application of truths that have come to us out of a year's labor.

It cannot be that the preacher himself has not learned wisdom, and has not grown in grace during the past twelve months. It is a time for questions more searching than those pertaining merely to place. Let us put to ourselves queries like these:

Do I really know more of God, as a personal experience, than I did a year ago? Have my reading, studying, praying, preaching, and ministering quickened my own spiritual perceptions, intensified my own convictions, widened my own spiritual horizon, and developed in me more fully the gentle graces of Christian character? While we preach to others, we ourselves must not become castaways, and if we have not gone forward in our personal religious experience, we have, at the very least, fallen far short of our privileges. A preacher who is not growing religiously himself may not hope to minister to a growing people.

Have I been as efficient in my work as I might have been? Have I been a man of the Book and of one work? Have I been diligent in spite of difficulties and discouragements, and have I pressed the fight in the face of obstacles? Have I been quick to take advantage of opportunities, and eager to find openings for increased usefulness? Have I tried to adapt methods to situations, and to make full use of the forces at my command? Have I tried with all my might to bring the gospel to bear upon the lives of people, and to make more real the kingdom of God on earth? We can well afford to be misunderstood and to have our work abridged, as long as its real value, if we can say, with God as our judge, that we have done our very best. If we have not done our best, our own hearts should condemn us more than all else.

Have I come to the end of the year's work in the frame of mind that is becoming to a herald of the gospel? Is there aught of bitterness in my heart toward any man? Has disappointment darkened my spirit, and discouragement dampened my ardor? Does suspicion find a lurking place in my heart, and is jealousy in any way influencing my feelings? Am I as loyal to my Lord as ever? Our enjoyment of this happy occasion is dependent largely upon the frame of mind in which we find ourselves.

It will be well, too, for us to think as much of the condition in which our successor will find our charge, if we should be changed, as of the condition of the work to which we shall go. What we give up is just as important as what we receive—at least to the man who follows us. We should be as much concerned to leave a good environment for our brother, as to provide one ourselves. "Brotherhood" well expresses the confederational bond of Methodism, and brotherhood implies some very strong and binding obligations.

As we go into homes that are thrown wide open for our entertainment, let us remember that we have not laid aside our character as messengers of the kingdom. Every home which receives a Methodist preacher should be the better for his presence, and the influence of his stay should be a helpful and lasting one. In these Conference days we are brought into intimate association with fathers and mothers, and sons and daughters, and this should be counted a sacred opportunity to be used for the accomplishment of good. And every community where a Conference is held should feel its influence for righteousness long after the day of adjournment.

May our Conferences this year be genuine seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord!

THE PRESIDING ELDER.

The hardest-worked man in the Church is a faithful presiding elder. He is expected to be both an uncommon preacher and an able administrator. Committed to him are the most delicate and sacred interests; he carries upon his heart both the needs of the charges and the preachers and their families. Often he is misunderstood, and when mistakes are made in the appointments, he chiefly is held responsible. In our observation of these officials in the councils of the cabinet we have never seen one who seemed to us to be swayed by improper motives. As it appeared to us, they, without exception, sought to do the best they could for the churches and the men that they represented. We thoroughly believe in the presiding eldership as a necessary part of our itinerant system, and have scant patience with any attempt to belittle or destroy it.

REV. T. W. LEWIS.

By the transfer of the Rev. T. W. Lewis to the Memphis Conference, North Mississippi Methodism has lost perhaps its most conspicuous and effective minister. For thirty years this faithful toiler has been a striking figure in the itinerant ranks of his native State, and the vacancy caused by his entrance into another field will be difficult indeed to fill. In no sphere of service into which he has been called, has he been found wanting. Generously endowed by nature, he lacks no element of success. Commanding in presence, gentle and affable in bearing, with an open, winsome countenance, and a voice of remarkable sweetness and compass, it costs him little effort to attract and impress people either in personal contact with them, or in the pulpit. He has been an earnest student, and his mental furnishing is far above ordinary. As a preacher he is fluent, eloquent and forceful, never failing to please.

and instructor. He is also a methodical and industrious pastor, and has unusual gifts as an organizer. In other words, he is an all-round man, poised, practical and resourceful. And, best of all, he is spiritual, and his life is transparent and above reproach. After none of his actions has there ever been an interrogation mark. The only reason he has not been drafted for places larger than can be found in his home Conference long ago was because he would not permit it. And in the present instance his appointment, which we consider probably the most desirable in the connection, has come to him wholly unsought. That he will measure fully up to every requirement, and accomplish substantial results in the great field which Providence has opened to him, we entertain not the slightest doubt. We commend Brother Lewis to our people in the Bluff City and the preachers of the Memphis Conference as a spotless Christian gentleman and a fellow laborer worthy of their full confidence and highest esteem. They will find illustrated in his character and ministry the best traditions of our heroic Methodism.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Important Conference notices will be found on Pages 12 and 15.

The opening sermon of the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference will be preached Tuesday Dec. 6 at 7:30 p. m. by Dr. C. W. Carter.

Mrs. R. G. (Gilderoy) Porter is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Frank Hawkins, at Boyle, Miss. We thank her for commendatory words and good wishes.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, whose address has hitherto been Lauderdale Springs, Miss., requests us to state that hereafter he may be addressed at Tupelo, Miss. His friends and correspondents will please make note of this change.

Rev. E. H. Gregory has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Moss Point, Miss., and accepted a call to Garyville, La. He is an earnest Christian worker, and any charge is fortunate to secure his services.

Bishop Kilgo attended the session of the North Georgia Conference at Athens, and aided Bishop Wilson in conducting its deliberations. His work in the chair in the pulpit, and off the platform is said to have greatly pleased the brethren.

Rev. W. C. Galceran, the popular pastor at Rosedale, Miss., has been transferred to the Denver Conference and stationed at Mancos. He is a promising young minister, and we predict that he will give a good account of himself in the West.

Rev. H. G. Henderson has been transferred from the Memphis to the North Mississippi Conference. Dr. Henderson has filled leading appointments in Kentucky, Arkansas and Tennessee, and is a man of parts. The Mississippians will give him a brotherly welcome.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, the Superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, delivered an illustrated lecture on the "Passion Play" at Parker Memorial Church last Friday evening. A good audience was in attendance, and the remarks of the speaker were entertaining and instructive.

Rev. J. S. Purcell has had a successful year at Florence, Miss. The parsonage has been repaired and painted; there has been a gain of 40 in membership, and the collections will be "in full." The files of the Advocate also show that he has not forgotten the Conference organ in his labors.

Not waiting for Conference, Rev. D. Scarborough, has within the past few days, sent us a fine list of renewals from the McComb and Fernwood charge. The Lord has been with him in his work throughout the year, and substantial results have been achieved. He will go to the annual gathering at Hartiesburg with a happy heart.

The Methodists of the Carrollton Avenue Church held a service on Thursday evening, November 24th, to celebrate the complete liquidation of the debt on their parsonage, which is one of the nearest and most comfortable in the city. Much credit is due the ladies of the congregation for their faithful work to remove this encumbrance.

The Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Calhoun City, Miss., continues to favor the Advocate with renewals and remittances, for which he has our thanks. He expects to carry a clean balance sheet to Conference, and submit a report which will attest activity in the Master's service. He has a habit of strengthening and building up every charge to which he is sent as pastor.

The churches at Clinton, La., united in a Thanksgiving service at the Presbyterian Church. The preacher selected for the occasion was the Rev. J. M. Brown, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, at that place, who expounded the following text: "Offer up to God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows to the Most High." The music was furnished by the teachers and pupils of Silliman Female College.

The Union Thanksgiving service at the First Methodist Church of this city on November the 24th was interesting and impressive. The sermon by the Rev. A. S. Lutz was an appropriate and eloquent discourse, and was much enjoyed by the congregation.

The trustees of the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston, La., met in that city on Nov. 23. Every member was present, and the work of the year was carefully reviewed. Their report will not be made public until the assembling of the Louisiana Conference at Homer on Dec. 7.

Rev. J. W. Rapier is pleased with the outlook at Byhalia, Miss., as the end of the year draws near. Under his energetic leadership the debt of the beautiful new church there has been provided for and it has been dedicated. The charge has been steadily going forward since he was assigned to it two years ago, as it also did during the incumbency of his capable predecessor, Rev. S. A. Brown.

Writing on Nov. 22, Rev. W. C. Harris, who for many years was an honored member of the North Mississippi Conference, says: "I am just back from Conference at Waxahatchee. It was a great occasion. The Central Texas is a great Conference. My new appointment is Hico, a nice little station in the Dublin District. I will write you more later. We are always pleased to hear from Brother Harris."

That faithful layman, Mr. J. L. Johnson, of Clarksdale, Miss., in a personal note a few days since, said: "We will report to the Conference at Sardis the best year that we have ever had in this charge." This speaks well for Rev. A. T. Lewis and his worthy flock. We dare say that Brother Johnson's admirable handling of financial matters has contributed much toward making possible this fine showing.

We regret to learn that Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, Miss., lately appointed pastor of the First Methodist Church, of Memphis, has been confined to his room for two weeks with a severe cold, bronchial in character. The editor has been similarly affected, and knows how to sympathize with him. Brother Lewis was improving on the 25th inst., and hoping to attend the session of the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. John Randle, the oldest member of the Mississippi Conference, died on Nov. 13. Had he lived a few months longer he would have attained to his tenth year. He was the father of Mrs. N. E. Campbell and Miss Annie Randle, of West Point, Miss., and the grandfather of the Rev. Walter Campbell, of Schlater, Miss. We hope to publish a picture of this noble veteran, taken shortly before his release, in the near future.

A correspondent from Alexandria, La., writes: "By any reckoning, the year 1910 will go to record as the greatest in the history of the M. E. Church, South, of this place. Rev. H. R. Sizemore is closing the most prosperous four years' pastorate of his ministry. He is a fine preacher, a superb executive, popular with everybody, and will go to his new field followed by the love and admiration of our entire congregation."

Those in the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts who anticipate attending the Louisiana Annual Conference at Homer will be pleased to hear that the L. R. & N. has made a rate of $12.50 for the round trip from New Orleans to Homer. Those holding telegraph permits can make the trip for $9.75. A special Pullman coach will run through from New Orleans to Homer at the low rate of $1 for berth. This "Special" will leave New Orleans Monday, Dec. 5, at 6:10 p. m., and will arrive at Homer 11 o'clock Tuesday.

For twelve consecutive years the Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians of Carrollton, this city, have united in an annual Thanksgiving celebration. The exercises this year were held in the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. H. T. Carley delivered a sermon, choosing as his text II Corinthians 1:15: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." The Times-Democrat of the 25th inst. gave an extended synopsis of the discourse, which was a particularly strong and suggestive one. Brother Carley is a vigorous thinker, and excels in his pulpit work.

In a letter to the Central Methodist Advocate, of Lexington, Ky., Rev. W. R. Hendrix, D.D., pastor of Methodist Temple at Louisville, this refers to his recent visit to the Crescent City: "Had a most pleasing visit to New Orleans and a very good meeting in Second Church there. Had a most enjoyable fishing experience, bagging a good catch. My kinsman, Rev. A. H. Hays, Townsley, pastor at Second Church, is closing up a quadrennium there, and this downtown situation is more hopeful than for many years. While there I had many courtesies shown me by the Methodist pastors of the city."

Rev. W. M. Young, presiding elder of the Sardis District, has informed us of the death of Mrs. A. F. Moore, the wife of our pastor at Arkabutla, Miss., which occurred in the parsonage at that place on Nov. 21st, after a lingering illness. The deceased was a Miss Hutson, whose home prior to her marriage was near Independence, in Tate County. The remains were interred at Graceland Cemetery in the presence of a great concourse of people. We extend profound sympathy to Brother Moore in his bereavement, and pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously comfort and sustain him.

We call special attention to the excellent communication from the faculty of Bishop Moynihan, entitled, "The Twelve Best Books for Young Preachers," which appears in this issue of the Advocate. It deserves to be carefully read and laid away for frequent reference. Having been a professor in the Theological Department of the Southwestern University, the Bishop is at home in the discussion of this theme and his observations should carry with them great weight. He will have something further to say on the important subject of ministerial equipment during the sessions of the Mississippi Conference.

A card from Rev. W. A. Betts, written from New Smyrna, Fla., on the 23d inst., says: "The presiding elder of the Miami District has appointed me to the vacant pastorate here, conditioned upon my transfer to the Florida Conference at its approaching session at Jacksonville." He sends greeting to the brethren in Mississippi, whose fellowship he affirms he has greatly enjoyed. Brother Betts rendered most acceptable service in the Magnolia State, both as a teacher and minister, and we give him up from our territory with not a little reluctance. We commend him to the Methodists of Florida as a man in every way worthy of their esteem and a capable preacher of versatile gifts.

From the Senatobia Democrat of November 24, we take the following: "With the opening of the Sardis Conference the Rev. S. L. Pope will have concluded his second year's work in Senatobia. His ministry here has been characterized by a remarkable interest in church work by both old and young, and many accessions to the Church. As an evidence of appreciation of the love for Brother Pope, the fourth Quarterly Conference, passed a resolution at its last meeting requesting that the Conference return him to this work. A further resolution was passed thanking Mrs. Pope for the excellent work she has accomplished in the Ladies' Societies of the Church. A similar resolution was also passed requesting the Conference to retain Rev. W. M. Young as the presiding elder of the district."

By operation of the time limit, there will be several changes in the New Orleans churches this year. Dr. F. N. Parker has been four years presiding elder of the District. Rev. A. S. Lutz has served a full term at Felicity. Rev. A. L. Townsley has been four years at Second Church, but by reason of an appropriation from the General Board of Missions to that charge, the time limit does not apply. Dr. John A. Rice has filled out a quadrennium at Rayne Memorial. Rev. John F. Foster has been three years at Algiers. Rev. W. W. Holmes three years at Louisiana Avenue. Rev. C. D. Atkinson three years at Parker Memorial. Rev. L. A. Sims three years at Elworth. Rev. H. T. Carley three years at Carrollton Avenue. Dr. S. H. Werlein one year at First Church, and Rev. W. B. Peritt one year at Mary Werlein.

Rev. R. A. Clark, who has been transferred from Okolona, Miss., to the Second Methodist Church of Memphis, is quite a young minister, having been admitted into the North Mississippi Conference in 1901. He was reared in Kosciusko, the boyhood home of the late Bishop Galloway, and is a graduate of Millsaps College. Since his entrance in the ministry his labors have been characterized by intense earnestness, and his ministry in every field to which he has been assigned has been fruitful and promotive of marked progress. He has unusual gifts as a revivalist, and is in great demand for evangelistic work. He conducted a meeting for Dr. Baskerville at the Second Church, Memphis, some months ago, and so impressed the congregation that the official board is said to have insisted upon having him sent to them as pastor. Brother Clark has a great opportunity in his new field, and we wish him a large measure of success.

Dr. John A. Rice has been transferred to the Central Texas Conference and stationed at First Church, Fort Worth. Polytechnic College is located in that city, and the appointment is one of honor and large responsibility. The transfer of Dr. Rice is a distinct loss to Louisiana Methodism and a valuable reinforcement to that of the Lone Star State. A scholar of extensive acquirements, a preacher of originality and force, and a progressive and patriotic citizen, he is certain to make his influence strongly felt in any community where he may reside. During his four years' incumbency in the pastorate of Rayne Memorial Church, Dr. Rice has steadily grown in favor with his flock and in the esteem of the general public. No minister in the city has commanded more attention by his pulpit utterances. Mrs. Rice also is a lady of unusual accomplishments, and has been a recognized force among the Christian workers of New Orleans. These faithful servants of the Master are given up with great regret, and the good wishes and prayers of a host of friends will follow them to their new field of labor.

IN MEMORY OF REV. E. W. LIPS-COMB.

His life, so pure and noble,
Was given wholly to the Lord;
But his work on earth is done
And he has gone to his reward.

His bright young life gave promise
Of honor and renown;
And tho' cut off in his youth,
Many stars adorn his crown.

Like Timothy, he knew the Scriptures
When only a little boy;
His dear old mother taught him,
For he was her comfort and joy.

And, oh, how hard for her
To give up her youngest son!
Though from her heart she whispers,
"Thy will, O God, be done."

"Tis not all of life to live,
Nor all of death to die;"
For lives that are nobly lived,
The pangs of death defy.

For death is only an entrance
To the realms of eternal day,
Where pain and sorrow never come,
And God wipes all tears away.

And there, with his sainted father,
And the loved ones who have gone,
Wadsworth is singing God's praises
Around the great white throne.

With deepest sympathy,
MRS. LEE LIPSCOMB.

Just as the month of October, 1910, was going out, the life of the eldest and well-beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Russell went out. He had the love and prayers of a dear mother and a host of others, and the best medical aid that could be found, but God loved him best and called him home. He was 15 years and 4 months old. EMMETT was of an affectionate disposition, and loved by all who knew him. The writer was especially fond of him. It was sad to look upon him (though he suffered but a few days), and to know and feel it was the last look. Father, mother, brothers and sisters, think of Emmett as being at home in heaven, where we will never say good-bye. His aunt, L. P. W.

LAURA MAYO WILLIAMS was born August 29, 1904; died November 10, 1910; being six years, two months and twelve days old. After suffering for several days, her pure, sweet spirit returned to God, who gave it. The faithful physician and loving hands of parents and neighbors did everything possible to relieve the little sufferer, but to no avail. But remember, fond parents, that little Mayo is now free from all pain and will not have to suffer or take medicine any more, but is where there is one "eternal day," where all sorrow, sighing and heartaches are no more. No doubt little Mayo is this morning rejoicing with her little brother that preceded her to the better world. You, dear, troubled hearts, may one day join the little ones in the "sweet by and by." May you find comfort in the company of him who is able and ready to comfort your hearts—the Holy Spirit. After the funeral service conducted by the pastor, and amidst a host of weeping friends and loved ones, we laid the little body to rest in the New Salem Cemetery to there await the resurrection of the just. Her pastor, D. M. GEAN.

Little CLARA JOSEPHINE, daughter of Dan and Bessie Faulk Foreman, was born at Cedars, Miss., December 20, 1908, and died at Eden, Miss., Friday, October 28th, after an illness of a short while. The news of little Josie's death came as a great shock to us all; we had no idea she was seriously sick. Our darling was allowed to stay in this world to gladden the hearts of mother and father only a short while. God saw fit to take her home with him, and he only can comfort the broken-hearted father and mother. He only knows how they hated to give up their babe, the flower of their home. No longer can those footsteps be heard, and no longer can those sweet kisses be felt upon the cheeks of that poor broken-hearted mother. But God's will be done. It has only been a few months since God took our dear brother, and only three years since he took our precious darling mamma, but we have that sweet assurance that they are at rest in heaven. Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. AUNT CLARA.

Mrs. J. D. PICKLES, of Lecompte, La., died in the early morning of Nov. 18th, of peritonitis, having suffered excruciatingly for the last twenty-four hours of her life. Like the women of old, she was a typical "old-time" mother, living for her home and her children, all twelve of whom survive her and followed her to her last resting place in the Episcopal cemetery at Lecompte. She sought wool and flax and worked willingly with her hands; she rose while it was yet night and gave food to her household; with the fruit of her hands, she planted a vineyard. She girded her loins with strength and made strong her arms. She laid her hands to the distaff and her hands held the spindle. She was not afraid of the snow for her household. Her husband was known in the gates when he sat among the elders of the land. The law of kindness was under her tongue, and her children rise up and call her blessed. Thus Solomon described this mother in Israel in Proverbs, 31st chapter. Among her children is Mrs. G. E. Greene, the wife of one of our deceased pastors, and Prof. G. D. Pickles, who is known as an able educator and editor. Her husband for many years was one of Methodism's "pillars" in Lecompte, and she was ready to follow him to the land of rest, being more than seventy-three years old, though still active, and did her own gardening, milked her own cows, and cared for her own chickens. "Give her the fruit of her hands; and let her works praise her in the gates." P. O. LOWREY.

"In the care of God" would be a great motto for any position or circumstance of life. How victorious the faith that adopts it when vision and breath are failing. These words were the beautiful embodiment of the thought of W. W. FOSTER on the last day he spent in this life. As a true soldier of the cross, he trusted all to the Captain of his salvation, whom as a member of the Methodist Church for forty years he had followed in the toil and battle of life. He was a soldier of the Confederacy and was brave to the last. He died under the banners of that Chieftain who shall at last bring all the hosts of the faithful to the victories of the Church Triumphant. Born in Claiborne County, Mississippi, on February 13, 1844, he completed the record of a good life on November 14, 1910, at his home in Jackson, Miss., whence, on the next day, his body was borne to Cedar Lawn and laid to rest. He is survived by his wife, whom, as Miss Elsie A. Lea, he married December 12, 1878, and by their daughter, of tender maidenhood. Into their hearts the crushing grief has come, but their sorrow has a solace in the praise his comrades affectionately pay him, and in the testimony he gave of the joy upon which he felt sure of entering. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." ALFRED E. SMITH.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

And the Tercentenary of the King James Version of the English Bible.

The American Bible Society recognizes the importance of this event as world-wide. The amazing extension of the English language throughout the world has given to the English Bible not only a universal religious significance, but an immeasurable influence upon the ideals and life of the peoples of the earth.

It believes that this historic event should be recognized not only in the churches of the land, but in its schools and universities, and legislatures, and courts.

It, therefore, would bring this Tercentenary to the attention of:

1. The ministers of this country, requesting them in their proper ecclesiastical organizations, assemblies, conferences, conventions, schools, etc., and in their churches and congregations, to plan for public exercises in which the story of the English Bible and its influence upon human life shall be fittingly set forth. In many communities this may be best accomplished by united public services.

2. All Sunday school superintendents, advising them of the importance of celebrating appropriately in their schools this Tercentenary.

3. All other religious organizations whose work is based upon the Bible.

4. The presidents of universities and colleges, and heads of schools throughout the country, suggesting the propriety of public exercises informing the student body of the value of the English Bible as a force in the education and culture of the people.

5. The heads of the Federal Government and the Governors of the different States, suggesting the appropriateness of some public recognition of the relation of the English Bible to the foundation and development of our free institutions.

6. The Judiciary and the Bar, requesting such co-operation as may be appropriate in recognition of the relation of the Bible to the laws of the land.

7. The editors of newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, inviting their co-operation in extending as widely as possible the knowledge of the celebration, and its significance.

Time of Celebration.

Inasmuch as the time of the publication of the King James Version in the year 1611 is unknown, the American Bible Society cannot fix any date when it is most fitting that these celebrations should take place, but in order that the celebrations may attain general and national significance, the Society would recommend that they be held as far as practicable on Sunday, April 23, 1911, the first Sunday after Easter, and throughout the week following.

Appropriate Themes.

The following themes are suggested as suitable for consideration in connection with the celebrations of this Tercentenary:

1. The Story of the Growth of the English Bible from the first translations into English to the King James Version.

2. The Later Revisions and Translations into English, the Revision of 1611, and the American Bible Society's Tercentenary of the English Bible.

The influence of the English Bible upon the English language.

The English Bible and the English language.

The King James Version as Related to other great versions, Authorized and Modern.

The Peculiar Place of the English Bible in Missions.

The English Bible as a Factor in the Spiritual Life of the English-speaking People.

The English Bible and the English language.

The Society will furnish the above recommendations, together with lists of the most important works and literature bearing on the subject, and such suggestions and promises as will help to the proper observance of the celebration.

Auxiliary Bible Societies and Agencies of the American Bible Society are requested to co-operate with the officers of the National Society in arranging so far as practicable, suitable celebrations of this Tercentenary.

A large committee of distinguished persons will be convened to act as a jury to rate as practically the most important meeting in New York City to be held in recognition of this event.

Address communications to:

The Secretaries of the American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York.

November, 1910.

THE BIBLICAL TERCENTENARY.

In the year 1611 the King James Version of the Bible was first given to the world. A British Bible appeared in 1769 and an American in 1821, but the King James version is the standard Bible of the English language to-day. The British, American, Canadian and other Bible societies desire that the English-speaking nations join to celebrate the tercentenary of the authoritative version of Holy Writ.

Wholly apart and aside from its divine origin, the Bible is the world's most remarkable literary production, and year after year continues to be the far-and-away "best-seller" of all the myriad books published. Since 1894 the British Bible Society has distributed more than 200,000,000 copies, while the American Bible Society since its organization in 1841 has circulated more than 80,000,000.

The original languages of the Bible are Hebrew, Aramaic and Hellenistic Greek. As its name indicates it was combined from many books, and comprises every form of literary activity known to the Jewish race, dealing with every phase of human life and thought.

The proposal to celebrate the tercentenary of the version of the Bible to which English-speaking people are most indebted for their knowledge of the Bible and of pure and undiluted English will doubtless find cordial response. Some of the greatest speakers of the English language owe this mastery to the King James version.—Jackson Evening News.

PETER'S DENIAL.

Matt. xxvi, 31-35; 69-75.

31. Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended in me this night; for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.

32. But after I am raised up, I will go before you into Galilee.

33. But Peter answered and said unto him, If all shall be offended in thee, I will never be offended.

34. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock-crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

35. Peter saith unto him, Even if I must die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

69. Now Peter was sitting without in the court; and a maid came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus the Galilean.

70. But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and saith unto him that were there, This man also was with Jesus of Nazareth.

72. And again he denied with an oath, I know not the man.

73. And after a little while they that stood by came and said to Peter, Of a truth thou also art one of them; for thy speech maketh thee known.

74. Then began he to curse and to swear, I know not the man. And straightway the cock crew.

75. And Peter remembered the word which Jesus had said, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

TEACHING TOPICS.

The Darkening of a Great Friendship.

We somehow seem to expect that faith may not always burn brightly, and we are not surprised, though we are grieved, when hope is clouded over. We expect friendship, however, to give forth a mild but steady light. It must not suffer eclipse. From friendship comes the great inspirations and consolations of life. It is the one thing farthest removed from sordidness and fear and meanness. Friendship nourishes hope and makes faith real. Therefore, loyalty and constancy are celebrated as the epic virtues. Nevertheless, this divine experience may suffer from the calamities caused by human weakness. Such a calamity came to the great friendship between Jesus and his disciples—particularly Peter. The actual occurrence does not discredit Peter's love altogether, although it is a pitiable disclosure of human insufficiency. We have here a faithful study in the frailty of man's affection. We can not palliate one single fact. On the other hand, we must not condemn Peter too harshly by employing an iron standard. It is not well, metaphorically speaking, to hurry Peter before the court of our stern judgment: we are too weak ourselves for that. Nor can we easily consider his act as the breaking of some great abstract law—we are too ignorant for that. Even if our judgment were formally correct it would not be the real, human, tragic picture. It is best to regard Peter's act as the darkening of a great friendship. Here is condemnation enough, and here is hope, too, for Peter's friendship outlasted far his sin.

The Forsaken Shepherd.

It is a striking picture suggested by Jesus' words. The Shepherd of the sheep is smitten. Then the terrified sheep flee in every direction. Generally it is the sheep that are attacked, and the shepherd defends them if he is a true friend, or flees if he is false. Now, the Shepherd himself is to be set upon by the enemy. Of course, the timid sheep will scatter. But we are shocked by the thought of this Shepherd—about to lay down his life for the flock—being deserted as though, indeed, his flock were the foolish and ungrateful animals indicated by the name. The forsaken Shepherd is a pathetic figure. It is more pathetic even than that of sheen left to their fate. It is moving to the sympathetic imagination, for it tells so much of what Jesus himself felt. It brings us nearer to the throbbing heart of the Savior to know that he thought of himself at this time as a forsaken Shepherd.

The Look Ahead.

It is well to see how hope grows in the heart. In the midst of afflictions Jesus looked on to the sunlight shining beyond the darkness. "But after I am raised up I will go before you into Galilee." It is this triumphant faith in Jesus in the practical future that redeems the story from the hopelessness of despair. This is Christian optimism.

Boastful Peter.

Peter was so sure of himself! "O yes," said he, "human nature is weak-able him to go farther. And he ought to have seen farther. He lacked the spiritual outlook. The scene before his physical eye ought to have been entirely inadequate to contain the end." Because Peter saw little, he spoke meantly. If he had caught the farther vision—a vision which had been offered him again and again—he would not have denied his Lord. Nay, more, he would have had no fear.

Peter's Expiation.

We have no reason to doubt that Peter paid the full penalty of his sin, when, having caught the eye of his Friend betrayed, he went out and wept bitterly. With the thought of this expiation, we can forget, even as we know that Jesus forgave.—Western Christian Advocate.

LUMBERTON, MISS.

At a meeting of the Board of Stewards of the Lumberton Methodist Church, held Nov. 28, 1910, the following resolutions were passed:

First—That we, the Board of Stewards of the Lumberton M. E. Church, South, realize that in the person of Rev. T. W. Adams, our pastor, we have a competent, efficient and progressive minister, and we desire to give expression to our appreciation of his effective work, both in the unification of the membership of the church, and in the upbuilding of its spiritual life.

Second—It is a matter of great pride, as well as spiritual comfort to us, to know that there has been such a wonderful increase in the membership of the church under his administration, and we trust that we shall be the beneficiaries of his services for the ensuing year.

Acute Pains

Because of their sedative influence upon the nerve branches

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

relieve acute pains of any nature. They are equally effective in neuralgia, rheumatism, sciatica, locomotor ataxia, or the pain due to spinal trouble. Ladies who have periods of suffering find that they not only relieve their distress but their attacks become less severe, and after a time often disappear altogether.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat, and lungs, so that you can breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It loosens the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the food discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Dear Brethren of the Louisiana Conference:

The "Conference Special" over the L. & N. W. will run from Hagen to Homer, Dec. 6, leaving Hagen at 5:20 a. m., with through L. R. & N. Pullman from New Orleans, and reaching Homer at 11 a. m.

A stop of thirty minutes will be made at some point for all who desire to get breakfast.

A stop will be made at Gibbs for passengers from points east and west. Let us come praying for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in our Annual Session.

Your brother in Christ,
Wm. H. COLEMAN

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The attention of the Louisiana preachers-in-charge is called to the resolution passed at last Conference instructing them to report separately amounts raised for Conference Education and General Board. The two assessments are as distinct as Foreign Missions and Church Extension, each resting on its own merits. There is no law defining the basis of a pro rata division. The Board has, in the past, made what it deemed an equitable division on the basis of the amounts assessed.

At the last Conference, the report of the Board was amended by resolution to appropriate twelve hundred dollars annually to Mansfield College debt, after the sixteen hundred dollars guaranteed to Centenary College is paid.

To carry out this resolution will require more money than the total amount received by treasurer last year for both General Board and Conference work. The General Board assessment is technically known as Educational Extension, representing most important obligations to colored schools, schools for poor whites, Correspondence School expenses, etc.

The need of Conference Education money was never more pressing in the history of our Conference. Let each preacher report separately and share the responsibility of deciding how the money shall be used.

Money raised on Mansfield College Day is a "special" and should not be reported on assessments.

R. H. WYNN,
Chairman Ed. Bd.

NOTICE.

Be sure to bring with you a copy of the Minutes as you come to Conference. My supply is about exhausted, and you will be without one, unless you bring your own copy. I urgently request that you do not forget to secure the small stipend assessed your charge for printing minutes. It is a small item, and you can easily secure the amount necessary to pay that item in full, and it will take nearly or quite the full assessment to meet the expenses of publishing the Minutes next year. Do not forget this, and then complain if later you are compelled to pay your own expense. We have ordered a supply of the new report blanks to be ready for those of the preachers who may not have secured the blanks before reaching Conference. You will be required to make your report on these new blanks. Faithfully, ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

NOTICE.

The plan for rates this year is some different than former years in that there will be no certificates. Pay to it cents per mile for round-trip ticket when purchasing ticket, and at Homer you will pay twenty-five cents when ticket is validated. Thus, the fare and one-third rate is assured whether we have the one hundred or not.

Tickets will be on sale on December 5th, 6th, and 7th, good for return until the 15th. The following roads have granted the rates, viz: Louisiana Railway and Navigation; Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific; Southern Pacific; Louisiana & Northwestern; Texas Pacific; Y. & M. V., and Illinois Central, the two latter from all points in Louisiana. It is expected that all roads in the State will also grant same.

JNO. F. FOSTER

NOTICE.

Dear Brethren: If any member of the Louisiana Annual Conference has not received notice of his assignment for entertainment, please write us at once. It may be that we have not secured the correct postoffice address of every member and Conference official, and we are very anxious not to overlook any one.

Fraternally yours,
ARTHUR T. PIERSON,
For the Entertainment Committee,
Homer, La.

NOTICE.

The class of the second year, Louisiana Annual Conference, will meet in Homer, La., on Tuesday forenoon, December 6, 1910. Place for holding examination will be selected by the pastor in charge.

S. J. DAVIS.

NOTICE.

Class of the fourth year in the Louisiana Conference is requested to meet the Committee in Homer, La., on Tuesday, December 6th, 1 p. m., at the Methodist Church.

R. H. WYNN.

NOTICE.

The Class of the Third Year, Louisiana Conference, will meet the Committee in the M. E. Church, South, Homer, La., Dec. 6, 1 o'clock p. m.

H. W. MAY,
For Committee.

NOTICE.

The committee and class of the first year are called to meet in the Methodist Church at Homer on Tuesday, December 6th, at 9 a. m.

Lists of the questions for examination will be in charge of Brother, H. W. Cudd, in case the committee cannot reach Homer on time.

H. N. BROWN,
For the Committee.

ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

Applicants for admission on trial in the Louisiana Conference will meet the committee at the M. E. Church, South, Homer, La., Dec. 6, at 10 a. m. The examination will be written. The subjects are: Discipline, Bank's Manual of Christian Doctrine, Wesley's Sermons on Justification by Faith, and The Witness of the Spirit, and the ordinary branches of English education with special reference to bookkeeping. The textbook in history will be Swinton's Outline of General History.

Each applicant will present a written sermon of his own composition.

suit in the Circuit Court of Dekalb County, Indiana, at Auburn, to recover the proceeds of sales made under the terms of a commission agency contract. The defendant pleaded that the International is an illegal combination, and that therefore the contracts with him were void and of no effect.

Hon. S. E. Cook, judge of the Circuit Court on October 19, rendered a decision that the "trust" or "illegal combination" defense is not a good defense, and that the contracts are perfectly legal and the proceeds collectable.

This follows the decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan, September 28, 1910; in a similar case.

THE HEART OF THE GOSPEL.

(Zech. xiii, 1-2; John iii, 14-16.)

Gospel is from old English Godspel, God-story, and signifies good tidings. It is the good story of the sacred revelations of God to man.

He is revealed to man in the first doctrine of the Bible, that there is a God.

1. Who is the omnipotent Creator? (Gen. i.)

2. Who is the Ruler of the World? (Gen. ii, 16-17.)

3. Who is both the just and merciful Ruler? (Gen. iii.)

But it is only in Christ that he is revealed to us as the God of Love, the tender, compassionate Father and Savior of poor lost man. The Incarnation implies the sad need of man: the tragic story of man's first disobedience and the fruit of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste brought death into the world, and all our woe; till one great Man redeem us and restore to us that blissful seat. The Incarnation reveals to us the God who came to meet that need. It reveals him not so much in his attributes of Omnipotence, Omniscience, Omnipresence, etc., as in his essence of life, light, love. And truly this is the heart of the gospel.

He so loved that he gave. Gave his only begotten son, who was verily the Incarnate God: "In the beginning, was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God (John i, 1).

Therefore, he gave himself, which involved his giving:

(1) Thirty-three years of divine time in which he might have been creating worlds and systems of worlds more glorious than this, for he had the power (John i, 2-3). But he divested himself of this power and glory to become "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief," in order to save us from the curse of sin and death and hell.

(2) Not only did he give this divine time, but he gave all: "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." (II Cor. viii, 9.)

So complete was his giving of his all to the great work of redeeming us that, although the world and all things were created by him (John i, 3), yet he claimed not so much as a resting place upon it (Luke ix, 58).

So complete was his giving of himself for us that he suffered the anguish of Gethsemane and the agonies of Calvary for us.

"O love divine, how sweet thou art! When shall I find my willing heart.

All taken up by thee?
I thirst, I faint, I die to prove
The greatness of redeeming love,
The love of Christ to me."

Not only does this "heart of the gospel" reveal to us the God of such tender, compassionate, constraining love, but it also reveals to us the beneficence that the giving of such love procured for us: "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Not only is his essence love, but also life, and love that gives itself in order to impart this life.

God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself (II Cor. v, 18-19). And without this reconciliation man could not regain that life that he lost in the fall.

(1) The Holy Spirit convicts the individual of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment (John xvi, 8), the individual repents of his sins and turns to God by faith in Christ for salvation; he is pardoned, regenerated, made a new creature in Christ Jesus.

(2) The Holy Spirit beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God, an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ (Rom. viii, 16).

He has entered into the saved relationship into vital union with Christ, and by living a life of entire consecration he may constantly have the Holy Spirit abiding in his life, giving him peace (John xiv, 27), teaching him the truths of God (John xiv, 26), filling his life with power to overcome the evil one and to be efficient in service (Acts i, 8) and with the fruits of that "everlasting life" that abides in his soul. And remaining thus faithful to the end of his earthly pilgrimage, he shall enter into the larger realm and the greater glories of this life in the eternal kingdom of God.

Shall not this constraining love of God with all the beneficence that it bestows upon the soul that accepts it lead each Leaguer to a complete surrender of your life for salvation and service?

We see human heroism broken into units and say this unit did little—might as well not have been. But in this way we might break up a great army into units; in this way we might break the sunlight into fragments and think that this or the other might be cheaply parted with. —Southern Churchman.

This Will Stop Your Cough in a Hurry.

Save $2 by Making This Cough Syrup at Home.

This recipe makes a pint of better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. A few doses usually conquer the most obstinate cough—stops even whooping cough quickly. Simple as it is, no better remedy can be had at any price.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. It has a pleasant taste and lasts a family a long time. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. Has a good tonic effect, braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, too, which is helpful. A handy remedy for hoarseness, bronchitis, asthma and all throat and lung troubles.

The effect of pine on the membranes is well known. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norwegian white pine extract, and is rich in guaicol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe has attained great popularity throughout the United States and Canada. It has often been imitated, though never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Tidings from the Field

Okolona Circuit:

We are fast closing up the work of this wonderful year. In general this has been a very satisfactory year on the Okolona Circuit. We have had good results in revivals, and have good Sunday schools, good prayer meetings, and have on-ward children's day at all churches with good results. Our pastor was in the flooded district. There are more than fifty per cent of the people suffering. However, our people are loyal, and are making great efforts to meet the demands upon them. Our Woman's Societies are doing fine work, and deserve special mention. They were organized this year, and are proving themselves faithful in these last days of the year. God bless them. We could not bear to see the distress of these strenuous times without their wise counsel, sympathy, and hearty cooperation. Our stewards and the most part are a body of consecrated, energetic, and faithful men. As a whole, we have a fine people to serve. Hope to see you at South Plains, on the Young's in service. M. A. Burns, P. C.

Montrose, Miss:

Our revival closed here last Monday. We don't know when Montrose has had a greater revival. Brother D. E. Kelley, a fine reference evangelist, did the preaching. He is doing a great work for the Master. At the very least, there were 60 conversions, 21 family altars erected, 24 accessions to the church, 18 of which joined the Methodist Church. We know that God was with us in great power, for it was demonstrated so clearly. We wish to thank Brother Moore, the president of the school located here, for the interest of the student body in the services. Indeed, they were greatly benefited, for we get out of a thing just what we put into it. This revival, principally, closes Brother Kelley's year's work, and up to this time he has preached 128 sermons, has had 127 conversions and nearly 300 family altars erected. May God continue to use him as a great soul winner. We think the Conference will make a mistake in sending Brother Kelley out in this same work next year. E. L. Hillman.

Hebron Circuit:

Brother Thomas, my presiding elder, does not have his horn much, but his words will speak for themselves. I had a letter from him not long ago, in which he said: "Hal, the Columbus District is booming. I have not seen much of him in the papers, but I have seen a great deal of him in my charge. He has helped me in two meetings, and has also helped me to raise money to build churches. We have built two churches, one at Cochran and one at Dancy. Little towns on the Alabama, Tennessee, and Southern Railroad. They are pretty churches, with art glass windows, and cost about $1,500 each. We have repaired Hebron Church at a cost of $400. It now has new pillars, a new roof, and is painted inside and out. We have also painted the new chapel, a new church, which was built last year, but not finished. All of our assessments are paid in full. Moore has been raised and the contract has been let for a new parsonage at Cochran. We have organized two churches, one at Cochran and one at Dancy. Hebron Circuit has become new and ought to have a new name. It ought to be called Cochran, because the parsonage will be here, and here the preacher will get his mail. The people are clever and social. They have been kind to me. I like them and expect to stay with them." W. J. Burr.

Washington as a protest against profanity; the press of the nation has been discussing the senselessness and simplicity of profanity with a directness which cannot fail to bring results. Probably the most thoughtful statement ever made concerning blasphemous language is this utterance by Peter Thomas R. Leinsbury:

"Profanity is a brain test; the habit of swearing is a mental test; it is, in consequence, subject to the general laws governing intensiveness; persons for the influence of early training and association. Exceptions are, therefore, too numerous to lay down any positive rule; still, it is safe to say, in general, that a man's intellectual development is largely determined by the extent of his indulgence in profanity. Profanity unquestionably stamps a man as being of small intellect. It is a relic of barbarism, and must pass before the sweep of civilization.—Nashville-Tennessean.

To a very great extent the practice of swearing is specially characteristic of a rude and imperfect civilization. With the advance of culture, profanity declines. It declines not so much because men become peculiarly sensitive to its viciousness, but they do to its ineffectiveness—the growth of refinement both in the individual and in the community. Much must always be allowed in the case of particular persons for the influence of early training and association. Exceptions are, therefore, too numerous to lay down any positive rule; still, it is safe to say, in general, that a man's intellectual development is largely determined by the extent of his indulgence in profanity. Profanity unquestionably stamps a man as being of small intellect. It is a relic of barbarism, and must pass before the sweep of civilization.—Nashville-Tennessean.

G. S. HARMON.

NOTICE.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: When you buy your tickets to Hattiesburg, secure the usual certificate, which when properly countersigned will entitle you to return ticket for one-third rate of regular fare, plus 25 cents. When you change roads, be certain to get the certificate with each ticket purchased. Those who have permit books or mileage need not secure certificate, as the rate is the same. I am strictly charged to refrain from signing certificates for visitors; only for those who are members of the Conference, or on boards, or in some official capacity, will be given reduced rate.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

FROM THE BISHOP.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Conference:

The presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference will meet me on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 6th, at 3 o'clock, in the pastor's study, Main Street

Church, Hattiesburg. Your brother,
EDWIN D. MOUZON.

NOTICE.

The Class of the First Year will meet the committee at the Main Street Methodist Church, in Hattiesburg, Miss., on Tuesday, Dec. 6, at 9:30 a. m., prepared for written examinations. W. H. SAUNDERS,
For the Committee.

NOTICE.

The Class of the Second Year will meet the committee of examiners for that year at Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, on December 6th, at 9 a. m. Let all members who have passed the examination in the Correspondence School notify the chairman of the committee at once. The committee would be glad to know at once if any who have not passed will not appear for examination.

GEO. H. THOMPSON, Chairman.

NOTICE.

The Mississippi Methodist Historical Society of the Mississippi Conference will meet in the Main Street Methodist Church in Hattiesburg, Tuesday, Dec. 6, 7:30 p. m. Prof. R. S. Ricketts, of Millsaps College, will read a paper before the Association.

T. B. HOLLOMAN,
Vice-President, Miss. Conf.

APPLICANTS FOR ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

All applicants for admission on trial into the Mississippi Annual Conference will please meet the Committee of Examination in the Sunday school room of the Methodist Church at Hattiesburg at 9 a. m. Tuesday, December 6, 1910.

H. M. ELLIS, Chairman.

NOTICE.

The members of the Class of the Fourth Year will please to meet me at Main Street Church on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 6, 1910, at 2:30 o'clock. Those who send me their sermons to Natchez before Dec. 4, and have their work done in the Correspondence School, or in the Divinity School, need not meet me at the church. It is important that this request be complied with to the letter, if possible, so that there shall be no misunderstanding with any member of the class. Those members who will take an examination on any book will please be supplied with paper, pen, and ink.

ROBT. SELBY,
Acting Secretary.

FROM THE AUDITING COMMITTEE

Dear Brethren: The Committee has mailed to every preacher-in-charge in the Mississippi Conference report blanks for the Annual Conference, and it is hoped that these will reach you promptly; should you not receive one in due time, please notify the undersigned and another will be sent you. We have enclosed some suggestions which we earnestly trust will be observed, as it will save confusion and error. There is a great deal of labor connected with the auditing of the reports, and we feel sure that you are quite willing to make it as easy as possible. Fraternally,

IN SORROW.

Dear Brother Meek: We are so sad and feel so lonely. We read in the Advocate a day or two ago of the death of little Wm. H. Saunders, only son of Brother and Sister Wm. H. Saunders, of Vicksburg. Now comes the sad news of the death of our precious brother, E. W. Lipscomb. Surely God moves in a mysterious way. Eight of our Mississippi Conference preachers taken from us by the hand of death since Conference—among them, the old, middle-aged and the young. We shall miss them at Conference. God have mercy on us.

Mothers, Protect the Little Ones.

Sometimes a splinter gets in the flesh deep and festers; a "skeeter" bite is scratched and makes a big, ugly sore; poison oak or some disgusting skin disease breaks out on one of the little ones. Don't let it run on without the proper attention—the result is disastrous. Stop these little eruptions of the skin, such as boils, bruises, burns, cuts, poison oak and sores of any kind, with "Gray's Ointment." You can rely on it for a speedy, permanent cure. For sale by your druggist for 25c per box, if not write us for free sample box, addressing Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and it will be sent to you postpaid.

Mr. E. B. Virgin, of New Orleans, La., writes: "We have been using Gray's Ointment in our family for 25 years, and can recommend it for anything in the line of cuts, bruises, nail punctures, boils, carbuncles, skin bruises and splinters in the flesh."

FROM EUNICE, LA.

If you will allow me space I will furnish your readers with some items that may be of interest. Embracing the fourth Sunday in September, I was with Rev. J. A. Morgan in a meeting at Forest Hill. I preached for him one week. Much good was accomplished. Beginning on the first Sunday in October at 11 a. m., I opened my protracted meeting at Long Point Church, and was joined on Monday by Rev. W. H. Benton, who continued until the close of the meeting. He did good preaching, and is fine help, but on account of the bad weather and other hindrances, the meeting was not what it should have been; still there was some interest manifested. Leaving Eunice on Tuesday before the third Sunday in October, I went to Purvis, Miss., to assist my old friend and brother, Rev. Geo. D. Anders in a revival meeting, and for nine days I preached to the best of my ability twice a day, except Sunday; on Sunday I preached three times. The meeting was considered a very successful meeting. There were some accessions and the church was greatly revived. Brother Anders is a fine man and is doing a great work. He has a good people to serve. I made many friends while there. From there I came home to spend two nights and then to go to my church at Iota and begin my meeting on Sunday at 11 a. m. Rev. Geo. D. Anders, from Purvis, Miss., came to me on Wednesday and continued with me until the close of the meeting. He did fine preaching and much good was accomplished. On account of the vast amount of rice thrashing, the attendance was not as large as usual. On the first Sunday night in November, I opened my revival meeting in Eunice. On Monday night I was joined in the meeting by Rev. Martin Hebert, who continued with me and did the preaching until the 16th, when the meeting closed. He did excellent preaching, which made a lasting impression. Several children joined the church and the church was revived. I consider the foregoing preachers able men, and splendid help, and eternity alone can reveal the vast amount of good accomplished through their efforts. I hope to secure them again. During our revival meeting here at Eunice, our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Denison, came and preached for us on Sunday night and held my Quarterly Conference next morning. He preached a very strong sermon. The finances are considerably behind on the Eunice Charge. This has been a great hindrance to our revivals, for when the church begins to do her duty on the financial line God is going to bless. I am trying to get ready for the Conference. Pray for me. I think I will send you a good list of subscribers real soon.—S. D. Howard.

MRS. AMELIA YOUNGBLOOD.

Sister Amelia Youngblood, consort of Brother W. A. Youngblood, of Perth, Jefferson County, Mississippi, died on the evening of November 23rd, and was buried the following Thanksgiving evening in the Nebo Church cemetery, there to await the Resurrection morn. A beautiful life has closed—one of God's elect women has been transplanted. The Church militant will long mourn her departure, but will evermore be enriched with the priceless legacy of her saintly life. She loved the House of the Lord and delighted in the ministries and ordinances of the sanctuary. Many preachers of the Mississippi Conference will learn with profound sorrow and sympathy of the Church, community and family's irreparable loss. But our dear sister followed the Master on earth, and now walks with him in white above. CHAS. W. SCOTT.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Reported by Rev. W. M. Langley.

For the third time the captains of the hosts of Methodism in North Mississippi turned their faces toward Sardis to meet in Conference. The first time was in 1876, when Bishop Pierce presided over the sixth session, and the second in 1894, when Bishop John C. Keener presided over the twenty-fourth session. This time we assembled to meet our new Bishop, James H. McCoy, who comes to us as one of the youngest of the Episcopal College. By Tuesday night the town was again in possession of the people called "Methodists," or, I might better say, that we were in the hands of the good people of Sardis, who had thrown open their hospitable homes to us.

The first service was a meeting on Tuesday night of the Mississippi Historical Society. Rev. G. W. Bachman and Rev. J. W. Poston, having each completed his fiftieth year in the ministry, were invited to deliver addresses reviewing their labors, and, having been pioneers, they had much to tell of large circuits, small salaries and thrilling experiences. Scarred by many battles, they are still serving in the King's army with the zeal of veterans.

Wednesday morning, November 30, 1910, dawned clear and cold, and the preachers soon began to gather in the splendid new steam-heated church—a modern, convenient building that the good people of Sardis have erected at a cost of nearly $20,000.

At 9 o'clock the Conference met in its forty-first session, with Bishop J. H. McCoy in the chair. The brethren were called to order by singing hymn No. 19, "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing," after which the Bishop announced and read hymn No. 222, "Jesus! the Name High Over All," after singing the Bishop led in fervent prayer, and then read the fourth chapter of Ephesians. His comments were unctuous and filled with the spirit of the Master.

According to a standing order of the Conference, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by the Bishop, assisted by J. W. Dorman, J. H. Mitchell, J. A. Randolph and D. W. Babb.

The roll was called by Jno. R. Countiss, who has served as secretary for a number of years. He was unanimously re-elected, and nominated his staff as follows: W. L. Duren, assistant secretary; V. C. Curtiss, railroad secretary; O. W. Bradley and T. M. Bradley, statistical secretaries. The Conference was unusually full for the opening session. Roll call is rather a solemn occasion, and there is always a hush over the Conference.

Five preachers were reported as having died during the year: Q. A. Oats, J. C. Lowe, M. D. Fly, L. D. Worsham, K. A. Jones. Their names were referred to the Committee on Memorials.

The presiding elders, through their secretary, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, announced the following committees:

Public Worship—W. M. Young, J. W. Boswell, J. S. Carlton.

Memoirs—L. M. Lipscomb, J. W. Raper, G. W. Bachman, C. P. Moss and T. C. Wier.

Spiritual Interests—Eugene Johnson, Joseph Cook, J. B. Randolph, L. P. Wasson, T. J. Durrett, W. D. Clark and T. C. Foust.

Temperance—N. E. Wilroy, W. E. M. Brogan, J. J. Beck, J. G. Hamilton, R. P. Goar, J. T. Guilett, D. H. Crowson and J. H. Sberard.

District Conference Records—F. E. Ray, E. E. Langford, W. M. Langley, E. B. Sharp, Herbert Holmes, O. P. Armour, M. G. Dubard, L. A. McKeown.

Conference Relations—W. S. Lagrone, R. P. Neblett, O. L. Savage, C. P. Moss, R. M. Evans, D. W. Babb, A. W. Langley and B. P. Fullilove.

Admissions—T. H. Dorsey, J. T. McCafferty, S. M. Thames, T. H. Porter, R. O. Brown, J. H. Holder, O. W. Bradley, T. M. Bradley.

Books and Periodicals—J. D. Barbee, R. H. E. Glad-ney, H. T. Gaines, J. M. Wyatt, A. A. Martin, S. B. Myers, B. B. Sullivan and W. L. Duren.

Sabbath Observance—D. M. Geddie, W. F. Rogers, C. L. Maples, F. J. McDonald, Jr., R. M. Weaver, W. B. Nichols, W. L. Broome and L. C. Anderson.

The hours of meeting and adjournment were fixed at 9 a. m. and 12 m.; the main auditorium was declared the bar of the Conference. Various communications from the connectional boards were presented and referred to the Conference boards and committees.

The Bishop called question 22, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The names of the presiding elders, J. H. Felts of the Aberdeen District, J. E. Thomas of the Columbus district, B. P. Jacob of the Corinth District, N. G. Augustus of the Durant District, W. W. Woollard of the Greenville District, W. M. Young of the Sardis District, J. E. Cunningham of the Oxford District, and E. S. Lewis of the Winona District, were called, and they gave a summary of the work on the districts. Their reports rang with the sound of progress along all lines. There has been marked advance in finances and church building. Revival fires have burned in many places throughout the Conference.

The Bishop exhorted that there should be a great revival among the lay brethren in the matter of salary raising in a systematic manner, especially in view of the increased cost of living.

The names of the superannuates were called. The Bishop referred to this list as the "Honor Roll." They are: J. D. Newsom, T. C. Wier, W. S. Harrison, J. B. Stone, W. T. J. Sullivan, J. W. Poston, T. G. Freeman, Thos. Cameron, H. C. Morehead, J. T. Cunningham, R. M. Davis, R. A. Ellis, C. N. Terry, I. W. Anderson, K. M. Harrison, A. P. Leech, G. H. Jacobs, J. R. D. King, B. P. Patterson and R. E. Duke. The veterans who were present responded with words of love and greeting.

Question 10, "Who are elected deacons?" was called, and J. D. McWhorter, A. G. Hall, J. A. Coleman, W. D. Shearer, J. G. Johnson and M. A. Burns were continued in the class of the second year. J. R. Bright, being in deacons' orders, was advanced to the class of third year; Arthur Davenport and D. H. Crowson were elected to deacons' orders and advanced to the class of the third year.

Question 9, "Who are deacons of one year?" was called, and J. L. Nabors, T. E. Yancy and T. J. Hopper were continued in the class of the third year. J. C. McElroy, K. P. Faust and E. B. Sharp were advanced to the class of the fourth year.

The Bishop took up question 14, "Who are elected elders?" S. B. Myers and W. C. Galceran were continued in the class of the fourth year; W. L. Brown and J. W. McGee were elected to elders' orders; L. A. McKeown and A. N. Goforth, being already in orders, were passed, completing the course of study.

SECOND DAY.

Conference assembled Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. Bishop McCoy announced and read hymn No. 280, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord." After singing Rev. J. W. Honnoll led in prayer. The Bishop then read 1 Peter, 5th chapter.

The secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting, and they were adopted.

The secretary called the absentees, and it was moved that the further calling of the roll be dispensed with, and it was so ordered.

The secretary read the following telegram:
"Galveston, Texas, Nov. 29, 1910.

"Rev. J. R. Countiss, Sardis, Miss.

"For the first time since I was admitted on trial I must miss roll call to-morrow morning. Give my love to the brethren.
W. B. Murrah."

The secretary read a resolution that Bishop Murrah's name be continued on the roll, and it was adopted.

The secretary was ordered to send greetings to Bishop Murrah.

Question 6: "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?" J. W. Herring from the Arkansas Conference, and H. G. Henderson from the Memphis Conference.

Question 16: "What local preachers are elected elders?" None.

Question 12: "What local preachers are elected deacons?" Corinth District, A. S. Brisco; Sardis District, J. A. Biffle.

Question 22: "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The call of the Aberdeen District was taken up and the preachers reported their work and their characters were passed.

The following visitors were introduced: Dr. Stonewall Anderson, Secretary General Board of Education; Dr. W. W. Pinson, Secretary General Board of Missions; D. C. Hull, President of Millsaps College; Rev. W. M. Williams, Superintendent of the Orphans' Home; Rev. Robert Selby, of the Mississippi Conference; Rev. E. B. Ramsey, of the Memphis Conference; Rev. Fred Long, Mississippi State Secretary International Sunday School Association; Dr. W. G. Hefley, Rev. E. B. Ramsey and Dr. H. B. Johnston of the Memphis Conference; and Dr. H. H. McNeil of the Alabama Conference. Dr. Stonewall Anderson, addressed the Conference on our educational work.

J. H. Sherard presented and read the following report from the Hospital Commission, which, after discussion, was adopted:

"Dear Fathers and Brethren: In pursuance of the appointment of last Conference, we, your Hospital Commissioners, beg leave to report that on June 3, 1910, we met in Memphis, Tenn., the Commissioners from the Memphis and Mississippi Conferences, and, after a thorough discussion of the practicability of the building of a Methodist hospital to serve the large territory embraced in the Conferences named, agreed to build a hospital in the City of Memphis to cost not less than $250,000, work to begin as soon as $75,000 is assured. At this meeting a local hospital committee of three was appointed to look into the matter thoroughly from a local standpoint, and to report its findings to this Commission.

"This committee reported that they know of a lot with suitable brick residence on the same, and that the property can be bought for a very reasonable consideration.

"Following out an agreement entered into with the Commissioners of the above named Conferences, we recommend that a board of five trustees—three lay and two clerical—be elected by this Conference, upon nomination of the Bishop, with power to act with similar trustees from the interested Conferences. In case of a vacancy, we recommend that the Bishop in charge appoint the man or men to serve until the ensuing Annual Conference. We recommend, also, that, if the co-operating Conferences join in this action, the trustees meet at the earliest possible date to perfect plans for the launching of the enterprise.

The Memphis Conference has already passed a similar paper. We approve the action of the joint commission in requesting J. R. Pepper and Rev. H. B. Johnson to visit the White River Conference and ask their co-operation in this work.

"Respectfully submitted,

"R. A. MEEK,
JNO. H. SHERARD,
J. D. BARBEE."

Dr. Hefley and Dr. Johnson of the Memphis Conference spoke endorsing the movement to build a hospital in Memphis.

Rev. R. A. Meek presented a communication from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi which was read and referred to the committee on Temperance.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham read a communication from the secretary of the Seashore Divinity School which reported that organization to have had a most prosperous session last summer, both in the program presented and in attendance.

A QUERY.

By Benton H. Thomas.

Through the visiting Purity Congress,
And from our own local forces at work,
Come suggestions of grave obligations
That no Christian conscience can shirk.

There are certain facts brought to the surface
As regards the great object in task—
Certain questions remaining unanswered,
That both pity and reason might ask.

If the unfortunate outcast victim
Should desire to return to the path,
To the sphere of the virtuous woman,
And escape God's avenging wrath—

Would she find quick response to her effort,
Though in tears of repentance she tried,
Would she find friends and means kindly waiting,
And a refuge her sorrows to hide?

I have stood where the red lights are burning
With a ghastly accusing glare,
O'er the moral and physical wreckage
Of woman, once noble and fair:

Where a little assembly of workers,
With the same dear old story to tell—
We repeated His promise of mercy
As we stood twixt the fallen and hell.

We spoke of the hope of Redemption,
Of the Savior who came not to condemn,
But that all may be saved through repentance,
If in faith, they will come unto Him.

A home costing one hundred thousand,
Is a sacrifice little enough
To expect from the wealth of New Orleans.
As you are able, then put up the "stuff."

And nailed o'er the door of the courthouse,
Or above our own City Hall,
There should shine forth this blazing inscription
To be plain to the notice of all:

"No daughter or son of New Orleans
Should e'er have the charge to repeat,
That, tempted, they fell by the wayside,
Because they had nothing to eat."

THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene in Hattiesburg on December 7th, Bishop Mouzon, of Texas, presiding. These Annual Conferences usually hold two sessions a day, morning and afternoon, with preaching services every evening, and the Conference remains in session about one week.

In Methodism there are five Conferences, extending from the local church Conference, which meets monthly, to the General Conference, which convenes quadrennially. Midway between these extremes lies the Annual Conference, which, as its name indicates, assembles once a year.

The Annual Conference is presided over by a Bishop, or, in the absence of this dignitary, by a President elected by the body from the traveling elders, and is composed of all the traveling preachers within its bounds, except such as have not passed a two years' probation and an approved examination upon a course of study prescribed by the Bishops. In addition to these are four lay members from each presiding elder's district, these being elected by the District Conference.

What It Means.

The coming of an Annual Conference into a community is an event of no small importance. It is a call to the people to set apart for the time being a prophet's chamber, wherein the man of God may dwell and bring a blessing to the home.

It means the opportunity for seeing the workings of a great ecclesiastical body; it means the inspiring sight of more than two hundred men waiting in trustful confidence to receive the appointments which they believe to be the choice of God for them. It affords the people a chance to hear the connectional men of the Church; it means to the Methodist people of the community the opportunity to magnify with pardonable pride and just appreciation the Church which has so manifestly inherited the blessings and favor of God.

History of Mississippi Conference.

The history of the Mississippi Conference is not without interest. It had its origin in a call of Bishop Asbury for volunteers to labor in "the Natchez Country, lately ceded by his Catholic Majesty, the King of Spain, to the United States Government."

This call was answered by Tobias Gibson, a young South Carolinian, who traveled on horseback from South Carolina to some point in Tennessee on the Cumberland River, where, exchanging his horse and saddle for a canoe, he began his solitary journey down that river towards the Mississippi. After several weeks of travel, sometimes in his skiff, sometimes in passing flatboats, he reached the frontier City of Natchez in the spring of 1799. Here he began his apostolic labors, which were continued for six years, when, worn out with the hardships and dangers of his heroic services—too great for his frail strength—he fell on sleep. His body rests in a secluded spot near the City of Vicksburg, and is marked by a modest marble shaft.

This hero of the Cross was joined from time to time by high-minded and devoted young men who entered zealously into his labors, and, after his death, carried on the work with encouraging success.

First Mississippi Conference.

In 1812 provision was made for the establishment of a separate Annual Conference in this territory, and in the fall of 1813 the first Conference was held at Spring Hill, in Jefferson County, at the home of Mr. Newitt Vick. This session was not attended by a Bishop, but was presided over by the Rev. Samuel Sellers, the secretary being the Rev. Wm. Winans.

The first Conference in Mississippi which a Bishop presided over was held October 10, 1816, at Foster's Mound, six miles northeast of Natchez, and was presided over by Bishop R. R. Roberts.

The home of Mr. Foster was built upon a large Indian Mound, the summit of which had been leveled off, furnishing ample room for the house. This historic structure still stands and may be seen at Foster's Station, on the Y. & M. V. into Natchez, the railroad touching the base of the mound.

At this time the Conference numbered ten preachers and 1,161 members. The boundary lines were somewhat indefinite, but in general terms they may be said to have embraced all of the State of Mississippi, a large part of Alabama, all of Louisiana, and the whole of the great State of Texas—a territory now divided into twelve Annual Conferences. This broad domain was, of course, not all occupied, but may be said to have been within the limits of this new Conference of the Southwest.

The first missionaries into Texas were sent from the Mississippi Conference about the year 1830.

Territory Now Served.

As at present constituted, the Mississippi Conference consists of eight presiding elders' districts, averaging twenty-two pastoral charges to the district. The territory now served by the Conference is the southern half of the State of Mississippi, and the membership numbers about 55,000 communicants. There are 491 churches, valued at $943,119, and 144 parsonages, valued at $263,250, with other church property valued at $151,452.

The Conference owns three female colleges, and, jointly with the North Mississippi Conference, Millsaps College and the Orphans' Home, both located at Jackson.

The Conference paid last year for home and foreign missions $43,854.20.

William Winans and Benjamin Drake.

In the early history of the Mississippi Conference, incomparably the greatest preacher was William Winans, the grandfather of W. A. Dickson, now one of Mississippi's representatives in our National Congress. Second in importance and influence only to Dr. Winans, was the Rev. Benjamin Drake, D. D. These two men embodied the characteristics of that disciple whom Jesus loved. Dr. Winans was as the "Son of Thunder," and Dr. Drake's character was marked by all the gentleness and grace of the "Seer of Patmos."

The most conspicuous layman of early Methodism in Mississippi was Judge Edward McGehee, the princely patron of Centenary College and the humble servant of the Church of Christ.

Leaders of Later Years.

Later in the history of the Conference are to be found prominent in its councils such names as J. G. Jones, the gifted historian; Charles K. Marshall, the matchless orator; H. F. Johnson, the peerless educator; Wm. H. Watkins, W. E. M. Linfield, C. G. Andrews, for thirty-five years the Conference secretary; and, most distinguished of them all, the brilliant Bishop Charles B. Galloway.

Perhaps the most eloquent preacher of his time was Elijah Steele, under the spell of whose eloquence the people would laugh one minute and weep the next, and, all unconscious of moving from their seats, would gather around the chancel and look with charmed gaze into the eyes of this man of golden speech.

By this time the Conference has developed many laymen of influence and prominence, among whom may be named W. L. Nugent, Peter James, M. L. Thornton and R. W. Millsaps.

As was said of the faithful in the Hebrew Hall of Fame, as given to us in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, "Time would fail me to tell of all those who, from Richmond Nolley, bravely meeting death on his knees in the snow in the swamps of Louisiana, to W. B. Lewis, the St. John of the Mississippi Conference, so recently ascended, have obtained a good report through faith."—From the Hattiesburg News.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF HIGHER CRITICISM.

By Arthur T. Pierson.

Before concluding this series of articles, we feel constrained to refer to two prominent stumbling blocks in the way of the average disciple. First, the fear of being counted ignorant; and, second, the fear of being counted an opposer of new discovery and light. These two apprehensions have more to do with the advance of skeptical opinion than most of us are aware. We have had more than one occasion to refer to the words of Francis Bacon, that men follow four classes of idols—the idols of the tribe, of the den, of the market-place, and of the theatre—or, in other words, popular idols, learned scholars, successful men of enterprise, and persuasive orators.

There is a disposition on the part of many to accept without much independent thought the views which are advanced and advocated by those who are supposed to be leading scholars. This is especially a temptation to younger men, who follow in the wake of the learned as a boat is drawn into the wake of a great steamer. We regard this as a great mistake. Scholarship and learning can never determine questions of faith. There is a pride of intellect which is rather the foe than the friend of a believing heart. It takes more than a knowledge of ancient languages and modern sciences to understand the Scriptures; and it takes a very humble mind to receive the testimony of God implicitly. The most accomplished intellect may be wedded to an entirely unsafe judgment. Where a bias of prejudice exists, or strong prepossession, there is a lack of clear vision. Man's intellect is binocular. He needs a clear judgment and a clean conscience, and the lack of either makes the vision dim and uncertain.

There is a special danger in following the inferences of a writer because he manifests a devout spirit. His devoutness may be owing to his piety, while his views may be seriously warped by some mental obliquity. It is very common for learned men who have a theory to uphold to deal in positive statement which oftentimes will not bear examination. A proverb is sometimes a dangerous thing. It may state what is essentially an error, but is so condensed and apparently wise a form of statement as utterly to mislead, being accepted as an axiom because of its proverb form. For instance, Pope says in his Essay on Man, "An honest man's the noblest work of God," which is about as great a lie as ever was written. Many a man who has been honest has been an utter enemy of God. Sincerity cannot cover a multitude of sins; nor can an external uprightness, in dealing with men, cover internal antagonism to God.

And as men deal carelessly in proverbs, so do they deal with assumption. They sometimes say, "It follows as a matter of course," when a logical mind will see that it does not follow at all; and sometimes a question is asked which seems to imply an affirmative answer where the truth requires denial. Men sometimes say, "This is reasonable," when there is not a trace of proof and when the statement is utterly opposed to the soundest reason. The reader is supposed to be satisfied with the assertion of the writer. One good effect of modern criticism may possibly be to teach men to think independently and to examine for themselves.

The second stumbling block to which we have referred is the fear of seeming to be opposed to the truth, to shut the eye to additional light for fear of having former opinions disturbed. Truth can never be opposed to itself. Wherever discovered, it must harmonize with all other truth. To oppose examination and investigation is to stifle intelligence. As Bushnell used to say, it is like the man who tries to arrest the dawn by ringing the neck of the crowing cock; or as Shillabar used to put it into the mouth of Mrs. Partington, it is like sweeping back the Atlantic with a broom. No rational believer is opposed to truth or afraid of light. He purposes to test all things and hold fast only that which proves itself to be good by bearing the test. But to adopt another's opinions without clear basis of conviction is to abrogate his rights as a reasoning man, and reminds us of Prof. Kennedy's admirable tract on "The Rights of the Unlearned."

More than this, any scholarship which is evidently controlled by an irreverent spirit is prima facie unreliable. To oppose the full inspiration of the Word of God and insinuate doubts as to even its historicity challenges critical examination of the positions assumed. Any man knows that the avowed enemy of all that is miraculous or supernatural, or

BISHOP W. B. MURRAH, D.D., LL.D.,
Now Holding the Louisiana Conference.

The Columbus District was called. The preachers made brief reports, and their characters passed.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, in connection with his report, spoke words of love for the brethren and expressed regret at leaving them to go to another Conference.

Dr. J. W. Boswell offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That this Conference gives up the Rev. T. W. Lewis with deepest regret, and are reconciled to the transfer only in view of the fact that he goes to a larger field, where his opportunities for usefulness will be greatly enlarged; and we pray that in the good providence of God the way may be opened for his return." It was adopted unanimously.

Corinth District was called; the preachers reported, and their characters passed.

P. T. Callicott presented and read the report from the Joint Board of Finance. W. W. Mitchell presented and read a report from the board on the Superannuates' Endowment Fund. These reports were adopted.

The Rev. Dr. Brown, Agent for the American Bible Society, addressed the Conference in behalf of that society.

The Bishop announced the arrival of the order of the day, and J. C. Park presented and read report No. 1 from the Board of Education.

On motion of W. L. Duren, D. C. Hull and Maj. R. W. Millsaps were extended the privilege of the floor on the report.

On motion, the report was laid on the table so as to consider a minority report on the part of the report bearing on intercollegiate athletics.

Rev. R. O. Brown presented and read the minority report as follows:

"We, the undersigned members of the Board of Education, believing it to be unwise and inexpedient to reopen the question of intercollegiate athletics at Millsaps College, would respectfully recommend that the Conference do not grant the request of the petitioners.

R. O. BROWN,
L. M. LIPSCOMB,
J. H. MITCHELL.

The minority report was offered as a substitute for the last part of the majority report.

Rev. E. S. Lewis moved to table the minority report, which was lost on a vote, 53 to 59.

Answer, number damaged, 2; amount, $365.

Question 45, "What are the insurance statistics?"

Answer, amount carried, $443,899.

Rev. Eugene Johnson presented and read the report of the committee on the spiritual state of the church, and it was adopted.

The Secretary requested that the organization of the boards be reported to him, and that the preachers on missions and circuits give their express offices.

The resolutions adopted by the laymen at their meeting were ordered incorporated into the Minutes.

It was moved by J. H. Mitchell and carried that the Secretary express the regret and good wishes of the Conference to the brethren transferring: R. A. Clark, L. M. Broyles, W. C. Galceran, and J. W. Rogers.

Hymn 227, "Let our bodies part," was announced by the Bishop, after singing, the Secretary read the Minutes, and they were adopted.

Question 46, "Where are the preachers stationed this year?"

Concerning Missions.

FROM THE FIRING LINE IN BRAZIL.

An evangelistic campaign has been undertaken by the South Brazil Conference, in which they are praying and working for the conversion of one thousand during the Conference year.

It is an interesting fact that as many as three churches in Brazil have been founded by soldiers who have gone to these several points in connection with Government garrisons and have at once interested themselves in the evangelization of the local community.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has erected a small pavilion within the grounds of the Exposition at Buenos Ayres which contains samples of the Scriptures printed in 424 languages and dialects. A most enthusiastic colporteur—an Italian only recently converted—is selling hundreds of copies of the New Testament in Spanish to the Argentinians.

The growth of the Institutional Church in Porto Alegre under the pastorate of Rev. Claude L. Smith has been most gratifying. The dedication of the church was an occasion long to be remembered. No little of the success of this interesting work has been due to the devoted labors of Miss Della Wright, who works day and night among and in behalf of the women and children of the factories in the neighborhood.

The arrival in Rio of Miss Mary Pescud, Miss V. O. Howell and Miss Miriam Steel was a cause for great rejoicing. Miss Pescud is reported as having returned to her school work in Petropolis in fine health, and with the glow upon her of the splendid missionary meetings she attended at home. Miss Howell goes to Piracicaba, and Miss Steel remains in Rio, both being engaged for the most part with language study.

Our missionary laymen would be greatly interested in a Brazilian dentist who has been instrumental in bringing over 200 men and women to Christ during the years since he became a Christian. This has nearly all been done through personal interviews and by the distribution of tracts. He never permits a patient to leave his office without giving him a tract on some religious subject or engaging in prayer. This brother has just moved to another town in order to help a weak church which seems to be going into a decline. This is Christianity in earnest.

Bishop Lambuth inaugurated the evangelistic campaign in the State of Rio Grande do Sul by making a call for prayer through the organ of the South Brazil Conference, and from every Methodist pulpit in the State. At the same time, he urged the preaching of sermons on sin, repentance and salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. The preachers were requested to organize cottage prayer meetings, to do much personal work, and to cast the net at the close of every service. "Expect great things from God," is the motto of the hour. The prayers and efforts of preachers and people are already being answered.

MISSIONARY SPECIALS.

At its meeting in October the Board of Missions adopted by-laws covering several important points raised in a statement made by the General Secretary. Three of these by-laws were as follows:

"All new enterprises and advance movements shall be considered by the Board on the same basis as current expenditures, and if approved shall be put on the list of appropriations."

"All special objects to be put before the Church or assigned to individuals, churches and other bodies shall hereafter be selected from the list of appropriations, and it shall be the duty of all connected with the Board to encourage and assist in the full collection of such specials."

"No person shall be allowed to solicit special gifts without authority of the Board."

These by-laws were adopted with the following purposes in view:

1. The prevention of an unwise multiplication of specials, thus creating confusion, defeating their successful completion, and endangering the financial interests of the Board.

2. The securing of a just and equitable share in the specials by all our fields, and insuring the advocacy of the enterprises most needed in the various fields as specials.

3. The proper correlation of these specials with the logical development of the whole work of the Board, thus preventing the evil effects of over-emphasis and one-sided development as to enterprises or fields.

4. To save us from deficit and insure the completion of enterprises undertaken as specials by concentrating on those selected by the Board and pressing them through without dividing our forces and diverting attention by the springing of new ones.

5. To encourage pastors and people in the raising of their assessments by identifying specials and assessments, and allowing the specials authorized by the Board to count on the regular collections.

Experience has amply proven the evils for which these by-laws are meant to be a remedy. It is also clear that, if the policy adopted by the Board is adhered to, we can remedy these evils. On the other hand, if special calls are to be made in the interest of certain fields and enterprises during the year, and independent of the Board's action, confusion and harm must result. The fact is not changed by the worthiness and urgency of the causes, nor by the prominence and good intentions of their advocates. Such causes should bide their time and take their chances with other interests for orderly and authoritative presentation.

The sum total of specials that we can hope to raise is, like the assessment, limited. Whenever this sum is in part diverted from those objects that the Board is already committed to, there is danger of deficit or of failure at one point or the other.

Specials, as conducted by us, are in the nature of an additional assessment. They constitute a call on the Church, and are a levy on its liberality and loyalty for missionary needs just as the assessments are. In order that the Board may direct its affairs intelligently, it can be seen at a glance that it alone is competent to make these levies. Moreover, new enterprises bear a logical relation to the annual budget of expenses, and are to be considered, not alone, but in that relation. We have now work in hand—missionaries to care for and enterprises projected already to consume all our income for several years, unless there should be a large increase in receipts, for which we hope and pray. If we unitedly stand by the present policy of the Board and concentrate on those enterprises that are set forth by it as most urgent and important, we can keep the work going and provide for its logical and orderly growth in all our fields. But, if we divide our forces and yield to special pleas—however important they may be, and however high their sanction—there will inevitably result hurtful and discouraging retrenchment at some points. The Board is composed of men and women chosen for their wisdom and ability to handle the missionary interests of the Church. They have adopted this policy after a careful study of the conditions, and with their eye on the whole field. We believe we can rely on the whole Church to co-operate on this rational and business-like basis which will deliver our missionary administration from some of its chief embarrassments and greatly contribute to safe and orderly progress.

We shall be happy to correspond with those Churches or individuals who may desire to support missionaries or other workers, aid our schools, build churches, or otherwise give special help to any of our fields. We will do all in our power to assist in the selection of an object that will appeal to the interests of the people, and at the same time be in harmony with the policy above outlined.

SACK WILKERSON.

Brother Sack Wilkerson was born in Wilcox County, Alabama, December 10, 1834. He died at his home near Pleasant Valley Church, Webster Parish, Louisiana, July 28, 1910, living to the ripe age of 76 years. Brother Wilkerson was a man of limited education, but of fine practical sense and judgment. He never possessed much of this world's goods, but had a store of spiritual wealth of far greater value than all the hoarded treasures of this world. He lived in no great city, and did not move among the great crowds, but lived a pure, simple life, sweet and inspiring to all who came in close touch with him. He had no children of his own, but a more devoted man to children, or one that did more for children in his limited sphere, would be difficult to find. He was no great entertainer, but a more cordial welcome to his humble home could not be accorded in the most spacious palace. His was ever the preacher's home, and no place more genuinely home for the preacher than with him. He was frank, cordial, jovial, friendly, sincere and true.

Brother Wilkerson was among the few of the old type of Methodists who are so rapidly passing away. His religious nature was always to the fore. He never allowed an opportunity to slip to speak a word for his Lord and Master. Christ to him was a real person, and he desired that all should know his Lord as he knew Him. He was one of the best personal workers for Christ the writer has ever known. For more than twenty-five years he was Sunday school superintendent in the Pleasant Valley Church, and of a more faithful, devoted one, no Sunday school could boast. His devotion to and interest in the children was beautiful. It need scarcely be said the children were exceedingly devoted to him. He was ever exuberant and cheerful. I have been in his home when he did not know where his next meal would come from, and he was as happy and jovial as when the larder was full.

In the days back in this rural church, when the organ was unknown, no preacher would be lost for his singing. If Uncle Sack was well enough to attend church, few could equal his fervor in song. The old songs of Zion rang out with a beauty and fervency that made the service rich and spiritual. When the days of his enfeebled health made it no longer possible for him to attend his beloved church, the forests around his secluded home resounded with the echoes of the grand old hymns to the good old tunes. His greatest burden was his inability to attend church in his last years. As a young preacher just taking up the good work of the ministry, this grand old man of God was an inspiration and help, and left impressions that will follow on to the end of the career. When in the prime of ministerial life, the privilege of a visit to this godly soul was allowed, we found him a few months before his death, the same old soldier of the cross—though no longer able to attend church, as he had always been—possessed of a jubilant, happy faith, a zeal for his Lord and a longing to help others to the Christ.

Though simple in life, limited in area of activity, a great, good man has gone to a deserved reward. The world is poorer for his leaving. His kind are all too rare. He has left behind him influences that will not fade, and a personality that will abide among those who knew and loved him. His faithful and devoted wife survives him. It is lonely without her life-long companion, but she is happy in the consolation that she, too, will pass over and join her companion in the "home of the soul" before a great while.

In the life of one preacher, at least, who began his humble career where he could come in touch with this sainted man of God, there are few impressions that will linger with him throughout life with the same force for good and inspiration for zeal in his Lord's work, than the influences that abide the life and contact with dear old "Uncle Sack." May God bless his memory, crown his eternal spirit with immortal life, and bring consolation to the heart of his bereft wife and companion.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

THE INVENTION OF THE THERMOMETER.

It was not until the eighteenth century that the thermometer appeared. Among those who failed in their attempts to devise a heat-and-cold measurer were the noted Halley and the great Sir Isaac Newton. These scientists endeavored to supply the needed instrument by means of tubes containing oil, spirits of wine, etc., but to no avail. It was reserved to one Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit, an obscure and poor man living at Dantzic, to give the world its thermometer.

Fahrenheit had failed as a merchant, and possessing a taste for chemistry and mechanics, turned his attention to the problem of the thermometer. During his first series of experiments he used alcohol, but he soon became convinced that mercury was a more suitable substance to use in the tube.

It was about 1720, at Amsterdam, that Fahrenheit turned out the mercury thermometer that has served as a model ever since.

From the beginning Fahrenheit's plan was to indicate on the tube the two points at which water is congealed and boiled, respectively, and to graduate the space between. His first was an arbitrary marking, beginning at thirty-two degrees, since he had found that the mercury descended thirty-two degrees more before coming to what he deemed the extreme cold resulting from a mixture of ice, water, and sal ammoniac.

It was not long before Celsius of Stockholm suggested the more scientific graduation of 100 degrees between freezing and boiling points. This suggestion resulted in the centigrade thermometer. Another investigator, one Reaumur, came forward with another scheme of graduation of eighty degrees, the one that is accepted by the French. Despite the conclusions of Celsius and Reaumur, however, the Fahrenheit scale on which the freezing and boiling points are marked 32 and 212 degrees, respectively, holds its own throughout a great part of the world.—Harper's Weekly.

MRS. STERLING'S PLAN.

By Hilda Richmond.

"These journals for women make me tired, to use an old-fashioned expression!" said Mrs. Sterling, throwing down the offending magazine with a look of disgust on her face. "Full of fine sounding things about how to manage, and how to get along without a maid, but none of them ever work out. When my subscription runs out I'll never subscribe to this or any other household magazine again!"

"Why, I don't know, Anna," observed her husband mildly. "I think there are some pretty good things in—"

"Didn't I say they sounded well?" interrupted Mrs. Sterling. "The only fault I have to find is that they never work out. I declare I don't understand how my grandmother managed to bring up ten children, and do all her own work without a bit of labor-saving machinery, when I am hurried and worried with a family of four. I have a sewing-machine, and an electric iron, and a carpet-sweeper, and a kitchen cabinet, and good range, while she had none of these things. We live in a steam-heated house with bath and all modern conveniences, while she had to get along in a log-house with no conveniences. She must have been a living wonder!"

"Don't you think there is a great deal in having system?" asked Mr. Sterling. "Women are apt to waste time because they despise routine."

"Not this woman!" said Mrs. Sterling with emphasis. "I believe heartily in system and have plenty of it, but still I am overworked. I'm going to give up and say the women of the present are degenerating, and do the best I can, but never again will I believe all the things the magazine writers say about having leisure time when you do all or most of your work. I'll venture to say they are all men, or women who never saw the inside of a kitchen, if one could investigate them!"

All discussion about household matters came to an abrupt end a few minutes later, when Mr. Sterling slipped on the steps leading to the basement, and broke his ankle. Mrs. Sterling was profoundly sorry for the injured man, but in her heart she pitied herself, as he was an active, restless being, who dreaded confinement, and she foresaw trouble ahead for herself trying to keep him off his feet until all danger was past. In a few days the limb was comparatively comfortable, and the trouble she saw coming actually materialized.

"Hang it all! I'm tired of reading!" said the invalid two or three days after the accident. "I'm going to get on crutches and go down town the very first minute I'm able. I couldn't be a woman for any money."

"I wish you would hunt some buttons for me, dear," said Mrs. Sterling with the air of a diplomat, planting one of the machine drawers on his knee. "Here is the sample, and I want ten for Mary's dress. I am just ready for them."

Mr. Sterling took the drawer rather reluctantly, but presently was deep in the work of comparing buttons. "Anna!" he called at the end of ten minutes. "There are only six buttons like your sample!"

"Just hunt a little while longer, Charles, and you'll find them," floated in from the kitchen. "I bought a dozen and a half of them, and they are there."

"Anna! If you'll go and get a notary public," called Mr. Sterling at the end of another half-hour, "I'll make a sworn statement to the fact that there are positively only six buttons, as I said at first. I've examined every one."

"Let me see," said Mrs. Sterling thoughtfully. "I'm sorry, Charles, but I should have given you the button box, too. There are some buttons in that, I remember."

The button box was produced, and at the end of fifteen minutes Mr. Sterling announced that there were two more, and not another one. "I have just been thinking about those buttons," said his wife, appearing with flour on her hands. "I used four or five of them on a blouse I made for Eugene two years ago, and I'll run right up to the attic and get it as soon as I get my pie in the oven. I know just where it is."

After dinner Mr. Sterling complained no more about loneliness, but much to his wife's delight appeared to be reconciled to fate. He chatted with her as she sewed and worked, sympathized with her in her interruptions, was willing and anxious to do what he could to help in a small way, and altogether she rejoiced at the prospect of a quiet instead of a troublesome period of convalescence.

"Let me do up that bundle of laundry," he said, reaching for the package and string. "Why didn't you give it to me in the first place?"

"The string was so knotted," said Mrs. Sterling. "I keep it hanging on a nail in the kitchen, and the children help themselves."

The invalid patiently picked out the knots, tied the small bits together and had the bundle ready just in time for the man when he called half an hour later. Then he looked through the piece bag for an hour hunting for a bit of percale to mend the rent in Eugene's waist, coming off triumphant when the bottom of the bag was reached. After that he searched through a box of old papers and magazines to find the death notice of a remote cousin, which some other remote relative had written for, and after that he pared potatoes for supper. He even insisted upon hobnobbing to the place where his wife wanted a nail driven, and straightened out the rusty one she reluctantly handed him without comment, though the hatchet kept falling off the handle in a most exasperating way.

"Anna, I want you to take a day off and go to see Molly," urged Mr. Sterling, as he was able to be about once more, but forbidden the streets because they were so icy. "I can get along perfectly well and you have been kept in too much now. You must go, child. Just set a lunch for me on the table and I will do perfectly well. You can take the children with you and I will really enjoy a whole day of quiet."

Mrs. Sterling declared she felt it in her bones that something would happen if she went, but she finally yielded and set out with many misgivings, leaving a trail of directions behind. When she returned in the evening, all eagerness to know how her husband had fared, she found him sitting rather limp and dejected in the arm-chair by the fire, and the dainty little lunch she had left was untouched.

"What did I say?" she demanded in anxious triumph. "You have had a hard day, haven't you, dear?"

"I certainly have," said Mr. Sterling with peculiar emphasis, "but a very satisfactory one. I did not have time to eat your lunch, Anna, and I'm hungry as a wolf."

"What on earth have you been doing?"

"Go and look in the machine drawers!" said Mr. Sterling, and his wife obeyed, thinking he must be slightly delirious.

The buttons, the hooks and eyes, the snap fasteners, and all the other carefully hoarded belongings were gone, and in their stead neat cards of buttons, hooks and eyes, and snaps reposed. "What have you been doing?" she inquired sharply.

"Solving your housekeeping problem, Anna. I threw away every button and bit of tangled string and rusty nail and broken tool and all the old bottles and mended pieces of china and glass and the old clothes in the garret and the piece bag and the carpet-bag sack and—"

"Charles, you must go straight to bed!" said Mrs.

Sterling, waiting to hear no more, "and I'll send for the doctor. I just knew something would happen if I left home to-day."

But when he finally convinced her he was sane and well and hungry, she sat down and wept for her lost treasures. "I was saving the pieces of percale for a comforter," she wailed, "and the clothes were good, and the china could be used if you didn't put anything hot in it. I didn't think you could be so cruel, Charles. And you've gone and spent a lot of money for those buttons and those balls of twine and the new hatchet and that pound of nails and paper of tacks, just when I was trying hard to be so economical. It's just throwing money away."

"Listen to me a moment, Anna," said the gentleman shrewdly. "I sold the old clothes for five dollars, and gave the pieces to Grandma Cooper, who is so lonely, and the old papers brought two dollars, and the carpet rags Mrs. Green was glad to buy for a dollar, and—well, here's the money left over from the sales after buying the twine and the tacks that are not rusty." He laid five shining coins in his wife's hand and she brightened immediately.

"You don't mean to say you sold those things! I'll never match buttons and save old rags again—never!"

And three months later she met her husband in high glee, waving a check above her head. "What do you think, Charles?" she cried in great excitement. "I wrote out the details of my plan for saving time and work by disposing of everything not absolutely needed in the home, and sent it to a household magazine and it will be printed! Look at this check the editor sent!"

"Your plan!" gasped Mr. Sterling, as his wife ran back to the library for the editor's letter. "Well, I like that!" Then suddenly remembering the peace and quiet of his home, and the look of delight with which his wife displayed the check, he thought he could afford to be generous. "I think that's pretty nice!" he said, stooping to kiss the flushed face. "There's one writer for the magazines, anyway, who isn't a man nor an idle woman, and that's my wife!"

"One smile can glorify a day,
One word true hope impart;
The least disciple need not say
There are no alms to give away
If love be in the heart."

Is there not some obligation upon those who send matter to the Advocate for publication to prepare it so that it is ready for the printer? It would seem so. The editor's heaviest work is trying to decipher illegible writing and punctuating and spelling for those who pay no attention to such things. One who wishes to appear in print should take the time and care necessary to put his copy in proper form. If he knows how to do this, he has no right to impose this burden on others.

Dr. J. M. Buckley, the accomplished editor of the New York Christian Advocate, in commenting upon the death of Senator J. P. Dolliver, makes incidentally the following observation: "Hard work frequently destroys oratory. Dr. John P. Durbin, after he had for a few years attended closely to administrative affairs, lost much of his magnetism." We can readily believe this. The imagination has much to do with oratory, and, like all of the other faculties, it can only be kept in the most efficient working order by exercise. This it does not have when one is absorbed in duties of a clerical or administrative character. However, loss in this respect may be more than offset by gain in other kinds of capacity. We are far from giving the man of eloquent speech the first place among the promoters of human progress. We think the world owes vastly more to the men of thought and action.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate of November 2d contains the following: "In the winter of 1897 a papyrus fragment was found near Behnesa, in Egypt, by Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt, on whose torn, earth-stained and fire-scorched pages were found seven sayings ascribed to our Lord. The most striking may be remembered thus: 'Wherever they may be, they are not without God, and where one is alone I am with him; raise the rock and thou shalt find me; cleave the wood and there am I.' Now, that is not unlike words we already possess: 'Lo, I am with you always.' 'Where two or three are gathered together,' etc.; yet it has a fresh note not to be heard in those precious words." We respectfully dissent from the view of our able contemporary. To us these newly-found sentences do not sound as if they came from the Master's lips. They lack the dignity and loftiness of his speech, and sustain much the same relation to the authentic utterances of our Lord that the miracles of the Apocrypha do to those recorded by the evangelists in the true canon of revelation.

Ability imposes obligation. It was the Master who said: "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him will much be required." Both the State and the Church have a right to expect large service from their educated men—not a service which leaves the rough work, the difficult work, to be done by others, but which brings trained and skilled hands to the hardest tasks. A schooling which so idealizes and refines that it makes one fit only for some gentlemanly occupation in which he may find profit and exaltation for himself, is a travesty and a cheat. The cry of the world is for strong men, great in head and in heart—men who will lay hold of the swaying social fabric and give it an upward lift. They are needed in politics to expose the flattering demagogue and point out to an uninformed and perplexed people the true path to peace and prosperity. They are needed in public life to resist the usurpations of wealth and safeguard the rights of the tolling masses. They are needed in the various industrial and commercial pursuits to aid in the solution of their problems and the promotion of their progress. They are needed in the Church to help carry its burdens and fight its stupendous battles. The heroic age is not past—it is just beginning. The manhood that stands the stress and strain of the twentieth century, and triumphs over the forces arrayed against it, must be genuine to the core and measure up to the most majestic standard.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The recent session of the North Mississippi Conference was one of the most delightful in its history. The generous people of Sardis abounded in gracious hospitality, and if there was a word of complaint as to the entertainment afforded, it did not reach our ear. Dr. J. W. Boswell, the pastor, Rev. W. M. Young, the presiding elder, and the committees having things in charge were attentive and unflinching in their kindness and courtesy. The weather except on Sunday and Monday was all that could be desired.

Miss Kilpatrick, of Corinth, delivered a stirring message in behalf of the Adult Class Work on the occasion of the Sunday school anniversary. She is doing a great deal to promote this new movement in the Church. It would scarcely be saying too much to pronounce her the most widely known Sunday school worker in Mississippi.

Rev. J. H. Holder was appointed to succeed Rev. R. A. Clark at Okolona. Thus one tireless toiler takes the place of another. Brother Holder had served Booneville for a quadrennium with great acceptability. All of the interests of the Church have been carried forward under his guiding hand. Earnest, tactful, and well equipped, he is a young minister of much promise.

Evidently many of our preachers are growing in grace. We saw less smoking about the doors of the Conference room than at any of our former sessions. We scarcely need to say that this caused us to "thank God and take courage." We hope that the day is not far distant when in all of our itinerant ranks there will not be a single minister addicted to the use of the "filthy weed." That glad day is surely coming.

Quite a number of distinguished laymen looked in on the Conference. Among them were ex-Lieutenant Governor Shands, ex-Congressman John C. Kyle, Mayor R. W. Millsaps, Hon. G. L. Jones, and Mr. T. B. King, of Memphis. The Methodism of Mississippi has given to the State and nation many public men of eminence and large capacity. Most of the governors of that commonwealth since the Civil War have been worshipers at Methodist altars.

Rev. J. H. Smith, who for the past four years has held sway in Valden and thereabout was transferred to the heart of the Delta and domiciled in Boyle, in the great county of Bolivar. He goes to his new field followed by the love and prayers of his former parishioners. He is a man of convictions and courage, but also of discretion and self-control. We predict that he will accomplish substantial results in the pastorate upon which he is about to enter.

As is usual with him, Rev. J. W. Honnoll had a great year at Tunica and Robinsonville. And, of course, he went back. Every man, woman, and child demanded that he should. A more majestic man than this noble veteran would, indeed, be hard to find. Though past seventy years of age, he has not lost a particle in efficiency. He can yet preach like a Bishop, and his disposition is as sunny and genial as a May morning. Fortunate, indeed, are the people to whom he ministers.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies sent to the Conference as their representatives Mrs. Walter Trotter, of Winona, and Mrs. S. M. Thames, of Pickens. In eloquent words they told of the work for which they were commissioned to sneak, and were greeted with enthusiastic applause. More appropriate addresses than those which they delivered, we have never heard on a similar occasion. We rejoice in the constantly expanding work of the consecrated women of Southern Methodism.

After four successful years at Coldwater, Rev. V. C. Curtis has been assigned to the Kosciusko Charge. No man was ever more popular than he has been in the pastorate which the time limit has forced him to leave, and the people have given him up with genuine regret. Kosciusko is fortunate in securing his services. He honors the Master in his life and ministry, and his labors wherever he has gone have been attended by manifestations of the divine approval. The fruitfulness of his work has caused him to be in great demand.

The people of Ittahena are to be congratulated upon having secured Rev. J. W. Dorman as their pastor. There is not a truer, manlier, and more faithful minister in the Conference. He is a good preacher, a thoughtful pastor, and a safe administrator. At Lexington, where he has wrought for four years, he is universally popular, and is given up with not a little reluctance. Brother Dorman has always stood for progress and high ideals in the Church. He will be a tower of strength to our Delta Methodism.

One of the most impressive speeches made during the Conference was delivered by the Hon. J. S. Sexton, of Hazlehurst, in behalf of the Orphans' Home at Jackson. Striking in appearance, with a strong, resonant voice, and the gift of fluent utterance, he is a speaker of unusual force and effectiveness. Mr. Sexton and his distinguished brother, Dr. Luther Sexton, of New Orleans, have done large things for this noble institution. Mr. I. C. Enoch, of Jackson, one of the foremost business men of Mississippi, was also present and spoke in behalf of the Orphanage.

While at Sardis the editor was royally entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Mitchell, who left nothing undone to minister to his comfort and pleasure. This choice young couple were formerly members of the church at Starkville, when we were stationed in that goodly town. It was pleasing to know that they had not forgotten us and to renew our association with them. Our co-guests were the Rev. W. W. Woollard, presiding elder of the Greenville District, Mr. Ray, of the Jonesboro Charge, and Dr. Carmack, of Iuka. Good fellowship abounded, and there was not a dull moment in that genial and interesting circle.

The presidency of Bishop J. H. McCoy gave great satisfaction. His bearing at all times was brotherly and considerate, and every member of the body who ventured to speak was dealt with impartially. There was no apparent effort to make haste, yet business was dispatched promptly and in good order. The Bishop is an admirable presiding officer, alert, resourceful, and familiar with parliamentary law. On the platform and in the pulpit, he fully met expectation. His address to the class admitted into full connection and his sermon on Sunday were of a very high order. The Conference by a unanimous vote requested the College of Bishops to return him to North Mississippi.

Connectional officers were scarce. Dr. Stonewall Anderson, secretary of the General Board of Education, arrived Wednesday and delivered a scholarly sermon in the evening from the text, "Ye are complete in him." He addressed the Conference the next day on our general educational work, making a pleasant impression. Dr. H. M. Hamill honored us with his presence and was the chief speaker at the Sunday school anniversary. That he brought a helpful and inspiring message, goes without saying. Dr. W. W. Pinson was on hand and made a telling missionary address. Dr. Brown, a representative of the American Bible Society, completed the list of those who came from a distance to represent interests of vital concern to our widely extended Methodism.

Not in years has the Conference had a more spirited discussion than that which took place concerning the question of inter-collegiate athletics. The fight began in the Board of Education, where the pros prevailed by a vote of six to three. The privileges of the floor were extended to President D. C. Hull and Major R. W. Millsaps when the matter was taken up by the Conference, and they made telling speeches in favor of the measure. The opposition was strongly championed by Rev. J. H. Mitchell and Rev. L. M. Liscumb, who argued at length against inter-collegiate athletics in any form. The final action taken was in the nature of a compromise. It forbids playing football with other institutions, but allows all other games. It is to the credit of all who participated in this exciting contest that not one harsh or unkind word was spoken. The conclusion reached seemed to give general satisfaction.

The report of the Board of Education showed both Grenada College and Millsaps College to be in a highly prosperous condition. Rev. J. R. Countiss is proving himself to be the right man in the right place as president of the first-named institution. He has a comprehensive grasp of the needs of the important work committed to his hands, and enjoys the confidence of the brethren to an unusual degree. President D. C. Hull, of Millsaps, appeared before the Conference for the first time, and his bearing and utterances made a profound impression. He is a strong, practicable, forceful man, and a speaker of uncommon gifts. The general verdict is that the trustees made no mistake in his selection. Dr. J. M. Sullivan and Professor E. M. Burton, of Millsaps College, were also present through most of the Conference session.

Much to the credit of Rev. W. W. Woollard and his faithful co-workers, the Greenville District maintained its lead in financial matters, paying all of the Conference collections in full. The Winona District, however, was a close second, lacking but little of doing the same thing. Considering the fact that crops in some sections were quite short, the reports of the pastors were all very good, evidencing industry and fidelity. The work in the Aberdeen and Corinth Districts has been making steady progress for the past two or three years, and the Columbus District showed marked advancement under the energetic leadership of Rev. J. E. Thomas. Methodism is growing in North Mississippi, and nowhere is there a note of discouragement.

The new quadrennial committees and boards nominated by the presiding elders and elected by the Conference are as follows:

Admission on Trial—L. P. Wasson, T. H. Lipscomb, W. E. M. Brogan.

First Year—J. A. Hall, S. A. Brown, W. N. Duncan.
Second Year—J. T. Murray, O. W. Bradley, J. T. Lewis.

Third Year—J. W. Dorman, J. B. Randolph, L. M. Lipscomb.

Fourth Year—T. H. Dorsey, G. W. Gordon, W. W. Mitchell.

Board of Education—R. A. Meek, R. O. Brown, H. S. Spragins, T. H. Lipscomb, T. H. Dorsey, L. M. Lipscomb, J. C. Park, T. F. Paine, E. R. Blackstone, J. B. Saunders, W. W. Magruder, J. D. Barbee, W.

M. DuBard, T. T. O'Bryant, W. D. Wendel, J. B. Streater.

Board of Missions—W. L. Duren, W. N. Duncan, W. S. Stormont, J. W. Herring, B. B. Sullivan, W. E. M. Brogan, J. J. Brooks, J. H. Mitchell, W. B. Nichols, A. S. Yarbrough, W. T. Johnson, M. T. Byrum, Parham Williams, L. C. Anderson, E. D. Gilmore, M. G. DuBard.

Epworth League Board—J. H. Holder, S. B. Myers, J. T. McCafferty, W. L. Graves, J. B. Randolph, S. L. Pope, J. T. Lewis, W. L. Broome, Edgar Mayfield, W. E. Kennedy, Victor Stephenson, J. B. Small, J. J. Stevenson, Wm. Connell, F. J. McDonnell, Jr., R. E. Gordon.

Sunday School Board—R. P. Nehlett, R. W. Evans, R. I. Allen, R. M. Evans, R. H. B. Gladney, J. D. Simpson, J. J. Garner, W. W. Mitchell, J. C. Roberts, J. S. Carlton, T. W. Cooper, J. Y. Murray, W. E. Stokes, R. P. Johnson, J. H. Ledyard, J. G. McGoGwan.

Joint Board of Finance—L. P. Wasson, J. W. Raper, W. M. Campbell, A. A. Martin, W. J. Burt, J. A. Goad, A. W. Langley, J. W. Bell, Robt. Somerville, P. T. Callicott, J. J. Beck, F. E. Ray, W. S. Lagrone, E. A. Harrell, L. E. Brevard, J. W. Sharp.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. McMurry has lately announced a $11,000 gift to our Church Extension Loan Fund.

Mr. W. G. Johnson, the popular business manager of the Jackson (Miss.) Evening News, spent one day last week in New Orleans attending to business.

Rev. J. H. Rogers, who has been serving as pastor of our church at Marietta, Okla., has been stationed at Davis, Okla.

By a formal resolution, the West Texas Conference has invited the next General Conference to meet in the city of San Antonio. That would be an admirable place to hold it.

We have a letter for Miss Edith Hickman Divall, which was sent to us with the request that we forward it to her. Will someone having knowledge of her whereabouts furnish us with her address?

Bishop E. E. Moss is again in the United States. It is reported that he reached San Francisco on Nov. 18, and that after a visit to his family in Oklahoma, he will arrive in Nashville about Dec. 15.

Sir William Ramsay, the eminent Scotch theologian, is visiting in this country. He recently delivered a lecture in Union Theological Seminary in which he discussed the present-day criticism of the Bible.

Pastors who have been transferred to new charges should send a card to the Advocate office giving instruction as to where they wish their paper sent. It is necessary to give the old as well as the new address.

The Mid-Winter Bible and Missionary Conference will be held Dec. 28 to Jan. 5, at the Methodist Training School, Nashville, Tenn. Persons desiring information may communicate with Dr. W. W. Pinson, chairman.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, financial agent of the Methodist Orphanage, at Ruston, La., will carry a good report to Conference. He has raised $14,000 during the year for that worthy institution, a good proportion of which was used in paying interest and reducing the debt on the Home.

In 1910 it will require $100,000,000 to pay the salaries for ministers in the United States. To this amount must be added $200,000,000 for congregational expenses. This looks pretty high, but it is about one-fourth of the amount expended for intoxicating liquors.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, the genial pastor of our church at Amite City, spent several days in attendance on the session of the Texas Conference which was held at Galveston last week. Brother Bowman is well known in the Texas Conference; he having been a member of that body before transferring to the Louisiana Conference. He honored the Advocate office with a visit last Saturday morning.

Under date of December 3, Dr. H. M. DuBose writes from Augusta, Ga.: "I am very happily situated in my pastorate in Augusta. The city is one of the handsomest in America, the preacher's home is one of the best in Methodism, and St. John's is a grand old church with a princely congregation. I am thankful to be back in the pastorate." Dr. DuBose's address is 736 Greene Street.

Several of our largest Conferences have just held their sessions, among them the North Georgia, the Oklahoma, the Virginia, the North Texas, the South Georgia, and the Texas. The indications are that our Methodism is on the advance all over our territory. We should rejoice in this, not so much from church pride, as from a real interest in the salvation of the world and its release from the bonds of iniquity and darkness.—Central Methodist Advocate.

Dr. J. M. Moore, Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, South, for the home field, spent last Sunday in New Orleans. He preached at First Church at 11 a. m., and at Rayne Memorial at the evening hour. Both discourses were forceful and impressive.

Since the adjournment of the Oklahoma Conference, Bishop Denny has re-appointed Dr. G. B. Winton to Broadway Church, Ardmore, relieving him of the presiding eldership of the Tulsa District. This was the congregation that Dr. Winton was serving when the Conference convened.

A NEW BOOK.

WATER BAPTISM. By Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Smith and Lamar, Agents. Pages, 93. Price: Cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20 cents.

This is an exceedingly interesting and helpful publication. Though as old as the Church, the theme discussed is still an important and pertinent one. The failure of Methodists to explain oftener and more fully their views concerning baptism, has doubtless caused them to lose many members in the past, and is still a source of weakness to our denomination. The indoctrination of our people is one of the imperative duties of the hour. This little volume does not purport to be a comprehensive discussion of the doctrine of Baptism. Though exhibiting perfect familiarity with the subject, the author has not written for scholars and theologians, but for the masses of the people. Yet there are none who would not find this treatise suggestive and invigorating. The chapter headings are as follows: "Water Baptism Should Be Practiced," "Origin and History of Water Baptism," "The Meaning of Water Baptism," "The Meaning of the Greek Word Baptizo," "The Purpose or Object of Water Baptism," "John's Baptism," "The Baptism of Christ," "Buried with Christ by Baptism," "John Wesley's Treatise on the Meaning and Mode of Water Baptism." From this table of contents it will be seen that the writer covers the field pretty thoroughly in his treatment of the question, and discusses those phases of it which are most vital and pivotal. He is a clear and discriminating reasoner, has the gift of lucid statement, and his spirit is all that could be desired. A picture of the well-known author forms a fitting frontispiece for the volume. We know of no book on baptism which, in our judgment, is calculated to do more good in the hands of the laity. Our pastors would do well to distribute it among their people. It may be ordered of the Methodist Publishing House, at Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas; or of the Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winton, Miss.

A HEROIC SCENE.

To see this spirit of heroism at its best one should be present when the last question of an Annual Conference is being answered. It is when these preachers receive their appointments that their heroism is shown in its best phases. Two hundred men sit still as the Bishop designates their field of work for another year. Long moves are necessary, heavy expenses must be borne, family and social relations must be broken up, friendships must be severed, and many hardships must be endured; yet these brave-hearted men do not flinch. Even their wives and children follow them with gladness. A few tears are shed as they part with old friends, but these soon turn to smiles in the prospect of new ones soon to be made, and the pain of parting is soon forgotten in the toil of a new field. This would all be impossible if they had started to make money or to gather worldly honors; but, inasmuch as they are seeking to bring about "peace on earth, good will among men," they go with joy to publish the "glad tidings of salvation" among others.—Midland Methodist.

RECEPTION AT ST. MARK'S HALL.

Tendered to Rev. J. N. Moore, D.D., and Mrs. R. W. McDonnell.

Dr. J. M. Moore and Mrs. R. W. McDonnell, secretaries of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Methodist Church, were entertained last evening at St. Mark's Hall, one of the principal objects of interest in the visit of the two home secretaries to New Orleans. The work done at St. Mark's Hall has been very extensive and the question to be decided by the board in regard to it, is whether to continue the work in its present location, or to erect a larger building for the purpose.

Dr. Moore stated last evening that while the work is pretty certain to be carried on for the next year at least in the present building, there is every need shown for a place where the work of St. Mark's can be carried on in this community on a much more extensive scale than at present.

Upon being questioned in regard to the making of First Church a missionary Church, Dr. Moore said he could say nothing definite, but it is more than probable that something will be done. "I am glad," he said, "to see the excellent work being done at First Church, and would like to see it receive every encouragement possible."

While in the city Dr. Moore will be entertained by Mrs. W. W. Carre, president of the City Mission Board.

Mrs. R. W. McDonnell is the guest of Mrs. Lewis Clark, at her home on St. Charles Avenue. Mrs. Mc-Donnell was formerly general secretary of the Home Mission Board, until the foreign and home mission boards were consolidated. She is now a co-laborer of Dr. Moore, being with him secretary of the Home Mission Board, her province being the women's work for missions. From this city Mrs. McDonnell will go to Dallas and then to Galveston, from which city she will go back to Nashville, the headquarters of the board.

Members of the Methodist clergy and those laymen and women interested in mission work attended the reception last evening, which was delightfully informal in its character. Exceptionally good music was rendered by Miss Georgia Hands on the viola, accompanied by Miss Mamie Hands on the piano, all during the evening, when many delightful numbers were given.

Miss Juanita Haley, the possessor of a well-trained soprano voice, gave a fine rendition of "The Song of the Soul," by Joseph Carl Brell. Rev. Nicholas Joyner, the superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, gave a fine exhibition of stereopticon slides, showing the activities of St. Mark's. Steaming hot chocolate and dainty cakes were served.—New Orleans Picayune, of Dec. 4.

THE METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL (NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE).

It has been my good fortune to attend this school for Christian workers the last two sessions, and I feel that I might say to brethren who have any thought of attending, that the instruction and inspiration from the lectures of men prominent in their special lines of Christian endeavor, and from the very atmosphere of the institution, have helped me more than I can express. Beside the regular lectures on the Bible and missions—home and foreign—which deepen the spiritual life, the broad view of others who see and know of work being done of which we know little, and can get little out of reviews, etc., gives one some idea of what the Church is doing and how it is doing things, that are helpful and suggestive to those who wish to get the best out of life.

Only a few times in my life have I been where there seemed so much of the real presence of Christ stirring and filling our hearts with a deep desire to save the world—all the world. The notes from the lectures of Dr. O. E. Brown and others on the "Lives of the Apostles," "On Christ," and on "The Fatherhood of God," have furnished me with references that have helped me in my own life and in my studies and preaching.

We have gathered there many of our leaders, and that is saying enough, for they are leaders, who stir our hearts and make us better men; whose only aim seems to be to help everybody in every way, even appointing homes and rooms, and companies, forming prayer circles, until the very atmosphere seems full of spiritual forces.

The program this year is full of names of men from a distance; some from other churches; some coming for the second or third time, with strong messages for all who wish to learn.

The institution is so home-like that one feels easy as soon as he enters the door. It is like a family gathering of young men and ladies, all studying, all working—professors and preachers mingling together, eating in the spacious dining-hall, served by the young ladies of the Training School, with plenty of time to eat and to be social, and yet no time to lose. Such a condition could not exist except among people who are all striving with one love and one purpose in life.

The expense, it seems, is about the least consideration—only $13 for the eight days for fees, room and board. This is an opportunity for missionary leaders, young pastors, and all who wish better equipment for better service. May we not send a good number this year?

Write Rev. J. E. McCulloch, Nashville, Tenn., and engage a room at once.

HAS BEEN A BLESSING.

A writer in Leslie's Weekly, speaking of Springfield, Ohio, the Buckeye State's largest saloonless city under no license, and answering the senseless charge that a town loses business and goes back and down into dullness and stagnancy when the saloons are driven out, says:

"It is difficult to find a citizen of Springfield who is familiar with the city's progress during the last ten or twenty years who will openly declare that the voting out of the open saloon has not been a material benefit to the city. Never in the history of the city has there been such an active movement along all lines of business looking to the building of a better and greater city. The cries of 'loss of business' that usually follow the voting out of saloons are heard less in Springfield than in any other saloonless city in Ohio."—Western Christian Advocate.

We can arrange for several new students to enter after Christmas. Address PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE, Port Gibson, Miss.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Part of Report of Trustees to the Mississippi Annual Conference.

"Sparing neither pains nor money—indeed, at an expense of nearly $2,000 more than any previous faculty had cost him—Dr. Cooper has gathered at Whitworth a corps of twenty teachers and officers, excelled by none and equaled by few such institutions in all our Southland. Those who have been on the Board of Trust for some years do not hesitate to pronounce it the best faculty with which we have had acquaintance, and we say this without the least reflection on the capable and competent instructors who have previously served it. With its high curriculum, its excellent laboratory equipment and this fine body of educators composing its faculty, there is positively no reason, save the questionable one of the lack of endowment, that Whitworth should not be ranked in the 'A' grade of the colleges of our Church. It is certainly doing the work.

"Its departments are in the hands of experts in the matter of both performance and instruction, and in these your daughters will find opportunities and advantages which they will have to hunt long and travel far to equal. In proof of this, Whitworth's modest art display at our last State Fair in Jackson was awarded twelve prizes, and one of her fair pupils was the successful contestant for the medal in the musical contest at the Crystal Springs Chautauqua the past summer.

"In the student body of two hundred and thirty-two are eighteen daughters of Methodist ministers, all of whom receive their literary education without charge. Forty-five of the girls and young ladies have dining room duties, or other light work, by which to help meet their expenses, and there are no social distinctions drawn in the school by which these are made to feel discredited by their labors to achieve an education. In addition to this Dr. Cooper is personally assisting a number of deserving young ladies who lack the means of meeting their necessary expenses.

"We would direct especial attention to the moral and spiritual conditions and influences of Whitworth College. We believe this is just what the truly consecrated and sane Christian parent would desire. On Sunday mornings they have their own Sunday school, after which the students attend upon divine service at the churches of Brookhaven. In the evening their Young Woman's Christian Association affords them the opportunity of worship, and at the same time gives them practice in prayer, testimony and leadership in religious service. In addition to the regular chapel devotionals of the school, immediately after the evening meal of each day the students hold a 'vesper service' of a few minutes, which is very delightful and helpful. There is usually a revival each session especially for the students. The faculty is composed almost entirely of consecrated Christians who delight to lead their pupils to the Lamb of God, and whose daily work and conversation is a silent and blessed influence in this direction. Happy are the parents whose daughters share these gracious and blessed privileges!

"During the past summer Dr. Cooper spent $2,100 in improvements. Whitworth Home has been thoroughly overhauled and made snug and comfortable, with new windows throughout, some small rooms made large and airy, new paint and calcimine, an additional flight of stairs and a new tin roof. Margaret Hall has also been recovered with heavy tin, every room made fresh and beautiful with new paper, paint or calcimine, and a large boiler, giving ample hot water supply, installed. All dormitory buildings have been thoroughly screened for protection from flies and mosquitoes. And this has all been done at the personal expense of Dr. Cooper."

COVINGTON, LA.

The fourth Quarterly Conference of the Covington Charge for this year takes this means of testifying to the Christian integrity, executive ability and careful attention to all the details of his high office as presiding elder of the New Orleans District of Rev. Franklin N. Parker, D.D., during the past four years that he has presided over this work.

We regret that the four-year pastoral limit will remove him from this district and the supervision of the churches of this section, and we trust the high qualifications of heart and head shown in this work will indicate his preparedness for a larger field, to which we trust he may be called.

Praying God's richest blessings upon him, we commend him to the trust and affectionate consideration of those among whom his lot may be cast.

Tidings from the Field

Terry, Miss.:

We are nearing the close of our second year's work on the Terry charge, and desire to say a few words in reference to the same. The charge is made up of four churches, namely, Terry, Byram, Spring Ridge and Forest Hill. The last two named are very old places of worship. The church buildings were erected about 1855. But conditions have greatly changed in the passing of the years. Where there once was well settled communities of intelligent, liberal white people, there are now either vacated places or negro tenants. Thus, a waning situation is before us. The old Spring Ridge Circuit once had our ablest preachers for her pastors, and where they once preached in good houses of worship not a vestige of a building now remains. All is gone. But I am glad to say of the people who are still here and maintaining the churches that they are not sour because of these untoward conditions. A few more than two hundred compose the entire membership of the entire circuit, and these two hundred have expended nearly three thousand dollars during the two years that I have been their pastor. The parsonage and all the churches have been enhanced in value by judicious repairs or additions of musical instruments. Congregations have grown in both attendance and attention. Though the assessments have been raised considerably, they have been readily paid. Hence, it is not hard to conclude that we have a good people to respond to the various calls of the church. We have not had a great many accessions to the Church for the reason that we have not had the people to reach—just about holding our own as to membership. We will be ready to report "everything in full" at the coming Conference at Hattiesburg. Our people are now feeling the effects of the ravages of the boll weevil. What the next two or three years have in store is hard to tell. But by "grit and grace" the Church need not recede from her forward movement. If we will praise the Lord and forget not all his benefits, all will come out well.—W. W. Perry, P. C.

Edinburg Circuit:

Edinburg Circuit is not what it was last year by a good deal. In order to make a new work (Stall) two churches were taken off of it, and then after Conference the strongest church on the work was taken off and added to Neshoba Circuit. So with three churches which took off over two hundred dollars removed, and one small church added which paid last year only forty dollars, you can see how the circuit which only paid $350 last year was weakened financially. I found the people greatly discouraged; and then, too, last year was a very bad year for the farmers in this section. Many made almost nothing, and this with the high prices has made the year financially an exceedingly hard one. Good crops having to go to pay the accounts made for necessary living expenses this year. We moved into the parsonage some time in January, and, after making some much needed repairs on the house, barn, etc., we met and began to make the acquaintance of the people of the town of Edinburg, where the parsonage is located. Our church is rather weak in Edinburg; we have only a few members. But the people, irrespective of denominational lines, have treated us very kindly. Soon after we came here, they gathered at the school building and about 75 or 100, in fact more than could get into the parsonage, marched into our yard, and by couples came in and each deposited some valuable packages until we were well supplied with many nice and substantial things, as well as of delicacies for the home. These things were appreciated, not simply because of their money value, but chiefly as tokens and expressions of a very hearty welcome and of good will of the people. We have had some good services and the power of the Highest has been manifested among the people, and I feel assured that good has been done by the year's labors. And again this fall the people of other communities on the work made up the money and bought this preacher a full suit of clothes, including hat and shoes. And then our home townpeople have again pounded us to their heart's content and to our heart's overflowing. Words fail to express our heartfelt gratitude for all these expressions of brotherly kindness, and our prayers shall constantly ascend for God's blessings upon these dear people. Our presiding elder has been with us and preached us some very spiritual sermons and looked after the affairs of the church in a way that evidences a very deep and abiding interest in the welfare of our Zion. Brother O'Neil is a noble and capable man. We all like him.—M. J. Miller, Edinburg, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Waynesboro, Miss. Missionary Auxiliary of the M. E. Church, South, on the death of Mrs. E. C. Peel:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove by death his servant and our beloved friend and co-laborer, Mrs. E. C. Peel; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in submission to the divine will, and rejoice in the hope of joining our departed sister in the upper sanctuary.

2. That in the death of Mrs. Peel our auxiliary has lost a valued member, and our community a noble example of true womanhood.

3. That we revere her memory and sorrow with her bereaved ones. We pray the God of all comfort to comfort them and to sanctify to them their sorrow.

4. That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our auxiliary, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy given to the family of our deceased sister.

Signed by: Mrs. J. L. Poir, Sr., President; Mrs. W. S. Davis, Sr., Mrs. W. C. Lloyd, Mrs. Arthur Gandy, Committee.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 11, 1910.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Matt. xxvii, 33-50.

Golden Text: He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities.

Choosing the Cross.

Calvary means so much to us because it is symbolical of so much in the life of Jesus. In the higher sense, the cross was not forced on Jesus Christ. Yonder in the wilderness he definitely met the great problem of his destiny. At that time he squarely faced the issue. His momentous decision was that his was to be a life of self-effacement. He chose the path of service for his treading. Why did he so many times antagonize men and set himself against the classes in power? Why did he choose the way that led to hatred, ignominy, and death? Because these things were necessary incidents along the way that he had chosen. Under the circumstances it could not have been otherwise. Jesus had long perceived that the dedication of death would be required of him. As things were, it was a necessity in the bearing of his gospel of salvation to men. And so he went on to the end. Thus, the cross has a double significance for the Christian imagination. It gives the world-old background of the sin and the darkness and the madness of men. It also gives in reality the sacrificial love, the deathless devotion of the Savior of men. As we have seen, it holds this tremendous meaning for us because it represents the complete self-giving of Jesus. It stands for a life directed toward the one end of serving. Jesus saw the cross far before him and did not flinch from the prospect. He chose the cross. Deliberately and fully conscious of the cost, he gave himself away for the love of men.

The Power of the Cross.

Jesus Christ redeemed humanity. It is a startling and terrifying thought to imagine what the world would be like if it were not for the supreme dedication of Jesus. It would be poor in an unpicturable poverty. For Jesus did more than teach men; he did more than give an objective example to the world. He worked for men. He gave his heart away, he sacrificed his life, and this is a different and a greater thing than merely to give instruction and precept. So the cross stands for an intense reality. "Greater love hath no man than this—that a man lay down his life for his friends." The life of Jesus and his death are real, vivid, appealing. The preacher uses words, but the martyr speaks with his blood. His body testifies for him. The cross represents the giving up of all that living means—the sacrifice of work, of cherished memories, of long affections. It stands for the greatest gift of God to men, for it means sacrifice in terms of actual, anguished giving, the giving of a man, of a life, of a Son. On Calvary's hill men do not hear of the gospel of redemption; they see it. Nay, they feel the sufferings of the Man who suffers with them.

Unto the Uttermost.

What more could God do for men? He gave his Son, who remained the servant of humanity up to the hour of bitterest death. In doing this God revealed his own love—a love which endured to the uttermost. He revealed a love which would not withdraw itself at the last moment; would not seek surcease of sorrow in forgetting; would not stop short of the last and longest step in the winning of the passionate contrition of men. God gave his Son utterly. He could do no more than that.

Our Part in the Redemption.

Paul has a very significant sentence in the first chapter of the epistle to the Colossians: "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church." Paul conceives of the afflictions of Christ as a present reality—a reality which has meaning and efficacy only as we fill up on our part that which is lacking in the sufferings of our Savior. What is lacking is always just our part. Jesus suffered for men; he gave himself for their redemption. Then Paul adds that because he suffered we must suffer in the same cause. Because Jesus gave himself to us, we must give ourselves to him. The truth of this is manifest. The cross stands for the self-giving of God, the sacrificial love of God, the love that thinks not of itself, but will forgive and restore and save. Of course, this treasure, unspeakably great, means nothing unless we accept it. We accept it by receiving the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, by living in the spirit of kindness and of love; by dedicating ourselves to the supreme cause of the kingdom of God.

The Purpose Revealed by the Cross.

The cross stands for a distinct type of religious experience, the experience that was Jesus' own, a type which forever must be characteristic of the Christian who is true to the example of Jesus. Some standards of the value of Christian experience are expressed in terms of pleasure produced. What becomes of mere happiness when brought into the solemn shadow of the cross? Happiness for its own sake is mere selfishness. It is absolutely at variance with the spirit of Jesus. Had Jesus been seeking his own satisfaction he never would have gone the way of the cross. See what a burden of a certain sort is lifted from our shoulders! Happiness is so hard to attain and preserve. It does not matter. The only duty of the Christian is to attain to the proper motive and to grasp firmly the right purpose. All else is in the hands of God. Neither happiness nor suffering is a valid test of the worth of the Christian experience. Amid all shadows and doubts the only test is the purpose. In the life of Jesus the highest purpose was ever dominant—the purpose to serve. It is sometimes impossible for us to feel glad or perhaps confident, even in the service of our Master. It is always possible to decide to do right. It is always possible to serve our fellow-men. We need never be troubled if we are deeply conscious that it is our real desire to obey Jesus. This is the Christlike test of the religious experience.

ILLUSTRATION.

The Spirit of the Cross.

When a teacher was wanted for the warlike Bgais by Doctor Mason, of Burmah, he asked his boatman, Shapon, if he would go, and reminded him that, instead of the fifteen rupees a month which he now received, he could have only four rupees a month as a teacher. After praying over the matter he came back, and Doctor Mason said: "Well, Shapon, what is your decision? Can you go to the Bgais for four rupees a month?" Shapon answered: "No, teacher; I could not go for four rupees a month; but I can go for Christ's sake."

AL-E-THE-IA.

Mrs. Clinton Smith, president of the W. C. T. U. in Washington, D. C., writes of Mrs. Miller's temperance story:

"I have read the book most thoroughly and carefully. I admire your ability to use such good and clear language to make your meaning plain. I found the book interesting, and, better still, convincing, and will recommend it when ever I can."

LILLIAN EMERSON ELLIS, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Robert S. Ellis, was born Dec. 10, 1903, and died Nov. 20, 1910, near Amite, La. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The subject of this sketch, JOHN BURCH, joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1865. He was a faithful Christian gentleman and loved by all who knew him. He was kind and gentle, full of human sympathy, and was always thoughtful of others. He was a faithful and solicitous father, and his noble life is telling upon the lives of his children. He was a faithful and devoted husband. I shall never forget this good and true man. In 1855 he joined the Masonic Lodge, and in this relation he was faithful, and exemplified by his conduct the high ideals of this ancient institution. He was married to Miss Dicy C. Carruth December 18, 1860, and they lived happily together until the end came. May the memory of his noble life ever abide with us.

J. A. McCORMACK.

IN LOVING MEMORY.

On August 15th last the death angel entered the home of Noel J. Sumrall and carried away from this earth his precious wife, NETTIE, who was only thirty-four years of age. It seems so hard to give her up, and at so early an age! But God knows best, and to him the bereaved ones are commended.

She had not been well for some time, but her death came after a very serious operation at Yazoo City, which the loved ones thought would benefit her. In the hours before her death she gave every evidence that she was prepared to meet her Savior, and the writer, who knew her and loved her so dearly, feels confident that she is sweetly sleeping in the arms of her Savior.

How this dear one is missed no one can ever know, only those who have gone through a similar experience; but it draws us all nearer heaven to lose our loved ones if we have faith in the precious One who said: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."

She was a member of the Methodist Church, having joined the church when but a girl of fourteen summers. Her membership was at Straight Bayou Church, in which neighborhood she had lived before moving to the little town of Midnight near by.

This dear woman leaves no children to go through life without a mother's love, she never having been a mother, but a loving husband, mother, sisters and brother, with other loved ones, are left behind to mourn her loss. May God be with them in their grief, and comfort them as he alone can do.

On September 4th last, near Midnight, Miss, Mrs. SARAH JANE RATLIFF went home to her Savior to spend eternity. A good and noble woman has gone to her reward, for it follows, as the night the day, that one with so much sweet humility and trust in her Savior has entered the portals of heavenly rest to be forever with her Heavenly Father, where all is pure and holy, and no sorrow nor parting is known.

Oh, how hard it was for her loved ones to give her up, for she was such a true wife, mother and friend—self-sacrificing, unselfish and kind to those around her. But God was ready to receive her and she could stay here no longer.

This dear woman was born at Caseyville, in Lincoln County, Mississippi,

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salt cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

on the 16th day of October, 1868; being the first born of William and Mary Hamilton, one of the old families of that section of the country. She blossomed into a beautiful girlhood, and in May, 1888, was married to J. B. Ratliff in the little town of Wesson. To this loving union six lovely children were born, all of whom survive with their father save the eldest.

She was sick only a few days, and her death comes doubly hard to her devoted mother and other loved ones, as her sister, the late Mrs. Nettie M. Sumrall, preceded her only twenty days to her eternal home—both noble, charitable and trusting Christian women, who have passed on beyond the veil which separates this life from eternity, and into the realms of joy and perfect peace with their Savior. The precious memory of these dear precious children's lives and sweet, unassuming manners, such as the Savior commends in his message to us, and without which the world would be poor indeed; must indeed be a sweet solace to the broken-hearted mother.

She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having her membership at Straight Bayou Church, a country union church located within a short distance of her home.

Her remains were carried to Anguilla, Miss., and there interred in a beautiful spot, to await the resurrection morn. May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones and guide them in the path that will lead them home to their Savior and the precious one who has so lately flown away!

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION CALENDAR FOR 1911.

The publishers of The Youth's Companion will, as always at this season, present to every subscriber whose subscription ($1.75) is paid for 1911, a beautiful Calendar for the new year. The picture panel reproduces a water-color painting of an old-time garden in a flood of summer sunshine, with a background of Lombardy poplars through which one catches a glimpse of distant hills. The picture being in 12 colors, the tones of the original are faithfully reproduced.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 11, 1910. THE MESSENGER AND THE SAVIOR.

(Mal. iii. 1-3; Matt. iii. 1-3.)

A Degenerate Age.

The book of Malachi, from which one of our lessons is taken, is anonymous. As a representation of a struggling, persecuted people, the author bitterly arraigns the civil and religious authorities, and for this reason perhaps wisely chose to withhold his name. Malachi means "My Messenger," and the same word is used in its official signification in this opening verse, from which doubtless the name of the book was taken.

It was a corrupt and degenerate age, and skepticism for the first time finds open expression. "We have cleansed our hearts in vain," they seem to say, "and vice goes unpunished and virtue unrewarded." "No," says the prophet, "the dreadful day of judgment is at hand, and I hear now the voice of one crying in the wilderness, who is preparing the way for the great Judge for whom you long. The wicked and unrepentant will be burned like stubble. Who among you is free from sin and can stand such a judgment, a judgment like fire and lye to purge and cleanse?"

"My Messenger."

This messenger of Isaiah xl. 3 is re-announced by Malachi and introduced by Matthew. He comes as one specially chosen for his fitness, and is not a messenger, but "My Messenger." With an office like that of Elijah, he will prepare the way for the covenant angel of God or for Jehovah himself. Thus while in Isaiah he simply is a "voice of prophecy," here he fills an important place in historical development. This last prophecy of the old dispensation reaches across four hundred silent years and clasps the hand of the forerunner of the new. How fitting that this last messenger of the Old Testament while ringing new changes on the law should be privileged to see John the Baptist, the last and greatest messenger of the old order, and catch the vision of "the Sun of Righteousness," who will "fulfill both the law and the prophets."

This "messenger" is not simply an ideal person nor the prophetic order nor the Jewish nation, as some contend, but John the Baptist, as Malachi iv. plainly shows. Then Christ in Matthew xl. 10 and Luke vii. 27 clearly identifies the Elijah of Malachi with John the Baptist of the New Testament. Mark says the fulfillment of this prophecy is "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ" (i. 1, 2). Thus the fulfillment of prophecy, the coming of the people, baptism by water, repentance and the fruits meet for it—these constitute the great outer court of the temple into whose holy place the high priest is about to "enter once for all."

Angel of the Covenant.

In this name, "messenger (angel) of the covenant," we find both the law of Moses and the love of Jehovah as incarnated in John the Baptist and Jesus Christ. From the very twilight of the race men have groped for "the Light of the world." He is the Mediator, the "daysman" longed for by Job, and down to the rising of the "Sun of Righteousness" has been "the earnest of the nations."

Under the names "Angel of God" or "of his presence" or "face" or "of Jehovah," or, as here, "angel of the covenant," Christ the Saviour spoke to Hagar in the desert, stood in the tent door of Abraham, wrestled with Jacob, and went before Israel on the night of Exodus.

The essential features of the religious program of the Hebrew nation are realized in Christ. He is the true Israel and the "Servant of Jehovah," and by the great prophets this term is used so interchangeably for both that confusion results in the study of Messianic prophecy. Whether in the kingship of Israel's theocracy or the priesthood of her sacrifice or the prophetic vision of her seers, we find the meaning and goal in this angel of the covenant, Jesus Christ.

The True Goal of Bible History.

In Genesis, while the garden was withering under the curse of God, the promise came of the "seed of the woman;" in Exodus is seen "our pass-over," Leviticus through feasts and sacrifice proclaims our atonement for sin. When in Numbers we see the brazen serpent, we say: "So must the Son of man be lifted up." To Moses in Deuteronomy Jehovah's assurance was, "I will raise up a prophet," a long line of a glorious order that shall culminate in Christ. When Moses ("the law") failed, Joshua (meaning "Jesus") led Israel into the promised land. So, piercing the dark veil over Judges (meaning "Saviours"), we find a gleam of hope, as in the beautiful story of Ruth through which runs the idea of "Redeemer" and the genealogy of our Christ. In Samuel we first find the word "Messiah," the Anointed One, and from this eminence we can get our connection with the New Testament; for Peter tells us that "all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after as many as have spoken have likewise foretold these days" (Acts iii. 24).

Thus standing as we do in "these days" on the amount of holy vision, we see the long line of prophets impelled by an unseen Hand moving down the streams of history, unconscious of the unifying purpose and their vital part in the plan whose glorious aim is to enrich every future age and whose final goal is the Christ, the completion of the divine plan, and the perfect satisfaction of the world's yearning hope. He is the fruit of the Bible, the key that unlocks revelation's heart, and the only answer to its genealogy, prophecy, types, and history. He is "the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world," and enters time as a "little stream of prophecy to culminate at Golgotha as the river of life." He is heaven's love letter. The seal is broken at the cross and the message read at Calvary and Olivet.

Thus apart from the Old Testament Christ is an enigma, and apart from the New Testament only a dream. He is shut up in the Old and opened in the New.

Preparation.

The Lord may "suddenly come," but never by chance or haphazard. The way is prepared. As Moses tarried in Midian and Paul in Arabia and Christ in the desert, so John the Baptist tarried in the wilderness until he came forth, "like a lion from the swelling of Jordan."

The messenger and the Saviour each entered on his life work at thirty. My young friend, if you are going to fell the tree, you will lose no time in grinding your ax. In this fitful, feverish age it is hard for us to wait till the hour strikes and we can do our work "in the fullness of time." In consequence we trudge in with baskets of green fruit. Come suddenly to your work if you will, but not before tarrying in the school for preparation and in the "upper room" for the Spirit's baptism.

Repentance and Salvation.

John the Baptist prepared the way to Christ. So repentance prepares the way for salvation. The messenger and the Saviour were blood kin. The way of the cross, the via dolorosa, is the only entrance to the kingdom. But we must not simply be sorry for sin. That is the repentance of the horse thief who repents not because he stole the horse but because he was caught. We must be so sorry that we forsake our sins and flee to Christ.

"Prepare Ye the Way."

The "messenger" in Malachi says "he will suddenly come to his temple" on Mount Moriah; but the New Testament message is that we are the "temples of the Holy Ghost." He will "suddenly come" after your complete preparation. Mountains of pride must come down, gorges of iniquity he filled up, thistles and briars of hate and stones of rebellion must be removed. Do you with hate in your heart bring gifts to the altar? "First go and forgive thy brother." Will you, like Zaccheus, place yourself in the way of his approach? Will you, like the friends of the paralytic, prepare the way for some poor, helpless, groping soul to find the Christ? Will you help to place somebody at the beautiful gate? The question with you should not be, "Is it possible for me to live the Christian life outside the Church?" but rather, "What is the shortest route between me and Christ, and how can I do best service for his kingdom?" It is not, "Can I be saved without being baptized?" but, "Will this public profession and the wearing of this badge of discipleship help to prepare the way for my Lord?"

Warning, Beware!

Here is clearly taught the truth that the gospel is either "the savor of life unto life or of death unto death." "This is he that was spoken of by the prophet," the One who will either be to you a "refiner's fire" or a "healing" wing. The same sun that melts the ice hardens the clay.

A CORRECTION.

In the League lesson which appeared in the Advocate last week an error appears. Near the top of the first column, sentences numbered 1, 2, 3, should be declarative, and the pronoun "who" introducing each sentence is a relative with "God" in the sentence above as the antecedent. It should read as follows:

He is revealed to man in the first doctrine of the Bible, that there is a God: 1. Who is the Omnipotent Creator. 2. Who is the Ruler of the World, etc.

WM. H. COLEMAN.

MEMORIES OF AUDUBON.

"Personal Reminiscences of John James Audubon" was the subject of an interesting paper read last evening by the Rev. A. Gordon Bakewell, of New Orleans, before the members of the Louisiana Historical Society in their regular monthly meeting held in the historical room of the State Museum.

The Rev. Bakewell is a nephew of the famous naturalist and is, therefore, significantly competent to frame a paper of unusual interest on that personage.

That the State of Louisiana can rightfully claim Audubon as a son was established as a fact by Mr. Bakewell when he quoted from a personal extract of an autobiography to the effect that the subject of the sketch was born at a plantation near Lake Ponchartrain. He was the son of a man who came to Louisiana from San Domingo and married a woman of Spanish extraction in the province.

Audubon, according to Rev. Bakewell's sketch, desired, when young, to become a merchant. From Pittsburg he made a trip on a flatboat in January, 1812, and talked much of mercantile matters to a chance companion with whom he made the voyage down the Ohio river.

"My earliest recollection of Audubon when I was a child," said Rev. Bakewell, "was that his family were wont to score him for having no business occupation, no money or any particular ability for acquiring any. He was said to neglect anything of material interest and was always drawing, hunting and stuffing birds. But although they did not realize it at the time, the subject of their remarks was laying the foundation of a future career of fame and fortune."

"In 1820 he was called to Cincinnati by the president of the college there for the purpose of drawing and stuffing birds. It was at this time that his genius began to dawn upon the world. He finished the work at the college in six months and had it not been for a drawing school established there he would have been in financial straits, because the college president was better on promises than payments."

"His fondness for drawing birds amounted to almost a mania. He would leave a very profitable portrait painting to contract to hasten away and draw some insignificant member of the feathered tribe. He could not help it, for it was one of the elements of his make-up. He never gave up listening to the songs of the birds. In his most troubled times, and he really had many troubles, he would go out into the forests and listen to the songs of his beloved friends in feathers. He would often start out unexpectedly on a wandering expedition into Georgia, Alabama or Mississippi, where he would hunt birds and live with the Indians. The red men loved him and he always found a welcome in their tepees. These temporary desertions were approved and encouraged by his faithful wife, who realized the extent of the great work her husband was doing."

"In 1836 I was sent to England to be educated. I resided there with Audubon, my uncle. He was bringing out his great work, 'Birds of America,' and incidentally painting portraits. His narratives of adventures and wild life in America were of great interest to the English, and he was very popular. A portrait of myself was painted here. Audubon painted the head, while his son painted the body. This is the only oil painting done by Audubon at the present time in existence in Louisiana."

"In 1839, when I returned to America, I found Audubon firmly established near New York, with fame and fortune in his possession. He had come into his own and the world recognized him for what he was. Never again will his greatness and ability be questioned, and to the credit of Louisiana may he be claimed as one of her illustrious sons."

The Rev. Bakewell's paper was received with enthusiasm by the assembled members, and will be printed and listed among the treasures of the society.—Times-Democrat.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas Rev. Geo. H. Galloway has served as presiding elder of the Vicksburg District with great acceptability for four consecutive years, and by reason of the time limit must be given an appointment elsewhere the coming year; therefore, be it Resolved, by the members of the Quarterly Conference of Port Gibson Methodist Church, That we hereby express our heartfelt appreciation of the ministry and personality of this cultured and consecrated servant of God, under whose prudent and diligent administration the affairs of the District, both temporal and spiritual, have greatly prospered.

Resolved, That we part with him and his excellent family with deep regret, and commend them to the affectionate esteem of those among whom their lot shall be cast.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our beloved Bishop Mouzon, who is to preside over the approaching Annual Conference at Hattiesburg; and that copies be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Port Gibson Reveille for publication.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. MINNIE GABBERT HOLMES.

Fresh in the memory of friends and acquaintances is the picture of beautiful Minnie Gabbert as she stood in her bridal robes in the Methodist Church at Senatobia, Miss., on the evening of September 22, 1909, and was married to the Hon. Herbert Holmes, the writer, assisted by her pastor, Rev. S. L. Pope, performing the ceremony. On the evening of October 3, 1910, he fell asleep to remain till the call of him who conquered death shall awaken her. Beautiful in face, symmetric in form—the spirit, the soul within were more beautiful; the charm of manner was but the visible form of an invisible grace—the outward manifestation of that silent influence within that was moulding, chiseling and polishing the character, not for the earthly home, as loved ones so fondly believed, but for the heavenly home. During a pastorate of four years in Senatobia, she was my organist. I have never seen her fidelity surpassed by any one in the discharge of the duties pertaining to this delicate and responsible position—always in place and in perfect accord with the pastor. She was conspicuous in Sunday school work, and when her husband was appointed superintendent of the Sunday school she became at once his right arm of service. She came of good, honest parentage. There flowed through her veins a pure Anglo-Saxon blood. She was by inheritance endowed with those qualities of mind and soul which go toward making a strong, beautiful character. To natural were added acquired graces, for she was educated in the very best schools; this gave to her a most charming and attractive personality. Very early in life she was converted and joined the Methodist Church. The vows taken by her at the altar of the Church, when only nine years of age, were sacred and solemn verities, and became potent in moulding her life into superb Christian womanhood. She was modest, but by no means negative. She decided all moral questions at the bar of conscience, with the Holy Spirit directing the judgment, and when a decision was reached she was immovable. She was unselfish in her nature. She did not wait for opportunities of service, but made them. She was found ready for every good word and work. The influence of her beautiful, unselfish life of loving service is undying; and, though her life has been cut short in its freshness and bloom, the sweet fragrance and blessed memory of it are a precious legacy left to us all. She died young, but she did not live in vain. By her conduct she taught the circle of her friends and acquaintances that young womanhood can lead a happy and useful life when consecrated to the service of the Master. With her Christianity was a controlling principle, and the impulses of kindness and benevolence were instinctive. All lives that touched hers were strengthened by her clear, undimmed faith. Her husband was a member of the Lower House during the last session of the Mississippi Legislature. Mrs. Holmes spent most of her time in Jackson during the session. The same queenly graces that gave such a charm to her character in the narrow circle of her little home town, attracted to her a host of friends in the capital of the State. But she has gone from earth. God alone knows why. The earnest prayer of the writer of this imperfect sketch is that an all-wise Providence may protect and guard the little babe she left behind, so that in the coming years she may take the place of her sweet, pure, consecrated mother.

Meridian, Miss.

A Big Deal Which Means Much To Lynchburg And The Entire South.

An agreement has been entered into, whereby Craddock-Terry Company will acquire a controlling interest in the Geo. D. Witt Shoe Company, January 1st.

This deal is in no sense a combination in restraint of trade, but is a very important move looking to the better development of the shoe industry of Lynchburg.

The Craddock-Terry Company and the Geo. D. Witt Shoe Company have made wonderful progress in shoe manufacturing, but in order to get the best results, in order to produce the best shoes at the lowest prices, shoes of each grade and kind should be manufactured in a separate factory, and by consolidating the factories of both companies under practically one management, making in each factory the grade and kind of shoes which can be produced to the best advantage, it will enable both companies to make a great improvement in the quality, and a material saving in the cost of the shoes sold by both Craddock-Terry Company and by the Geo. D. Witt Shoe Company, and will naturally increase the rapidly growing demand for Lynchburg-made shoes.

Craddock-Terry Company have long enjoyed the reputation of being the largest manufacturers of shoes in the South, but this deal puts them in a class with the largest manufacturers in their line in the world and it makes Lynchburg a big factor in the world's shoe industry so far as shoes are concerned.

While Geo. D. Witt retires from the active management of the business of which he is now president, he will leave his money in this business in the shape of preferred stock, and the Geo. D. Witt Shoe Company will continue as heretofore, a corporation separate and distinct from Craddock-Terry Company, retaining most of the men who are now at the head of the various departments and practically all of the traveling men, under the general supervision of T. M. Terry, as President.

Under this new deal, all of the shoe factories of Lynchburg (except one) will be under practically the same management, which means that more shoes will be manufactured in Lynchburg next year than ever before. In fact, Craddock-Terry Company alone will manufacture more shoes than all of their Southern competitors combined, and Lynchburg will stand in a class by herself as "The Shoe Market of the South," and one of the greatest shoe markets of the world.

This announcement will be of great interest to the shoe trade all over the United States, as both of these progressive manufacturers enjoyed a nationwide sale almost every State in the Union, having enlarged the territory in which they operate year by year, until now Lynchburg-made shoes find a ready market in the largest cities of the South, East, North and West.

Church News

Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, author of "Science and Health" and founder of the Christian Science Church, died on Dec. 4, aged 89 years.

A press dispatch from Nashville states that Bishop W. R. Lambuth has returned from Brazil, where he has been holding Conferences and supervising the mission work of the Church.

Dr. S. A. Smith, who served several years as superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, has again been appointed to fill that position and will assume the duties of his office at an early date.

Dr. C. F. Reid's work in connection with the Laymen's Movement is eliciting high praise. His knowledge of missionary matters is said to be comprehensive and accurate, and on the platform he is admitted to be a tower of strength. His addresses at the Conferences have produced a profound impression.

It has been announced that the Mormons have tendered the Methodist Episcopal Church the use of their Temple, in case they should hold the General Conference of 1912 in Salt Lake City. We presume that our Sister Church will not be in a hurry to accept this invitation.

Bishop Wilson's sermon at the North Georgia Conference is reported to have been a remarkable utterance, even for him. Dr. Lovett, the editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, had it taken down by a stenographer, and will publish it in his issue of January 6, 1911. That it will be well worth reading, needs not to be said.

After performing his episcopal duties in the far West in a most efficient and satisfactory manner, Bishop R. G. Waterhouse has returned to his home at Emory, Virginia. He seems to have completely won the preachers in the Conferences over which he has presided. The Pacific Methodist Advocate has had much to say in commendation of his administration.

Dr. R. D. Smart, who recently was transferred from the Virginia to the Louisville Conference, and stationed at Broadway, Louisville, on account of ill health, has returned to the Virginia Conference and taken a supernumerary relation. At present he is at the Martha Jefferson Hospital at Charlottesville. Dr. Smart served the First Church at Memphis with great acceptability some years ago, and is well remembered in West Tennessee and North Mississippi.

Dr. Palmore, the editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, who attended the session of the Little Rock Conference at Prescott, in a letter to his paper, has the following to say of Bishop McCoy: "He seems to have captured not only the Little Rock Conference, but the entire State. He is certainly a very genial and brotherly man. He seems to have accomplished successfully a task which our distorted views of the episcopacy has heretofore made very difficult—that of being just as meek and humble after election as before."

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is broadening its work for women by a course of training for deaconesses, which will be introduced with the new year. It will add to the present instruction in the Bible, gospel music and Christian work, a systematic course of instruction in household science, domestic arts, industrial work for children, and nursing, as well as the discussion of practical social problems from the New Testament point of view. Like its other work, all this will be free to students of every denomination, and from every part of the world.

The gratifying announcement was made last evening by Dr. Jno. A. Rice, pastor of Rayne Memorial, that an associate pastor has been assigned to Rayne Memorial by the Board of Missions. This associate pastor will do missionary work in Japan, but though seas may divide him from the pastor of Rayne, he will be known as the associate pastor. The man thus designated is the Rev. James Oxford, a native Louisianian, who was reared in Texas. Mr. Oxford and his wife are already in Japan, and their salary for a year has already been provided for by the congregation of Rayne Memorial.—New Orleans Picayune.

The third annual meeting of the Medical Missionary Conference will be held at the Sanitarium in Battle Creek, Mich., January 5 to 8, 1911. The Conference will open at noon of the 5th with a banquet to all visitors. Missionaries and missionary officers will be entertained free for one week. It is expected that a large number of missionaries, both medical and evangelical, will be present, including men and women of prominence. We are asked to announce that all missionaries, on furlough or retired, are privileged to attend this gathering, which promises to be a season of inspiration and spiritual power. The Conference is interdenominational, all Christian bodies meeting on the same footing. Information will be cheerfully given by the secretary, George C. Tenney, Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Mich.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is planning to celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary by a week of special services beginning Founder's Day, February 5, 1911. Invitations have been sent to over six thousand graduates and former students, who are scattered all over the world engaged in various forms of Christian work. A strong program is being prepared and some of the most notable ministers and laymen of this and other lands are expected to assist in the celebration. At that time it is expected that the new dormitory for women will be ready for occupancy. The object of this anniversary week is not simply to mark off another milestone in the history of the Institute, but also to inaugurate a vigorous campaign for awakening interest in Bible study and in individual effort to win men to Christ among Christians generally. It is also hoped that thousands of young men inspired by the example of the great founder of the Institute, D. L. Moody, and encouraged by the success which God bestowed upon a humble, consecrated layman, may be led to devote their lives to some form of Christian service. Every mission field in the world is crying for trained workers, and there are ten calls for every man that can be supplied. If Christian young men and women knew these facts and realized the urgency of the need and the richness of the reward which every faithful worker may hope to gain, it is believed that many of them would choose this form of life work.

Secular News and Comment

The results of the British elections show a loss to the Unionists and a drift toward Liberalism.

A statement issued on Dec. 5, by the Census Bureau gives the State of Mississippi a population of 1,797,114, which is an increase of 245,844, or 15.8 per cent over 1900.

A million dollar packing house has been chartered in Mississippi, to be located at Jackson, by Chicago and Mississippi capitalists. It will do a general meat packing business with side-lines of fertilizers and bl-products.

President Taft told a party of Californians who came to solicit his influence for the San Francisco exposition that the Panama Canal would be finished and in operation long before 1915, and that Congress would be very doubtful about appropriations in the matter.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the Arctic explorer, has again come before the reading public, and promises at an early date to publish "his confession" in Hampton's Magazine. It is said that the Doctor is seeking through this means to stir up sympathy for him in the hearts of his countrymen.

The following comment on the recent election was made a few days since by the famous railroad magnate, Mr. James J. Hill:

"The last election has taught the politicians and the country something valuable. That is, that party lines can no longer exist to an important extent. The demagogue and the agitator have held sway so long it is really a relief to see the flag of warning that has been hoisted for their benefit. The laboring man is no longer swept off his feet by sweeping assertions and promises. He wants something definite. I am told also that the negro voter of the country at large exercised unusual independence in the last elections, thousands of them voting the Democratic ticket for the first time. It is highly probable that in a few years there will be little in the way of party lines in the United States."

According to a late report of the Department of Commerce and Labor the prospect for the conservation of our forests is bad. The cutting of timber is going on at a rate six times faster than the natural growth is replenishing them. About four billion feet of lumber is the output annually of thirty-six States. The production ten years ago was about two and a half billion. This increase is out of all proportion to the increase of population, which is only ten or twelve per cent. But the makers of this supply are not making much profit, many of them losing. Prices in the Northwestern States for pine are about $15 per thousand, and in the lower Mississippi Valley about $14; these prices refer, though, to what the sawmills ask, and not those made by the dealers to consumers. For oak and like lumber about $8 more is obtained. Washington, Louisiana and Mississippi are the three largest lumber-producing States, in the order named. The price of standing timber is high and is increasing as the supply is growing short. Some authorities say we will in twenty years be like Europe, with little or no firewood, much less merchantable timber.

Editorial

Handling the proceedings of two Conferences the same week is work rather overmuch, especially as both the editor and publisher have been forced to be out of the office for several days. We trust that our readers will be charitable.

By a unanimous vote, the Louisiana Conference has invited the next General Conference to New Orleans, and a strong committee has been appointed to present properly the claims of the Crescent City. No more desirable place for holding the next general assembly of Southern Methodism can be found within the limits of our territory.

Sunday, January 1, is the day named by our Bishops in their recent pastoral address for the Methodists of the South to unite in prayer for a general revival throughout the connection. By all means, let this suggestion be carried out in every church. Our pastors should at once begin to get things in readiness for the occasion. We need nothing so much as we do a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our people. May the year 1911 be memorable throughout all the future as a time of widespread refreshing from the presence of the Lord!

It gives us much pleasure to announce the appointment of Rev. H. T. Carley to the assistant editorship of the Advocate. He is a young man of scholarly acquirements and most exemplary Christian character. He was graduated some years ago from Millsaps College and has also taken a course in the Theological Department of Vanderbilt University. He is a clear, discriminating thinker, and a fluent, forceful writer. Brother Carley will not give all, or even the chief part of his time, to editorial work, as he will also have charge of the Louisiana Avenue Church of this city. But we count him a most valuable acquisition to our office force, and, with his capable assistance, we hope to make the Advocate much stronger and better in every particular next year.

Give the new pastor and his family a hearty welcome. They deserve it, coming as they do into their new field of labor, not by their own election, but in obedience to the appointing power of the Church. Perhaps the greatest hardship entailed by our itinerant system is the frequent moving from place to place, which it necessitates. Our people are right in making the parsonage ready for occupancy and in filling the pantry with needed things before the arrival of God's servants. It is also a good time for the stewards to hand a little cash to the minister, whose expenses in changing works are necessarily considerable. The Master will not be unmindful of those who thus contribute to the comfort of the workmen whom he has called to represent him and his holy cause.

We are indebted to Rev. B. P. Jacob, the alert and aggressive presiding elder of the Corinth District, for the following striking illustration of the urgent need of having the Conference organ in the homes of our people: "As the elder of ——— district was on his rounds he met a man who had read a copy of the N. O. Advocate, and it was so very interesting that he read it all with much concern, and remembered it all, even the advertisement of Millsaps College, and especially that W. B. Murrah was president. Some time elapsed, and he read another copy, noticing that D. C. Hull had become president. This caused so much concern, that when the elder came, the brother earnestly inquired what had become of that man, Murrah. The elder told him that Dr. Murrah was elected one of the Bishops of our Church, whereupon the brother remarked, 'He was! Well, I seen he dropped out someers.'"

BISHOP E. D. MOUZON, D.D.

Bishop Mouzon made a profound impression at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. So smoothly did the business move along under his guidance that the most astute observer could not detect the slightest indication that a "prentice hand" was upon the helm. As a presiding officer he already ranks with the best. He is dignified, firm, and positive, but at the same time courteous, considerate, and impartial. He has an accurate knowledge of parliamentary law, and adheres strictly to it in conducting business. His personal appearance is remarkably striking. He is tall, slender, and somewhat angular in form, and has a classic and most expressive countenance. His voice is clear and deep-toned; his enunciation distinct, and he is a speaker of unusual impressiveness. His morning talks to the Conference were spiritual, suggestive, and, at times, illuminating. Those who heard the entire series were loud in their praise of the Bishop as an expositor of the Scriptures. His sermon on Sunday was a notable deliverance, and, from beginning to end, completely held the attention of the great audience assembled to hear it. It fully met expectation, frequently evoking hearty amens from the brethren.

In the cabinet, Bishop Mouzon is reported to have been painstaking, brotherly, and perfectly frank with his counselors. His appointments gave general satisfaction. Indeed, we have no hesitancy in saying that in the person of this young chief-pastor, Texas has given to the general Church a man who is destined to become a great Bishop, and, if Providence shall spare his life and preserve his health, he will doubtless play a leading part in the affairs of Southern Methodism for many years to come. So far as we are able to judge, he has every qualification for his high office—a brilliant intellect, a tender, sympathetic heart, personal piety, a sound and discriminating judgment, a dignified and manly bearing, uncommon preaching gifts, and administrative ability far above ordinary. The Conference by a unanimous vote petitioned the Episcopal College to return him for another year. This was not a mere pleasing formality, but a genuine expression of esteem and appreciation. Bishop Mouzon has won thousands of friends and admirers in Mississippi, who will always be delighted to have him come among them.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. Frank W. Brandon, of Alabama, was a caller at the Advocate office Tuesday of this week. The editor regrets having missed seeing him.

A volume of sermons by the late Bishop Seth Ward will soon be forthcoming from the press. It will be edited by Bishop Mouzon, who will also write for it a biographical sketch of our lamented Texas Bishop.

Rev. J. M. Davenport writes as follows from Aberdeen, Miss.: "In the event that any vacancy should occur within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, I am available for service as a supply. Any presiding elder desiring a man, may address me at Aberdeen."

Rev. G. H. Galloway, after a quadrennium of capable service on the Vicksburg District, has been made Conference Missionary Secretary. He is a man of untiring energy, a gifted speaker, and there is no doubt that he will admirably fill the new position to which he has been called.

Dr. J. W. Cooper preached a sermon at Hattiesburg during the recent session of the Mississippi Conference which elicited much favorable comment. His report showed Whitworth College, of which he is the honored president, to be in the most satisfactory condition in its entire history.

We were pleased to have Mr. A. T. Wilson, advertising manager of the Texas Christian Advocate, drop into our office this week. The Christmas edition of this ably-edited journal is a thing of beauty. Dr. Rankin's paper worthily represents the growing Methodism of the Empire State of the South.

In the reported proceedings of the North Mississippi Conference, which appeared in our issue of last week, Rev. A. G. Hall was represented as having been continued in the class of the second year. This was an error, as he was advanced to the class of the third year. It is a pleasure to make this correction.

We regret to report that Rev. M. L. Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, is seriously ill at a sanatorium in this city, having come here for medical treatment last Sunday morning. Let earnest prayer for his speedy recovery be made. Brother Burton has contributed much to the upbuilding of Mississippi Methodism within the past few years.

Rev. L. A. McKeown has been continued at Shaw, Miss., for another year, instead of going to Shelby; the charge to which Bishop McCoy assigned him at Sardis. We presume that Brother Stormont is the Shelby pastor, though as to this, we are not informed. Brother McKeown's parishioners were loath to give him up, and prevailed upon the presiding elder, the Rev. W. W. Woollard, to leave him undisturbed.

Rev. Felix R. Hill, Jr., was sent to Twenty-fifth Avenue, Gulfport. This is considered a choice pastorate, and that Brother Hill will carry it forward to yet larger things, there is no doubt. He accomplished substantial results at Vicksburg, leaving there one of the best equipped institutional plants in the connection. He stated on the Conference floor that his last year in his former charge was the best of the four.

The appointment of the Rev. C. W. Crisler to Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, was a fitting recognition of the great work which he has done for the past four years at Capitol Street, Jackson. Brother Crisler is one of the strongest preachers in the Mississippi Conference, and a painstaking, sympathetic pastor. The Methodists of the Hill City may count themselves fortunate in having secured his services.

We were privileged to exchange greetings with Rev. H. T. Cunningham in Shreveport, La., a few days since. We were en route to Homer and he was returning home from Galveston, the seat of the late session of the Texas Conference. Brother Cunningham was continued on the Marshall District, where he is rendering most acceptable service. He was in fine health and spirits, and spoke most appreciatingly of Bishop Murrah's work among the Texans.

We are informed that Mr. Charles W. Chambers, a native of the Isle of Wight, England, died at his home in Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 6, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was the father of the late Rev. John W. Chambers, of the Mississippi Conference, and grandfather of the Rev. John C. Chambers, of the same Conference. He left a very large connection of children and grandchildren. He was buried in Magnolia cemetery, Baton Rouge. We are promised a suitable memoir, which will appear later.

A card just received from Mr. Marion Lawrance, the great Sunday school leader, says: "The outlook for the Thirteenth International Sunday School Convention in San Francisco, June 20-27, 1911, is exceedingly bright and encouraging. Low railroad rates have been definitely promised (particulars later). Magnificent local committee—interest high and rising daily. We must bring ten thousand people and make this convention the best yet. We can do it with God's help. Pray for it; work for it."

Huntley, W. W. Morse, J. N. Ware, and E. W. Lipscomb to the Committee on Memoirs. Death has sorely bereaved us this year, but heaven is richer by far.

The name of Rev. J. W. McLaurin was referred to the Committee for the Supernumerary Relation.

Brother D. C. Langford and Dr. W. C. Black made personal request for the supernumerary relation, and made very feeling addresses. The names of G. R. Ellis, J. W. Ramsey and M. L. Burton were also referred for the same relation.

At this point the news was conveyed to the Conference that Brother M. L. Burton had been taken to New Orleans for treatment, and Brother W. H. Huntley led the Conference in prayer for him.

Robert Selby introduced N. B. Harmon, both of whom were members of the class of 1885, and the latter presented, in the name of the class, a beautiful gavel made from a tree which grew near the grave of Tobias Gibson, the father of Mississippi Methodism. The Bishop briefly responded in accepting the present.

Rev. O. G. Halliburton was referred for the supernumerary relation.

Dr. H. M. Hamill was presented and addressed the Conference with reference to the Sunday school work.

Rev. John Paul, of Meridian, was re-admitted. "Who are received as local preachers from other churches?" was called, and J. A. Tucker and A. S. Byrd were received.

J. W. Campbell and W. G. Roberts were located at their own request.

Henry C. Maples was received as a traveling preacher from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Question 22 was called, and H. M. Ellis reported from Brookhaven.

The report of the committee on equalization of apportionments, passed yesterday, was reconsidered and rejected, throwing the whole matter back to the boards to make their apportionment in the old way.

The Bishop then announced the following quadrennial boards:

Joint Board of Finance—J. M. Morse, P. D. Hardin, T. B. Lampton, S. A. Fomlinson, B. F. Jones, N. B. Harmon, W. N. Blount, G. G. Beaman, W. W. Moore, W. D. Dominick, D. W. Heidelberg, E. J. Bomer, R. W. Millsaps, M. H. Moore.

Conference Committee on Admissions—P. D. Hardin, G. H. Thompson, John A. Moore, T. B. Holloman, N. B. Harmon, W. L. Linfield, I. L. Peebles.

Admission on Trial—W. H. Saunders, W. W. Graves, H. P. Lewis, Jr.

First Year—H. M. Ellis, L. L. Roberts, J. D. Ellis.

Second Year—D. Scarborough, J. Y. Bowman, M. M. Black.

Third Year—H. B. Watkins, G. P. McKown, J. C. Chambers.

Fourth Year—A. F. Smith, R. Selby, T. W. Adams, Auditing Committee—W. T. Griffin, C. N. Guice, T. B. Cottrell, R. P. Eikes.

Committee on Memoirs—A. F. Watkins, J. G. Galloway, C. H. Ellis, B. F. Jones, J. M. Weems, E. H. Moulter, W. H. Huntley.

Hospital Committee—J. R. Jones, J. T. Leggett, D. W. Heidelberg, L. N. Dantzler, Mrs. H. M. Ellis.

Board of Missions—G. H. Thompson, W. M. Sullivan, F. Hopkins, G. W. Mars, J. W. Ward, W. L. Linfield, P. H. Enoch, A. G. Norrell, M. M. Black, C. W. Crisler, C. B. Gates, W. S. F. Tatum, G. S. Harmon, M. M. Satterfield.

Board of Education—F. R. Hill, Jr., W. H. LaPrade, E. A. Enoch, H. C. Yawn, L. Carley, C. F. Emery, H. J. Wilson, P. H. Saunders, A. F. Smith, John A. Moore, John A. McLeod, J. C. Fant, R. Selby, T. A. Holloman.

Sunday School Board—B. F. Lewis, J. E. Gray, Z. Z. Linton, H. P. Lewis, Jr., H. M. Ellis, T. J. Reed, W. E. Lampton, L. F. Alford, R. E. Rutledge, N. A. Mott, C. W. Crook, J. S. Purcell, W. D. Hawkins, F. B. Woodley.

Epworth League Board—H. B. Watkins, Dr. F. L. Walton, A. P. Holt, W. W. Graves, J. L. Neil, Clifford Field, E. C. Garland, H. W. Van Hook, T. B. Clifford, W. T. Griffin, B. W. Lewis, H. B. Rush, A. E. Leggett, Mr. Calhoun.

Bible Cause—C. M. Chapman, J. A. Golden, H. L. Norton, J. W. Price, J. E. Williams, J. T. Almy, S. N. Young.

Conference then adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock.

Afternoon Session.

Conference was opened by singing. A charge to keep I have. Prayer was offered by G. H. Galloway. The Board of Church Extension was elected as follows:

W. H. Huntley, L. P. Brown, W. J. Dawson, W. G. Forsythe, P. L. Blackwell, R. Whitaker, L. Carley, G. L. Carley, G. W. Huff, C. N. Collins, J. G. Galloway, W. M. Williams, T. B. Holloman, A. B. Connerly.

The Conference heard with pleasure the good report from the Seashore Divinity School at the Seashore Camp Grounds. The report asked for $250 from each of the patronizing Conferences to be paid to Rev. W. W. Holmes by June 15th, 1911.

The following report No. 1 was received from the Board of Missions:

"We, your Board of Missions, recommend the appointment of Rev. George H. Galloway as Conference Missionary Secretary, and of Rev. D. E. Kelley, as Conference Evangelist for the ensuing year."

The report from the Committee on Conference Relations was read by J. M. Weems and adopted.

The report of the editors of the Conference Journal was read by A. F. Wallins. Total cost of Journal of 1910 was $402.64.

C. W. Crisler, S. A. Fomlinson, J. M. Morse, T. J. O'Neil, W. H. Saunders, M. H. Moore and W. R. Kennedy were elected as trustees of the Mississippi Conference Endowment Fund.

Each of the five large boards were asked to pay $50 for the Minutes of 1911 and the American Bible Society Board, $30.

The report on the spiritual state of the Church was read by E. F. Phillips. After reading this report the Bishop reminded the Conference that the College of Bishops had appointed the first Sunday in January as a day of special prayer for a revival throughout the Church.

The report of the Board of Education recommending that intercollegiate games be allowed in Millsaps, eliminating football, was read by Dr. A. F. Watkins.

A substitute, leaving the entire matter in the hands of the trustees and faculty, was tabled.

The matter was thoroughly discussed. President Hull and Major Millsaps spoke for the measure, also H. M. Ellis and others. G. A. Guice and G. S. Harmon and others spoke against it. It was carried by 90 to 46. This is the same measure passed by the North Mississippi Conference.

Conference then adjourned. At night the Sunday School Board held its anniversary. Dr. Hamill being the chief speaker. Miss Magee, of Columbia, spoke on Primary Work.

SUNDAY.

Sunday in every respect was a delightful day at Hattiesburg. Everything conspired to make it delightful. Large congregations thronged the spacious churches. The preachers, released from the strain of the busy sessions, thoroughly enjoyed the services of the day.

At the Main Street Church, at 9:30 o'clock, a delightful love feast was held. Rev. D. C. Langford conducted it. Perhaps the best singing of the session was in this service, when the great crowd sang the old songs of Zion. The testimonies were sincere and impressive. That "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation," there can be no doubt as one listens to the joyous testimonies of God's children. There were fully 1,200 people in the beautiful church for the 11 o'clock service. I don't think I have ever heard a better choir in a Conference service.

Bishop Mouzon showed himself a real Bishop in his sermon. His text was Daniel xi, 32: "But the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits." He placed these words as describing the stirring scenes of the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the tendencies were toward Hellenizing the Hebrew people and toward introducing the sins and follies of Greek life. There were some Jews who welcomed these novel changes and who adorned themselves in Greek clothes and began to conform to their worldly ways. But there were some who knew Jehovah and these resisted with all their might the things that tended to carry their people into the Jewish altar, and erected on its site an altar to Jesus. But he was defeated because there were some who knew God. Knowledge of Jehovah was the source of their power.

The central truth of this text is that our God is a God that may be known. This was the chief difference between the Hebrews and Greeks. Among the Greeks we see men seeking for a god; in the Hebrews we find God seeking men and revealing himself to them. This knowledge comes to men not by search, but by a loving God revealing himself to men. The Bible is a history of God showing himself to men. What kind of God is this that has been revealed to us?

First, a great Creator. Where science leaves off, revelation begins and shows him as the Creator of heaven and earth. No man who believes in such a God can be an idolator, for no one can worship a creature who knows the great Creator.

Second, a personal God. God talked to Jacob, "I am the God of Abraham and of Isaac." I am the God who knew thy fathers and was their friend, a personal God who can be intimately known by his children. Nature is too impersonal to tell us of him. God must reveal himself.

Third, a holy God. Isaiah heard the "Holy, Holy, Holy" of the seraphim, and St. John on Patmos heard the same song. What do we mean by God's holiness? We mean he is always opposed to wrong and always stands for the right.

Fourth, as a God of forgiveness. In Moses' prayer, "Show me thy glory," God declared his holiness, but he hid Moses in the cleft of the rock, and in love revealed himself to him.

This is the meaning of the Old Testament sacrifice and it is the meaning of the cross in the New. Man never knows God until he shows him as a forgiving God. This is the burden of David's psalms and of much of the hymnology of the Church.

In what ways does God reveal himself? We say in what ways does God reveal himself? We say we see him in nature, but we do not see him in nature until we know him personally in our own hearts. Then we see him everywhere.

W. W. Carre Co. Ltd

Manufacturer of Lumber

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

We see him in history. God has always been in history. There is no such thing as profane history. It is all sacred because God is in it all.

God is seen in the lives of the prophets. But all these things are knowing about God. We can know about him, but it is a different thing to know God. We can know him personally as his truly Spirit reveals him to our hearts. Knowledge of God is a spiritual realization of a mighty reality. Deep in the human heart is the conviction that God may be known. Heathen religions teach this much truth. It is the human heart feeling after God. The fundamental assumption of agnosticism is that God is not known and cannot be known. The fundamental assumption of Christianity is that he can be known and that we are the people who know him. This is St. Paul's testimony: "The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirits." Our danger today is neither over-emotionalism nor skepticism. Our real danger is classically cold religiosity.

The Bishop used the lives of Matthias the Priest and of the early apostles and of Martin Luther and Wesley to show how men have prevailed who knew God. He showed that their greatness lay in their closeness to God. He declared that Luther was the greatest man of his time—not because he was the greatest scholar, for Melancthon and Calvin were greater scholars—but because he knew God as a personal God through Jesus Christ.

Methodism was not born in Oxford University. It was born in "Aldersgate Street," where he found a personal God, consciously revealed to his heart. It is this gospel of a God who can be known that the world needs. We live in a time of heathenism abroad and a great horde of heathen at home. How shall we meet it? "Return, O fire of the living God, and burn upon our altars." As Saul, in his distress, sought relief from David's harp instead of David's God, so the Church often seeks to meet her distresses in more elaborate rituals. No service is worth while that the presence and power of God is not in. What we need to preach is not so much Jesus as a teacher or moralist, but to preach the dynamics of our Lord. We have too many rabbis and too few prophets. The rabbi knows only what he learns from the book. The prophet knows God. The book is not worth while unless it leads you to God.

The Bishop's sermon was full of power and spirituality and the large congregation were lifted up and edified by it. After the service, the deacons were ordained. In the afternoon the memorial service was held for our nine brethren who had died. Rev. B. F. Jones presided. The beautiful song of the Lewis quartette was greatly appreciated.

At night, Dr. R. A. Meek preached. His brethren of the Mississippi Conference "heard him gladly" and he will always be a welcome preacher among us. The elders were ordained at this service.

Services were held by our preachers at the other churches, the following brethren preaching: J. W. Ward, Fred Long, C. N. Guice, W. M. Sullivan, L. L. Roberts, W. J. Ferguson, P. H. Howse, A. M. Smith, W. H. Huntley, F. R. Hill, Jr., N. B. Harmon, I. W. Cooper, W. H. Lewis, T. B. Clifford, C. W. Crisler, D. E. Kelley, A. B. Barry, I. L. Peebles, J. V. Bennett and J. M. Moore.

CLOSING DAY.

Morning Session.

Brother I. B. Robertson led the opening prayer. The Bishop read a part of the sixth chapter of II Corinthians and expounded it under the subject, "The ministry of reconciliation." These morning talks throughout the session have been very helpful and many of the preachers have caught a new vision of the work and office of the ministry. He said that he had never heard a theory of the atonement altogether satisfactory to him, but he had never heard one that did not have some truth in it. That it comes from God, sufficiently explains why men do not entirely understand it. The gospel is not good advice; it is good news. The only thing that gives men hope while they live and peace when they die is the death of Jesus. To us is committed this ministry of reconciliation.

The action taken Saturday committing the amount raised for printing minutes to the Conference claimants and assessing the five large boards with $50 each and the American Bible Society with $30, was reconsidered and the amount raised for that purpose was ordered used for that purpose, and only an amount necessary to make up a possible deficit in the expense of printing the minutes was ordered assessed to the Boards.

Question 22 was called and the following preachers reported: J. G. Galloway, J. C. Ellis, H. B. Watkins, M. L. White, C. N. Guice, T. H. King, P. D. Hardin, I. W. Cooper, A. F. Watkins, G. H. Thompson, O. S. Lewis, B. H. Rawls, H. L. Norton, W. D. Dominick, J. C. Chambers, J. J. Golden, G. W. Huff, J. H. Moore, W. W. Murray, J. W. Thompson, G. D. Adriers, L. Carley, E. J. Coker, R. F. Witt, C. C. Evans, J. E. Gray, D. E. Kelley, J. O. Winburne (supply), C. F. Emery, J. Y. Bowman, J. H. Grice, C. W. Crisler, J. S. Parker, J. W. Ward, H. G. Gatlin, C. H. Ellis, W. W. Perry, T. B. Clifford, W. M. Williams, Alfred F. Smith, R. T. Nolen (supply).

Mrs. A. F. Watkins, Corresponding Secretary of the Conference W. F. M. Society, addressed the Conference with reference to that work. W. L. Linfield and L. Carley, being absent, their presiding elders reported for them.

The Bishop urged the preachers to read Robert E. Speer's "Christianity and the Nations."

Question 22 was called and C. N. Chapman, I. L. Peebles, R. E. Rutledge, R. H. Barr, S. N. Young, B. W. Lewis, B. F. Jones, W. G. Forsythe, R. A. Sibley, Jr., E. L. Alford, W. H. Huntley, W. W. Cammack, Robert Selby, H. P. Lewis, Jr., H. W. Van Hook, R. Bradley, W. A. Hays, H. E. Carter, F. B. Ormond, W. W. Graves, J. M. Weems, W. W. Moore, H. Mellard, W. J. Dawson, N. B. Harmon, W. H. Lane, D. E. Vickers, reported.

The Bishop called Dr. R. A. Meek, Editor of the New Orleans Advocate, to the front and presented him to the Conference, and Dr. Meek addressed the Conference. In presenting him, Bishop Mouzon said that he had been reading the New Orleans Advocate, and that it ranks among the best of our Church periodicals.

T. B. Cottrell, W. J. Ferguson, E. D. Phillips, P. H. Howse, B. F. Lewis, C. M. Martin, J. M. Morse, J. T. Abney, G. A. Gnice, L. E. Alford, T. W. Adams, R. S. Gafe, T. B. Holloman, R. P. Fikes, L. E. Darsey, H. J. Mohre, M. H. Moore, J. M. Lewis, W. T. Griffin, L. Fayard (supply), J. M. Massey, W. L. Blackwell, M. M. Black, J. E. Sampley, E. H. Mounger, G. P. McKeown, J. H. Foreman, C. M. Crossley, F. R. Hill, Jr., W. H. Saunders, H. G. Hawkins, W. A. Terry, A. S. Byrd (supply), reported.

A resolution was passed inviting Dr. E. H. Mounger to preach a semi-centennial sermon at our next session, and in case of his absence, that Rev. Ira B. Robertson be invited to preach the sermon.

AFTERNOON SESSION—LAST DAY.

This session opened with the atmosphere intense with the usual excitement so characteristic of such occasions. Many rumors had been afloat. Perhaps more than usual, but nothing certain had gotten out. The song, "A Charge to Keep I have," was sung, and Dr. W. C. Black led in prayer.

The secretary read the minutes.

The report of the special committee on Laymen's Missionary Movement was adopted. The report nominated Mr. W. D. Hawkins, of Meridian, as lay leader.

A memorial to the Annual Conference asking for an increased representation of laymen to the District Conference was adopted. It provides that these delegates shall be elected by the Church Conference, and that each church shall have one delegate for every hundred members and fraction of two-thirds thereof; provided, further, that each church on every circuit or mission shall have at least one delegate.

Rev. T. B. Holloman read the report of the Board of Education.

The Conference recommitted the report and instructed the Board out of the same total assessment to give $500 to Port Gibson Female College.

"Where shall the next session of the Annual Conference be held?" was called. Hattiesburg, Meridian, McComb were nominated. Meridian was chosen, receiving 91 votes.

H. G. Hawkins offered the report from the committee on the "Consolidation of Girls' Schools," recommending that the Conference should first take action looking to a more complete ownership of the furnishings of our three girls' schools. It also stated that the administrators of these schools were willing to consider any proposition that might be offered.

Brother B. F. Lewis read the report of the Sunday School Board, which was adopted.

D. S. Harmon read the report on Temperance, which was adopted.

The report of the Board of Missions was read by M. M. Black. Raised for foreign missions $9,500.71. For domestic missions (including collections) $9,875.12.

The work of Rev. D. E. Kelly was summed up as 1,200 conversions and 604 additions to our Church. The assessment for foreign missions next year is $15,000; for domestic, $11,500.

The Bishop asked for a collection to make up a deficit in the missionary appropriation which amounted to $550.35.

H. Mellard read the report from the American Bible Society.

The report of the Board of Trustees of the Conference Endowment Fund was read by C. W. Crisler. The report shows that this Board has on hand $18,749.71, invested as an endowment fund. The Board is anxious to increase this to $25,000.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance was read by W. H. Saunders. The total raised for claimants this year was $10,250.97.

The Epworth League report was read by H. G. Hawkins. This report shows that we have in our Conference 110 chapters, with 3,215 members. The Leagues have collected $1,660 this year. Report of the committee on Sabbath Observance was read by W. A. Terry.

Rev. W. H. Saunders read the report on Publishing Interests. It recommended I. W. Cooper, C. W. Crisler and John D. Ellis as members of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. By a formal resolution, introduced by W. H. Lewis, the tenure in office of this committee was fixed at four years to correspond with that of the other quadrennial boards and committees.

The following resolution of thanks was offered by C. F. Emery and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

RESOLUTION OF THANKS

We rejoice with the good citizens of Hattiesburg in the remarkable growth of this city since last we assembled here in Annual Conference, and congratulate the Methodism of Hattiesburg upon this beautiful house of worship in which our deliberations are held.

Resolved 1. That we thank the good people for their kind hospitality, and the pastors of our local churches for their painstaking efforts in our behalf.

2. That we thank the pastors and congregations of our sister churches for the use of their houses of worship.

3. That we thank the press for publishing the proceedings of our Conference.

4. That we thank the local banks and the railroads for appreciated courtesies.

5. That we thank Brother E. W. Barrington for his kindness in typewriting the Conference work.

A resolution strongly commending the work of Bishop Mouzon, and asking the College of Bishops to return him to the Mississippi Conference, was unanimously carried. This paper, signed by all of the presiding elders, was introduced by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough.

Rev. H. B. Watkins was elected assistant editor of the Journal. The following are the condensed Minutes as reported by the statistical secretary:

Number of local preachers, 129; number of members, 54,146; infants baptized, 1,241; adults baptized, 1,390; number of Epworth Leagues (Junior and Senior), 112; League members, 3,282; number of Sunday schools, 462; officers and teachers, 2,910; number of Sunday school scholars, 30,692; received from Children's Day, 1,077.22; raised for missions in Sunday schools, $3,586.20; other purposes, $13,401.33; total from Sunday schools, $18,064.75; raised for superannuate preachers and their widows and orphans, $10,281.11; for Foreign Missions, $9,500.71 (including special $20,069.98); Domestic Missions, $9,324.77; for Church extension, $4,492.21; for Presiding Elders, $14,329.43; for preachers in charge, $121,556.80; for Bishops, $1,860.97; number of societies, 570; number of Houses of Worship, 483; value of Houses of Worship, $987,864; indebtedness on same, $54,651.89; number of Pastoral Charges, 168; number of Parsonages, 144; value, $271,800; indebtedness, $22,685.20; number of districts, 8; District Parsonages, 8; value, $36,500; indebtedness, $13,120; number of Churches damaged, 2; amount of damages, $5,240; insurance carried, $413,600; premiums paid, $3,147.98; collection on losses, $3,965; number of Educational Institutions, 5; Endowment, $300,500; value of buildings, $350,000; number of students, $900. The Minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved. Ten minutes before six o'clock Bishop Mouzon announced the hymn, "A Charge to Keep I have," and led in fervent prayer, after which the Bishop called Question 49, "Where are the preachers stationed next year?"

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Reported by Rev. H. T. Carley.

The little city of Homer made elaborate preparations for the entertainment of the sixty-fifth session of the Louisiana Annual Conference which convened Dec. 7, 1910. The homes of the people were opened in unstinted hospitality, and nothing was left undone to make the stay of the members of the Conference delightful in every way. Rev. W. H. Coleman, the pastor, had arranged perfectly for the convenience of the Conference.

Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, a mass meeting for women was held at the church. Rev. N. E. Joyner delivered a very interesting address concerning the great Edinburgh Missionary Conference which he attended as a delegate from our Church.

The opening sermon of the Conference was preached Tuesday evening by Dr. C. W. Carter. Dr. Carter has long been known as one of the great preachers of Southern Methodism, and this sermon more than sustained his reputation. It was a profound exposition of Colossians ii. 10. Competent critics pronounced it one of the greatest discourses ever delivered on a similar occasion.

FIRST DAY.

The Conference was formally opened Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock. Bishop Murrah announced hymn No. 2, "Come thou Almighty King," after which he led in prayer. The Scripture lesson read by the Bishop was Philippians iii. He gave a luminous and inspiring exposition of this great passage, which set a high mark for the spiritual life of the Conference. Hymn 461, "How Firm a Foundation," was sung, and Rev. J. D. Harper led in prayer.

Before beginning the business, the Bishop made a few appropriate remarks in connection with his first episcopal visit to the Louisiana Conference.

Roll call showed considerably more than a hundred preachers present.

Dr. F. S. Parker was elected secretary. He nominated M. C. Holt as assistant secretary; R. W. Vaughan, as statistical secretary, and W. L. Doss and R. H. Harper as assistants to the statistical secretary. These were elected.

On nomination of the presiding elders, the following committees were elected:

Church Publications—Briscoe Carter, A. I. Townsley, L. C. Wilson, R. H. Harper, F. R. Hill, H. N. Brown, E. K. Means.

Sabbath Observance—J. F. Foster, H. N. Harrison, J. A. McCormick, P. O. Lowrey, R. O. Weir.

Temperance—J. M. Alford, Wm. Schuhle, J. W. Booth, B. T. Crews, F. M. Freeman.

Conference Relations—H. W. Bowman, A. S. Lutz, I. T. Reams, A. S. J. Neill, B. H. Sheppard, K. W. Dodson, R. W. Vaughan.

Memorials—P. O. Lowrey.

District Conference Records—H. T. Carley, P. H. Fontaine, A. F. Vaughan.

Public Worship—R. W. Tucker, W. H. Coleman, J. T. Otts.

On motion, a nominating committee was appointed to nominate the quadrennial boards. In report No. 1, this committee nominated the following: Board of Missions, which was elected:

Clerical: W. H. Coleman, P. O. Lowrey, W. W. Drake, A. W. Turner, N. E. Joyner, J. M. Henry.

Communications from the connectional boards were announced and referred, without reading, to the proper committees.

Dr. J. M. Moore, Secretary of the Home Mission Department of the Board of Missions, and W. C. Everett, Manager of the Publishing House, at Dallas, Tex., were introduced to the Conference.

The Bishop then called Question 22, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The names of the presiding elders were called and their characters passed, as were also the supernumeraries and supernumeraries. W. J. Porter reported that his health was much improved, and he was placed on the effective list. Dr. F. R. Hill, who took the supernumerary relation last year, was also placed on the effective list.

The name of T. M. Buley, on motion of his presiding elder, was referred to the committee for the supernumerary relation. Dr. J. A. Parker, one of the oldest members of the Conference, in a simple, but touching statement, asked for the reference of his name to the committee on conference relations. His request was granted.

Question 22 was continued until the hour for adjournment arrived. Announcements were made, the doxology sung, and the benediction pronounced by Bishop Murrah.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Dr. Felix R. Hill preached a wonderfully inspiring sermon to a large congregation.

At 7:15 in the evening, the Sunday School Board observed its anniversary, the principal feature of which was an address by Rev. Chas. D. Bulla, Superintendent of Wesley Adult Bible Class Department. Dr. Bulla came as a stranger to the Conference, but he won the admiration and interest of all by the magnificent address he delivered on this occasion. Seldom has a connectional officer given a more inspiring message.

SECOND DAY.

The devotional exercises of the second day were conducted by Rev. C. W. Carter, who announced hymn 388, "A charge to keep I have," after which he read I John iii as a Scripture lesson, and then led the Conference in prayer.

The minutes of Wednesday's session were read and approved. The roll call showed that several members had arrived since the opening day. On motion, further calling of the roll was dispensed with.

Question 22 was resumed. When the name of Rev. S. W. B. Colvin was called he stated that it was impossible for him to continue in the work on account of the state of his health, and asked for a location. His request was granted with much sorrow.

The Bishop called the names of the class of the first year, and the following were advanced to the class of the second year: H. Wade Cudd, A. J. Bonnett, L. E. Wicht, J. C. Rousseau.

The following not having passed the examination were continued in the first year: H. W. Jamieson, Geo. P. White, D. C. Bennett.

L. L. Spinks was discontinued on motion of his presiding elder.

The class of the second year was called and the following were advanced to the class of the third year, and elected to Deacon's Orders: J. A. McCormick, R. S. Walton, R. E. Martin, T. V. Peters, G. A. Morgan, F. R. Power, R. H. Bamberg, H. T. Young and J. G. Snelling. J. C. Price, S. S. Holladay, J. W. Harper, and C. B. Powell, being in Deacon's Orders, were passed to the class of the third year.

J. W. Reed, M. H. Honeycutt, W. J. Newsom, and J. A. Alford were continued in the second year.

J. E. Craig was discontinued at his own request.

The class of the third year was called and the following were advanced to the class of the fourth year: F. J. McCoy, L. A. Sims, C. A. Battle, C. F. Sheppard, C. M. Morris, A. J. Gearheard.

T. D. Lipscomb and C. V. Breithaupt were continued in the class of the third year.

The class of the fourth year was called and the following, having stood approved examinations, were elected to Elder's Orders: W. L. Doss, Jr., John Sholars and W. L. Hunter. T. J. Holladay, J. L. Sutton, L. I. McCain, T. M. Wafer were continued in the class of the fourth year.

T. M. Burgess asked for and was granted a location. His presiding elder, P. M. Brown, made a statement of the difficulties under which Brother Burgess had labored, and the Conference made a voluntary offering for his benefit.

At 10:30 o'clock, according to the order of the day fixed yesterday, Dr. J. M. Moore, Secretary of the Home Mission Department of the Board of Missions, addressed the Conference. His address was an exceedingly practical discussion of the needs of the Church in its missionary operations to-day.

Under the question, "What local preachers are elected Deacons?" Wm. F. Roberts, of the Shreveport District, was elected.

Dr. S. S. Keener submitted a report from the Legal Hundred, concerning the Bynum Plantation and other matters. This report contained encouraging information.

T. V. Ellzey, General Secretary of the Louisiana State Sunday School Association, was introduced to the Conference, and spoke concerning his work.

Question, "Who are received from other churches?" was called. Rev. L. E. Crooks was received from the M. E. Church in the class of the second year, and having stood the examination was admitted into full connection.

"Who are re-admitted?" was called, and Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer, who last year asked for a location, was by unanimous vote received back into the Conference.

The nominating committee nominated the following Sunday School Board for the quadrennium, which was elected: Clerical: H. B. Carre, W. H. Coleman, H. N. Brown, A. I. Townsley, A. S. Lutz, A. G. Shankle, W. D. Kleinschmidt. Lay: N. A. McCutcheon, N. R. Grigsby, T. W. Hollomon, T. V. Ellzey, A. M. Mayo, J. R. Abels, J. W. Trishman.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, announcements were made, and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. F. N. Parker.

The service at the evening hour was under the auspices of the Board of Missions. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. N. Brown, Paul M. Brown, C. V. Breithaupt and M. Hebert. The missionary problems of Louisiana were given most careful consideration. Rev. R. E. Martin, of the French Mission, gave a most striking and touching picture of his work, and the congregation was aroused to a high pitch of enthusiasm. An offering seemed to be the best way to express this enthusiasm, and over $800 was pledged for the support of the work among the

Mr. Michelli, an Italian colporteur for the American Bible Society, made an interesting talk concerning his work, after which Rev. N. E. Joyner gave a series of beautiful stereopticon views illustrating the work of St. Mark's Hall.

THIRD DAY.

The devotional exercises of the third day of the Conference were conducted by Rev. R. S. Isbell, who read the twelfth chapter of Romans, announced the hymn "Blessed Assurance," and after the singing led in prayer.

The Minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

Dr. R. A. Meek, the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, was introduced to the Conference.

Dr. S. S. Keener moved that the action yesterday by which Rev. S. W. B. Colvin was located, be reconsidered. The motion was carried, and on motion his name was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the supernumerary relation.

On motion of N. E. Joyner, the report of the Board of Education was made the order of the day for 10 o'clock Saturday.

Rev. R. H. Wynn submitted a report from the Board of Directors of the Seashore Divinity School. This report indicated that a splendid work had been done by this institution. The paper was referred to the Board of Education.

A report from the Trustees of the Conference Depository in New Orleans was read. It was stated that M. B. De Pass had been elected a trustee in place of Dr. J. W. Adams, deceased. The report was adopted.

The question, "Who are admitted on trial?" was called by the Bishop, and the following having passed all necessary examinations, were admitted:

R. M. Brown, from the Alexandria District; J. H. Hoffpauir, from the Lafayette District; Geo. Fox, from the Monroe District; W. B. Perritt, from the New Orleans District; T. J. Embree and Ollie Lea Tucker, from the Ruston District, and Wm. F. Roberts, R. V. Fulton and S. J. McLean, from the Shreveport District.

Question 22 was resumed and continued until the name of every clerical member of the Conference had been called and his character passed.

Rev. H. N. Harrison, who is connected with Mansfield Female College, read a report of the condition of that institution, which, on motion, was referred to the Board of Education.

On motion of A. W. Turner the name of W. L. Weber was referred to the Committee on Memorials.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, as superintendent, gave an account of the work of St. Mark's Hall in New Orleans.

Dr. F. S. Parker, General Secretary of the Epworth League, and editor of the Epworth Era, spoke briefly of his work and the condition of the League throughout the Church.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, gave a report of the work of that institution, which was most encouraging.

Question 48 was called, "Where shall the next session of the Conference be held?" Parker Memorial Church, of New Orleans; New Iberia, Baton Rouge, Natchitoches and Monroe were placed in nomination. The vote resulted in the selection of Parker Memorial, New Orleans.

The editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate addressed the Conference in regard to his work and the interests of the paper.

Concerning Missions.

THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE AND THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

By Rev. C. F. Reid, D.D.

Now that the season for holding the Annual Conferences is practically over, it is time for our laymen to begin planning in earnest for the District Conferences.

Without doubt, the District Conference presents the best opportunity for organizing our educational campaign and for imparting the enthusiasm and technical information necessary to make the Every-member Canvass a success. It is pre-eminently the Laymen's Conference, having a much larger proportionate lay representation than the General or Annual Conference. By making it the rallying point of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, we shall be able to invest it with such dignity and importance as to make it one of the most potent gatherings of the Church.

In order that we may turn all the possibilities of the District Conference into splendid realities, let me suggest that the first step is to secure the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the presiding elder. Without his active assistance, difficulties will arise at every turn and satisfying success will be well-nigh impossible. He is our properly appointed officer, selected by reason of devotion and qualities of leadership for his high office. By a hearty recognition of his authority and assuring him by pledge and practice that one of our prime objectives is to assist him to raise his district to the highest degree of efficiency, we shall present a claim to his consideration that no wise presiding elder will ignore.

In planning for the District Conferences, I would suggest that the Conference and District leaders first interest themselves in trying to secure such an arrangement of the Conferences as to time and place that they can be visited in rapid succession with the least cost of time and traveling expenses. Would it not be possible to hold two of the District Conferences in any given Conference in one week, having the laymen's day of one, say on Tuesday, and of the other on Friday; and each succeeding week two more, until all are held? In this way, the best speakers available, and perhaps the general secretary or one of the secretaries from the General Board, could make a campaign of the entire Conference, and the enthusiasm and experience of best methods could be passed on. Also, literature, charts and other accessories to a successful campaign could be more easily transported.

Second—Try by all means to have a whole day set aside for the Laymen's Movement, even though the session of the Conference has to be prolonged for that purpose. If the Movement means anything, it means a great deal, and time is required to make its presentation effective. In consultation with the presiding elder, let a well thought-out program be prepared. Suggestions for this program and even copies of set-up programs will be furnished gladly by the general office at the Publishing House.

A chart showing the statistics of each district, according to the form in "Suggestions for Lay Leaders," should be prepared. Other charts and posters can be ordered from the general office. There is one set of three charts fully setting forth the plan of the Movement that is especially valuable and can be had for one dollar per set. Suitable hooks for sale and samples of leaflets for free distribution can also be had by applying to the general office.

Third—Every effort should be made to secure the attendance of all the church leaders of the district. As a rule, this can be done by having the desirability of their being elected delegates mentioned at the Quarterly Conference, either by the presiding elder or preacher in charge. The Conference leader, in consultation with the presiding elders and district leaders, will think of other ways to make our work at the District Conferences a great success.

The phenomenal results that have been achieved in parts of the Church, where our methods have been faithfully and thoroughly applied, show what can be done in almost every part, and encourage us to hope that at no distant day we shall, as a Church, be doing something really worthy for Christless men in our home land and those destitute of the Gospel in lands across the sea.

MRS. R. S. GALE.

There passed from earth to heaven one of God's elect when Mrs. R. S. Gale, wife of Rev. R. S. Gale, pastor of our church at McHenry, and sister of Rev. J. F. Leggett of the Missionary Conference, ascended to meet her Lord.

Converted early in life, she joined the Methodist Church and lived a Christian. In early womanhood she married Rev. R. S. Gale, and no preacher ever had a truer or more faithful wife.

As a member of the Church she was converted to the Master's work, carrying this into the pastorate with her husband. No wonder she led many to Christ wherever Brother Gale was sent! She became a power in soul-winning, but her greatest work was in the home. It was there her power for good shone most resplendently. So patient, kind and loving, and yet so firm in faith to God. Her thoughts were for others, for the work of the Lord. She lived for her husband and children. For several years she had been a sufferer, waiting for the summons home. She expressed herself as ready and waiting, but to those of us who knew her such words were not necessary. She has gone, but her works abide. Bidding a tender farewell to husband and children, she quietly fell on sleep with that calmness that marks the setting sun in its quietude. She has gone, but we know where to find her. J. M. MORSE.

THE EPWORTH ERA.

Dear Editor: Early in the new year the Epworth Era will begin the publication of a series of papers on Personal Evangelism, by Dr. W. D. Weatherford, student secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association for the South. Through his work thousands of young men have been brought to Christ; he therefore speaks with the authority of an expert.

We expect also to have a series of papers on Charity and Help, by an expert in that line, whose experience in Settlement and Epworth League work, and acquaintance with the literature of the subject, promise a most helpful manual for inexperienced disciples who would follow their Master, "who went about doing good."

One of the most helpful features of this year's volume of the Era will be the reports of the Christmas Conference. A number of the experienced and earnest workers in our Young People's Society will spend three of the Christmas holidays in Conference upon the work of the Epworth League. We are confident of great results. The papers and discussions of this Christmas Conference will be published in the Era. FITZGERALD S. PARKER, Editor.

WESLEY ADULT BIBLE CLASSES.

By Rev. Chas. D. Bulla.

The Wesley Adult Bible Class Movement, in which thousands of men and women are meeting for the study of the Word of God, reminds one of the "Bible moths" with radiant faces and high purposes. The "curator" of the Holy Club said: "From the very beginning, from the time that four young men united together, each of them was homo unius libri." But Bible study should be expressed in terms of character and service. To be and then to do is the logical order. Being furnished completely unto every good work, these young Oxonians went out in social service, visiting the jails, helping the poor, and teaching the children.

What agencies these organized classes will be in the Sunday schools and the churches of which they are a part! Each member has a voice in the management of the class. The social and literary life of the members is provided for. What task—evangelistic, missionary, temperance—will prove too difficult for the mighty force locked up in these Wesley classes?

In its plan of class organization the department conforms to the standard of the Adult Class Department of the International Sunday School Association, and its certificate of registration bears the seal of both the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department and of the International Association, thereby giving its membership equal rank with organized classes of all denominations.

These classes, with a membership numbering from 25 to 400, are reporting to the Central Office, thus forming a conuectional tie and comradeship. In the Class Problems Department of the adult student, which is the medium of communication between Wesley classes, all questions pertaining to class work will be answered by persons whose experience entitles them to speak with authority.

All classes in the Southern Methodist Church are earnestly requested to enroll. The status of classes in relation to other unions will not be disturbed, neither will it be necessary to make any change in class names in thus affiliating with their own denomination.

For information concerning the department and the work of organized classes, address Rev. Charles D. Bulla, Superintendent of the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

A SPINELESS CHURCH IS WORTHLESS.

A soprano soloist in the choir of a Baptist church in this State became very indignant when the pastor told her she must choose between the church and cards. She chose cards, but was careful to explain that it was not because of any particular love for cards, but because she denied the right of anyone to dictate her mode of life.

In other words, she stands on her dignity as a free woman, and asserts her right to do as she pleases. And a very large majority of the people would undoubtedly sustain her position in the matter if it was a question that could be put to the test of a general election. The common idea is that a church has no right to require anything of its members but common decency of deportment. A church is in fact looked upon as a sort of public institution to which everybody has a right to belong if he or she chooses, without regard to the beliefs or disbeliefs, or to the acts or omissions of the individual in question, as long as that person does not misbehave.

But this is an utterly false view of the matter. The Church is, in its very nature and essence, a body separate and distinct from the world around it, and any body of men and women claiming to be a church must emphasize the dividing line between the Church and the world if they desire to grow spiritually or to be a power for good in the community to which they belong.

A church that has not a clear enough perception of its true mission to restrict its membership to those who are in full accord with that mission, or which has not backbone enough to exclude any members that kick over the traces, is in great danger of becoming a source of moral weakness and of spiritual darkness to the community instead of the reverse.

There is no denial of individual liberty in the assertion of the rights and obligations of the Church, because no one is under any compulsion to belong to any particular church, or, indeed, to any church.—New York Witness.

A BOY WHO KNEW HOW.

An American boy, nineteen years of age, once found himself in London, where he was under the necessity of earning his bread. He was not like many young men in these days, who were "willing to do anything" because they know how to do nothing; but he had learned how to do something, and knew just where to go to find something to do; so he went straight to a printing office and inquired whether help was needed.

"Where are you from?" inquired the foreman. "America," was the answer. "Ah," said the foreman, "from America. Can a printer come from America?"

The young man stepped up to one of the cases and in a brief space set up this passage from the first chapter of John: "Nathaniel said unto him: 'Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?' Philip saith unto him: 'Come and see.'"

It was done so quickly, so accurately, and administered a delicate reproof so appropriate and powerful, that it at once gave him influence and standing with all the office. He worked diligently at his trade, refused to drink beer or any kind of strong drink, saved his money, returned to America, became a printer-publisher, author, Postmaster General, member of Congress, signer of the Declaration of Independence, ambassador to royal courts, and finally died in Philadelphia at the age of eighty-four. There are more than one hundred and fifty counties, towns and villages named after this same printer boy—Benjamin Franklin.—The Presbyterian of the South.

CHARACTER.

This is the structure which everybody is building, and every act is a stone. How careful, then, should we build that the temple may be accepted and honored by God and man. Let us see that the foundation is durable. Our minds are given us, but our characters, we make.

"Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build."

LITTLE BROTHER'S OFFERING.

"How much have you earned, Fred?" asked Connie. "Sixty-seven cents, and five more if Mrs. Pitt pays for that errand; but I don't believe she will," was the prompt answer. "How much have you got?"

"You know I didn't begin to save till you had enough to rattle, but there's forty-five cents in my box. If I should give my gold dollar—but I can't. I just love it. It makes me feel rich."

Little Brother was watching, and looked curiously at the small heaps of coin.

"You've got all money," he said.

"Sure! What else could we have, Pepperkins?"

"I've saved uzzer thing."

"You don't mean that you've got a thank-offering?" and Fred swung the "baby" into a chair.

"I have—yes, sir. You never told me, but I heard the mish'nary lady say how the brown babies didn't have things to eat; and I'm going to send some—in a ship."

Little Brother nodded gravely at every word, but Fred laughed so he could scarcely speak.

"Things to eat! You little goose!"

"Come to sister!" cried Connie. "Tell sister all about it." And with one puzzled glance at Fred, he clasped her hand and drew her toward the stairs, then up to the play-room, chattering as he went.

"Didn't the mish'nary lady say they was hungry and most dead? Fred eats an' eats, but I saved lots o' things."

Swelling with pride, Little Brother opened his toy-box. There were his cars, his Noah's ark animals, his soldiers and blocks; and there, too, were bits of cake and biscuit, bananas—black with age—apples, candy and nuts. Connie looked at the funny jumble and gave Little Brother a squeeze, wondering why she felt like crying.

"Does mamma know?" she asked.

"No, deed! She'll be s'prised good. She said I was too little to have a box, but I wasn't. Don't you member the mish'nary lady said her girls took rice out of their dinner and saved it for the hungry ones? Well, don't you s'pose I'm good as a girl that was a heathen child?" and his lip curled scornfully.

"But, dearie—it's so far we can't send bread and bananas. We have to send money and the mission-aries buy rice—and things."

Connie spoke very gently, but Little Brother's face grew sober, his voice trembled as he whispered: "I wanted the candy awful bad—an' the uzzer things. Couldn't they go—in a ship?"

"No—really."

Little Brother's fists went to his eyes.

"I've thought of something," cried Connie, joyfully. "You shall give my gold dollar. Then you'll have more than Fred to put in the thank-offering, and that'll pay for all you've saved."

Little Brother laughed through his tears. "Ah, you can have all these nice things."

Connie brought a pasteboard box and they picked out all the dry bread and cake and sad-looking fruit. Then she put the gold dollar into his small hand.

"Little Brother is the only one who made a real sacrifice for a thank offering, I'm afraid," said his mother, when she heard the whole story from the happy little financier; "but I hope he's taught us a lesson, bless him!"

Connie thought of her gold dollar, and a happy feeling was in her heart, for had not she, too, made a sacrifice?—Children's Missionary Friend.

REWARDED.

A short time ago the Courier published an account of the flagging of a passenger train on the Southern division of the Louisville & Nashville near Dawson, Hopkins County, Ky., by a little boy twelve years of age, named John T. Branson, who had discovered a tree that had blown across the track. The night was very dark, and the little fellow, while walking down the track on the way home, came across the tree. He knew a passenger train was due in a short time, and with a rare presence of mind he gathered some wood and built a fire, and when the train approached he boldly stationed himself on the track and flagged the train with a burning brand, thus saving the train and probably many lives. The railway company have been very grateful to the little fellow, and they determined to reward him for the services rendered. On yesterday he was brought to this city, and given a handsome suit of clothes and quite a sum of money. The little fellow was very proud of his present, and was anxious to return home to his parents with the money. He said he would give the whole amount to his father, who it has been ascertained, is not blessed with an abundance of this world's goods. The little fellow was given to understand that he was a privileged personage, and could travel over the road at his will. The action of the company is commendable and will be most heartily approved by the citizens.—Evansville Courier, July 14.

NO APOLOGIES.

Apologies for poor dinners are generally out of place; but when a lady has a forgetful husband, who, without warning, brings home a dozen guests, to sit down to a plain family dinner prepared for three or four, it is not in human nature to keep absolute silence. What to say, and how to say it form the problem. Mrs. Tucker, wife of Judge Tucker, of Williamsburg, solved this problem years ago. She was the daughter or niece of Sir Peyton Skipworth, and celebrated for her beauty, wit, ease, and grace of manner. Her temper and tact were put to the proof one court day, when the Judge brought the accustomed half-score of lawyers, for whom not the slightest preparation had been made, the Judge having quite forgotten to remind his wife that it was court day, and she herself, strange to tell, had overlooked the fact.

"The dinner was served with elegance, and Mrs. Tucker made herself very charming. Upon rising to leave the guests she said:

"Gentlemen, you have dined to-day with Judge Tucker; promise me that you will all dine to-morrow with me."

This was all of her apology, whereupon the gentlemen all said that such a wife was beyond price. The Judge then explained the situation, and the next day there was a noble banquet.

Moral: Never worry a guest with your apologies.—Lippincott's Magazine.

A ROAD OF TOMBS.

Everybody has read about the Appian Way. It was the great line of communication between Rome and Southern Italy. Before you reach the old road you see the colossal ruins of the baths of Caracalla, which occupy the space of nearly a mile, and accommodated 1,600 bathers at a time; but this is surpassed by the size of the Diocletian, which accommodated 3,200 bathers at a time. The baths were the favorite resorts of the poets and philosophers, and were adorned with porticoes and libraries for the learned; they were also decorated with the finest objects of art in the midst of fountains and shaded walks. Along the Appian Way were built the tombs containing the urns with the ashes of hundreds and thousands of Romans who lived and died thousands of years ago. These tombs are temples above the ground, built of solid stone walls inside of which were placed the urns, while outside were carved the beautiful decorations and inscriptions, oftentimes including exquisite statuary to designate the dead. Many of their busts were found centuries after inside, and as you now ride along this still solid road you see the remains of costly sepulchers with the fragments of their marble memorials and highly-wrought statues. You would think that this road of the tombs would be rather a mournful affair; but the Romans had strange notions of death. Their funerals were jolly feasts, and they liked to have their villas and their merry meetings near the houses of their departed relatives and ancestors. For miles the relics of the graves extend along the Appian Way. One of the most curious of these sepulchers is the tomb of Caecilia Metella, erected sixty-seven years before Christ, to the memory of Caecilia, the daughter of Quintus Metellus, the conqueror of Crete, and wife of Crassus. It is a circular tower of massive construction and enormous strength, and has seen many changes. It was a fortress, or feudal stronghold in the Middle Ages, and sustained great injury, when Rome was destroyed. Today it stands in solid and solitary grandeur, its grimly defying the ravages of another thousand years.—Smith's Handbook.

THE SYMPATHY THAT BINDS.

A Christian lady was pleading with a poor, sinful girl, who had gone far away from her mother's God, to come to Jesus for pardon and peace. Suddenly the girl turned upon her.

"And have you been to him?" she asked.

"Yes; indeed, I have," was the reply.

"And has he given you the gift?"

"He has. O, thank God, he has. He is my Savior and Friend."

"Then put your arms about me, and try to take me with you to him," murmured the girl. "It would be easier to go with one who has been before."

It was the secret of success. Many will resent an attempt to draw them out of evil courses who will be won by that touch of nature which makes the whole world kin. Let it be rather, "Come, thou, with us, and we will do thee good." Another was rescued as she exclaimed, "I don't care what becomes of me," by a gentle touch on the arm and the loving words of a stranger, who overheard and understood, "But I do."

It will be well to remember that Christ himself was "touched with a feeling of our infirmities"—the word used in the original meaning sympathy.—Christian Work.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

The report of the Sunday School Board was read and adopted. This report provides for putting a man in the field during the year to promote the interests of the Sunday school work.

N. E. Joyner read report No. 3 of the Committee on Nominations. On motion this report was recommended with instructions to put no man on more than one quadrennial Board.

Dr. S. H. Werlein introduced a resolution asking the appointment of a committee of three to take steps to secure the meeting of the next General Conference for New Orleans. This resolution was adopted.

After announcements and the doxology the benediction was pronounced by Dr. R. A. Meek.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, Rev. H. W. Bowman, who for four years was pastor of the Homer Church, preached an inspiring sermon to a large congregation.

At the evening hour the anniversary of the Epworth League Board was held, at which the principal address was delivered by the General Secretary, Dr. F. S. Parker.

FOURTH DAY.

The devotional exercises of the fourth day of the Conference were conducted by Dr. J. T. Sawyer, who announced the hymn "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," led in prayer, and read I Cor. 13. The Conference then sang "O Happy Day that Fixed My Choice."

The Minutes of the preceding day's session were read and approved.

Rev. J. T. Smith, P. E., of the Jacksonville District, of the Texas Conference, was introduced to the Conference.

Rev. A. S. J. Neill submitted the report of the Committee on Conference Relations. T. M. Buley and Dr. J. A. Parker were recommended for the supernumerary relations, and S. W. B. Colvin for the supernumerary, in addition to those who were already in those relations. The report was adopted.

Rev. J. J. Morgan, agency secretary of the American Bible Society, was introduced to the Conference.

Rev. R. H. Wynn submitted the report of the Board of Education. It was a comprehensive statement as to the educational situation in the Louisiana Conference. The report was laid over for further consideration.

Rev. J. G. Sloane submitted the report of the Auditing Board, which was adopted.

Rev. N. E. Joyner submitted a report from the Nominating Committee, making the following nominations:

Board of Church Extension—Clerical: J. D. Harper, F. N. Parker, H. W. May, J. B. Williams, J. E. Denson, P. H. Fontaine, J. I. Hoffpauir. Lay: Noel Norwood, W. A. McKinnon, P. K. Abel, C. N. Noble, C. O. Chalmers, R. R. Reid, J. A. Foster.

Epworth League Board—Clerical: C. D. Atkinson, F. S. Parker, W. L. Doss, Jr., J. W. Booth, A. F. Vaughan, L. A. Humphries, W. H. Benton. Lay: W. F. Henderson, Jr., Jno. A. Stockwell, H. P. Beall, Dr. L. D. McGehee, J. Q. Stanley, E. W. Gill, E. B. Ward.

Orphanage Board—Clerical: H. R. Singleton, C. C. Weir, John Sholars, J. M. Alford, K. W. Dodson, W. F. Henderson, R. W. Tucker. Lay: J. H. Mays, S. D. Pearce, Crow Girard, S. C. Fullilove, Andrew Joyner, Dr. Luther Sexton.

Board of Education—Clerical: P. M. Brown, M. C. Holt, R. W. Vaughan, J. M. Brown, F. R. Hill, or President of Centenary College; R. H. Harper, H. T. Carley. Lay: W. W. Carre, J. G. Palmer, B. F. Dudley, R. E. Bobbitt, H. T. Liverman, T. W. Holloman, President Mansfield Female College.

Joint Board of Finance—Clerical: S. S. Keener, B. H. Sheppard, F. M. Freeman, R. Randle, J. E. Foster, L. C. Wilson, L. N. Hoffpauir. Lay: J. A. Woodville, W. S. Holmes, R. P. Howell, R. R. Redditt, J. T. Otts, S. M. Collins, S. B. McCutcheon.

Committees—Admission on Trial: H. W. May, W. H. Coleman, R. H. Harper. Admission: A. S. J. Neill, V. D. Skipper, B. T. Crews, S. S. Bogan, J. O. Bennett, H. O. White, H. N. Harrison.

American Bible Society Board—S. H. Werlein, H.

W. Bowman, I. T. Reames, R. O. Weir, Martin Hebert, W. E. Akin, J. P. Haney.

First Year—J. M. Henry, T. J. Wardick, L. C. Wilson.

Second Year—C. C. Miller, Wm. Schuhle, W. W. Holmes.

Third Year—R. H. Wynn, E. K. Means, A. S. Lutz.

Fourth Year—M. C. Holt, H. T. Carley, P. M. Brown.

On motion the report was adopted.

P. H. Fontaine submitted the report of the Committee on District Conference Records, and it was adopted.

The time for the order of the day having arrived, the report of the Board of Church Extension was called; on motion, it was postponed.

Dr. S. S. Keener read the report of the Joint Board of Finance, and made distribution of the funds appropriated to Conference claimants. The report was adopted.

On motion of Dr. S. S. Keener, the first Sunday in May was appointed a day for bringing the Supernuminate Endowment Fund to the attention of the people, and it was recommended that an amount equal to one per cent. of the preacher's salary be raised from each pastoral charge.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer requested to be given the supernumerary relation. On motion his name was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations.

The question, "Who are admitted as traveling preachers from other churches?" was called. J. B. Blackburn was received in orders from the Methodist Protestant Church.

At 10:30 o'clock the following came before the Conference for admission into full connection: J. A. McCormick, R. E. Martin, R. H. Bamberg, J. W. Harper, R. S. Walton, L. E. Crooks, T. V. Peters, G. A. Morgan, F. R. Power, J. G. Snelling, H. T. Young, M. H. Honeycutt.

The Bishop's address to the class was most impressive. He laid special emphasis upon the necessity for spirituality and the exercise of the pastoral function of the ministry.

On motion, the class, having answered satisfactorily the disciplinary questions, was admitted.

On motion of Dr. F. N. Parker, Dr. C. W. Carter was requested to preach a semi-centennial sermon at the next session of the Annual Conference.

The report of the Board of Education was taken up for further consideration.

Dr. Felix R. Hill, President of Centenary College, addressed the Conference in reference to the work of that institution.

Briscoe Carter spoke on the subject of education in connection with the report.

On motion the report was adopted.

P. O. Lowrey read the report of the Board of Church Extension. Rev. J. D. Harper, president of the Board, made a strong presentation of the work of the Board, and pleaded for a larger interest. After having been amended with reference to the establishment of a Conference loan fund, which was deemed unwise at this time, the report was adopted.

On motion an afternoon session of the Conference was called to meet at 2:30, and Bishop Murrah appointed C. W. Carter to preside.

Rev. Mr. Cox, pastor of the Baptist Church, was introduced to the Conference.

The Bishop announced the following as received by transfer: H. B. Perritt, from the Florida Conference; A. H. Parker, from the Texas Conference; G. E. Cameron, from the North Texas Conference; F. A. Downs, from the Pacific Conference.

The Conference adjourned with the doxology and benediction.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session opened with Dr. C. W. Carter in the chair. "Come Thou Fount of Every Blessing" was sung, and Rev. Robt. Randle led in prayer. The Minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

The report of the Committee on Sabbath Observance was read by J. F. Foster and adopted.

Rev. W. T. Woodward asked for and was granted a location.

The report of the Committee on Temperance was read by J. M. Alford, and adopted.

The report of the Orphanage Board was submitted by L. H. Hoffpauir. R. W. Vaughan was recommended by the Board as field agent, and T. D. Lipscomb as resident manager. The report was adopted.

The report of the Board of Missions was read by J. M. Henry and adopted.

N. E. Joyner read a resolution of appreciation of the services of W. B. Thomson, who for twenty years had been an efficient member of the Board of Missions, and its Treasurer, but who retired at his own urgent request. The resolution was adopted by a rising vote.

A supplementary report of the Board of Church Extension was read by P. O. Lowrey, and adopted.

P. O. Lowrey submitted the report of the Epworth League Board, which was adopted.

A motion was made by H. N. Brown to reconsider the action by which J. E. Craig was discontinued. This motion was carried, and J. E. Craig remains in the class of the second year.

The report of the Bible Board was read by W. W. Holmes. Rev. J. J. Morgan, Agency Secretary of the American Bible Society addressed the Conference, in connection with the report, as did also M. Hebert. The report was adopted.

Rev. J. G. Snelling read a resolution from the Ministers' Association, of Shreveport, protesting against the Sunday opening of the State Fair at Shreveport. This resolution was adopted.

Question 47 was called: "Who is elected Conference Leader for the Laymen's Movement?" and the answer was, R. T. McClendon.

The report of the Committee on Church Publications was read by A. I. Townsley, and adopted as read.

C. A. Battle read a report from the Ministerial Aid Association, which was received for information.

H. N. Brown read report No. 2 of the Sunday School Board. P. O. Lowrey was recommended for appointment as Sunday School Missionary, to give his whole time to the work. The report was adopted.

J. M. Henry nominated R. W. Vaughan as Editor of the Conference Minutes. He was elected.

N. E. Joyner read a resolution instructing the Auditing Board to read to the Conference on the morning of the second day the names of those preachers who had not given in their statistical reports. The resolution was adopted.

The organization of the various Conference Boards was announced.

A motion was made and carried, that when Conference adjourns, it adjourn to meet Sunday evening after services to hear the appointments.

Conference adjourned with the doxology and benediction.

SUNDAY.

Bishop W. B. Murrah preached a great sermon Sunday morning at 11 o'clock from the text, Ps. 97, after which the following were ordained deacons: John Garrison Snelling, Henry Thomas Young, Francis Roland Power, Gustavus Adam Morgan, Timothy Victor Hugo Peters, Robert Emile Martin, Robert Stanton Walton, John Andrew McCormack, William Franklin Roberts, Robert Hosea Bamberg.

L. E. Crooks took the vows of a deacon without the reposition of hands.

In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, after an appropriate sermon by Dr. S. S. Keener, the Bishop ordained the following as elders: Walter Lee Hunter, William Lafayette Doss, Jr., John Sholars, J. B. Blackburn assumed the vows without the reposition of hands.

At the evening service Dr. F. N. Parker preached a magnificent sermon which was an exposition of I Cor. 13. After the sermon the Bishop called the Conference to order. The Committee on Memoirs reported on the death of Dr. W. L. Weber, which had occurred during the year, and on several members of preachers' families who had died. Suitable resolutions of thanks were passed by a rising vote.

The minutes of the evening session were read and approved, and after a few appropriate remarks by the Bishop, and prayer by Dr. C. W. Carter, Bishop Murrah announced the appointments, after which the doxology was sung, and the benediction pronounced, and the sixty-fifth session of the Louisiana Annual Conference stood adjourned, sine die.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE NOTES.

The recent session of this historic body was most pleasant in every respect. The good people of Homer dispensed a generous hospitality, and left nothing undone to make the stay of their guests thoroughly comfortable and to facilitate their work. Rev. W. H. Coleman was an ideal host, thoughtful, attentive, and unwearingly kind, as were also his assistants on the entertainment committee. The church in which the Conference was held, though not large, is a beautiful brick structure, modern in design, and handsomely furnished. It is quite a credit to the town, which also contains many attractive and commodious residences. The cotton fields of this section have been infested with the boll weevil for several years, but evidences of returning prosperity are not wanting. There is a great future for Northwest Louisiana.

Bishop Murrah kept the Conference well in hand at all times, and proved himself a capable and resourceful presiding officer. Without apparent purpose to hurry matters, he dispatched business with great promptitude and never at any stage of the proceedings was there needless delay. He was dignified, courteous and affable, and soon gained the confidence and esteem of all the brethren. We did not hear his name mentioned except in terms of high praise. His occasional remarks to the body, his charge to the class admitted into full connection and his pulpit work, were all of a very high order. His list of appointments gave general satisfaction, and his administration throughout the session left nothing to be desired. He is every inch a Bishop, and already the episcopal harness fits him as if he were a veteran in his high office. He will always be accorded a hearty welcome by the Methodists of Louisiana.

Dr. F. N. Parker, after four years of conspicuous success on the New Orleans District, was assigned to the church at Alexandria, one of the strongest and most highly cultured congregations in the State. Fortunate, indeed, is this deserving flock. Dr. Parker is one of the foremost men, not only of the Louisiana Conference, but of the entire connection. He is studious, scholarly, and deeply spiritual—a great preacher, a graceful writer, and a courtly Christian gentleman. No place in Southern Methodism is too large for him.

One of the strongest men on the floor of the Conference is Dr. S. S. Keener, of the Monroe District. Striking in face and figure, he knows what he wants to say and how to express himself with precision and vigor. He has many of the elements of leadership and has long been a recognized force among the followers of Wesley in the Pelican State. He was returned to the same field of labor, where he is magnifying his office and doing a great work.

While at Homer the editor was entertained in the charming home of Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Fortson, who are leading members of the Baptist church of that community. Our associate guest was Dr. J. H. Early of Nashville, Tenn. Our gracious host and hostess left nothing undone to make our stay beneath their comfortable roof a genuine delight. Brother Fortson, just returned from a camp hug on the Tensas river, bringing with him a bountiful supply of venison and squirrels; and we fear that Dr. Early and the editor left behind the impression that they are disciples of Epicurus as well as the Man of Galilee. We shall not soon forget their abounding kindness. We are also indebted to Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Ferguson, prominent members of our church in Homer, for the privilege of dining in their beautiful home in the company of Bishop Murrah and a number of other interesting guests.

Rev. G. E. Cameron, who was appointed to First Church, Shreveport, is a transfer from the North Texas Conference. In that State and also in Arkansas, he has made a fine reputation as a minister, and comes to Louisiana highly commended by the brethren among whom he has lived and labored. His last charge in the Lone Star State was Paris, where he is reported to have given an excellent account of himself. Brother Cameron will have a great field at Shreveport, and we wish him large success in that growing city, which is the seat of Centenary College, and in which Methodism is virile and aggressive. "The lines have fallen to him in pleasant places."

Rev. H. R. Singleton, who has wrought at Alexandria for the past quadrennium with such signal success, was placed in charge of the Shreveport District, a position of great responsibility and large opportunity. It is the prevalent opinion that for this place the Bishop and his cabinet could not have made a better selection. Brother Singleton is a man of untiring energy, capable, resourceful, and practical. He plans wisely, and executes with dispatch and vigor. He is both an acceptable preacher, and a leader who accomplishes substantial results. He is certain to make a popular and efficient presiding elder.

After a full term in the presiding eldership, Rev. T. J. Warlick will re-enter the pastorate. His new charge is Baton Rouge, the capital of the State. He will have one of the choicest congregations in the Conference. We congratulate both Brother Warlick and the flock of which he has been made the overseer.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, having served with notable efficiency at Homer for three years, was sent to Ruston, which is an educational center, and one of the most desirable pastorate in Louisiana. Brother Coleman is a growing young man, who is wide awake to all of the interests of the Church, and deservedly popular. The people of Homer will give him up with great reluctance. He has aided in conducting the Epworth League Department of the Advocate during the past year, exhibiting unusual ability as a writer. He is also one of the foremost Sunday school workers in the State.

The personnel of the Louisiana Conference is probably not surpassed by that of any in the connection. More than once a statement to this effect was made by the lamented Bishop Ward. The editor has no hesitancy in saying that nowhere has he seen a finer body of men. They are intelligent, consecrated, and up-to-date in every respect. There are many fine and ready speakers among them. They have a developing field in which there are many open doors, and they are enterprising and thoroughly alive to the situation. Their alertness and accurate information concerning the needs of the work in their own territory profoundly impressed us. Their example in this respect is well worthy of imitation.

Connectional officers were not much in evidence. Dr. J. M. Moore, one of the general missionary secretaries, was present and made an address which was statesmanlike and comprehensive in its grasp. The echoes of it were in the air on every side when we arrived, much to our regret, after his departure. Dr. Bulla represented the Adult Bible Class work, making a pleasant impression. Dr. J. H. Early was on hand to take care of the Sundry Endowment Fund. One of the best addresses made at the Conference was that delivered in the interest of the League work by Dr. F. S. Parker, the accomplished general secretary of that organization and editor of the Epworth Era. He is a platform speaker of great brilliancy and power. He was at home among his brethren of the Louisiana Conference, who hold him in the highest honor and esteem.

It is the opinion of many that the man and the opportunity have met in the assignment of Rev. A. G. Shankle to the Rayne Memorial Church of New Orleans. Brother Shankle was educated at Emory College, Georgia, and is a minister of scholarly attainments, who has made good in every place where he has labored. For the past four years he has been stationed at Ruston, the Athens of the State, and he now leaves that charge beloved by all of the people. The Board of Stewards of the Methodist Church of that city a few days since expressed themselves as follows concerning his work among them: "Brother Shankle has shown himself to be a most faithful, sympathetic, earnest pastor, filling that delicate and responsible position in a most agreeable and acceptable manner. He has been an earnest preacher, proclaiming the great truths of Scripture in a clear, convincing style. His conduct while living in our midst has been that of a Christian and a gentleman, setting forth in his daily life the fundamental principles of his profession. His influence in the community has been elevating and helpful, reaching far beyond the limits of his own church circles. His cordial attitude toward those of other faiths has won for him a host of friends among the people of other denominations. It is with feelings of profound regret that we are compelled, under the regulations of our Church, to be deprived of his services and association. We wish for him and his family unbounded success and happiness, and pray that his life and work may be as helpful and inspiring in other pastures as they have been in this. We pray that God and the Church may continue using him in the great work of preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom."

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Part of Report of Trustees to the Mississippi Annual Conference.

"Sparing neither pains nor money—indeed, at an expense of nearly $2,000 more than any previous faculty had cost him—Dr. Cooper has gathered at Whitworth a corps of twenty teachers and officers, excelled by none and equaled by few such institutions in all our Southland. Those who have been on the Board of Trust for some years do not hesitate to pronounce it the best faculty with which we have had acquaintance, and we say this without the least reflection on the capable and competent instructors who have previously served it. With its high curriculum, its excellent laboratory equipment and this fine body of educators composing its faculty, there is positively no reason, save the questionable one of the lack of endowment, that Whitworth should not be ranked in the "A" grade of the colleges of our Church. It is certainly doing the work.

"Its departments are in the hands of experts in the matter of both performance and instruction, and in these your daughters will find opportunities and advantages which they will have to hunt long and travel far to equal. In proof of this, Whitworth's modest art display at our last State Fair in Jackson was awarded twelve prizes, and one of her fair pupils was the successful contestant for the medal in the musical contest at the Crystal Springs Chautauqua the past summer.

"In the student body of two hundred and thirty-two are eighteen daughters of Methodist ministers, all of whom receive their literary education without charge. Forty-five of the girls and young ladies have dining room duties, or other light work, by which to help meet their expenses, and there are no social distinctions drawn in the school by which these are made to feel discredited by their labors to achieve an education. In addition to this Dr. Cooper is personally assisting a number of deserving young ladies who lack the means of meeting their necessary expenses.

"We would direct especial attention to the moral and spiritual conditions and influences of Whitworth College. We believe this is just what the truly consecrated and sane Christian parent would desire. On Sunday mornings they have their own Sunday school, after which the students attend upon divine service at the churches of Brookhaven. In the evening their Young Woman's Christian Association affords them the opportunity of worship, and at the same time gives them practice in prayer, testimony and leadership in religious service. In addition to the regular chapel devotionals of the school, immediately after the evening meal of each day the students hold a "vesper service" of a few minutes, which is very delightful and helpful. There is usually a revival each session especially for the students. The faculty is composed almost entirely of consecrated Christians who delight to lead their pupils to the Lamb of God, and whose daily walk and conversation is a silent and blessed influence in this direction. Happy are the parents whose daughters share these gracious and blessed privileges!

"During the past summer Dr. Cooper spent $2,100 in improvements. Whitworth Home has been thoroughly overhauled and made snug and comfortable, with new windows throughout, some small rooms made large and airy, new paint and calcimine, an additional flight of stairs and a new tin roof. Margaret Hall has also been recovered with heavy tin, every room made fresh and beautiful with new paper, paint or calcimine, and a large boiler, giving ample hot water supply, installed. All dormitory buildings have been thoroughly screened for protection from flies and mosquitoes. And this has all been done at the personal expense of Dr. Cooper."

Mrs. Clinton Smith, president of the W. C. T. U. in Washington, D. C., writes of Mrs. Miller's temperance story:

"I have read the book most thoroughly and carefully. I admire your ability to use such good and clear language to make your meaning plain. I found the book interesting, and, better still, convincing, and will recommend it when ever I can."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Adopted by the ladies of the W. H. M. S. of the M. E. Church, Meridian, Miss., on the death of Sister Virgie Hall, beloved wife of Mr. W. L. Hall.

Whereas, the all-wise Father has moved one of our earnest and faithful members into those beautiful mansions not made with hands;

Be it resolved, That we extend our sympathy to the husband and family, and pray that God may give them strength and comfort. She has been a faithful member in the Church and W. H. M. S. She was much loved by each member of the Society and the community in which she lived. May her beautiful life ever linger in the hearts of all who knew her and loved her. She was laid to rest in her home cemetery at Vicksburg, Miss.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 18, 1910.

OUR OBLIGATION TO OUR AGED MINISTERS.

Superannuates' Fund.

(Philem. viii, 9.)

TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION.

1. Show how the motive of our help to superannuate preachers is to be "for love's sake." (Philem. 9.)
2. How may we as Leaguers make more bright the closing days of these aged servants?
3. Need our service in this regard be limited only to preachers?
4. Let some one explain how each one who contributes to the benevolent collections of the local Church aids this work.
5. One way to make happy the last days of your minister is to make the present days happy ones for him by doing God's will cheerfully.

THE TOPIC.

The short letter to Philemon is a strictly private letter which has been preserved to us. It consists mainly in an appeal made by St. Paul to Philemon, a citizen of Colosse, for his interest in a runaway slave, Onesimus, whom Paul had converted. Incidentally it might be noted in passing that the letter is one of the most charming epistles in all literature. There breathes through it the Christian spirit of brotherhood. It is a tactful appeal for a regenerate thief that could not but touch the heart of Philemon. While the writer nowhere asks that his friend release the slave, "the word 'emancipation' seems to be trembling on his lips" (Light-foot). (Verse 21.)

The words given us in the eighth and ninth verses form the basis of our topic: "Wherefore, though I have all holdness in Christ to enjoin thee that which is befitting, yet for love's sake I rather beseech you, being such a one as Paul the aged, and now a prisoner also of Christ Jesus." (Phil. i, 8-9.) The apostle to the Gentiles is now an aged prisoner, appealing with the love of an old man for his younger brother. The Epistle is written in A. D. 61, and probably these same figures roughly represent the age of the writer. When we remember what he had gone through with during the days of his ministry (II Cor. xi, 23-28), we may well look upon him as a "worn-out preacher." It is fitting that one who had spent his whole strength in the service of God should here represent to us the need of the superannuated preacher.

Ministerial Service Exacting.

Let us look for a moment into the question of ministerial support. God calls certain men to sanctify themselves, set themselves apart wholly for the service of God. As he has not left himself without witness in all ages, men have responded to that divine call. It is a summons to the most serious, difficult work that men know. He must be an interpreter of divine things to busy men and women. He must take time to learn the secrets of God. He must study, travel, preach, organize, raise money, and educate the people. The man who does well any one of these several tasks finds his hands well filled. His heart overflows with the burden of his task. To its faithful accomplishment, he musters all the powers of his will and heart. The Church which he serves demands exacting service; the opportunity so far outweighs his strength to measure up to it that were it not for the help of God his faith would falter. Now, in the presence of this great need, a conscientious man does not feel as though his time and energy should be divided between making his own living and carrying the gospel to men. While there are so many business men whose main capability is to make money, and whose only hope of reaching heaven is in the generous dispensing of the same, surely our ministry should be kept free from serving tables to carry on the higher work of preaching the Word.

Ministerial Support Inadequate.

Over against this outstanding need of concentration in interest there is this shameful fact; the average salary of the ministers in our Church is less than $650. How can a man do his best work and care for his own on such a sum? These facts are brought out that we may see clearly the need of caring for these same men when they come down to "old age and feebleness extreme." On such meager salaries almost nothing can be laid aside for a "rainy day." Brownling says that old age is "the best of life, for which the first was made," but so optimistic a view can hardly be taken by the man who faces an old age of feebleness and dependency such as many of our noblest men must face.

What provision is being made for these honorable servants of the King? The average that was paid them throughout the bounds of Southern Methodism last year was $132. If all of our readers could go to an Annual Conference and look into the aged faces of these soldiers of the cross and see the eagerness with which they gratefully receive their pitiful stipend upon which they must live for another year, it would quicken the pulse of our generosity. Brother J. R. Stewart, Secretary of the Superannuate Endowment Fund, has this to say relative to old age pensions and the duty of the Church:

"More attention is being given to the subject of old age pensions in these times than has ever been given before. Are the people growing more tender toward the aged and more sympathetic with the mute appeals of their dependent condition? Let us hope that such is the case. This being true, it is a good indication, pointing to a larger development of the finer Christian sensibilities. But there is another side to the situation, another mainspring to this activity. When great railroad companies and other large business corporations enter freely into the matter of allowing pensions to their employees, it may be fearlessly asserted that such action is due, in some small measure at least, to business considerations. As they express it themselves: 'It is good business.'"

"If pensioning retired workmen pays in the affairs of the world, it will be equally as wise for the Church to make ample provision for her retired veterans."

"But the Church cannot well afford to reckon with this subject purely on a hard business basis. While to provide a sufficient fund for the comfort of her retired ministers would doubtless secure from the ministry a fuller and more efficient service, the Church must nevertheless go beyond this motive and care for her superannuates from principles of justice and brotherly love. Humanity alone dictates better things for them than they are receiving."

In order better to meet these needs the General Conference of 1902 took a forward step which should be familiar to every Methodist. This Conference ordered the raising of a fund to amount to $5,000,000, which should be held in trust, its dividends going to the better support of the worn-out preachers, their widows and orphans. Noble-hearted laymen started this movement, and already over two hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars has been raised or subscribed. During the past year $5,552 was disbursed among the various Conferences to supplement the provision made for this purpose by the Conference. It is the ardent desire to increase this endowment fund until the interest on the investment shall be large enough to adequately supplement what can be done in the local Conference. That this should be done, no one will deny. We can do it when we awake to our duty. Listen to the words of one of our honored Bishops as to our rightful attitude to this great problem: "To make ample provision for the disabled preacher is evidence of an enlightened and grateful Church, which has assured him that if he give his undivided service he will not be forgotten in his old age, and that his dependent widow and children too will be remembered. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has commanded the respect of all men by her avowed purpose to secure a large fund for superannuates, and has already made a good start."—Rev. P. B. Kern, in Epworth Era.

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2, by Making It at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take one pint of granulated sugar, add ½ pint of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even in whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two, or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white-pine extract, rich in gualacol and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. J. W. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, saline, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and sitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 201 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free of cost an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

IT'S THE LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT.

A cut, bruise, pimple, or slight eruption of the skin, very often develops into a serious case of blood poison. It is a very risky thing to allow a sore of any kind to go unattended, but care must be taken to see that the "cure" is no worse than the "disease." In the year 1820 a discovery was made by Dr. W. F. Gray, of Raleigh, N. C., an able and studious physician, of a preparation that counteracted all diseases of the skin. This preparation was perfected and named after its originator, "Gray's Ointment"—and it is considered to-day by thousands of eminent physicians in this and foreign countries, to be the safest and most effective cure for boils, bruises, burns, cuts, carbuncles, relapsing, poison oak, blood poison, rheumatism, or sores of any nature. "Gray's Ointment" can be had at your druggists for 25c per box, or to prove its merits we will send a sample box free of cost upon request. Address F. W. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

LESSON FOR DEC. 18, 1910.

THE RESURRECTION.

Matthew xxviii, 1-20.

Golden Text—"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. xxviii, 20.)

Victor Hugo said: "Waterloo is the change of front of the universe." But great as were the issues depending upon that battle, they were not so great as the ardent Frenchman states. It is no overstatement, however, to say that the resurrection of Jesus is "the change of front of the universe." All things have been changed since then, and they can never be the same again. We who live in this modern world, with all its manifold Christian agencies and enterprises and triumphs made possible by the risen Lord, cannot easily conceive the ancient world, so dead with doubt and despair. The transformation of the women, weeping at his crucifixion, into the glad messengers, who, having found him risen, ran quickly to tell the disciples, is in miniature the "changed" world. The revolution in the spirit of the apostles, who, from being disappointed and defeated followers of him who was crucified against all their expectations, became the courageous and hopeful propagandists of a world-embracing faith, marks the end of the old and the beginning of the new era in the divine movement on behalf of the renovation of mankind.

We have in the four Gospels as many different accounts of the resurrection, and with our imperfect knowledge it is impossible to weave the several histories into one continuous and harmonious story. But we may be sure that they are all true, and that each account contains important truths for us to learn. The different phases of the same great transaction, like the different facets of the diamonds, give forth beams peculiar to each. In the lesson which we study to-day we have his first appearance to the women who went to the sepulcher at the dawn of the first day of the week, and a subsequent appearance to the eleven disciples in Galilee, when he spoke to them the great commission to disciple all nations. Whether studied in the light of its personal communications and experiences, or in the light of its message to the Christian Church as a whole, the passage we study is full of inspiration and instruction.

1. However powerful the enemies of Christ may be, they are impotent to overcome him and to overthrow his cause. "And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow; and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men." Two days before the powers of the earth which conspired to crucify him seemed all-powerful, but now they were as helpless as the dead. He was not holden of death, neither indeed could he. Far from being incredible, we should rather say the resurrection of Jesus was inevitable. Unless he has risen, the greatest crime ever committed remains to this hour unavenged and unreversed, and the highest holiest has succumbed to the basest corruption. Where, then, is God, and where is the moral order of the universe? No God were better than a God under whose rule such an irretrievable defeat of righteousness were possible. Jesus was bound to rise from the dead, and no power on earth or hell could prevent his rising.

2. Who love most the crucified Savior find soonest the risen Lord. "And the angel answered and said unto the woman, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. These women loved him still, notwithstanding his unlooked-for death, which they could not understand. Their faith was in eclipse, but their devotion was stronger than death. They would honor his lifeless body, although its lifelessness laid upon their souls a body of death. Thus loving him, they obtain the first news of his resurrection. God so orders it always. The loving are not allowed to walk long without light. The souls who lament the absent Lord surely secure his presence most quickly: they who mourn him as lost soonest find him as living.

3. Running in the path of duty to serve others, the followers of Jesus meet him in the way to their own exceeding joy. The angel said to the women: "Go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you." And they departed quickly from the sepulcher with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word. And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying: All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshiped him. They might have disobeyed the direction of the angel, and have lingered about the sepulcher, half-doubting that he had risen, and waiting his appearance to them, before going to bear the news to the disciples; but if they had done so, they would have missed him. Carrying comfort to the disciples they found their own perfect consolation in meeting the Savior himself as they went.

4. The risen Lord is not less near and tender toward his followers by reason of the glory into which he has entered by the resurrection. "Jesus said unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." How loving and reassuring these words were to them! Whatever may have been the unutterable experience through which he had passed while his body was lying in the grave, his heart was unchanged toward them and towards his disciples. His character of love was continuous and persistent through death and resurrection. If anything was different with him, was it not rather an increase of tenderness in his soul, and a higher plane of life which he now called them to share with him? "Go tell my brethren." This was a new name for them. At one time they were "servants," then they were "friends," now they were "brethren." John, as well as Matthew, notes the word when he records the Lord's special command to Mary Magdalene: "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and unto your Father; and to my God and to your God." How could words be framed that would more strongly affirm his continued and perpetual nearness to them in the new and loftier sphere of life into which he had risen, and into which he would carry them with him? If he has come into the highest place, they are to be his brothers there and share with him the blessedness. He is the link between them and all that is noblest and best in the universe. His love binds him to them as perfectly as his rights carry him to God. His Father is their Father, and they are to enter into the fellowship of his Sonship. His joy is their joy; his glory is their glory; his victory is their victory. He claimed nothing for himself which he did not claim for them. And all who love him on the earth now in these distant times are heirs with the early disciples of the same great promises and heavenly inheritance.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." (Eph. 1:3.)

5. The great Lord and the great commission. "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The greatness of the Lord must never be separated from the greatness of the mission of his Church. The scope of his possessions and the extent of the conquests to be made by his Church in his name must be measured by the glory of his Sonship. So showed the Psalmist before his coming: "I will declare the decree: the Lord, said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. li, 7-8.) St. Paul teaches us in his sermon at Antioch in Pisidia (Acts xiii, 16-41) that the Sonship of Jesus as the God-man came to its fulfillment at the resurrection; as the same apostle also affirms in the Epistles to the Romans, where he says of Christ that he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." (Rom. i, 4.) In other passages of the Scriptures Jesus is also called "the first-born from the dead." (Col. i, 18; Rev. i, 5.) Prior to his crucifixion the Son of Man walked in destitution and humiliation; but after his resurrection and through his resurrection he came into the glory of his headship over all things to his Church. Being thus clothed with all power in heaven and in earth, he could rightfully claim his promised inheritance and hopefully send his followers to win for him the uttermost parts of the earth for his possessions. To have given his disciples such a commission, except he had been clothed with such power, would have been to have required of them the impossible. But since he has supreme dominion over all things in heaven and in earth, including the spiritual agencies of the Holy Ghost for the purposes of human redemption, his servants may go forth with confidence to their work. The commission is vast in its extent and particular in its details; they are to teach "all nations," and they are to teach all men to "observe all things whatsoever" that he has commanded. But great and minute as is the work, it can be done by his aid; for he has "all power in heaven and in earth." Mark the "alls." "All" the work of the Church can be done through him who has "all power," but without him nothing can be done. The closing promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," or, more literally, "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the age," was all-sufficient for his disciples. It should be especially noted that he does not say, "I will be with you," but, "I am with you." This was the fulfillment of his prophetic name, Immanuel, "which, being interpreted, is, God with us." (Matt. i, 23.)—From the Sunday School Magazine.

Mrs. HARRIETTE MORRIS was born July 23, 1853 in Rapides Parish, La., and died at her home in Glenmora, La., Monday morning, Nov. 21. She was happily married to Robt. U. Morris on Nov. 19, 1874, in whose faithful companionship she walked and lived and toiled, and God blessed the union with eight children—three sons and five daughters—all of whom survive her except one daughter, who preceded her mother to her reward. In early life she gave her heart to God and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in whose communion she lived a loyal member. Sister Morris loved her Church. Her home was the preacher's home. She was a devoted wife, a faithful, loving mother, true friend. She knew her Lord and loved him. When the Lord called her home she was ready. May the tender Shepherd take special care of the husband so bereaved and lonely, and may the Holy Spirit do his perfect work in the hearts of each and all of the children and make them a united family around the great white throne. Her pastor,

G. A. MORGAN.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died at her home, in Lincoln Co. Miss., Saturday morning, August 27, 1910, Mrs. Solronia Strickland, aged 77 years, beloved wife of Mr. Leander Alford. These few words tell of the peaceful ending of a life very beautiful and useful and dearly beloved. The hearts of many loving relatives have been filled with sorrow by her death, drawn out in tender and prayerful sympathy toward the bereaved husband and children. She was modest and retiring in her disposition, yet a woman of strong convictions and firm determination to do what she considered the right, and her love was full to those whom she had given her affections. She was the mother of four sons and two daughters. Her husband was a successful farmer, and their country home was a bower of beauty, and their united efforts to educate their children was crowned with success. Their daughters married worthy men, have homes in New Orleans, and serve their mother's God. The sons—one educated in Kavanaugh College, where so many young men and women went out into the world armed with the strength of a religious education to do battle for God—have made "good names," which is rather to be chosen than great riches, and made their mother's heart glad. She was our neighbor over forty years. We were married about the same time and came to live among strangers. The tide that ebbed and flowed over our souls was strangely varied. We had our joys and our sorrows. A very tender and silent friendship subsisted between us, in which, besides similarity of mind and intellectual pursuits, there was a deep, unspoken element of sympathy, and a friendship born of God: the ravel of threads of persecution woven in each of our lives knit our souls to each other, though no word was spoken. Each understood the other's sorrow. For the last ten years her life was a suffering one. Add to this, her husband was crippled by sickness and age, and each suffered the will of God. "Sorrow is the great birth-agon of immortal powers, the searcher and revealer of hearts, the great test of truth, revealing forces in ourselves we never dreamed of." "Sorrow is God-like, grand and great, wise and far-seeing." Sorrow is divine, reigning on the throne of the universe—and the crown of all crowns—has been one of thorns. "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." Her bereaved friend and sister.

MRS. M. L. J. HOOVER.
313 10th Ave., North, Seattle, Wash.

TO THE MEMORY OF MRS. MILLIE ROARK.

"As long as skies are blue and fields are green,
Evening must usher night; night urge the morrow;
Month follow month with woe,
And year wake year to sorrow."

How true and, yet, how little we realize the full significance of these words, till the hand of sorrow suddenly reaches out and holds us in its strong grasp! So happy and contented were we all, we had almost forgotten that death could unexpectedly invade our little realm; but it is even so, for one whom we loved is taken from us. Mrs. MITTIE ROARK, nee Mittie Murphy, was born at Oakland, La., March 10, 1877, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Murphy. She was married to Mr. J. E. Roark, of Marion, La., September 23, 1894. Shortly after her marriage she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and continued to be a faithful worker and a devoted Christian until the time of her death, which occurred June 30, 1910. It is not difficult to chronicle dates, but who can find words to pay a fitting tribute to the pure, sweet life she lived among us every day? Who can portray the beauty and nobility of her character? She was a faithful friend, a true wife, a devoted mother, an earnest Christian. Wherein could a life be more fully or richly spent? She bore her last illness with the same courage and fortitude that has made her life so useful. She suffered greatly, being ill for several weeks before her death, and was finally carried to Ruston, where she underwent an operation. Her faithful husband and other loved ones have the consolation of knowing that all which could be done through human instrumentality was done for her recovery, but the Divine plan was otherwise, and two weeks to the day that she was carried away, she was brought back and laid to rest in the family graveyard—a quiet spot on a hillside about two miles from Marion. The largest crowd that has been seen here in many days gathered at the depot and sorrowfully witnessed the sad home-coming; thence following the remains to the last earthly resting place. As we looked upon the dear face and the hands that for so many years had played the sacred songs we all loved to sing, we wondered within ourselves: "Is it true that she is now lying so?" Then we heard her pastor saying: "This is not Mittie; this is only the earthly tabernacle wherein her gentle soul dwelt for a season. She is gone now to inhabit that building eternal in the heavens." She leaves a husband and three little daughters, four brothers, five sisters, and many other relatives and friends who grieve for her, but none miss her like the sorrowing husband and her dear children.

"Who weep a loss forever new,
A void where heart on heart reposed,
And where warm hands have pressed —and closed,
Silence till we be silent, too."

"We know that theirs is a sorrow too deep for words. But we would say to them:

"Peace, peace! She is not dead. She doth not sleep. She hath awakened from the dream of life!"

Dust to dust; but that pure spirit shall flow

Back to the fountain whence it came;

A portion of the Eternal which must glow,

Through time and change—unquenchably the same.

PERSONAL.

In a recent issue of his paper, Dr. Rankin, of the Texas Christian Advocate, bears the following testimony to the fine work which is being done by Rev. W. J. Johnson, who was reared in Holmes County, Miss., in the city of Galveston: "Central Church is in good condition. Rev. W. J. Johnson has labored successfully there for three years, and he is left to finish out his quadrennium. He has the ear of Galveston, and preaches to large congregations. His people are devoted to him, and they were solicitous to have him returned."

Bishop Mouzon will open our magnificent First Church at Houston, Texas, next Sunday. This structure cost $250,000, and is perhaps the best equipped religious edifice in the connection. The pastor is Dr. W. F. Packard, who is a man of parts and has wrought a monumental work in his present expanding field. Bishop Mouzon will preach at Travis Park, in San Antonio on the first Sunday in January, the day designated by the College of Bishops for the inauguration of a general revival campaign throughout the Church.

Writing from Kingston, Okla., under date of December 7th, Rev. W. W. Williams says: "This is my fourth year in the Oklahoma Conference. I have been returned to Kingston and Woodville for another year. I am well situated and doing well; I like this new country. There is a fine opening to do good, which should be an inspiration to any preacher. After reading the appointments of the North Mississippi Conference, I had a sort of homesick feeling." Brother Williams' many friends in North Mississippi will be glad to have even this brief message from him.

The new presiding elder of the New Orleans District is Dr. J. M. Henry. This appointment was very generally anticipated, so widespread was the feeling that Dr. Henry is pre-eminently qualified for the place. He is well known in the Louisiana metropolis, having served here as pastor for several years. He is possessed of a wide intellectual reach, of uncommon administrative ability, and is a forceful and impressive preacher. That the Methodism of the Crescent City will have in the person of Dr. Henry a strong and judicious leader, is the opinion of all who know him.

At the recent session of the North Texas Conference, Rev. C. A. Spragins, who is well and most favorably known in North Mississippi, was changed from Denison Station to the McKinney District. Commenting on this appointment, the Texas Advocate of December 1st, remarks as follows: "This is his first experience in this line of service. He has heretofore done faithful work in the pastorate, but he will be equal to the new duties assigned him. He is a most thoughtful man, a clear, logical preacher, and a man of executive gifts. No one doubts that Brother Spragins will make good in his new position." Rev. E. H. Casey, who is also pleasantly remembered in North Mississippi, having finished a successful quadrennium at Wesley Church, Greenville, was made presiding elder of the Gainesville District.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. W. L. Linfield was prevented from attending this Conference by the illness of his wife. She recently underwent an operation in a sanitarium at Jackson, and is now in Shreveport, La., where another slight operation must be performed.

Rev. J. W. Sandell and wife were at the Conference. Brother Sandell seemed very vigorous for one of his years.

Brother R. Bradley was accompanied to the Conference by Sister Bradley.

Professor Burton of Millsaps College was among the welcomed visitors at Conference.

Rev. Fred L. Long and his good wife, of Jackson, the State Sunday School workers, are thorough-going Methodists, and greatly enjoyed this meeting. Brother Long's character was passed and the Bishop appointed him "to the world."

Rev. W. T. Griffin made a splendid report of his work Thursday night. Our Seamen's Bethel at Gulfport is helping fulfill the promise, "His life has gone out into all the earth and his words to the ends of the world."

The presence of R. B. Bellew, a layman from the Seashore District, was noted as present.

Rev. W. W. Cammack was quite ill during the Conference.

Rev. Robert Selby was called from the Conference in the early part of the session to New Orleans, where his sister, Mrs. V. M. Scanlan, underwent an operation in the New Orleans Sanitarium. He returned on Saturday, his sister doing well.

Rev. H. P. Lewis reported, though a supernumerary, that he had traveled 4,000 miles this year and had preached 77 times.

Among the prominent local preachers who enjoyed the Conference was Rev. J. L. Jorden, of Biloxi. He reports this congregation greatly bereaved on account of the death of their pastor, Brother Lipscomb.

Rev. L. E. Alford was the skillful representative of the New Orleans Picayune during this Conference. The arrival of Dr. Hamill Saturday was very welcome to the Conference.

Hattiesburg is a very delightful city and entertained the Conference in a most cordial manner. The people of Hattiesburg have reason to be proud of the beautiful Main Street Church in which the Conference met, it having recently been finished at a cost of more than $50,000. Pastors Watkins, Thompson and Lewis spared no pains to make everybody comfortable, and as far as we heard, have entirely succeeded.

THE COUNTESS TOLSTOY.

By Jane A. Stewart.

One of the world's greatest mothers and home-makers is the Countess Tolstoy, wife of Count Leo Tolstoy, the famous Russian author, reformer, and philanthropist, who died so recently.

She is the gifted and able daughter of a noted German military physician. Her name was Sofia Baer. She was just nineteen, a bright, charming girl full of life and spirit, in 1862, when Tolstoy, then thirty-five and already a great literary light, brought her to his ancestral home, where she has been the center and soul for nearly half a century.

"Yasnaya Polyana," meaning "a clear streak," is the name of the Tolstoy mansion which stands at the edge of an oak forest, not more than six hours' ride from Moscow, near the Russian village of that name. A group of straw-thatched mud huts and a church steeple are the chief features of the neglected, unattractive village which lies in the district of Krapivka, near the city of Tula, and not far from the main road between Moscow and Kiev.

The house is barely visible through the forest from the highway. The entrance to the grounds is marked by two half-ruined, whitewashed towers of Chinese pagoda style, between which, probably, long ago gates were hung to bar out visitors. Bars and gates are done away with now, however, for Count Tolstoy was the most approachable as well as the most beloved of Russian noblemen.

"We are simple folks," declares the countess, who although she has her own independent ideas, is in harmony with most of her husband's ideals.

From the entrance the road to the house runs through the large park of eighty acres added to the estate of Count Tolstoy, and as it nears the house passes between two magnificent rows of antique birches. Through the dense leaves gleam the waters of a silvery pond, and just in front of the house is a smooth, green, level lawn.

The home of the Tolstoy is a modest two-story, hospitable mansion, spreading its broad white wings over the green lawn in a hospitable manner. Three times in the last forty years it has received additions to meet the growing needs of the Tolstoy household and of the constantly increasing family.

From the beginning Countess Tolstoy has entered heartily into the work and aspirations of her gifted husband. Fortunately she brought to the union an ability for administration of household affairs, that fitted her to serve as overseer of the estate. Like her husband she is an indefatigable worker, bringing her brisk energy to bear on everything and soon bringing order out of the chaos that is sure to result when she leaves home even only for a day or two.

She had carefully guarded his working hours, from 9 a. m. to 3 p. m., that he might have freedom from interruption. Count Tolstoy could deny himself to no one, rich or great; but the countess, it is said, on authority, would even refuse to admit a king if the king should interfere with the great author's work.

As the carriage halts at the door of the big house the visitor notes the many-branched old elm-tree called here "the poor people's tree," under which poor people awaited Count Tolstoy. Everything about the house has the air of simplicity, long use, and the solidity of the old aristocracy.

The countess and the other members of the family have had a separate menu and staff of servants and have kept up in great measure the manners and customs of the Russian nobility. Her open, expressive countenance; her bright, fearless eyes; her straightforward, sincere manner; and her genial hospitality make her an ideal house-mother and home-maker. It is a plain but substantial environment, in which she reigns as a queen among hostesses. There are no rugs, easy chairs, rich paintings and draperies at Yasnaya Polyana. The great halls are furnished with solid ancient furniture. But the cordial, hospitable atmosphere of the home removes all sense of barrenness in the furnishing.

Ascending the broad flight of stairs from the small vestibule with its unpainted floor and big bookcase and mirror, one enters the big dining-room, hung with old family portraits, where Count Tolstoy could be found every morning about nine o'clock when in health enjoying the bread and butter and the tea or coffee poured from the steaming samovar, presided over by the countess. It is generally a large company which gathers here for the morning repast, and the guests of the house as well as the members of the family help themselves to the tea or coffee, which, over they prefer, in Russian fashion.

It was at this happy home in Yasnaya Polyana that Count Tolstoy after years of eager questionings arrived at the solution of the problem which had vexed him, and determined to cease to live like a parasite, and instead give his life a meaning by labor and faith. He was then in his fifty-fourth year. And the countess wrote her brother:

"You would not know Leo, he is so changed. He has become a Christian, and he remains one, so steadfast and true."

He gave up the writing of novels to write religious and philosophical works and devoted part of each day to agricultural and humble manual tasks, going barefoot and dressed in peasants' garb and eating their simple fare.

The countess has sympathized, but she has not followed her husband's plan. She is conservative by nature, and is notably independent in thought and character. She has a mind of her own. And she has not failed to hold her own, especially in matters pertaining to the management of the household and in the bringing up of the children.

Few mothers of large families have found time as has she for helping in her husband's literary labors. She has often burned the midnight oil, correcting a new edition of her husband's works, reading manuscript and helping in various ways. This important work has been shared by the oldest daughter, who was her father's private secretary, conducting his vast correspondence from all quarters of the globe and copying his much-corrected and rewritten manuscripts. His latest works were always read by the countess herself to the inner circle of the family and friends who freely criticised and made suggestions.

And in his works are happily reflected the subtle beauty and influence of the domestic happiness and rest which the able and gifted and devoted Countess Tolstoy has given her husband for nearly half a century.—Western Christian Advocate.

HIGHLY COMMENDED.

Conscience and Its Culture. By T. H. Lipscomb, B.D. Smith & Lamar, Nashville.

The author has attempted, and with good success, to contribute something towards a better understanding of man's moral nature, and the principles and methods in conformity to which it may be developed. He fully recognizes the various meanings which the word "conscience" has, and though he leans towards one which we do not think quite the best or the most helpful for clear thought, he treats the subject with much good sense and practical helpfulness. We are especially pleased with his chapter on "A Conscience Void of Offense," which he takes as a good phrase for the ideal of Christian character. His teaching is that such a conscience does not demand "absolute conformity to absolute right," but only a living fully up to the light one has, every known duty done, every known sin forsaken, full allegiance or loyalty, with abundant room for development as further light comes, this further light being constantly sought. Thus a man may be living on the mountain-top of religious experience all the time, and yet be continually pressing on toward a higher kind of perfection, drawing nearer the final goal of complete Christlikeness. This is precisely the sort of teaching which the church greatly needs—the only wholesome holiness.—Zion's Herald

Christ is come to be thy light;
Shining through the darkest night,
He will make thy pilgrim way
Shine unto the perfect day.
Take the message! let it be Full of Christmas joy to thee.

—Haverzal.

The exact date of the Savior's birth is not known, but that is a matter of little consequence. The all important thing is the fact that that he was born into our world, and no truth in human history is better authenticated than this. Earth, though far gone in wickedness, was in a state of expectancy when he came, and heaven sent angels to sing "Glory to God" in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." And ever since he touched our planet, it has been growing purer and better. Nor will this upward progress cease, until the Paradise lost, is regained and reaches around the globe.

There are some who make Christmas a time for eating and drinking and indulging in sports and social festivities, with little or no thought of its true significance. They leave Christ out, and convert it into an occasion of riotous and selfish pleasure. They think of the dinner, the hunt, the dance, and various other forms of merriment. But they have in the mind no memories of the babe of Bethlehem; no feeling of thankfulness to God for his "unspeakable gift" welling up in the soul; no note of praise upon their lips. Such an observance of Christmas is nothing short of a skeptical profanation of what should be a sacred and holy season. Christ should be uppermost in our thoughts in this annual celebration of his nativity. In the home and in the church, let us accord him our deepest homage and adoration, and crown him anew "Lord of all" in our hearts and lives.

The giving spirit is the Christ Spirit. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." The foremost philanthropist in the annals of the race is the Man of Galilee. He gave up heaven, gave up his throne and crown, and laid down his life upon the cross that he might redeem and uplift fallen humanity. His career from his entrance upon his public ministry to its final close upon the slopes of Olivet, was one continuous outflow of unwaning benevolence. And his last act before he mounted above the clouds to resume his place at God's right hand, was to lift up his arms in gracious blessing. To be like him is to be considerate of the "other man;" to think not only of our own things, but also of the things of others. The serving disciple is the only worthy disciple. It is well to contribute of our substance to the needy—not to do so is to demonstrate that we have not the mind of our Lord—but the holiest, divinest gifts are those which help and enrich the spiritual life. And here also it holds true that only he who possesses, can bestow.

Joy befits the Christmas-tide. The angel of the Lord said to the watching shepherds nineteen hundred years ago, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people." The coming of the Infinite Jehovah to dwell among men was enough to make their hearts beat high. In the accents of human speech he would teach them of their Heavenly Father and pour a flood of light upon life's dark problems. He would give them deliverance from sin and put into their souls the victorious power of the Holy Spirit. He would comfort them with the assurance that even their sufferings were designed to refine, ennoble and enrich them. He would make them see death vanquished, and the grave the gateway to a glorious immortality. He would show them those who vanish into the great beyond, radiant with eternal life, in the "house of many mansions." What more could we want? Christ leaves humanity with no unhealed wound, with no unrequited sorrow, with no unsupplied need. He is an all-sufficient Savior, able to do for us exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think. Is any wonder that as they contemplated his coming afar down the ages, the old prophets broke into rapturous and exultant strains? Or is it surprising that since he came, poetry has reached its loftiest heights as men have sung of his personality, character, and marvelous works? The disciples of such a Lord have no right to be otherwise than cheerful and hopeful. And in this season which speaks to us of the Master's nativity, let the joy born of meditation upon it overflow until it reaches the darkest prison, floods the lowliest hovel, brightens the most desolate life, and fills the whole world with its jubilant notes.

THE INCARNATION.

Quintus has very properly been called "the religion of the incarnation." It has other doctrines which belong to it exclusively, but this is its crowning and most distinctive teaching. "God manifest in the flesh" and what grew out of his assumption of our humanity, embrace practically the whole of our theology in so far as it relates to the salvation of man. The incarnation undergirds and sustains the whole vast scheme of human redemption. Without it, so far as the finite mind can see, there could have been no atonement, and without the atonement there would have been no place for repentance, faith, and regeneration. The race would have remained hopelessly fallen, with no power to lift it out of its wreck and degradation.

The incarnation is a profound and perplexing mystery, but this in no wise discredits it. Which ever way the human intellect turns it must grapple with the unknown and incomprehensible. Unable to explore and explain the realm of the finite, shall man turn skeptic because he can not grasp the infinite? Understanding for the powers and workings of his own spirit, shall he complain because he can not comprehend the plans and processes of him who sits enthroned upon the circle of the heavens? "Now we see through a glass darkly," and many things must be taken upon faith. We shall know more when we pass hence and move in a loftier sphere. Through the incarnation God has made his fullest and final revelation to man. Thus St. John says: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." And Paul proclaims that "God who, at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these latter days spoken unto us by his Son."

All of the antecedent manifestations of Deity had been partial, incomplete, and unsatisfactory. They were but a few faint rays flashing forth from the great Uncreated Sun; but when God in Christ spoke through the accents of a human tongue, loved through the affections of a human heart, ministered through the touches of a human hand, suffered through the sensibilities of a human soul, and bled and died in a human body, men saw God in a far fuller light than they had ever seen him before. They saw him as a Person, as a Father, and as a compassionate, seeking Savior. They discovered that the All-Powerful and All-Knowing is also the All-Loving. They caught a vision of his tenderness, his patience, his justice, his forgiving spirit, and his providential care.

But the incarnation was vastly more than a revelation. In it we see God not only disclosing himself, but also achieving the task of world redemption. The day for planning has passed; the time for execution has come. The mere enlightenment of man is not enough; atonement must be made for his sins. Deity tabernacled in the flesh was God stooping that he might place his arms underneath the race, and lift it from the awful depths into which the fall had plunged it. This was the meaning of the manger scene in Bethlehem, of the three years of homeless wandering to and fro in the land of Palestine, of the lonely nights of supplication upon mountain tops, of the supreme agony of the garden, and the tragedy of the cross. All of the dynamics of the Gospel spring out of the incarnation. Calvary is the only fulcrum by which our world can be prized upward toward the light.

Nor was this assumption of our humanity by the Infinite and Eternal Son merely a temporary arrangement. The ascension of Christ in his human body means that the miracle of the incarnation is to be perpetual. It will never cease to exist. Having been the supreme wonder of earth, it will also be the supreme wonder of heaven. Throughout all eternity it will stand as the concrete expression of the Divine Father's measureless love. And it will also forever speak of that flawless justice which would not remit the penalty of sin to save from suffering and death an only begotten Son. So it will evermore contribute to the integrity and stability of the moral government of the universe.

And it is an inspiring thought that in the person of Christ our humanity has been so highly exalted and honored. It has entered into the very Godhead itself. We now have representation in the councils of the Trinity—in the government of heaven. Our Elder Brother, he who was "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh," now sits upon an eternal throne at the right hand of God. He knows us, and loves us, and feels for us, and his regnancy means that, if we maintain right relationship to him, we shall never want for any needful thing either in time or in eternity.

A PERSONAL QUESTION.

All the world is the beneficiary of Christ's birth, work and atonement. Even the peoples which have never heard his name share in the blessings which his coming has brought. The civilizing forces generated by the gospel are making their influence felt in all lands. No being lives upon the planet who is not a debtor to him, who, though God, was yet made in the likeness of man. But the Savior's richest, fullest blessings belong only to those who personally accept him and enthrone him within the soul as their Lord and King. Without this surrender of self to Christ, all of his other good gifts must soon be lost. It is the spiritual alone which endures.

And is not this occasion, when everything is speaking to us of the birth of our Lord and his glorious achievements for mankind, a fitting time to ask the question, What is he to me personally? Do I know him in the forgiveness of my sins? Does he reign in my heart and life? Am I living in fellowship with him, and giving him the praise and service which are justly his due? There is no more tremendous truth than that the atonement in its higher significance avails only for him who individually accepts and appropriates it.

"Though Christ a thousand times
In Bethlehem be born,
If he is not born in thee,
Thy soul is still forlorn.
The cross on Golgotha
Will never save thy soul;
The cross in thine own heart
Alone can make thee whole."

A PRESENT HELP.

We may not climb the heavenly steeps,
To bring the Lord-Christ down;
In vain we search the lowest deeps,
For Him no depths can drown.

But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He;
And faith has yet its Olivet,
And love its Galilee.

The healing of the seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.

Through Him the first fond prayers are said
Our lips of childhood frame;
The last low whispers of our dead
Are burdened with His name.

O Lord and Master of us all,
Whate'er our name or sign,
We own Thy sway, we hear Thy call,
We test our lives by Thine!

—John G. Whittier.

THE BABE IN THE MANGER.

Text: "And they came with haste and found Mary and Joseph and the babe lying in the manger."—Luke, 2: 16.

1. I am sure one lesson for life the manger-cradle of our Lord should teach us is that a true life does not consist in what one has outwardly, but in what one is inwardly; that it can never be so great a question what we have, as what we are.

Did you ever think that of all the millions of human beings who have been born into this world, Christ is the only one with whom it was a matter of choice into what condition he should be born? We wake to consciousness and find ourselves born, and must receive what parentage and heritage has been ordered for us. It belonged to Christ alone to choose his birth condition. And no babe lay in a lowlier cradle than that in which Christ chose to be laid in. And yet—not less in the manger at Bethlehem, or in the carpenter's shop at Nazareth, or a homeless wanderer, or upon the cross of the criminal, was he the Son of God!

2. Can any lesson for you and me be more evident than this—taught by the manger-cradle and the life of which it was the earthly vestibule—that to win a true and noble soul is the main thing, that being is a grander thing than having? Yet one of the most difficult lessons in life to learn is this of the superior value of internal treasure. Too often the simple fact that a man has risen to some place of worldly power covers and excuses the crooked tricks he made in getting there. Too often the question on the street is—not what is the man worth in heart-treasure, but in hand-treasure; not has the man integrity, and purity, but has the man houses and stocks and bonds? It can never be so great a question what we have as what we are. That is the lesson for us from him who, for our sakes, chose the manger-cradle and the rude cross, and who was all the time the Son of God, both in the manger and on the cross.

3. Another great lesson for life the manger-cradle teaches us is that love is mightier than power. The central man of the time when Jesus lay in the manger-cradle was the Emperor Augustus. His word was law. Since time began no monarch had sat upon so grand a throne. Where his eagles flew there might not be a whisper of dissent. His throne was iron—he was crowned with imperial power. What did he care that that babe lay in a manger in Bethlehem in despised Judea? But, where now is the power of Augustus? Time has shattered it. The name at which the nations trembled carries no more authority. But the babe in the manger-cradle, lying there for love, is more and more ruling the ages. Not waning is he, but waxing, because he is the utmost proof and instance of limitless, sacrificial love.

4. But, again, that manger-cradle is suggestive of a searching test for the heart and life of every one of us. That babe is the Son of the Highest. He was before all worlds. By him the worlds were made. Why, when he comes to his own world, must he lie in such a lowly cradle? Why can Mary find no better place than the manger in which to lay her babe? "There was no room for them in the inn"—the inn was all pre-occupied. Is that true of your heart and life? You have room for business, pleasure, social engagements, study, idleness, a careless thoughtlessness, prayerlessness, passion, some cherished life plan, but no room for Christ—is this true of you? Yet, though your heart be as unworthy for Christ's using and tarrying as was that manger-cradle for the resting place of his infancy, he will not refuse to occupy, cleanse, enrich it, any more than his infancy refused the manger-cradle. Your unworthiness need not deter you from offering even your heart and life to him for his indwelling. Do not let such a gracious Christ be crowded out.—Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

THE CHRISTMAS VISION.

Text: "And when they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."—Matt. 2: 10.

1. Christmas is a hilltop to which we may climb out of the narrow valley of our common life, and from which we may get a wider outlook. We need nothing more than such a vision to give us new thoughts of the larger world in which we are living.

Artists tell us that a picture with no sky in it, with only earth, always wants something. A life with no heaven in it, with only this world, its hopes, its joys, its inspirations, always lacks the elements of noblest grandeur. Yet the burdens, the toils, the cares, the struggles, the trials, which fill up the days and nights of most of us, tend to make life narrower for us and to keep us in the low, dusty vales, where we get but few glimpses of the deep, wide, open sky. One reason why our Sundays are given to us is to lead us up out of our dull earthly rounds, once in seven days, to a hilltop where we can get glimpses of the blue heavens, so that we shall not forget God and the things of the better world. Christmas also gives us an opportunity for a very wide vision. It tells of the wonderful love of God. It is a day bright with divine revealing. It is a day, too, of lofty inspirations; for it calls us to all the best things of life.

Yet, to many people Christmas seems to mean but little. They think of it only in a selfish way, as a time for receiving gifts; or they see it only in its holiday aspect, as a day of festivity. It rises to no high level in their thought. It brings to them no sweet memories of the birth of the world's Redeemer. It speaks to them no message of divine love. But to enjoy a merely secular Christmas, without having one's heart warmed and blessed by the tenderness with which a true thought of the day throbs, is to miss its real meaning.

2. One part of the outlook we get from this mountain window is a vision of God's love. This is the great central meaning of Christmas. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son"—that was the meaning of the birth of Jesus Christ. That is the revelation which has been blessing and transforming the world through these centuries.

3. Another part of the larger vision which Christmas gives is the truth of human brotherhood. In our daily task-work we are kept so intent on our own affairs and so occupied in providing for our own wants that we are in danger of forgetting that there are other people, and that they are our brothers. From our mountain-top we look over wide areas and see the smoke from countless chimneys and have glimpses of others' homes and fields. Thus we are taken out of ourselves and our thought of life is widened and ennobled.

Thus the dullest spot of earth, in the Christmas revealing, is made bright with the brightness of God's presence and the narrowest lot of earth widens out until it merges into the infinitude of heaven.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

WHY DID HE COME?

By Rev. John Paul.

There is no attempt to deny the fact that Jesus Christ came among men. The story of his conception and resurrection has been assailed; attempts have been made to deny the miraculous feature in his works, and the doctrine of his Godhood has been doubted, but they all say he came. It is not our purpose here to offer an argument for those fundamentals which have been proved sufficiently for every devout seeker of truth; but, assuming the postulate which the whole world receives already—namely, that he came—the axiom of the ages, the testimony of a million Christmas bells, the historic truth which the architecture and sculpture and the libraries of the world proclaim—we are going to invite you to a study of a interesting question:

Why did he come? To find a serious answer to this question it would be natural, first, to ask him; then, to ask yourself in a study of your personal needs, why he should have come; and, finally, to judge from what he has accomplished. This will lead us to a study of what he proposes yet to accomplish.

When we turn to ask him why he came, among the first golden sentences which come to our mind is, where he professed to have come to help the man at the bottom; to do something for the life from which all hope had vanished; "to save that which was lost." There is perhaps no point of interest on which he expressed himself more frequently than the object of his mission. That men might have life; that the afflicted might have relief; that captives might hear of liberty; that the poor might have the gospel preached to them; that the people who dwell in darkness might have light; that the lost might be saved; that the church might be sanctified; that all nations might be blessed; that the Father's will might be done; that he might reveal God to a world which was so far removed from him.

If I am glad he came, the first expression in my notes of gladness must be devoted to personal reasons: Did I need him? My knowledge of myself was pitiful till he gave me light. I turned to the animals, and my hope for the future was no brighter than theirs, and congratulated them in their freedom from care and remorse; to the grasses of the field I said: "To-morrow you shall die, but, the day after, I shall be no more." But Jesus Christ came and brought immortality to light through the gospel; and a soul which groped in darkness knows himself, knows his Redeemer, and realizes that the most that can fail us is this earthly tabernacle, and then we shall enter upon the enjoyments of a home not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. Confusion is gone when a man finds Christ; he hunts for no new shibboleths to pronounce; if he knows his Master as he should, the Jack-o'-lanterns of fanaticism have no charm for him, and the frozen zones of formalism cannot chill his spirit. The enchanting voices of worldliness are not heeded, the song of the sirens is no longer sweet. Who can enumerate the needs of a soul? Not half of them are within the regions of consciousness; all the philosophies of the ages have failed to supply these needs, and it has remained for the world to wait till the angels sang in Judea and the voice of the Baptist sounded in the wilderness before there could be found a people who could say, I have peace, I am satisfied, I am glad.

What has the coming of Christ meant to the world? Answer this question, and you have in large part answered the question why he came. In large part, but not in full; for he has it in his plans to do even more than he has done. As yet there is not a Christian nation in the world, but there are nations which recognize Jesus Christ and make specific and peculiar provisions for the free course of his gospel—nations where Christ has had a chance to do at least something of what he came to do. Put one of these—say, England or the United States—by the side of China, and get an idea of what he came to do. He has changed prison life; he has created asylum life; in the great hospitals of Christendom he has made for us a bed in our sickness. In the provisions of organized charity in our cities, he has provided a place for the penniless stranger. There are new springs of freedom due to Christ's doctrine of the natural brotherhood of man and of the intrinsic worth of every human being. New ambitions have been begotten, new realms of self-consciousness attained, since Jesus dignified labor by toiling with his own hands and teaching that he that is great among us should be a servant. There is no man so discerning as to be able to trace and discover all the results of Christ's coming, up to the present; and, excepting where pessimism has become a positive disease, there is none who cannot readily see that the half has never yet been realized. In reflecting upon what he has accomplished up to date, I have not asked you to draw upon faith, but have rather discussed that which may be seen. If we had drawn upon faith, we should have said that the debt of all ages has been canceled, that the bills of pardon issued through the blood of bulls and goats by patriarchs and prophets of old, have been redeemed, and that since the first Christmas morning ten thousand times ten thousand souls have gone heavenward through the instrumentality of Christ's Church, wearing robes made white in his blood.

If Jesus Christ were merely a man, if all his schedules in the past had not been duly fulfilled, we should not make so much of what he proposes yet to accomplish; but, as it is, no one who knows him doubts that his entire program will be carried out, the gist of which is expressed in the statement of Paul, that he must reign till all enemies are under his feet, death itself disappearing when his kingdom is complete. His proposition was to evangelize the world, to preach the gospel to every creature, looking to the restitution of all things at his second coming. He established in the earth a spiritual institution against which the gates of hell should never prevail, but which, on the other hand, might be filled with the Holy Ghost and prevail against the gates of hell.

Meridian, Miss.

MRS. A. L. LANGFORD.

"No life can be pure in its purpose and strong in its strife. And all life not be made purer and stronger thereby."

Such was the life of Mrs. A. L. Langford (nee Ruth Martin), whose sojourn on earth dates from September 13, 1881, to June 11, 1910. She was born in Rankin County, Mississippi, the fifth of twelve children. Of the ten who lived to grow up, she was the first to go. The father and mother both survive her. On November 20, 1904, she was married to Mr. A. L. Langford of Yazoo City. They made their home in Sharkey County, and it was brightened by the presence of one son, now five years old.

The writer having been the sister nearest her in age, it was but natural that the two lives should be almost as one. From childhood until her marriage we were almost constant companions. I believe, then, that I can speak with authority concerning her life. I am sure that my admiration for her cannot be explained on the plea of a sister's love. I would have loved her if she had not been my sister.

Her most striking characteristic, perhaps, was her capacity for entering into the lives of the people about her. She had a companionableness that drew people out of themselves when they were in her presence.

This trait was manifest from early childhood. It made her a favorite with our playmates. As she grew into womanhood there was not one among the young people of our community who was more universally loved. She was ready to share joy or sorrow, and not only that, but she was interested in the commonplace experiences of those whose lives touched hers.

Her sunny, cheerful spirit unconsciously dispelled the clouds in many a life. I remember distinctly how a whole party of young people would be changed by her presence. Those who were timid or unhappy seemed to catch her spirit and to blossom out and find themselves.

In the home she was not only the favorite of the family, but she was the individual favorite of almost every member of the family. There was something akin to disinterested friendship with each one. She shared the interests of each and all in a way that few persons are able to do.

Several years previous to her marriage were spent in public school work. Her life was the inspiration of her pupils, and her devotion to them was rewarded by the love and confidence of parents and children alike.

But the most beautiful of all was the six years as wife and mother. With the responsibilities of life fully upon her, she was able to meet them with true courage and strength, while never for a moment did she lose that unconscious cheerfulness and thoughtfulness for others. When her deeper self was called forth in a mother's love, it was truly the crowning glory of her character. There was something as unique about her love for her child as there was in her relations to others. It was a combination of devotion, pride and companionship, with the most unfailing tenderness I have ever seen.

Her love developed her child without making him dependent on her. She loved him for himself and not as an object of selfish affection. But that attitude was as spontaneous as a spring breeze, and had not the least tinge of sternness in it. She never failed to see his point of view.

Having joined the M. E. Church, South, in childhood, she served it faithfully until her death. Most of her active work was in connection with the young people. The Epworth League, Sunday school, prayer meeting and missionary society shared her labors. Her death was entirely triumphant. She expressed sorrow over leaving the dear ones, but joy in doing the Father's will and going to meet her Savior face to face.

"Now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face."

MISS MARY ABARR.

An Appreciation.

There passed away from her home in Long Beach on Saturday, November 9th, one of earth's noble women, Miss Mary Abarr. Her name was a synonym for charity in its truest sense. She truly lived to help others. Never apparently thinking of herself, she was always on the lookout for the needy, and as far as her means went, would furnish the necessities of life. But her noblest expression of the Christly spirit was in her deep sympathy for people, high or low, rich or poor. She detested hypocrisy, but could always find some good in everyone, "some redeeming quality." Her interest went out in organizing and planning for the betterment of all, in church building, and far-sighted plans to help others to help themselves, and thus bring permanent good. She was Sunday school superintendent for years at Sunshine church, which she was instrumental in building. She was a steward, and also worked actively with the Woman's Home Mission Society and King's Daughters. She was interested in the pastor and his family, the worn-out preachers and others. Like the Shunamite, she was a "great woman." For many years she wrote for popular daily papers and lumber journals; she had traveled much and had stores of information to tell. She was not afraid of anything or anybody, and yet as timid and modest as a child. Her striking virtue was her humility of spirit.

For years she was a great sufferer, and yet was never seen without a smile. She was always hopeful of living to do service for many years. Her ties of friendship when once fastened could not be broken—she would stick to her friends under any and all circumstances. Earth is richer because of her—the city, the church and community are poorer that she has gone. She is at rest in the home of the blest.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Report of Board of Church Extension.

We are thankful to God for the enlarged interest in this branch of missionary enterprise, as is shown by the increased receipts on assessments and larger contributions to the Loan Fund. The report of the General Secretary shows an excess of $5,976 on assessments, and $20,701 on the Loan Fund over any previous year. But the gains in contributions are not keeping pace with the increasing demands that are the results of a steady and vigorous growth of our Church. At the present meeting of the Board we have had 28 applications asking for $4,165, and have had but little more than half this amount to meet these worthy demands, many of which are exceedingly urgent. In many places, in the great West numbers of our people are uniting with other denominations because we have no houses of worship. In one city in the State of Washington, one church of another name and order has 200 Southern Methodists in it because we have no building; another, in Southern California, has 300 in it for the same reason. These are only examples of the immediate need for houses of worship in many growing towns and cities in the bounds of our Zion.

Parsonage Work.

The last General Conference merged the Woman's Home Mission Society into the General Board of Missions and transferred the work of parsonage aid to the Board of Church Extension. In order to care for this work the General Board increased our assessment 25 per cent. Applications for aid in building parsonages must be made hereafter to this Board. The proper blanks may be had of the Secretary.

Sunday School Loan Fund.

The birthday offering from the Sunday schools is directed towards the establishing of a Sunday School Loan Fund which is to be used to aid congregations to provide modern equipment for Sunday school work in connection with church building. It is also a means of educating our children and young people in the needs of Church Extension. The General Secretary will furnish your schools with the necessary jars and instructions.

Conference Board Loan Fund.

We are very desirous of increasing our Conference Board Loan Fund. This fund is to be loaned to churches in the bounds of our Conference at the low rate of 4 per cent. We urge our pastors to solicit for this fund wherever practicable.

Free Literature.

The General Board, realizing that the people are not sufficiently informed as to the work and needs of this Board, have provided wall charts, maps, and other literature for free distribution. We respectfully request our pastors to supply all their churches with these valuable helps.

Prominence at District Conferences.

We again request the Presiding Elders to give the subject of Church Extension a prominent place on the programs of their respective District Conferences.

V. C. CURTIS,

For the Board.

REPORT OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD.

We your Board beg leave to report the following: The Sunday school is the most perfect organization within the Church, and offers the best opportunity for teaching God's Word, and for training in effective service for Christ. Here we deal with impressionable minds ready to receive the great truths of the Bible, the fundamental doctrines of our Church and her world-wide mission. A few of our live superintendents are seizing this opportunity, and are revolutionizing their local communities and are sending out their influence into regions abroad.

Our Sunday school editors and Publishing House furnish us with literature, second to none; also, the best helps that consecrated skill can devise for making the Sunday school the most effective agent in the evangelization of the world. We, therefore, urge our pastors and superintendents to introduce the graded lessons, the Adult Bible Class Quarterly, the Home Department Quarterly, the Visitor, and Boys and Girls into every school.

Dr. Chappell says in his report: "One of the most remarkable of recent Sunday school movements is the development of the Organized Adult Class." Recognizing this fact, the General Conference provided for the federation of our Organized Adult Classes under the name of "The Wesley Adult Bible Class." Write to Dr. C. D. Bulla for full information as to the organization of these classes; to Dr. E. H. Rawlings for literature telling of the best methods of instructing the school in missions; to E. E. French for catalogue of Sunday school supplies; to Dr. H. M. Hamill for teacher training supplies; all of the above are in Nashville, Tenn.

In harmony with the plan of the General Board we ask that the Executive Committee of our Board be empowered to employ a suitable person to act as Field Secretary for our Conference during the ensuing year.

The Board through its Executive Committee offers a suitable reward for the best work exhibited at our Annual Conference by any Sunday school as a whole; for the best exhibited by any Cradle Roll, Graded Lessons, including beginners, primary, junior and intermediate departments, and for the best exhibited by any Wesley Adult Bible Class. These offers are for classes organized this year.

The Board offers a Bible to the school raising the largest amount on Children's Day, one to the school raising the next largest amount, and one to the school raising the largest amount in each Presiding Elder's District, barring the two that receive the Bibles from the Conference at large.

Respectfully submitted,

R. H. B. GLADNEY,

Chairman Pro Tem.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETICS.

(Passed unanimously by a mass meeting of the students of Millsaps College on December 12, 1910.)

Whereas, President Hull, Major Millsaps, Prof. Burton, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, Mr. W. M. Buie, and many other friends and supporters of Millsaps College, have asked the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences to permit us to engage in intercollegiate athletics, and have devoted much time and effort to secure for us the privilege of taking part in intercollegiate games and meets; and,

Whereas, the aforesaid Conferences have granted the permission asked concerning everything except football, with the understanding that the Faculty and the Board of Trustees should put in force a proper regulation of our intercollegiate contests, exercising a reasonable control of the teams and individual players; therefore, be it

Resolved by the students of Millsaps College in mass meeting assembled, First, That we hereby express the hearty appreciation of the action of the Conferences and of the active work in the interest of intercollegiate athletics of the aforesaid friends and supporters of the same, felt by all students of Millsaps College; and we desire to assure the members of the Conferences who opposed the movement that no ill-feeling is entertained towards them, that we esteem them for having the courage of their convictions, and that we believe them still to be loyal friends of our College.

Second. That we think the policy of regulation eminently wise and proper as tending toward a pure type of athletics; so we hereby endorse the position taken by the Faculty and Board of Trustees.

Third. That we hereby pledge ourselves to promote the interest of clean athletics at all times, to uphold and abide by any reasonable Faculty regulation, and to do what we can to prove ourselves worthy of the confidence shown us.

Fourth. That we will strive at all times to keep our purple and white banner free from professionalism and a true emblem of clean, manly conduct in athletics as in all things else.

Church News

The Canadian Methodists gave last year $2 per member for missions—the largest per capita amount given by any Wesleyan body in the Western hemisphere.

The North Alabama Conference has a church membership of 84,000, and is vigorous and growing. The First Church, of Birmingham, alone reported last year 299 additions.

A Christian dormitory has been opened at the Waseda University, in Tokyo, which is expected to exercise a far-reaching influence among the students of that institution. More and more the Churches are strengthening their facilities for work among the pagan peoples of the Orient.

The North Carolina Conference has a membership of 78,781. The net gain during the year just passed was 2,433. The sum of $16,908.41 was raised for foreign missions, and $14,267.41 for domestic missions. A healthful growth in the Sunday school and Epworth League work was also reported.

Trinity College, North Carolina, is soon to have two new structures erected on the campus—a dormitory and an administration building. The old Washington Duke building will be done away with. These improvements have been made possible by the gift of $100,000 by Mr. Benjamin Duke.

Bishop Frank M. Bristol, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has lately returned from South America, represents the Spanish population of that continent as being weary of Romanism and favorable to Protestant evangelization. He affirms that they take readily to the teachings and methods of Methodism.

Bishop Mouzon writes interestingly of "Mexico, Our Nearest Mission Field," in the last issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate. He has been studying conditions at first hand in our sister republic to the south, and what he has to say should carry great weight. He promises to discuss the progress of our work in that country in another paper.

Our new church at Opelika, Alabama, was dedicated by Bishop Candler on Sunday, December 4th. He also opened the Alabama Conference on Wednesday, the 7th inst., for Bishop Wilson, who was detained in Baltimore by matters pertaining to the work of the Federation Commissions of the two Episcopal Methodisms and the Methodist Protestant Church.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Bishops and officials of the United Brethren Church assembled in Knoxville, Tenn., on December 15th, with Bishop Matthews of Chicago, the senior Bishop, presiding. The various activities of the denomination were carefully reviewed, and steps taken to promote the efficiency of the work in its several departments.

The Foreign and Home Mission Boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church have abandoned the publication of their monthly magazines as publicity documents. This saves for each board $40,000 annually. The boards believe the weekly denominational papers are of more value as publicity mediums than the monthlies—another demonstration of the importance of the religious weekly papers.—Wesleyan Advocate.

Last year a church in Chicago made up its mind that the brethren should do their duty. All collections were stopped, the women relieved of all responsibility and the church depended for money on the subscriptions of every male member. The result was that instead of $1,200 as before, $4,000 was received and the attendance on the preaching greatly increased. A large number of the Chicago churches will adopt the same plan.—Western Recorder.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate has the following to say of Bishop Hoss, who recently spent a Sabbath in the Missouri metropolis: "The visit of Bishop Hoss to the Orient broadens our horizon in that direction. The problems of China, Russia, Japan and Korea he has studied with the eye and grasp of a statesman. His sermon in Cabanne Church, Sunday, of forty minutes, on 'The Transfiguration,' was a masterpiece of sublime simplicity in the homiletic art. The great audience looked and listened as if they were watching a great artist paint a great picture. At the close the whole subject and scene were as clear in the mind's eye and memory of his hearers as Raphael's masterpiece in the Vatican gallery of Rome."

The membership of the three Commissions which are seeking to bring about more cordial relations between the Methodisms existing in the United States are as follows:

Bishop Earl Cranston, Chairman; Bishop J. M.

Walden, Bishop L. B. Wilson, Rev. J. F. Goucher, D. D., Rev. G. A. Reeder, D. D., Rev. W. W. Evans, D. D., Mr. R. T. Miller, Mr. Hanford Crawford, Secretary, Mr. J. A. Patten; Rev. T. H. Lewis, D. D., Chairman, Rev. M. L. Jennings, D. D., Rev. George Shaffer, D. D., Rev. G. D. Helmick, D. D., Rev. C. D. Sinkinson, D. D., Mr. S. R. Harris, Mr. J. E. Peterson, Mr. W. N. Swift, Secretary; Bishop A. W. Wilson, Chairman; Bishop E. E. Hoss, Bishop Collins Denny, Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., Rev. F. M. Thomas, D. D., Secretary; Rev. C. M. Bishop, D. D., Mr. M. L. Walton, President R. S. Hyer, and Mr. W. B. Stubbs.

The discussion as to union of the three great Methodisms in this country continues to occupy a place in our Church press. Bishop Scott, colored, of the M. E. Church, has agreed that the negro membership of that Church be set apart and that an attempt be made to unite the colored Methodisms into one body, thereby removing one of the greatest stumbling blocks to the union of the white membership of his Church with other Methodist Churches. Dr. Palmore now proposes a laymen's meeting, composed of leading laymen of all the Churches; he held for the purpose of studying the subject from a layman's standpoint. Both these propositions are approved by editorial brethren and others.—Central Methodist Advocate.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Southern Presbyterian Church was celebrated in Atlanta on Sunday, December 11th, the service being conducted in the Army Auditorium. The sermon, which was a brilliant discourse, was delivered by Dr. James I. Vance, of Nashville, Tenn. Among other things the distinguished preacher said: "The church that is needed for these things must be a great church. A cheap church will not answer for these days. It must have a great Christ, a great Bible, a great gospel, and it must do its work with a great enthusiasm. It must be a church that lives in fellowship with all the churches of Christendom. The day is past for a hermit church. No church can hope for usefulness in this modern world that shuts itself up in bigoted isolation and refuses to federate and fellowship with all God's saints. It must be a church that lives in fellowship with Christ himself. He is our greatest asset. What the world most needs is a mighty Savior. It must be a church that lives in fellowship with the Holy Spirit. He is our secret of power. What the church most needs is a mighty spiritual baptism."

"EACH FOR ALL AND ALL FOR EACH OTHER."

By George R. Scott.

While reading the other day, my eyes caught the above-quoted words. They pleased me much, as they conveyed a truth that I have for many years maintained.

Suppose we divide the expression up into two parts: 1, "Each for all," and 2, "All for each other." The first part is very important. "Each for all" is what is necessary to make this world what it should be. Its acceptance will divide the burden of life and cause more joy to exist in the hearts of the inhabitants of this earth. It really means, to bear each other's burdens—thus keeping one of the commands of Scripture.

If each of us would make up our mind to look out for all as best we can, what a sweet world would this be to reside in! There would be no quarreling among neighbors or thinking out plans how to best those with whom we do business. This old world would be a heaven to reside in. The "each for all" doctrine is a good one and should be put in practice by all those who have an honest desire to make the world better while they reside in it. It would improve the politics of this country, and do much to bring about a more Christian spirit among professing Christians.

If each were for all there would be a little Indian summer in the lives of every one of the human family.

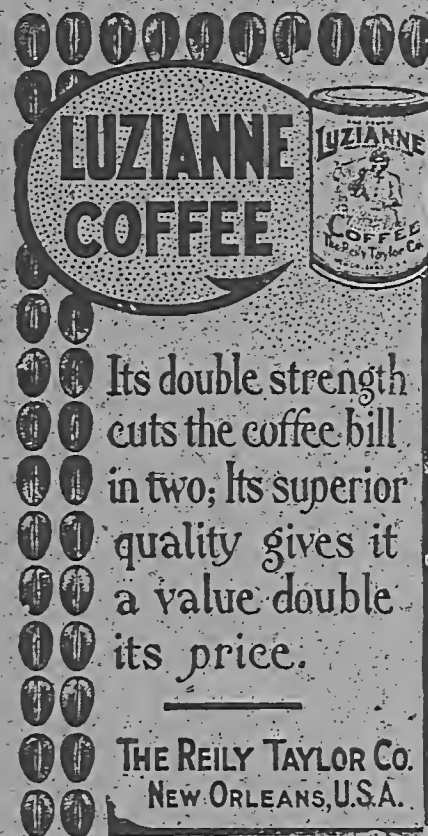

"Each for all" means much for the tired ones who can scarcely drag one foot after the other. The sick ones of this earth need the application of the doctrine. None for all would mean the application of the doctrine of letting each one take care of himself—a principle that would not be suited to over one-half of the people in existence; for it is a fact that the majority are not able to take proper care of themselves.

The way to live is to take an interest in others. Those who have good sight should look out for those who are blind; those who can walk should be willing to help those who are lame, and those who can talk should be anxious to amuse those who are dumb.

If each for all was generally practiced, there would be more smiling and less frowning. This dull world to many would soon become bright, and there would be fewer suicides and less crime.

Cultivate the doctrine among your children; instill in their minds what a blessed thing it will be if they practice it, and what a blessing they will be while they live if they only follow it out.

It was Jesus who taught how to be each for all, and surely His teachings ought to be our pleasure to copy.

LUZIANNE COFFEE

THE REILY TAYLOR CO.
NEW ORLEANS, U.S.A.

It ought to be our aim to give of our abundance to those who have not. To divide our luxuries among those who have hardly the necessities of life is Christ-like, and always to be commended.

The troubles that some have to put up with are enough to give them the "blues," and they need a dose of "each for all" to make life endurable. How much good we can do if we feel so inclined!

"All for each other" means about the same as "each for all"; but it is a happy way of expression. It has a ring about it that I like.

Think the whole sentence well over and put it in practice; for by so doing, you will do much to help the "submerged." It is the unfortunate that need your help, and it should be freely given them.

One of the worst sentences that can come from the mouth of a human being is: "I don't care; it is none of my business." It is the language of the devil, and should never come from the lips of Christians.

The object of the religion of Jesus Christ is to make people kind and thoughtful. If it has not that effect it is a sign that the Savior has never entered into the hearts of those who profess to be born again.

The most lovely of earth are those who are looking after the welfare of others nearly all the time. Such ones generally have others looking after them. I have lived too many years not to have noticed the fact that God cares for his own. He loves his good children and is ever watching over them. The poet was right when he wrote:

"Watch until the dawn of heaven
Breaks in glory on your sight;
Pray until the crown is given,
And the robes of peerless white;
Till you reach the golden mansions,
Where all tears are wiped away,
Till you join the angel-anthems,
You must watch as well as pray."

The wings of love and arms of faith will help every follower of Christ to love his or her neighbor. It is good to love each other, for it binds together those who are of one mind. It is bad enough to see the children of the devil disagree; but how much worse to see the children of God not in unison together.

To look kindly after each other is not only the duty of Christians, but it should be a privilege that they enjoy. Take your Christian brothers by the hand and lift them over some of the danger-spots from which you have escaped. There is not only a pleasure in rescuing sinners, but also in reclaiming those who have made a profession of religion.

Keep watching and waiting for opportunities of doing good to all members of the human family, irrespective of nationality, color or sex. The religion of prejudices (if there is such) is not worth having.

"Each for all and all for each other" is a sweet sentence worth harboring up and putting into practice by the best of us.—New York Weekly Witness.

Secular News and Comment

The Nobel prize for literature for 1909 has been awarded to Paul Heyse, the German poet and novelist. He was born in Berlin in 1830, and has produced some tragedies, many narrative and epic poems, a collection of novels, and several works on philology.

Dr. Rudolph Matas, of New Orleans, was chosen president of the Southern Surgical and Gynecological Association at the recent annual meeting of that organization in Nashville, Tenn. This is a great distinction. The Association will hold its next session in Washington, D. C.

Judge J. R. Thornton, the newly-elected United States Senator from Louisiana, took the oath of office on the 12th inst. He is said to be a man of fine character, and is held in high esteem by the best people of the commonwealth which he has been chosen to represent. His campaign for election before the State Legislature was managed by the Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, his law partner, and one of the best-known Methodist laymen in this section.

The population of Texas has been announced as 3,896,542—a gain of 27.8 per cent. This makes the Lone Star State the fifth commonwealth of the Union in numbers, those which surpass it being New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Ohio, and the percentage of its growth was larger than any one of these. If Congress were to adhere to the present ratio of apportionment, the showing made would entitle Texas to four additional representatives. But that will very likely be changed, as the Lower House of the National Legislature is already considered unwieldy.

A statue of Baron Frederick Wilhelm von Steuben was unveiled in Washington City on December 7th, with appropriate ceremonies. The unveiling cord was pulled by Miss Helen Taft, and President Taft was one of the speakers of the occasion. The erection of this monument fills the last of the four corners of beautiful Lafayette Square, which faces the White House. Each of them is adorned with the heroic figure of a foreign soldier who helped to bring success to the American arms in the Revolutionary War. The other three thus honored are Lafayette, Rochambeau, and Kosciuszko.

The Library of Congress at Washington now ranks third in numerical strength among the libraries of the world, the two which exceed it being the British Museum, which is first, and Bibliotheque of France, which stands second. The Congressional Library, however, is growing faster than either of these foreign collections, and the indication is that it will be in the lead within a few years. There were added 90,473 volumes during the last fiscal year of the institution, which makes the total figures as follows: Printed volumes, 1,793,158; maps and charts, 118,165; volumes and pieces of music, 517,806; prints, 320,251.

During the decade just past Georgia increased in population 222,790, 17.7 per cent; North Carolina, 312,477, 16.5 per cent; Alabama, 309,396, 16.9 per cent; Mississippi, 245,844, 15.8 per cent; Florida, 224,077, 42.9 per cent; Virginia, 207,428, 11.2 per cent; South Carolina, 175,084, 13.1 per cent; Tennessee, 164,173, 8.1 per cent; Kentucky, 142,731, 6.6 per cent. It will be noted that Louisiana stands next to Florida in the percentage of its growth. The average population per square mile in the same States, according to the last census, is as follows: Kentucky, 57.25; Tennessee, 52.09; Virginia, 51.38; South Carolina, 50.22; North Carolina, 45.42; Georgia, 44.24; Alabama, 41.48; Mississippi, 38.35; Louisiana, 36.47; Florida, 13.88.

A recent issue of the Epworth Era gives the following list of magazines which exclude liquor advertisements, calling it very properly an "Honor Roll": All Story, American Boy, American Magazine, Argosy, Cavalier, Century, Circle, Collier's, Country Life in America, Current Literature, Delineator, Designer, Everybody's Magazine, Garden Magazine, Good Housekeeping, Harper's Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Housekeeper, Housewife, Ladies' Home Journal, Ladies' World, Literary Digest, Living Age, McClure's Magazine, Modern Priscilla, New England Magazine, New Idea Woman's Magazine, Outlook, Railroad Man's Magazine, Review of Reviews, Saturday Evening Post, Scribner, St. Nicholas, Suburban Life, Success, Uncle Remus's Magazine, Woman's Home Companion, World To-Day, Woman's Magazine, World's Work, Youth's Companion.

In a recent issue the Chicago Daily Tribune gives the following interesting data concerning the beginning and growth of the Christian Science cult:

1866—Christian Science proclaimed by Mrs. Eddy.
1875—Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, published by Mrs. Eddy.
1876—First Christian Science association formed.
1879—First Church of Christ, Scientist, formed with 17 members.
1881—Mrs. Eddy ordained as pastor of First Church of Christ, Scientist.
1883—Christian Science Journal established.
1886—National Christian Science Association formed.
1892—September 23, First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, organized.
1893—Der Christian Science Herald in German first published.
1894—First Christian Science Church erected in Boston at cost of $250,000.
1895—The Bible and Science and Health ordained as pastors of the Churches and other preaching abolished.
1895—By-laws of the Church published under title of Church Manual of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston.
1898—Official board of lectureship established.
1906—June 10, new edifice of Mother Church at Boston inaugurated.

The value of farm products in the United States for the year 1910 shows an increase of $205,000,000 over that of the previous year. In his Fourteenth Annual Report Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, observes that, for the first time in the history of the world, a single country has had the output of its various forms of agriculture within twelve months to show a valuation of $8,926,000,000. The chief crops for the year 1910 are estimated as follows:

Corn—3,121,391,000 bushels, 14 per cent. greater than the five-year average; valued at $1,500,000,000.
Cotton—Valued at $900,000,000, including lint and seed; $120,000,000 more than last year.
Hay—Valued at $120,000,000; 13 per cent. larger than the average of the last five years.
Wheat—694,767,000 bushels; valued at $625,000,000, or 7.6 per cent. above the five-year average.
Oats—$380,000,000; 12 per cent. greater than the five-year average.
Potatoes—$328,787,000 bushels; 6 per cent. greater than the five-year average.
Sugar—Both cane and beet, 859,000 short tons; valued at $79,000,000, and with by-products, $97,000,000.
Tobacco—967,150,000 pounds; valued at $95,000,000; 26 per cent. above the five-year average.
Barley—158,138,000 bushels, valued at $75,000,000; 16 per cent. above the five-year average.
Flaxseed—15,050,000 bushels; valued at $33,000,000; 13 per cent. greater than the five-year average.
Rye—32,088,000 bushels; worth $230,000,000.
Rice—1,000,000,000 pounds, valued at $16,000,000; 2 per cent. below the five-year average.

Two Southerners have recently been highly honored by President Taft. Judge Edward Douglas White, who has been on the Supreme Bench of the United States since 1894, was made Chief Justice, and Judge Joseph B. Lamar, of Georgia, was named as one of the Associate Justices of the same great tribunal. The President is being highly commended by the press for rising above partisanship and sectionalism in making his judicial appointments. Mississippians will be pleased to see again a man bearing the illustrious name of Lamar seated among the members of the nation's court of last resort. Judge White is a native son of Louisiana, having been born in the Parish of Lafourche November 3, 1845. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's, near Emmitsburg, Md., the Jesuit College in New Orleans, and at Georgetown College in the District of Columbia. He served in the Confederate Army, and after the war he studied law and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Louisiana in December, 1868. He was appointed to the Supreme Bench of his native commonwealth in 1873, and succeeded James B. Eustis in the United States Senate on March 4, 1891, which position he was filling when Mr. Cleveland made him an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court in 1894. Mr. White has been a life-long member of the Roman Catholic Church, and is said to be a man of worthy character. His abilities are universally admitted to be of a very high order. Louisiana has a right to be proud of her distinguished son, who has become the ninth Chief Justice of the nation. His predecessors were Jay, Rutledge, Ellsworth, Marshall, Taney, Chase, Waite, and Fuller.

Nicaragua is a great country. The mail arrangements there are quite different from ours—are as slow as the natives can make them. Two places, Bluefields and Zelaya, are about 700 miles apart, and it takes a month for a letter to go from one place to the other. Letters from the east to the west coast are frequently sent to New Orleans, thence to San Francisco, thence south to their destination, which takes a month, but it is in less time than the native mail makes it. The natural wealth of the country is almost fabulous. The Nicaraguans have been too busy fighting among themselves to plan industrial development. Lying along the rivers of the east coast are millions of undeveloped acres that could be made to yield fortunes. Buried but a few feet beneath the surface at the headwaters of these streams are quantities of gold, silver and other metals. More nuggets of pure gold have been picked up along the mountain streams in Nicaragua than in any country in the world. In no other country does fruit—oranges, grapes, pineapples and bananas—reach such a stage of perfection, and then there are endless forests of the most beautiful timber. Knowing these facts, the natives—Indians and Spaniards, a mixed breed of 50 varieties—have gone along eking out an existence, with a possible exception here and there. Idleness and intemperance are the great faults of the natives—work is a new word to them. Immorality is the curse of the nation, and before Nicaragua can ever assume a sitting posture among nations its moral code must be reversed. The United States may lend assistance and by the use of the iron hand keep down revolution, but before it becomes a real nation the white man who comes inside its gates must be clean and upright. Upon him rests the blame of the immorality of the natives. From the incoming tide of immigration—those foreigners who have flocked here since hostilities ceased—and the United States recognized Estrada as president, much is expected. For the major part they are men who have invested and are investing money in agricultural or mineral lands. Just at present a revival of the banana industry is taking place. Men from the West and North are investing heavily in bananas, rice and fiber lands. Along the Rio Grande river the jungles are being cleared and planted in bananas, and a large boat is now plying back and forth on the river.

FROM BROTHER FELTS.

Dear Brother Meek: I am sending you the first round on the Aberdeen District. It will be a hustiness round strictly. The second round will be a long round—giving the full time "in the old-fashioned way" to every appointment. The third round will be a business round; and the fourth a long round again. I think this will work on large districts. I have been planning for some time to this end; now I will test the matter so far as I am concerned. I did more work last year than I ever did in one year of my life, yet the results were far from satisfactory. I shall work on a new basis at almost every point this year, and we shall see what we shall see. Failure may be the result, but I will know that I have tried—"tried hard"—and that will be some consolation. The men are adjusting themselves to the recent changes as Methodist preachers are wont to do, and with a minimum of friction. I believe the appointments were made in the spirit of fairness and prayer. My experience is limited, but, such as it is, I have never known a finer spirit among men than characterized Bishop McCoy and his cabinet. Literally every case was considered. If there was any "politics" I was too dense to see it. Give and take was the order of the day, and no man seemed to think that he was entitled to the best men or places.

As you know, a presiding elder does not see much of the Conference. It is work from beginning to end. I like the presiding eldership, yet shall be glad when the Bishop says, "It is enough, come up higher."

I heard only good words of the Advocate and the editor thereof. Surely this is to be a great year for "the best edited paper in the connection." With real enthusiasm I shall endeavor to do my part towards so happy an end.

With best wishes for this Conference year and all the years, I am, cordially, JAMES H. FELTS.

THANKSGIVING AT SCARRITT.

By Eliza Hles.

I am wondering if any who read this have ever spent Thanksgiving at Scarritt. If not, you have surely missed one of the brightest and sweetest epochs in your life, and I must tell you about it.

The real Thanksgiving began days before when the teachers, students and other co-workers were planning thank-offerings for those of this city whose lives were darkened by poverty, sickness or sin. The afternoon before Thanksgiving Day we visited many homes and gave thank-offerings in the way of baskets of food, fruit and bouquets of flowers, these things being donated by the good people of this city and other places.

Then came Thanksgiving morning, clear and crisp, as bright as a noonday, with a song of real gratitude, it seemed, in the air. Union service of the M. E. (South) Churches of the city was held in Central Church. Rev. Caskey preached the sermon from the Feast of the Tabernacles, and so beautifully did he bring out and dwell on the fact that God bade the Israelites bring to their feast the willow as well as the palm branches, that we came home feeling thankful for the sorrows as well as the joys that our past lives had known. At 1:30 p. m., dinner was served and it was a sumptuous feast. Miss Gibson presided, assisted by the other teachers, while a number of the senior class served. After dinner were given several welcome toasts and responses. Miss Cunningham, president of the senior class, gave the first toast to "The House Beautiful," which, you know, is "Scarritt." She was followed by several others, and then was given a quartette greatly enjoyed by all. After dinner, a social hour was spent in singing and talking, and some taking walks. At 7 p. m., we assembled in the chapel for vesper service, which, this evening especially, consisted in praise offering. This service was indeed like a benediction, and, somehow, we felt nearer each other and, as a consequence of that feeling, nearer God when at 9:30 we went to our rooms.

With all my happy Thanksgivings spent in Louisiana, my dear home State, this one at Scarritt leads the rest, and is a strong link in the chain of my love to the highest ideal of life.

Louisiana is represented by only two students this year. Miss Bartlette from near New Orleans, and myself from De Ridder Church, Calcasieu Parish. Miss Bartlette is taking the course for self-improvement, while I am a deaconess candidate. We long for others from our State to join us, and I have great plans for Louisiana: for instance, I fancy that some day we will have a Louisiana room here, as so many of her sister States are represented by rooms they have furnished.

The work here is so interesting and elevating that I wish every woman might be able to come here and spend two years.

I should be so glad to know that the Christians who read this will pray for me in my work.

LET METHODISTS BE LOYAL.

There is one phase of church loyalty to which I wish to call the attention of Methodists. That is their marriage to others of a different faith than their own, especially to Catholics. The laws of our country recognize the legality of marriages celebrated by ministers of various denominations and by certain civil officers. Our Church recognizes this, as do many other denominations. But not so with Roman Catholicism. When a Protestant decides to marry a Catholic he or she is expected, so I am informed, to take the Catholic vows before marriage, and at the marriage altar to promise to bring up their offspring, if any, in the Catholic faith.

I have in mind a young woman of Methodist faith who married a Catholic. Before the marriage the young man's mother with tears in her eyes pleaded that they be married by the Catholic priest, saying he would be excommunicated if they were not, and further urged that the Methodists make no demands of such a nature on its members, the idea being to show that it was consistent for a Methodist to be married by a Catholic priest, whereas it would be inconsistent for a Catholic to be married by any other than his own.

Other members of the family interfered, and the priest showed his hand, but the girl stoutly refused to submit to the unreasonable demands of Catholic dogma, and the couple were united in marriage by her own minister.

The young man's people were not long in forgiving him, if his church did not. They are living happily together, and I do not think she or her people, or the people of her church have ever tried to induce him to abandon his faith. My information is that he, like a dutiful son, returns to the Church of his mother occasionally; then, like a good husband, goes with his wife to her Church. I have always admired this young woman for her moral courage, her strength of character, and her idea of justice.

Would that this bar were removed from all denominations, but, above all, I think it high time for Protestants of all faiths to assert their rights and not submit to the arbitrary demands of Roman Catholicism. Your own Church does not demand it of them: Why should they expect it of you?

Oh, for more Methodists with backbone!

A METHODIST LAYMAN.

LOOKING FOR THE HANDFULS.

By Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

And she went and gleaned in the field after the reapers.—Ruth, 2:3.

When Ruth was gleaned in the barley-field of Boaz, the generous farmer commanded his young men to "let fall some of the handfuls of purpose for her." They were told to "leave them, that she might glean them;" and they were not to rebuke her for gathering them up. So she gleaned in the field until the evening, and heat put what she had gleaned, and it was nearly a bushel of barley. Happy, honest toiler! She received her reward. Instead of consulting a false pride and loitering the day in idleness, her brave industry brought her more than the ephah of grain. It made her the wife of lordly Boaz, the mistress of his mansion, and the ancestress of the promised Messiah. So they who humble themselves are often exalted.

But there is a rich spiritual truth to be gleaned from this beautiful incident in the pastoral of "Ruth." Just as the liberal heart of Boaz commanded his men to let fall the handfuls for the nimble fingers of the maiden, so God is wont to let fall His blessings for those who are diligent in doing His will. No true workman works in vain. Sometimes in the heat of the long day a Christian pastor is tempted to discouragement. He sees but few results. But, presently, God lets fall a handful of golden stalks to cheer his heart. Some souls are converted. Some fallow-ground hearers begin to show signs of a crop. His prayer meetings begin to give token of a revival. Perhaps a project that lay very near his heart is taken up by willing hands and open purses. Or it may be that the conscientious toiler gets a marvelous blessing into his own soul—a new manifestation of Jesus as his personal guest and comforter—a new in-coming of the Holy Spirit. Our Heavenly Father knoweth both what to bestow and when to bestow. There are thousands of pastors and Sunday-school workers who, after their summer vacations, are just entering on a new season of gleanings. Let us give them the inspiring hint that, just at the right time and in the right way, the Master of the field will let fall the handful. Be not weary in well-doing. In "due season" (which always means God's time, and not ours) ye shall gather the precious blessing. It may not come in the way you look for it, or he just the kind you expected, but it will fill your basket. You and I do not serve a stingy Master.

This incident in Boaz's barley-field has a beautiful application to Bible study. Too many Christians never practice a careful gleaning of the inspired Word. In fact, to such careless readers a large and precious portion of the Word is as utterly unknown territory as the headwaters of the Nile. They never search the Scriptures. But when we patiently go through the wonderful domain of truth with open eye bent down humbly to seek for the hid treasures, oh! what handfuls of fresh promises, and fertile suggestions, and marvelous teachings are dropped in our path. We pick up a truth never dreamed of in many an out-of-the-way passage. In some historical incident, or some neglected verse of prophecy, or some dry chapter about Jewish rites and ceremonies, we find a whole sheaf of divine teaching. God never put one page in his Book without a purpose. There is more than a bushel of barley in the Book of Leviticus. Many persons pass by this portion of the Word as a mere upholstery shop of priestly robes and Jewish ritualities. But to him who can discern the things of the Spirit, the Book is full of most rich and rare instructiveness. It typifies the Christian life most wonderfully. Even that long catalogue of names in the fourth chapter of the First Book of Chronicles furnishes a text for a capital sermon in that single name of "Jabez," the child of sorrow, who turned out to be a man of many virtues.

In every field which Providence opens up to us there is precious grain to reward our gleaning. Some of my readers may even now be treading a field over which the sharp sickle of adversity has passed with keen and cutting afflictions. Your hopes have been laid low. Has that stubble-field nothing left for you but the thorns of discontent and the brambles of unbelief? Will you be so blind and foolish as to prick your fingers with Satan's briars? My afflicted friend, the God of love will let fall some precious handfuls of comfort, if you will only search for them with the eye of patient humility. In fact, there are scores of golden passages in God's Word that were only intended for such as these. They are as truly designed for thee as is the letter left by the postman with thy own name on the envelope. These passages of comfort are Christ's love letters to thee. Never wouldst thou have received them if thou hadst not gone through the mown field of bitter disappointment or hereavement. Here is one handful of consolation let fall for thy gleaning: "My grace is sufficient for thee." "As thy day, so shall thy strength be." "I will be with thee in trouble, and will deliver thee." "All things work together for good to them who love God." "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Here are but specimens of the treasures of strength and comfort which God drop-peth in the path of his chastisements for his own to gather up.

What graces, too, are to be gathered in those stubble-fields of affliction! Abraham found there the noble commendation that he was "the friend of God." Daniel won his crown there. Job came out of that field, which the scythe had apparently swept clean, with a whole armful of spiritual blessings. Paul never would have been the man that he was if the first crop of his selfish aims and ambitions had not been cut away. Then he turned gleaner for the Lord, and went home to heaven more richly laden than Ruth came home from the barley field. To every one of us the Master appointeth his or her field of toil or of trial. He hath the handful for each if we have but the faith to look for it. At the final hour of judgment the question to each of us will be: "Where hast thou gleaned to-day?"

CHRISTMAS GIFT.

We offer you an opportunity to make a Christmas gift which will be highly appreciated and permanently useful. The Trustees of the Mississippi Conference Training School have purchased forty-five acres of land to be used in aiding young men of moderate means to pay expenses while at school. Where can you find a better investment for your money or your gifts than in developing the young men of our country?

Send this Christmas fund to me or to P. L. Blackwell.

OUR SAVIOR CHRIST WAS BORN.

Our Savior Christ was born
That we might have the rose without the thorn;
All through his desert life
He felt the thorns of human sin and strife.
His blessed feet were bare
To every hurting brier; he did not spare
One bleeding footstep on the way
He came to trace for us, until the day
The cruel thorn was pressed upon the brow,
That smiles upon us from his glory now.

And so he won for us
Sweet, thornless, everlasting flowers thus!
He bids our desert way
Rejoice and blossom as the rose to-day.
There is no hidden thorn
In his good gifts of grace; he would adorn
The lives that are his alone,
With brightness and with beauty all his own.
Then praise the Lord who came on Christmas day
To give the rose and take the thorns away.

WHOAKSIRIE'S CHRISTMAS.

By Mattie Wilcox Noble.

Whoaksirie, a little Korean girl, had never even heard of Christmas, but a few days before Christmas, while she was playing on the street with her tiny baby brother, "Long Life," tied to her back, his head rolling from side to side, and his eyes staring at the sun, she saw a crowd coming her way. They were mostly noisy children and women and a few rude men, trying, all at once, to see the center of the group and touch some one in their midst.

As Whoaksirie lived in one of the less frequented streets of the city, it was, indeed, strange to see so many people making such a commotion on her street. She immediately pressed through the crowd and saw the center of attraction and excitement—a queer-looking woman dressed in an unheard-of way. At first sight she thought the lady must be very old, because her hair was light, but a further glance showed her a smiling, youthful face in spite of the light hair. The hair was all in a wavy tangle—at least those in the crowd were asking their countrywoman at the lady's side if the reason the hair was so tangled was because it was never combed. Whoaksirie afterward learned that the strange Americans really liked curly hair and did all they could to make it look curly, whereas her Korean people use oil to make their straight black hair more straight and smooth.

At a little old mud hut down the street the crowd stopped. The lady and all who could crowd in entered. Whoaksirie pushed her way through the crowd, and stood with the baby looking at the strange lady who sat on the floor, the center of a group of loving admirers, for the inmates of the house knew her and made her a hearty welcome. An old, old woman, with begrimed hands, sat very close to her, clasped her hands, and nodded approval to all that was said. Soon they began to sing: a number of the women taking out, from a cloth wrapper that had been bound around their waists, little red hymnals.

Whoaksirie had never before heard any singing but the monotonous, low, wane songs of the dancing girls. The singing from the little red book, led by that strange white lady, was wonderful to her. Soon the old, old woman was repeating the Apostles' Creed. Then the curly-haired lady told a sweet story—the story of the birth in a manger of a Savior, a blessed Spirit, not a horrible demon, the only kind of spirit Whoaksirie had ever known. She told how the Savior loved children, and how on his birthday beautiful entertainments were gotten up by those who loved him. She told how the Savior's birthday would soon be here, and a great celebration was to be held in the church, the large building they could find inside of the West Gate, and asked all to come and learn more about it all.

So that is the way Whoaksirie heard of Christmas. Christmas morning was the same as any other morning in Whoaksirie's home—no glad, happy greetings, no Santa Claus, no clean clothes. Whoaksirie didn't even wash her face and hands or comb her hair, not as yet having learned how to prepare to go to church. In the early morning she witnessed a fight between her father and mother, a fight over engaging a wicked sorcerer to drive the demons from their home. Her mother was still pulling her father's topknot when Whoaksirie ran away with her baby brother to the church.

O, the beauty of it all! She thought she must be in heaven. The church was decorated with evergreens, with bright paper flowers entwined among them. The long partition between the men and the women was loaded with beautiful decorations. The church was full. Up near the front sat a large number of clean, bright girls, the largest number she had ever seen together before. She learned that they attended the mission day school. On the other side of the partition she also went to see all that she could, and found the boys of the mission school up near the front. A beautiful program was rendered. She wished she could always remain there and hear the story of the infant Jesus. A kind lady put her hand on Whoaksirie's disheveled hair and invited her to sit down with the other girls. At the close of the program a bag of candy, nuts and fruit was given each, the money for them all having been given by Whoaksirie's own countrymen, members of the church. Each also received a picture card, cards which the strange white lady had received from friends in her country, who loved those sisters and brothers whom they had never seen. Whoaksirie, too, received a bag and a card.

She ran all the way home and showed the card and bag of good things, and told the wonderful news to her father and mother.

All day the father said insulting things about the strange folks who had come from over the seas, but at night, when he looked up to the hill where stood the church, he was amazed to see the beauty, for all around it on the outside under the eaves were hung lighted colored paper lanterns, and in the grounds evergreen arches were also hung with lighted lanterns. It was a brilliant night scene. Whoaksirie's father began to think he, too, would like to see the meaning of it all, so he, his wife, Whoaksirie and Long Life all went up to the church, where the birth of the Savior of the world was again proclaimed, and before the service closed Whoaksirie, her father, and mother went to the altar and gave in their names as desirous of leading new lives and of learning more of the God-man, the Savior who was born on Christmas, many years ago, and still stirs the hearts of men.—From the New York Christian Advocate.

THE POWER OF GOSPEL SONG.

"When you sing, preach. Let every note be a sermon that will save souls for Christ."

This was Charles M. Alexander's instruction to his great chorus choir at White City recently.

And when the choir sang, it preached. Dr. Chapman's discourse was utterly unnecessary. He said so himself, and reversed the order of the service, inviting those who wanted to give up their sins and begin leading Christian lives, to begin then, even before his text was announced.

And hundreds of people took a stand for Christ without hearing a sermon. The singing had done the work. It was a revelation in evangelistic methods. The vast throng marveled at the wonderful power of song.

The Casino was packed with humanity eager to hear the gospel in song and service, nearly an hour before the time scheduled for the service to commence. Several thousand attended an overflow meeting in the dance hall at White City, led by the English evangelist, the Rev. W. R. Lane. Another thousand were turned away.

And everyone who attended those two meetings last night felt the power of these sermon-songs which Mr. Alexander has inspired his choruses to sing.

"I want you to sing these songs to-night," the singing evangelist told his choir, "as they ought to be sung. Sing them right, even if you have to knock the music to pieces. It's the easiest thing in the world to sing a song right—and it's the easiest thing in the world to spoil a song."

"Now, sing these songs to-night in a way that will bring men to Christ. Sing them as if there wasn't any preacher here to persuade men and women to give up their sins. The songs can do it."

Music has its own philosophy. Some one has written that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." But possibly that writer had never heard an Alexander choir sing gospel hymns. These have a special charm. They speak to the deepest feelings of the heart and dissolve the hearer into ecstasies. A crowd left passive has a curious resisting power; but, when it does its own singing, led by an Alexander choir, such as sang at White City, it fuses.

The voices running together in concurrent waves of sound generate a sort of single corporate consciousness. The singers, choir and congregation cease to be units—they are parts of a living whole.

These hymns, sung as Alexander wants them sung—as he demands that they shall be sung—are masterful sermons, set to music, framed in memories that run back to childhood, and gather strength and sweetness from all the best and happiest experiences of life.

As the choir and congregation sang last night Dr. Chapman sat quietly in his chair watching the people. He saw that the music had done its work. After a solo by Edward Naftzger, he stepped quickly to the front of the platform and held up his hand. A great hush fell upon the people. Their very breathing seemed to have ceased.

"I am going to change the order of things to-night," he said, quietly. "I am going to give my invitation now instead of after my sermon."

And hundreds confessed Christ.

Full-throated, in mellow tones that seemed to drip with honey, Mr. Naftzger had sung his solo. There was a prayer in every word, a sigh in every little note of the song, and tears in every bar which seemed to burn themselves into the very souls of his listeners.

"Thro' the gate of the city they led him, still

Bearing his cross,

Till he came to the summit of Calvary's hill,

As a sheep to the shearer meekly led,

He endured it for us, and no word he said,

Bearing his cross.

The simple melody became a wonderful symphony as Robert Harkness, the author of the song, improvised an accompaniment as if touched by the Divine Music Master. It swept on and on and on. The people sat enthralled with bowed heads, their tears mingling.

"Though he knew what it meant, yet he turned not back.

Bearing his cross;

And he patiently trod all the weary track,

Bearing his cross;

Though the tree was so heavy 'twould not compare

With the burden of sin he carried there,

Bearing his cross."

A woman sobbed. A gray-bearded man buried his face in his hands and wept. And the song continued.—Inter-Ocean.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

The Advocate would make a fitting Christmas present for your friend. Fifty-two times during the year it would remind him of you, and also speak of Him who is the supreme need of every life.

Our rules concerning the government of our paper are made to keep, not to break. We ask our patrons to read them anew. It is our purpose to adhere more closely to them during the coming year. Two hundred words and no poetry for free obituaries; and no communications written with a pencil accepted, are two regulations that we would particularly emphasize.

Read the publisher's statement, "To the Preachers and People," appearing in this issue. What he has to say is timely and justified by existing conditions. We are informed that even some of our preachers have failed to pay their accounts and renew their subscriptions. If our pastors will not support their paper, how can we expect others to do so?

The price of the Advocate is $1.50 for single subscriptions, and $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Those sending in subscriptions may retain 10 cents on each one to cover the expense of remitting. $1.25 is positively our lowest price, except to ministers and their widows. Our friends must not take the liberty of reducing our terms. We also ask them please to remember not to send us small checks on local banks, since upon each of them we have to pay exchange.

Let every one who can (layman or minister) pay for his paper one year in advance. Look at the label on your Advocate, and, if you are in arrears, please remit. 1912 subscriptions are due now, and not ten or twelve months hence. No periodical can be successfully issued to be paid for after it has been received a year. We are pleased to note the statement of the publisher, that he intends to work toward a cash basis, which means that we will not carry subscriptions on our list which are three months in arrears. The credit system is a poor way of doing business.

We have procured editorial assistance, ordered a better quality of paper upon which to print, and laid the predicate for making the Advocate better and more attractive during the incoming year. And now the question is, Will our constituency sustain us in the effort? That remains to be seen. To do so successfully our friends will have to bestir themselves and give us an increased circulation. This will have to come promptly, or we will have to reduce expenses and make a cheaper paper, or increase the subscription price to $2. We appeal to our presiding elders, pastors, and every reader to help us NOW. Let clubs be renewed and new subscriptions solicited in every charge at the earliest possible day. Shall we not make 1912 the best year in the history of our time-honored Conference organ?

Following the example of the Wesleyan Advocate, we are going to carry as an "Honor Roll" a list of the charges in which every official member takes his Conference paper. Number 1 is Mansfield, La., where the Rev. A. W. Turner is pastor. Who will report number 2? A preacher cannot do a better work than to place the Advocate in the hands of his officials.

OF LITTLE IMPORTANCE.

The press dispatches report that at a recent meeting of the Pittsburg Presbytery, in Pennsylvania, a committee recommended the substitution of immersion baptism for that of baptism by sprinkling and affusion. This proposed change is said to have been originated by Dr. D. S. Schaff, of the Western Theological Seminary, who contended earnestly for its adoption, affirming that the word "baptizo" means "to put under," and that it is so understood in Germany, where the Baptists have little following. The views of the learned Doctor seem, however, to have made little impression upon his brethren, and the measure suggested was emphatically rejected.

The truth is, this occurrence is of little consequence. Yet its very unusualness is likely to give it wide publicity and cause undue significance to be attached to it. Men will never see things alike in any realm of inquiry. The day of oneness of opinion, if it ever comes, will be in the millenium. Nor will people cease now and then to change their views until the end of time. The passing of some distinguished personage from one denomination to another has almost invariably been accorded undue importance. Manning and Newman went from the Established Church of England to Roman Catholicism in the last century, and much ado was made about it, but their abandonment of Protestantism exerted little appreciable influence upon its fortunes. A few years ago Dr. Edmund B. Fairfield, an eminent Baptist scholar, was engaged by a printing establishment maintained for the propagation of that faith to write a volume on baptism, but upon a careful reinvestigation of the subject became convinced that the Baptist position is wrong, and connected himself with the Congregational Church. Later he wrote his little book, "Letters on Baptism," in which he exactly corroborates the Methodist position that water baptism is the symbol of an inward spiritual cleansing, and that any one of the three forms commonly practiced is allowable. But if the cause of the immersionists was seriously hurt by being repudiated by Dr. Fairfield, there is no record of it.

The contention concerning the mode and subjects of baptism is well-nigh as old as the history of the Christian Church. There are distinguished scholars on both sides of the question, and only a bigot would presume to assert that he is able to settle it conclusively. This much, however, must be conceded: an overwhelming majority of the adherents of Christ reject the view of exclusive immersion. But the different Protestant denominations can well afford to be charitable and tolerant toward each other concerning this, as well as many other controverted matters. Especially is this true since the largest of them is pitifully small compared with the whole of Christendom, and no one of them has the remotest prospect of ever becoming the dominant church.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

This institution sustained a great loss early in the fall in the death of its honored President, Dr. W. L. Weber. Notwithstanding this blow, the session has continued under the capable supervision of Rev. H. N. Harrison and his associates, who are doing a splendid work. The loyalty of the trustees, who have carried the interests of the college daily upon their hearts, and who have not hesitated to draw upon their means when necessary to keep it going, cannot be too highly commended. Nor will their toil and sacrifice prove in vain; for, despite present incumbrances, the plucky Methodists of Louisiana will not allow this institution to suspend or pass into other hands. On the contrary, they will save it, maintain it, and enlarge it. It is their only plant for the education of their young womanhood, and they cannot afford to let it go down. The fine collection at Homer was but a beginning; other contributions will follow, and the campaign for funds will go on until success is achieved. The Advocate is at the service of those who have this work in hand, and we hope that they will freely use our columns. Let every Methodist in the State lend a hand to Mansfield College in this hour of need.

OUR ORPHANAGES.

We call special attention to the statements of Brothers Vaughan and Williams in this issue concerning our orphanage work. There is no nobler cause than this, and the little ones at Ruston and Jackson should not be forgotten in this Christmas season. They are in the care of the Church, and though father and mother may be sleeping beneath the seared grass, should not be overlooked by Santa Claus. From our hundreds of churches and thousands of comfortable, well-to-do homes let gifts flow forth to make glad the hearts of these children, committed to our hands by Providence. In Mississippi $5,000 is needed to complete the new buildings under way at the Home, and next Sunday, December 25, is the time appointed for bringing this enterprise to the attention of the people and soliciting aid. It is hoped that not a single pastor in the State will fail to co-operate in this movement. The one hundred and ten thousand Methodists to whom Brother Williams looks for support will readily contribute this amount if they are given a fair opportunity to do so. Let us round out the old year and pass into history with this substantial achievement.

AN IMPORTANT OMISSION.

Through an oversight, no mention was made in last week's Advocate of an important matter that was brought to the attention of the Louisiana Conference in session at Homer.

The Board of Trustees of the College presented to the Board of Education a complete statement of the condition of Mansfield. The situation was found to be so acute that it was deemed wise to make a public appeal for assistance. The service Saturday evening was, therefore, given over to the Board of Education and after a strong address by Rev. R. H. Wynn, subscriptions were taken for the College. The total amount subscribed was a little more than three thousand dollars. These subscriptions are payable on or before May 1st, and the contribution of this amount will enable the College to continue its work. It is exceedingly important that these subscriptions be paid when due.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Clarksdale, Miss., has been appointed to collect the subscriptions due the Endowment Fund of Millsaps College within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, in place of Rev. T. W. Lewis, who has been transferred to another State. It is urged that those whose pledges to this cause are now due, remit to Brother Lewis at the earliest date possible. A dollar paid now amounts to considerably more than a dollar, as the remaining part of the gift made by the Rockefeller Board of Education will become available on the condition that we raise a certain amount within the next few days. The time this generous offer is open to us is limited, and must not be allowed to pass. Let every friend of Millsaps College who has promised money come to its assistance at once.

DR. JOHN T. SAWYER.

The impression having gone out that Dr. Sawyer is in feeble health, he desires us to state that he has never been in better health than at present. He considers himself equal to the hardest sort of ministerial work, by reason of his solid physical condition and his long and varied experience as a pulpitman and a diligent pastor. Having taken no special charge, that he might be free to go anywhere he may be called to labor for deathless souls, he holds himself ready to serve his brethren in revival meetings throughout Louisiana and the neighboring States. The brethren will make no mistake by securing him for their revival services.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Hereafter Dr. J. A. Parker's address will be Lafayette, La., care of the Lafayette Drug Store.

Our next issue will contain first-hand communications from two of our Bishops. Wait and see who they are.

Sunday, January 1, is to be a day of special prayer for a revival throughout the Church. Let every congregation and individual Methodist observe it.

Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of the North Mississippi Conference, requests us to state that correspondents should address him at 1402 Bell Avenue, Columbus, Miss.

"We are pleased with the paper you are giving us," so writes Mr. A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, La., in a business letter to the Advocate office. Thank you, brother.

The new pastor of Noel Memorial Church, the Rev. F. A. Downs, is a transfer from the Pacific Conference. He comes bringing with him an excellent reputation.

Mrs. A. I. Townsley addressed the Epworth Leaguers of Second Church, this city, last Sabbath evening. She has greatly endeared herself to the young people of that congregation, who give her up with great reluctance.

Just as we are closing our forum for the press there comes the sad news of the death of Rev. B. B. Sullivan, of the North Mississippi Conference. A true and faithful man has passed to his reward. May God comfort and sustain the grief-stricken family!

In a personal note Bishop E. E. Hoss says: "I had a great trip to the Orient, but I was mighty glad to get home." And his innumerable host of friends are delighted to have him back. "Not a few hearts felt lonely while he tarried on the other side of the Pacific."

Always a hustler, Rev. J. E. Thomas seems now to be outdoing even himself in that line. As proof of this witness, the following: "Bishop James H. McCoy will hold the Columbus District Conference at Sturges, April 19-21." The editor hopes to be there.

Rev. A. E. Vaughan, the new pastor of the Second Methodist Church of this city, occupied his pulpit for the first time last Sunday morning, delivering an impressive discourse. He is not a stranger in New Orleans, having formerly been pastor in Algiers, where he made a good record.

Rev. M. L. Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, who has been for the past week undergoing treatment at Tauro Infirmary, this city, is reported to be progressing favorably at this writing. This is cause for gratitude to his many friends. Let prayer continue to be made for this faithful servant of the Church.

The following changes have been made in the Columbus District since the Annual Conference: W. C. Carlisle, who was assigned to Crawford, goes to Second Church, Columbus; J. H. Bell, who was appointed to Second Church, goes to Cedar Bluff, and J. M. Guinn, who was at Cedar Bluff, has been transferred to Crawford.

Commenting on Bishop Murrah's sermon at the Louisiana Conference, a prominent member of that body remarked to the editor a few days ago: "Not since I listened to the hushed voice of the lamented Galloway have I heard such eloquence." It is not unusual for our Mississippi Bishop to clothe thoughts that breathe in words that burn.

Rev. T. J. Halfacre is in place at Kilnichael, Miss., where the people have given him a hearty reception. He is pleased with his new home, as well he may be. We know something of that flock and have no hesitancy in testifying that it embraces not a few choice spirits. Providence has been kind to Brother Halfacre in leading him into his present field of work.

Rev. H. T. Carley began his pastorate at Louisiana Avenue on Sunday, the 18th inst., by the presentation of a strong message from Matthew vi. 10: "Thy kingdom come." Last Monday's Picayune contained an interesting synopsis of the sermon, and also a good picture of this distinguished young minister, than whom the Louisiana Conference has none more promising.

In a communication to the editor a few days since, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of the North Mississippi Conference, among other things, said: "The outlook is encouraging at West Point for the new year—my last year in this charge. Much needs to be done, and we pray that, under God, much may be accomplished." Brother Dorsey is in the habit of achieving substantial results wherever he labors.

A note from Miss Minnie Buntin, of Meridian, Miss., written on the 14th inst., reads as follows: "Will you please state in the Advocate that Mrs. Hughes, mother of Miss Elizabeth Hughes, died at her home in Daleville, Miss., at 3 o'clock Saturday morning, December 10. A fuller notice will be sent later." We chronicle the sad occurrence with regret and extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. M. M. Black, after two years at Port Gibson, has been assigned to Philadelphia, a growing town in the good county of Neshoba. A few years ago this church was on a circuit, but it is now said to be a $1,200 appointment, with a prospect of still further development. It is needless to observe that this charge has been highly favored in the assignment of its new pastor. Brother Black is one of the most scholarly and capable ministers of our acquaintance.

In the person of Rev. N. B. Harmon, the congregation at Hazlehurst, Miss., will have a vigilant and resourceful overseer. He has the reputation of being a man of intellectual reach and spiritual power. This church embraces in its membership a number of strong and capable workers, among them being the Hon. J. S. Sexton, who lately has been doing so much for the Orphanage at Jackson. We predict a year of prosperity and progress for Brother Harmon and his flock.

Rev. J. R. Jones, the presiding elder of the Jackson (Miss.) District, has long been known as a masterful campaigner in the field, and lately we have heard him accused of being not less wise and efficient in the councils of the cabinet. Happy the man who knows both how to plan and execute! Such a wealth of endowment is not often found, but we can readily believe that Brother Jones possesses it. At any rate, he is making Methodism boom throughout the capital district of Mississippi.

Homer entertained the Louisiana Conference so delightfully that we think she deserves in the way of ministerial service the best that is going. She will come pretty near having it with Rev. A. S. Lutz in charge. He is a brilliant preacher, a diligent pastor, and a charming Christian gentleman. And if he has any deficiencies, he has a helper who can abundantly supply them. Bishop Murrah was evidently partial to the little city which treated him and all her other guests so royally.

Rev. J. F. Foster, who for the past three years has been in charge of our work in Algiers, but who has been appointed to De Ridder, in the Shreveport District, will be not a little missed in the church circles of this city. He is a man of striking appearance, of scholarly acquirements, and a most affable and agreeable gentleman. The only charge we have ever heard against him is that he obstinately refuses to become a Benedict. And in the course of time he may yet silence that complaint.

It pained us to see Rev. J. P. Haney, who last year served the Ponchatoula charge so acceptably, looking pale and weak at Homer. He felt that the work in that field was too heavy for him in his enfeebled condition, and on this account requested a change. He was sent to East Feliciana, where he will not be so much taxed, and he hopes by an outdoor life to regain his health. He is a faithful, worthy man, and we earnestly pray that his recovery may be speedy and complete.

The transfer of the Rev. A. I. Townsley to Arcadia, La., takes from New Orleans one of its most enterprising and popular ministers. Brother Townsley is commonly spoken of as a live wire, and such he surely is. Things must move when he holds the reins. He is fluent and eloquent in the pulpit, a stirrer in the pastorate, and has the organizing gift to a remarkable degree. The Arcadia people should send Bishop Murrah a note of thanks for assigning them this capable and progressive young leader.

Writing from Yazoo City on December 18th, Rev. E. E. Langford says: "My father, C. M. Langford, passed away between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning. He lacked one month of being eighty years old, and had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church since he was six years of age. We deeply sympathize with Brother Langford in his great loss, and pray that God may comfort him and all others whose hearts have been touched by this sorrow. We hope to publish a fitting memoir of the deceased in the near future."

We were made happy to observe the high esteem in which the Rev. W. H. Saunders is held by the Conference of his adoption—the Mississippi. While at Hattiesburg we frequently heard his name mentioned, but never except in terms of commendation. He was returned to Washington Street, Vicksburg, where he is doing a fine work and is deservedly popular. When the South Mississippi brethren feel that they can spare him, we should be delighted to have him again upon his native heath in the northern part of the State. Such men are all too rare.

Rev. Robert Selby, who was assigned to Moss Point at the late session of the Mississippi Conference, is one of the best equipped members of that historic body. He has been in charge of the Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, for the past quadrennium, where he rendered service of an exceptionally high order. He has also made his influence strongly felt in South Mississippi as the secretary of the Board of Education, taking great interest in all of the Methodist schools of that section, as well as in those which are of a connectional character. The future has large things in store for this zealous and growing itinerant.

A fine audience assembled in the Carrollton Church on Sunday last to greet the new shepherd of that flock—the Rev. J. G. Snelling, who comes from the Noel Memorial Church of Shreveport, where he wrought a remarkable work. He delivered a striking sermon from Ephesians iii. 19: "That we might be filled with all the fullness of God," after which Mr. C. O. Chambers read a summary of the year's work at Carrollton, showing that $4,131.78 had been raised for all purposes, including $1,150 paid on the parsonage, extinguishing the debt upon it. The Sunday school of this congregation will have its usual Christmas tree celebration on Dec. 29th, when a collection of articles will be received for the Mary Weylin Mission.

A Talihna (Oklahoma) paper thus refers to the Rev. J. W. Rogers, lately transferred from the North Mississippi Conference to that growing State of the West: "The new pastor of the Methodist Church arrived in time to fill his pulpit Sunday. He made a good impression upon the large audience that greeted him at both hours. He convinced all that he is a student, a preacher, and a man who can bring things to pass. This is a remarkable charge in many respects. It has a good house of worship, a neat, well-furnished parsonage, perhaps the best Sunday school in the State, all things considered; an Epworth League second to none, and a loyal membership to back up the preacher." We are pleased to note that our young friend has a place so promising, and that he has begun the work of the new Conference year so auspiciously.

From a recent number of the Dispatch of Columbus, Miss., we clip the following: "Dr. H. G. Henderson, who succeeds Rev. T. W. Lewis as pastor of the First Methodist Church, occupied the pulpit for the first time last Sunday morning, the 11th, and made a splendid impression upon all who heard him. Both the morning and evening service was attended by a large congregation, and all who heard Dr. Henderson declare him to be one of the most gifted men who has ever served as pastor in this city. He is not only a man of learning, but possesses forensic ability of an unusually high degree, and both sermons were marked by flashes of brilliant oratory. Dr. Henderson paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Lewis, declaring that he considered it an honor to succeed such a capable and universally popular man. The evening services were attended by the congregations of the First Baptist and First Presbyterian churches. The pastors of these congregations, Rev. W. A. Hewitt and Rev. J. J. Hill, D. D., were also present."

A most resourceful workman is the Rev. W. W. Holmes, the new pastor of Felicity Street Church, New Orleans. He knows how to reach and enlist the parishioners whom he serves, and it does not take him long to do so. His initial sermon last Sabbath was a model in its simplicity, earnestness and directness. Among other things, he said: "The first thing essential is that I must know my people, and between now and the first of the new year I want to visit every household in my charge. I want you to take me into your confidence, and I sincerely hope that you will. I want to be your pastor in joy and in sorrow, and I say now that whenever you want me, at any hour of the day or night, send for me and I will come. Let me into your homes and lives as a real pastor; I crave this of you. I also want to get close to your children. I love children, and it is my intention to have a great big Sunday school." Ringing words are these, and they sound as if they came from the lips of one with a burning heart.

REV. B. B. SULLIVAN DEAD.

Dear Brother Meek: Rev. B. B. Sullivan died yesterday, Dec. 18, 1910, at Longtown, with pneumonia. He was stricken Tuesday morning just as he was on the eve of departing for his new work at Black Hawk, whither his goods had already been shipped. We will ship his remains to Aberdeen to-night; thence they will be carried eighteen miles east of that city to his old home for burial. Let prayer be made for the hereaved loved ones.

W. M. YOUNG.

Como, Miss., Dec. 19, 1910.

TO PREACHERS AND PEOPLE.

Dear Brethren: Many of our subscribers, each year, allow themselves to fall in arrears by failing to renew their subscriptions. We carry them in good faith, believing that they will eventually pay up. Our experience has taught us that we are making a mistake in carrying as many as 2,000 delinquent subscribers on our list at one time. We have to pay for the paper, postage and labor on these delinquent subscriptions, only to finally cut them off after they have been furnished with the paper about one year. This entails an annual loss of about $2,000 to our paper, and we are sorely taxed in the effort to overcome it. Many of our preachers send in clubs one year and neglect them the next year. At the present writing we have on our mailing list about 2,000 subscribers who owe us $1.50. If we could persuade 500 of these delinquent subscribers to pay up we would be made happy and the way would be smooth for us. We are compelled every year to cut such subscriptions off of our list, and thereby relinquish all claim to the money earned by and due us. Many of these cut-off subscriptions are sent in again soon after being cut off as new subscribers, and the amount due us is lost sight of. We have discontinued 500 in the past two weeks.

In view of the foregoing statement, and in order to save ourselves, the publisher of the Advocate has decided that it were best to place the paper on a cash basis, even if the subscription list is materially decreased. Subscribers are hereby notified that within the next sixty days those in arrears three months or longer will be stricken from our mailing lists. This includes preachers, as well as laymen. If you appreciate our efforts, and really desire that the paper continue to make its weekly visits to you, look at the little red or yellow address label on your paper and see if your date of expiration is past. If so, send your renewal in at once. If your label reads "Dec. 10," it means that your subscription expired December, 1910, and is due to be renewed. SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE DUE IN ADVANCE. (Many of the payments made at the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences are not yet indicated on the address labels, as the revision of our lists has not been completed. These, however, will be shown on the labels of our first issue of the new year on January 4th.)

This move is forced on us, because our subscribers withhold from us that which is our due, and we are often forced to borrow money at a high rate of interest in order to carry them, only to eventually find that many do not intend to pay.

Preachers who failed to renew their subscriptions at Conference are requested to renew at once. Preachers who, at Conference, paid their subscriptions for 1910, are urged to pay also in advance for 1911. Many only pay for the expiring year who should renew in advance. Brethren, please respond to this appeal, and help us to place ourselves on a cash basis. When a personal check is sent, add 10 cents to pay for collection.

BEVERLY BEAUREGARD GARRISON, a son of William and Mahala Brockham Garrison, was born in New Orleans September 23, 1862, and died in Slidell, La., Sept. 27, 1910. He was married to Miss Emma Crawford the 13th of October, 1895. He was a moral young man and believed and practiced the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." He gave his heart to God and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, two years ago. He was an obedient son, a devoted husband, and a loyal church member. He was afflicted some time before he died, yet he never murmured or complained. His patience in his afflictions was an inspiration to all who came in contact with him. He said several times before he died that Jesus was with him and would not forsake him. He leaves behind to mourn his departure an aged mother, two brothers, a loving wife, and a host of friends. He has gone from us, and we will see his face no more this side of eternity. But he is not dead. Somewhere in the homeland of the soul God has set him to a newer and higher task. He has gone to the house of many mansions, to the city of the living God, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." May God help us to so live that, when life with us shall have closed, we may meet him in the life beyond.

T. V. PETERS.

On the morning of September 7, 1910, while attended by faithful physicians, and while husband and life-long friends kept a silent watch, the spirit of Mrs. Minnie Parker quietly left its tenement of clay to be borne to the mansions of eternal bliss. Sister Minnie was born June 25, 1877. She joined the M. E. Church, South, at an early age. She had walked faithfully and untiringly with God, and, when the time came for earthly ties to be severed, and for her soul to pass out and rise above all that was dear to her on earth, she was willing to walk on with the God she loved. She was sick but a few weeks, but bore her sufferings with that fortitude known only to a Christian. She was gentle, kind, devoted and loving to her husband and friends, and strove to make her home a place of rest and joy to her many friends. By the side of her mother and two sisters she was laid to rest in the family cemetery, near old Salem Camp Ground, to await the Master's call. May God bless and comfort her father, three sisters and one brother, and enable them to meet her in the bright world above, where they can see and know why God took her from them.

BY A TRUE FRIEND.

Mrs. MARGARET PICKLES, of Leconte, died November 18, 1910, aged 73 years, 5 months and 22 days. She was the daughter of George and Sarah Keller, and was born in St. Landry Parish, on May 27, 1837. Miss Keller married Mr. John B. Pickles, of Montpelier, Va., on February 19, 1857, at Meredith, La. Mrs. Pickles was the mother of twelve children, all of whom mourn her. The sons are George D. Pickles, of Morgan City; John B., of Alexandria, and Henry W. and Oscar K., of Leconte. The daughters are Mrs. J. G. Keller, of Oakdale; Mrs. W. H. Lyle and Mrs. Peter Laird, of Loyd; Mrs. L. B. Rougeon, and Mrs. Adelaide Rougeon, of Lamourie; Mrs. J. Green, and Misses Belle and Mary Pickles, of Leconte. Mr. Pickles died October 3, 1898, and was buried at Wilmer Chapel cemetery, Leconte, and here the remains of his wife were laid to rest. The parents of Mrs. Pickles were Baptists, and she was reared in that faith, but in the early seventies she united with the Methodist Church, and was an earnest and devoted member. She devoted her life to the welfare of those she loved, and to the alleviation of sorrow in the lives of others. "She rests from her labors, but her works do follow her." We extend our sympathy to the grief-stricken family, and we trust that they will find consolation in the knowledge that "God doth his own in safety keep,

He giveth his beloved sleep."

ONE WHO KNEW HER.

Mrs. MARY FRANCIS CAMPBELL was born October 7, 1854, and died at her home near Jackson, Miss., November 23, 1910. She had been a sufferer for about eight years, but in bed only about six weeks before her death. She was married to William Franklin Campbell July 19, 1874. Of this union were born four girls and one boy, all of whom are grown. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in early womanhood and lived a consecrated life until her death. While sick she was often heard trying to sing some of the old hymns that had so many times made her happy. I remember hearing her singing "Christ Is the Door of the Beautiful Home," and only a few days before her death she sang three verses of "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing." She leaves a number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. But we do not sorrow as those who have no hope. She "fought the good fight, kept the faith, and finished her course," and has gone to receive a crown of life.

She has gone to yonder city—

To abide forevermore.

To that land of fadeless beauty—

She has reached a brighter shore.

We shall meet in that bright mansion
Where sad parting comes no more;
O how sweet 'twill be to meet her
On that happy golden shore.

Her son and pastor,

J. F. CAMPBELL.

In her home at Arkabutla, Miss., on the afternoon of November 21, 1910, while loved ones lingered round the bedside to see the last sweet smile and catch the latest breath, the soul of Mrs. A. F. MOORE (nee Hudson) was called to receive its blessed reward. On the 25th of May, 1910, she was happily married to Rev. A. F. Moore, with whom she journeyed in all the blessedness of blissful union until the end came. They were a devoted husband and wife. In their home love reigned and ruled supreme, and during her protracted illness devoted hands ministered to her every want. She suffered intense pain for several weeks, although not a murmur of complaint came from her lips. With implicit faith in the divine Father she bore her cross patiently and cheerfully, forgetful of her own sufferings in her efforts to make those around her comfortable. We all with whom she came in contact felt the influence of her holy life and were drawn to her in bonds of love. To know her was to love her. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and many friends. She has gone to the beautiful beyond to await your coming.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

The following is a portion of the report of the Trustees of Port Gibson Female College read by Rev. M. M. Black, secretary of the Board at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference.

"The total enrollment last session was one hundred and twenty-one, seventy of these being boarding pupils, this average in the boarding department being maintained throughout the session. Thanks to kind Providence, no epidemic or serious illness of any kind occurred among the students during the last session, and the health record of the College has been equally good the present session.

"On Sept. 14th the College entered auspiciously upon its seventy-first session, the enrollment to date being one hundred and forty, eighty-four of whom are in the boarding department. This is the largest attendance that this institution of learning has ever had. During the seventieth session, twenty-five students paid their way in part in service rendered the College in one way or another. Twenty-seven students are paying their way in part the present session by rendering similar service. Thus our College at Port Gibson is performing a noble mission in aiding worthy girls to obtain the coveted boon of a college education.

The present faculty numbers thirteen, not including the college physician, and compares favorably with that of any other college for girls in the southwest.

The college buildings are in good repair, the sum of $200 having been expended this year for said purpose. In addition, permanent improvements have been made amounting to $542.50. One dormitory and several of the recitation rooms have been repainted and repaired, and all present a neat and attractive appearance. A new and much needed recitation room for the primary department has recently been erected. The Senior Class of 1910 donated furnishings for the College platform to the value of $30; and the Senior Class of 1911 is assisting in paying for additional seats for the chapel, costing $75.

"At the annual meeting in May, the Board of Trustees unanimously re-elected Rev. H. G. Hawkins president of Port Gibson Female College for a term of five years, and a contract in accordance therewith has been drawn up and duly signed. President Hawkins, aided by his accomplished wife, has achieved remarkable success in building up the patronage of the College in the face of grave difficulties, and it is confidently expected that during his new term of service, still greater prosperity will attend the work of our school at Port Gibson.

The College is permeated by a wholesome and positive religious atmosphere, earnest attention being given to ethical and spiritual culture."

NOTICE! TO MISSISSIPPI PREACHERS!

Please write me if your address has been changed, and give your former address. We don't want you to miss the January number of Our Home.

W. M. WILLIAMS,
 Manager Orphanage.

A CHRISTMAS OFFERING FOR THE ORPHANAGE.

Dear Friends of the Orphanage: The two Conferences in Mississippi have resolved to raise $5,000, the amount necessary to complete the new buildings by January 1, 1911. That this may be done they have requested that there be services in all our churches on Sunday (Christmas day), and that opportunity be given on that day for offerings to the Building Fund. The preachers are requested to explain the necessity of the cause. We urge also that every layman and good woman become a volunteer agent, and visit or write to those who are able to give from $25 to $1,000 each.

There are a number who are able and willing to give at least $100, who will not see this or be at church on Christmas day. You can bring this matter before them and secure their contribution. How many of you will do this personal service? You needn't hold up your hand or write me, but get up now and go and do it; then write the result of your doing. Pray as you work. Let every contribution for the "Building Fund" be marked "Building Fund." Then it will take that direction. It not, it will not. You have a right to direct your gifts.

W. M. WILLIAMS,
 Manager, Mississippi Orphans' Home, Jackson, Miss.

LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHAN-AGE.

In consideration of the fact that our report to the recent session of the Louisiana Conference in Homer showed that we have succeeded in raising the sum of $14,500 this year, and that we have reduced our indebtedness from nearly $14,000 to $7,000, with all the interest paid for one year, our people should feel gratified at this accomplishment. We face the new year in better condition than at any other time in the history of our Orphanage. With the arrangement of the Home for this year, we have every reason to hope that, by the close of another year, we will be entirely free of debt, and in such a condition that we can press forward with this work in a creditable way.

But our people must not forget that we have paid out all the money we have raised this year, and that we are now compelled to meet our current expenses with the money that we may be able to raise throughout the State. To pay off our debts, and meet our running expense we must have equally as much money as we received this year, and we urge our people to keep our work in mind and not forget our needs.

In making up and sending in your Christmas gifts to the Orphanage please have your packages come by express, unless they are in excess of 100 pounds. In that case have them come by freight. Please do not send anything but something substantial and useful, such as all kinds of staple groceries, sugar, lard, rice, grits, coffee, potatoes (except sweet potatoes, as we have a great abundance of these) and especially syrup. These will be of great help to us. Where it is preferred, send money, and we can purchase these things here and save the possibility of a freight or express charge. Most of the Express Companies have agreed to give us rates free, but some have refused, and where there is a probability of a charge we would prefer to have the money and make the purchases here.

Send all packages to: Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, Manager, Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, Ruston, La.

Thanking one and all for their help, I am sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
 Field Secretary.

In describing Bethlehem at the time of the birth of Christ, Phillips Brooks wrote:

"The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee to-night."

And of the star, Holland sang:

"In the light of that star Lie the Ages imperiled."

How literally these descriptions of poetic fancy accord with the conditions that actually existed may be shown by a brief survey of the world at the time of the Advent.

I. The Fulness of Time — The Dispersion and the Great Expectation.

One of the most significant single facts at the time of Christ's birth was that the Jews were widely scattered abroad throughout the world. Mention of considerable communities of these dispersed chosen people of the Lord is made in John vii, 35; James i, 1, and I Peter i, 1.

Disappeared Dispersions.

As a matter of interest, by reference to I Kings xx, 34, II Kings xv, 29, II Kings xvii, 6, it appears that very early in the history of Israel there were colonies of that people in Damascus, in Assyria, and in Mesopotamia and Media. It has been shown, however, that these groups must have been absorbed by the peoples among whom they were formed.

Permanent Dispersions:

The dispersions which really counted in the preparation of the fullness of time began when Nebuchadnezzar carried fifty thousand of the children of Israel into Babylon. There the prophet Ezekiel flourished and Ezra the priest collected and edited the Jewish literature. (2 Kings xxi, 12-16). Thence into the borders of Media, Persia, and Cappadocia the sons of Jacob persistently found their way, until they were even settled on the shores of the Black Sea. This distribution lasted until one thousand years after Christ was born.

Nero carried vast multitudes of Israelites captive into Egypt. It has been estimated that fifty million Jews were thus forced to take up their residence in the land of the Nile. (Jer. xiv, 1.)

In Acts ii, 11 mention is made of the dispersion in Syria. Not only here was the Jew colonized, but in Asia Minor, Greece, Rome, and even far to the north and west of the Imperial City he built himself permanent habitations.

The Great Expectation.

Now the deep significance of the Dispersion can be fully appreciated only in view of the Great Expectation. Wherever a Jewish colony of any size whatsoever was planted, there the pulse of feeling throbbed in eager anticipation of a coming deliverer and restorer. For the Jew interpreted his sacred prophecies to mean that his nation was to be re-established in a position of world supremacy and righteous influence. This explains the success of the Maccabean uprising against the Roman power, which took place just a hundred and sixty-eight years before Jesus was born. The threatening proportions to which the movement grew encouraged the Jew to believe, although the immediate enterprise had met with disappointing reversal, that a permanent powerful champion was surely to be raised up to complete the work of emancipation.

II. A Common Language.

Long before the Roman power came into Palestine the Greeks, under Alexander the Great and his successors, had brought the land under their authority and influence. And although the Greek proved to be unequal to holding the political advantage thus gained, he left an impress upon everything that he touched that could not be removed. Alexander's invasion began nearly three hundred and twenty-five years before the birth of Jesus. In the course of two generations, or at the beginning of the second century B.C., the Greek language was thoroughly established throughout the Eastern world. West and north of Rome the Latin tongue prevailed. Greek was the language in common use when Christ performed his ministry. The fact that Jesus himself used Aramaic has been explained by some as pointing to the more local and special nature of Christ's appeal as compared to the appeal uttered by the apostles. The New Testament was originally written in the Greek tongue. And both Philo and Josephus, writers of secular history, wrote in Greek. The prevalence of a common language is of supreme importance in accounting for the rapid extension of Christianity during the first three centuries. At the end of that period the religion of the Nazarene was proclaimed the religion of the Roman Empire.

III. The Roman Highways.

In this day of agitation for good roads no argument is needed to show the influence of well-built highways upon the civilization of a people. If a commonly understood vehicle for the interchange of ideas was necessary, none the less was it essential that physical barriers and obstructions to rapid movement and transportation should be overcome. Rome ruled the world, under law, maintained and enforced by the garrison and the cohort. To be able to move troops quickly from one province to another, good highways were necessary. But in times of peace these highways became the arteries along which flowed an ever-increasing volume of migration and commerce. Thus, driven by an emperor's decree or attracted by better trade advantages, the early Christians joined the ever-moving caravans. Thus now and then an apostle, with a group of helpers, dust-covered and out-wearied with the marching, came triumphantly into a Philippian or took up his sojourn in a pagan Ephesus.

IV. The Knowledge of God.

The colonies of the Dispersion and the constantly restless bands of migrating Jews held rigidly to a radically peculiar thought of God. They never ceased to cry to each other: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." But there was something implied in this declaration which they were reluctant to proclaim, although they had been taught the truth from old by their greatest prophets. That truth was that their one God was also the one God of all the nations. Jehovah was the God of the Greek and of the Roman and of the Assyrian. Now the Jew was perfectly willing, nay, he eagerly desired, that Jehovah should rule over the neighboring nations. But he was jealous of the friendship and the favor of Jehovah for himself alone. The time, however, was full ripe for the proclamation to be made that God was the Father of all men, and that, therefore, all men were brothers.

God's Great Gift.

1. God's great gift is the presence among men of an all-sympathetic, personal Friend.

It was four hundred years from Malachi to Christ. There was no "open vision." The religious teachers of the day were arrayed against each other in bitter controversy over such questions as how a person ought to wash his hands before eating, and how many specific times a man ought to forgive an offender. The river of God's thought had been turned aside into a desert of quicksand, and its splendid volume diminished into innumerable trickling water courses.

Jesus stood in the midst, as the expression in personal terms of the love and the thought of a personal God. Recognition of his worth caused the estimated values of ritual righteousness and of institutional allegiance to disappear. Entering his companionship produced a passion of loyalty that caused his followers to go forth everywhere to utter the proclamation of God's love for the world and of his availability for every man in the world, whether Jew or Roman, bondman or free.

2. And the gift is a challenge to us to put away all unfriendliness and to enter into helpful fellowship with every man.—Epworth Era.

REGRET TO GIVE HIM UP.

The following resolution concerning Rev. G. H. Galloway, who has just finished a quadrennium of faithful service on the Vicksburg District, was recently adopted by the officials and others connected with Porter's Chapel, Vicksburg:

"We the officials, members and friends of Porter's Chapel part with our much-beloved presiding elder, Rev. Geo. H. Galloway, who leaves us after four years of faithful service, with profound regret.

Brother Galloway's administration has been a great source of help in the way he has built up the spiritual welfare of this church and community, which is manifested by this beautiful testimonial that he dedicates to the Lord this day. Through his inspiration and assistance we have erected within the period of twelve months this new house of worship, complete in all details and free from encumbrance, and it will always be a pleasure to us that his last Sunday as our faithful leader completes our work.

Therefore, be it resolved, That in parting with Brother Galloway, we do so with the deepest regret, but pray that he in whose hands rests his destiny for the next year will see and appreciate his good work by sending him to a larger field where he will be able to accomplish greater things for the Lord."

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY RALLY OF THE RUSTON DISTRICT.

Pursuant to a call from the District Leader, Rev. W. G. Harbin, quite a number of pastors and laymen met at Gibbsland, Nov. 26, 1910.

The interest which the laymen and preachers feel in this movement was evidenced by the remarkable attendance. Considering the fact that the Louisiana Conference was but eleven days off, and the busy time of the preachers, the busy season of the year for farmers, merchants and all business men, it was a very pleasant surprise to meet so many. Indeed, the promoters of the enterprise were very doubtful of its success. To the perseverance and industry of our district lay leaders is due in a large measure the success of the meeting. There were present about thirty pastors and laymen.

Those sturdy, independent laymen of the Ruston District were concerned about the extension of the Master's kingdom. They wanted to know about the Laymen's Missionary Movement. They wanted to exchange ideas about making it "go." Consequently a great deal of attention was given to a study of methods of work. A number of addresses of a high order were made on the different phases of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and mission study. Notable among these were the addresses of Presiding Elder Tucker, Revs. W. H. Coleman, E. C. Flynt, C. F. Staples and others.

There was a decided tendency on the part of the laymen to take part in the free discussion. It was by no means a preachers' meeting. There was a heartiness and enthusiasm pervading the whole assembly which signified good for the cause. The pastor, Rev. C. F. Staples, and the good people of Gibbsland contributed in a very material way to the success of the meeting. At the end of the morning session the ladies of the town furnished a splendid repast, which was enjoyed to the fullest.

The practical side of all questions was stressed, the aim being to educate rather than to inspire, although the inspirational was not overlooked. The organization of committees and mission study classes, the "every-member campaign," and inspirational addresses and meetings over the district were projects about which the meeting was concerned.

Resolutions endorsing the presiding elder, and making arrangements for special meetings over the district were passed.

The Conference expressed its appreciation of its district leader and of the hospitality of the Gibbsland people with heartiness and unanimity.

In the evening the people were given the opportunity of hearing a sermon of great depth and power by Brother Walter G. Harbin.

CHRISTMAS CONVOCATION AT MERIDIAN COLLEGES.

Beginning December 25th and continuing until December 30th, a Christmas convocation will be held at the Meridian Colleges. Rev. Joseph H. Smith will be in charge, with an excellent corps of workers, and will give daily expositions on the School of Prayer and the Holy Spirit. Rev. Chas. H. Babcock, from Virginia, who comes highly recommended, will deliver messages daily. These, with other helpers, will give a feast of good things. The convocation is held for the benefit of pastors, evangelists, and Christian workers. Those who are continually giving out, need to step aside for a refreshing from the Lord. Everyone is invited, and free entertainment may be had. No charge for lectures.

For free entertainment address Mrs. Joseph H. Smith, Meridian, Miss., care M. W. C.

Pres. Meridian Male College.

TOPICS FOR WEEK OF PRAYER.

The following is the list of topics for the coming Week of Prayer, as suggested by the Evangelical Alliance for the United States:

Sunday, January 1, 1911. Sermon: "The Fatherhood of God."
Monday, Jan. 2—"The World's Approach to God."
Tuesday, Jan. 3—"The Christian Church."
Wednesday, Jan. 4—"Foreign Missions."
Thursday, Jan. 5—"Home Missions."
Friday, Jan. 6—"The Home and the School."
Saturday, Jan. 7—"Government and Politics."
Sunday, Jan. 8—Sermon: "The Brotherhood of Man."

PASSING OF THE PLOW HORSE.

Within ten years approximately eight million acres of farm land in the United States and Western Canada have been taken away from the horse and turned over to the steam and fuel engine to be plowed, and the farmers of Illinois, Iowa, Indiana and other parts of the "corn belt" are beginning to follow the example set by the owner of larger farms in the newer prairie sections. The improvements made within the last few years in the smaller traction engine using gasoline or oil, have also solved many of the problems presented in the "moist" district of soft soils and small farms, which the old and larger steam traction engines could not meet.—National Magazine.

ROASTING DUCKS.

Ducks should be roasted in a quick oven and be a little rare rather than overdone, or the meat will be too dry.

A good filling is made of potatoes, mashed and beaten light and seasoned well with salt and pepper, butter, a little parsley or sage and two teaspoonfuls of onion juice. This makes a delicious filling. I am sure if you will try this way of roasting ducks, you will be much pleased.—National Magazine.

Tidings from the Field

Bell City Charge:

As the close of another Conference year is at hand and nothing has been said of our work, we feel like writing something for our paper of our work on the Bell City Charge. Surely the Lord has blessed our labors here, as you can see from our accounts given below. While there has not been a great display as some count results, we can conscientiously say, by God's help, we have done the best we could. This charge is scattered over a great deal of territory. It is forty or fifty miles from one end to the other, and part of it has to be reached by water, making it hard and expensive to serve. The Epworth League is in better condition than when we found it by an increase of at least 16 members, and has raised $15 for the foreign field. Our Sunday school is better by an increase of one class of twenty-seven members. What the other classes have on increase we are not prepared to say, but all have improved and grown. There have been three new members added to our church roll, and we hope that all are in a better condition spiritually. Conditions have not been as favorable towards the end of the year as we should have liked; Satan is strong and always at work. But we have prayed God to raise up a man for this field, not to suit the people, but to please himself. The coming year will find us still in our own church, but in a different field of labor. We hope our pastors will follow up our work and organize churches as soon as it is possible to do so. Because of some slight incumbrances, and at the suggestion of my presiding elder, I will give up my duties for awhile as an active minister in the church. We hope to win souls in the new field of labor, and render service that will prove a blessing to our church. Wife has labored with me, and together we have done the best we could. May the Lord bless our preachers and presiding elders this coming year, and may many souls be brought to Christ through their efforts. Now, a word for our paper. It grows better and deeper with each issue. Without it we would feel lost indeed. Believe me as one who loves his Church and the cause for which she stands. Your brother, Rev. L. L. Spinks, Missionary of the American Sunday School Union, Southwestern District.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE BELL.

Almost invariably on occasions of great rejoicing, especially in Christian Lands, the Bell peals forth the spirit of the hour. The influence of the Bell is world wide. At Christmas time it peals forth in joyful note "Glad Tidings." "Peace on Earth. Good Will Towards Men." There are thousands of Steel Alloy Bells in every clime that take part in this festive occasion. In almost every nook and hamlet Steel Alloy Bells will peal forth in merry chime during the coming happy Christmas time. The Steel Alloy Bell is manufactured at Hillsboro, Ohio, by the reliable firm, The C. S. Bell Company. For over fifty years they have been making this celebrated Bell. Their special plan for helping churches secure Bells will be sent free with catalogue for the asking.

COMMENDED BY HIS BAPTIST BRETHREN.

Whereas, Rev. Jno. A. Moore has been the very efficient pastor of the Methodist Church in our town for the past four years; and,

Whereas, he has been a strong factor in helping to promote every worthy cause in the town, and exerting a powerful influence against all evils; and,

Whereas, we regard him as one of the ablest preachers and best citizens we have ever had in our town; and,

Whereas, under the government of his Church he will not be permitted to return next year; therefore, be it

Resolved 1. That we take this opportunity of expressing to him our appreciation of his most valuable services as a preacher and pastor, and of thanking him for his influence as an earnest, consecrated Christian citizen.

Resolved 2. That we regret to have him leave our town, and that we assure him that our best wishes and prayers for his usefulness and success will go with him.

Resolved 3. That we commend him to his new field of labor as being worthy and able to fill the best places in the Conference.

Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be tendered him and given the press of our county and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, the death angel visited the home of our pastor, Rev. William H. Saunders and Mrs. Jennie Saunders on Friday, November 11, 1910, and called to the celestial home their only son, little William H., Jr., aged two years, one month and one day; therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That we the members of the W. H. M. S. of Washington Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., together with numbers of other friends, express our sympathy to the bereaved parents.

2. That since God in his wisdom has seen fit to call little William from our midst, we will ever remember his sweet, smiling face.

3. That though his little form will be seen no more by those who loved him dearly, and though his prattling voice will be heard no more in the home, we urge the love ones to weep not, because they know where to find their little Will, who is safe in the arms of Jesus.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, who are so sorely bereaved, and for whom we earnestly pray.

Signed: Mrs. George Shirley, Pres-ident; Mrs. William Bailey, Secretary.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, God in his infinite love and mercy has seen fit to call from our midst Brother J. A. Turman, and in answering this call he has left a vacancy in the church as our Sunday school superintendent that is deeply felt and mourned by every member; therefore,

Resolved 1. That we humbly submit to the will of him who doeth all things for our good.

2. That we feel our loss is his eternal gain, and that we will ever remember his Christian example.

3. That we express to the sorrowing loved ones our deepest sympathy and commend them to him who only can heal their broken hearts, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and a copy to the Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: T. J. Durrett, P. C. Ira Seay, Mrs. Cora Thomas, Mrs. Zuleime Davis.

LESSON FOR DEC. 25, 1910.

CHRISTMAS LESSON.
Luke, 2: 6-20.

Golden Text: For there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord.

TEACHING TOPICS.
Our Christmas Gift.

We are too prone to think of Christmas as being an anniversary only. It is the celebration of an event which occurred far back in the dim ages. It is the memory of a long vanished glory. It is the commemoration of God's great gift made to men centuries ago. When we think of Christmas in this way we lose its finest essence. Christmas will always renew the precious memory of the glorious hour when the Christ-child came. But in this very truth we have more than a looking back through the dim vista of the years. Christ comes again to our hearts when we thus prepare our thoughts to receive him. And it is not only the Child who comes to us. We know him as the Companion of our lives, as our long-loved Friend.

This Christmas season is not first a recollection. It is a glad commemoration just because it is first the present intensification of our love and worship. We think of the years, during which our lives have been dedicated to Jesus, we think of his strength which has become our strength, and we remember the comfort of his presence. Christmas means to us all that Christ has meant to us throughout our lives. We gather up all memories and gratitudes and unite them with our praise. So we can truly say that Jesus is our Christmas gift far more richly than he was the shepherd's long ago. His Spirit has been with us through the years and his presence abides in our hearts. Therefore, we are his and he is ours in a holier, more intimate sense than could be imagined by those who looked upon him lying in the manger, and worshiped while they wondered, scarce knowing who he was.

A Little Child.

The Savior of the world lay at Mary's side. He was her first-born babe. Perhaps the mother's thoughts reached out toward the distant years. Perhaps she saw as in a vision the time when her child, her son, should take his place in this world, making it like unto the kingdom of God. But more probably her whole soul was given up in anxious love, yet in great gratitude, for her baby, who lived and breathed upon her breast. This is something like the real picture: We must not forget the simplicity and naturalness of Jesus' birth. The kingdom of heaven steals upon us silently. A little child shall lead them; and the Messiah himself comes as a helpless, lovely Babe. We cannot lose sight of the full humanity of the Incarnation if we would understand it rightly, and if we would know the full joy of this surpassing revelation, so divinely beautiful.

No Room in the Inn.

It is part of the seeming tragedy of history that the great ones should come in such humble guise. No one in the inn knew of the lordly Child. Few of the vast throngs guessed that the most wonderful event of history had just transpired. It is all too frequently the case that this harsh world has no room for its heavenly visitants. Its hurry and busy dealings dull the ear and darken the understanding. When we picture the mother placed in the wretched stable, our hearts are touched by the pity of it. But the greater pity lies farther. The inn-keeper knew not the nature of his guest. We may excuse him. But how about the inhospitable world through the centuries that have followed? It has known, yet it has had no room in its crowded habitations. "No room in the inn" is the report of the gospel story. And "no room in the world" has been the terrible verdict of history ever since. Jesus has had his place among the few, and a warm and welcome place it has been. But the great hostility of the world has been closed against him. When will the civilizations of earth realize the present condemnation in the words, "There was no room for them in the inn?" When will God's own world be ready to recognize and receive its heavenly Guest? Only so far and so fast as his true worshipers proclaim the message and prepare the welcome.

A Shepherd's Religion.

If the noisy town was not ready to receive the vision, the shepherds yonder in the silent fields and on the lonely hillsides were waiting. It is strange to the sophisticated intellect to learn that the rarest visions come to the simplest minds. It is absolutely incomprehensible to them that God should choose the humble ones to know the greatest mysteries. But so it is. The Christian religion is a religion for the common people. This does not mean that its truths are mysteries inaccessible to reason, nor does it excuse the superstition and credulity of ignorance. It only means that the divinest truths are the simplest truths; that the profoundest values are experienced in the natural life of quiet trustfulness and of unpretending faithfulness to duty. In its very first hour the good news was chanted to humble shepherds. Christianity thus became a shepherd religion in its simplicity.

In the Field of Watching.

The revelation came to the wakeful eye. The shepherds were watching their flocks by night. They would never have thought that this quiet watching was preparing their eyes for the exalted vision of the glory of the Lord. Nevertheless, it was to these shepherds that the angels came.

The True Christmas Vision.

There has always been something about the divine revelation that has awed the soul of man. This seems natural and inevitable. Nevertheless there is a rebuke for those who tremble, with thoughts only of self and of the divine. God's message is a glorious one. It is not for the ecstatic contemplation of the mystic alone. It must not absorb the attention of the individual, as though all heaven were disclosed for the ravishment of his soul. The shepherds were in danger of making this mistake. So have thousands of Christians mistaken Christ's coming as being a personal favor to them, and as being scarcely anything more than that. Hear the angel's rebuke, "Be not afraid; for I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people." Here is the Christmas message. It is a revelation to society, a declaration of the coming of the kingdom of God. Christ came to minister unto all. We shall not catch the spirit of Christmas day until our horizon of faith and love is widened before us, and we have a new understanding of God's infinite care and of man's essential divineness.—Western Christian Advocate.

NEW HAIR AFTER TEN YEARS OF BALDNESS

Former Baldhead Most Agreeably Surprises His Friends.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Special.—In Mr. Samuel Diamond, president of the Perth Amboy Skylight Works, this city can boast of having witnessed a most remarkable cure of baldness and dandruff. Mr. Diamond recently startled the public by appearing with a fine head of real hair. He states that the wonderful restoration of his locks is due to having used a treatment told about in the New York World. This remedy, it is said, has produced astonishing results. The Lorimer Institute, Branch 583, Baltimore, Md., offers to send our readers not only full directions as to how to apply it but also a trial supply of the remedy free of all expense. Readers will do well to communicate with the Lorimer Institute at once. Perhaps after all, baldness is at last doomed.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

'Tis midnight's holy hour, and silence reigns
Is brooding like a gentle spirit o'er
The still and pulseless world, hushed on the wings
The bell's deep tones are swelling o'er
Of the departed year. No funeral train
Is sweeping past on the street and by
With melancholy light, the gloom reveals
Like a pale, spotless shroud, the air is hushed
As by a mourner's sigh, and on you
That floats so still and placidly reveals
The spirits of the seasons seem to stand—
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's golden Form.

And Winter with its aged locks—old
In mournful cadences that come and go
Like the far wild-horn's wild and wailing woe
A melancholy dirge o'er the dead year,
Gone from the earth forever.

'Tis
For memory and for tears, within the door
Still chambers of the heart, a secret store Whose tones are like the wizard's voice, and Heard from the tomb of ages, points us o'er
And solemn finger to the beautiful
And holy visions that have passed away
And left no shadow of their loveliness
On the dead waste of life. That spirit
The reflected of Hope and Joy and Love
And bending mournfully above the pale
Sweet forms that slumber there, is a Flower
O'er what has passed to nothingness.

The year
Has gone and with it many a dream
Of happy dream—its shadowy form
Its shadow in each heart, its sweet
It waved its scepter o'er the world
And they are not, it and its kindred
Upon the strong mind and the high
Is fallen, and the dashing eye is
It trod the hall of revelry, where
The bright and joyous, and the soul
Of stricken ones is heard where
And reckless shout resounded.

It passed o'er
The battle plain, where sword and spear and shield
Flashed in the light of mid-day, and the strong
Of serried hosts is shivered, and the grass
Green from the soil of carnage, waves above
The crushed and mouldering skeleton, it came
And faded like a wreath of mist, it
Yet ere it melted in the viewless air
It heralded its millions to their home
In the dim land of dreams.

Remorseless Time
Fierce spirit of the glass and scythe—what power
Can stay him in his silent course, or turn His iron heart to pity? Oh, still on
He presses, and forever. The proud bird
The condor of the Andes, that can soar the converted fall off from attendance on and appear utterly thoughtless and in sin.

That no sinners have been converted since saint or sinner seems alarmed:
A passionless church and an indifferently God and angels look down on sleep with dying sinners in her arms.
A revival is needed.—New York Observer.

WANTED—SOULS.

There is a wonderful activity manifest in the church—more money, means, better appliances and instrumentalities, which is all right and should be. But what is it for, if not to glorify Christ, and build them up in righteousness and holiness? Where is the greatest lack in our church operations? Is it money? No. Is it numbers? No. Is it numerical strength? No.
Is it souls saved by the Redeemer's pardoning grace?
There is the fact. It confronts us everywhere.
We feel it at every Conference session; the records of the church reveal it. The whole church must arouse herself from her lethargy and prosecute vigorously the work of soul-saving.

The whole church membership must move forward in this work. Not anything should retard such a forward movement. Can we remain inactive, making no offensive and united attack upon the kingdom of darkness? Efforts we do make, but how feeble, how sporadic, how periodical! The slogan of our church should be: "Multitudes of souls saved in the kingdom of God in the near future." To your knees, O ye (Methodists), in earnest pleadings with God for victory. To your knees, ye children of God, members of the (Methodist) Church, in earnest believing intercessory prayer. O Spirit of the living God, breathe upon our beloved church a passion for souls! Lay the burden on many hearts, until Zion shall travail in soul, and a host of souls be born again.

This tremendous, urgent need should be remembered in the family devotions. From consecrated lips appeals should be made unto God for a pouring of his Spirit upon the church and on the unsaved portion of humanity, until multitudes of untraced ones shall be swept into the kingdom of God on the tide of a general revival.
In all church members there are in abundance, who are satisfied with a formal profession of religion and union with the church, who however are ignorant and destitute of real conscious salvation. The great need, a salvation which saves from sin, and which shall be saved day by day. President Finney used to plead night and day for the unsaved, and he was the honored instrument of the salvation of thousands. Such pleading and wrestling are the secrets of epoch-making and history-making revivals.

The Christian Church must get into more vital union with God, and be more fully imbued with the Spirit, before there will be a general shaking among the dry bones. "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?" Yes, Lord, when the conditions are complied with—Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord, until he come and rain righteousness upon us. God's time is now, is it ours? "Bring ye your tithes into the storehouse, that there may be seed at mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." That is God's promise and pledge: are we ready to fulfill the condition? God grant it!—

HOW TO BRING ABOUT THE REVIVAL.

By Bishop E. D. Mouzon.

In the recent Address of the Bishops sent forth from the meeting in New Orleans, an urgent appeal is laid upon the heart of the Church, closing with these words:

"Let this be understood as a call upon every man in the ministry, and upon every congregation throughout our entire connection, and let unceasing and importunate prayer go up from every household until the answer shall be given. Do not lay it aside as a vague, indeterminate official demand, but rather heed it as a message from God. We request all our people to unite in special prayer on Sunday, January 1, 1911, that God will revive his work in all our borders. On that day let the services in all our churches be directed to this end."

Out of a pastor's experience and out of a pastor's heart I wish to send a message to the churches in Mississippi. And since the immediate direction of affairs is in the hands of our presiding elders and pastors, what follows here will, of necessity, be chiefly a message to them.

It is to be hoped that in every one of our churches special services will be held on Sunday, January 1st. Let it be understood that the revival we are praying for is not some special meeting of ten days' or two weeks' duration, but a revival which shall last throughout the entire year, and throughout the whole quadrennium, and never cease. The special effort, the special revival meeting, we must have; but we must have more than that. Forms change, but the spirit remains the same. The form, however, which one sees sometimes, leads one to believe that, in such cases, the spirit has changed also. It is a remarkable and significant fact that in all ages of the world genuine revivals of religion bear a remarkable resemblance in form to one another. The preacher who has a revival all the year is almost certain to hold some special revival meeting during the year.

The revival must begin in the heart of the preacher; it must be born out of a fuller knowledge of God and a deeper love for men. If the pastor's soul is filled with the joy of the Lord, and with sorrow for the world's sins, and a sense of the infinite value of the human soul, then the revival has already begun.

How can we bring about the revival for which we are praying? This question implies, of course, that we must pray for it. But supposing that we are already engaged in earnest prayer to God, what can we ourselves, as ministers of the gospel, do to bring about the revival?

First of all, I wish to say that the wise pastor will make large use of the Sunday school. As Tyerman points out, it was a young Methodist, a Miss Ball, who started the first Sunday school fourteen years before Robert Raikes opened his; and it was another young Methodist woman, Miss Cook, who first suggested to Robert Raikes the idea of his Gloucester school. Our Book of Discipline directs that "Sunday schools be formed in all our congregations, where ten persons can be collected for that purpose." I write this in order to show the importance which from the beginning Methodists have attached to the work of the Sunday school. The pastor's greatest opportunity is with the children. While we are making special effort to find the sheep that has gone astray, we should feed Christ's lambs and save them from the misery and awful risk of straying into the wilderness of sin.

In recent years "Decision Day" has been found most serviceable. Where the day has been wisely and intelligently approached, and where the children and young people are carefully instructed after they have offered themselves for membership in the Church, and before they are given the vows of church membership, no better method can be found for bringing them to public profession of their faith and to a ratification and confirmation of the vow of repentance, faith, and obedience contained in the baptismal covenant. But why should there be only one "Decision Day" during the year? Why should it not be well to have two such days, or four? Such days for the announcement of a decision already made will prove especially useful when they have been preceded by a service for children on Saturday afternoon and are accompanied by a gospel sermon from the pastor on "Decision Day."

But what I have chiefly in mind in this connection is to call attention to the great opportunity which the pastor has with the children of the Sunday school.

In the next place, I wish to say that a revival of pastoral visitation of the real sort will go far towards bringing the revival that we are praying for.

A Methodist preacher is not received into full connection until he has promised to "visit from house to house." If a preacher neglects pastoral work, there can be but one reason—he does not love his people. And I will say in passing that in order to be a preacher one must be a pastor as well. Without the personal touch of the pastor, without the intimate knowledge which comes from the work of the pastor, a man may read lectures in theology to his people, or deliver orations before them, but he will not be able to speak heart to heart, he will not be able to come with a living message of divine truth adapted to the daily needs of those to whom he has been sent to minister, and the hungry sheep will look up and go unfed.

From my own experience as a city pastor, I know how heavy a work this is in a church of eight hundred or a thousand members, but I also know how much can be done when a man makes a wise use of his time. After having found out where your people live, you should then visit when and where you can do the most good. Many so-called pastoral visits are little, if any better, than a waste of time. They are a waste of time because they are not pastoral visits. I do not say that the pastor ought always to read a Scripture lesson, or that he ought to offer prayer with a family every time he calls; but I do say that if he is filled with the spirit of the Son of man, who "came to seek and to save that which was lost," he will make his calls not in a merely social way, but in a distinctly religious and pastoral way; and when he leaves the home the family will feel that they have been lifted heavenward. The evangelistic pastor will know the men of his church and his charge. He will be a man among men—a manly man, but always a man who is a minister of the gospel. "And, sir," as an old Scotch preacher once said to a young minister, "if you should ever be tempted to forget that you are a minister of the Gospel, please remember that your people will not forget it."

I have found that the men whom I influenced most were the men I knew best. There is a book, no longer new, which I wish every pastor in Methodism would get and read. I refer to Peck's "The Revival and the Pastor." The following is a quotation from this book: "So great is my conviction of the value of personal effort that I cannot emphasize this method too strongly. If it were revealed to me from heaven by the angel Gabriel that God had given me the certainty of ten years of life, and that, as a condition of my eternal salvation, I must win a thousand souls to Christ in that time; and if it were further conditioned to this end that I might preach every day for the ten years, but might not personally appeal to the unconverted outside the pulpit during those ten years, but might exclusively appeal to individuals, I would not hesitate one moment to make the choice of personal effort as the sole means to be used in securing the thousand souls necessary to my own salvation. But God's plan, that pastors shall be both evangelical preachers and walking evangelists, is the better way."

My own conviction is that what I am about to write about in the paragraphs that follow, is the thing of the first importance—namely, the preaching of the gospel.

The Church needs nothing to-day as it needs men who can really preach. I do not say men who can tell pathetic stories (concerning the truth of which they often know nothing), nor do I say men who can deliver exhortations (although every preacher ought to claim the power and cultivate the gift of exhortation; for no sermon is, in the full sense of the word, a sermon, which lacks this). Men who can really preach—this is the greatest need of the Church. Methodist preachers should remember that their official title is "preacher in charge." Preaching is God's appointed method for the salvation of the world. "It hath pleased God," writes St. Paul, "by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." There has never been a great revival which was not also a revival of preaching. There can never be a great revival without great preaching. The great Methodist Revival was a revival produced by preaching. As Dr. Fitchett says: "Wesley's supreme instrument was preaching. He used other forces; he built schools, he organized societies, he published books, he waged controversies, he was tireless in correspondence and conversation. But not literature, or controversy, or personal influence, is Wesley's trusted and most effective instrument. First and last, the movement Wesley represents is the revival on an unprecedented scale, and with unprecedented effects, of the office and work of the preacher."

But what shall the preacher preach? There are certain great fundamental truths, the neglect of which will explain the barrenness of much of our preaching. St. Paul writes: "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ: that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad. Knowing, therefore, the fear of the Lord, we persuade men." The rule of God; the guilt of sin; the certainty of judgment—make men see and realize what these things mean. If they believe none of these things, you can do nothing with your gospel. And in your preaching you must put emphasis on the dynamics of the gospel. Our present-day preachers have gone so far in their emphasis of the humanities of Christianity as to present a gospel that is false because incomplete. We have heard much about Christ as "the ideal man;" we have been told again and again that "the New Testament brings us 'the highest possible ethics.'" But I need something more than an ideal; the ideal alone discourages me. I need much more than ethical teachings—not new knowledge but new power is what I need. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Let our preachers, if they would have a revival, lay stress on the dynamics of the gospel—Christ crucified, Christ risen, Christ on his throne. There can be no revival where these things are not preached with authority and power.

"To whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." God has given much to our Methodism; God requires much of us. With a membership of approximately 2,000,000, and an increase in the past quadrennium of more than 200,000, we have every reason to rejoice. But we rejoice with fear and trembling, because God is trusting us. He expects great things from us. Therefore, is this call to special prayer sent forth to the Church—not because God has not been with us, and not because he is not with us now, but because God is with us and is trusting us.

"I have set watchmen upon thy wall, O Jerusalem; they shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that are Jehovah's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

San Antonio, Tex.

A WORLD-WIDE REVIVAL THE DOMINANT NOTE OF METHODISM.

By Rev. W. E. M. Brogan.

In a resolution adopted near the closing days of the last General Conference, we have expressed the dominant note of our Methodism for the new quadrennium upon which we have entered. The resolution is in the nature of a request that "the Bishops, our chief pastors and leaders, lead us into special efforts toward a wide revival of religion in the first year of the coming quadrennium, and continue such endeavor until our Church shall be afire with zeal of God and humankind, and other churches shall share the blessings, and the whole round world shall honor him whom to honor is life eternal."

In this passionate call to service, we have expressed the great mission and purpose of the Church. The mission of Christianity is self-evident. Its very name reveals the fact that God designs to incarnate Jesus Christ in every heart, in every home, and hence, in every institution of government on earth. The mission of our Lord was eminently redemptive, and hence, the Church he founded was designed to carry forward his supreme and saving purposes in the world of lost men.

But in these latter days much has been said against special evangelistic campaigns in the Church. The plea is made that it is the business of the Church in its ordinary activities to secure the ends aimed at in a revival. Doubtless this objection arises from the fact that some so-called revivals have been sadly wanting in sanity, both as to message and to methods. But no true evangelism will sneer at scholarship, or despise the testimony and experience of the human race, or discredit the best and the ripest conclusions of the devout thinkers of the ages passed, or oppose the quiet and sane persuasiveness that make its appeal to reason and to the moral consciousness of intelligent men.

Notwithstanding the fact that most of the religious bodies of Christendom are the result of revivals, still the effort to discredit them has marked every age of the Christian Church. A recent writer pertinently says: "If the ability to profit by experience is the test of intelligence, that man is intellectually blind who does not see that the last two centuries of ecclesiastical and religious history in England and America declare unequivocally that all the decidedly progressive movements have had their initiative and inspiration in revivals." A new era came to Israel as the result of the revival under Ezra. The Christian Church, forged in the fierce flame of the Pentecost revival, began its march down the centuries pure in doctrine and in life, and enthusiastic for the saving work that lay out before it. In the sixteenth century occurred the great revival known as the "Reformation," in which the voice of Luther arose above others, crying: "The just shall live by faith!" In the seventeenth century the fires of devotion were fanned into a mighty flame by Milton and Baxter and Bunyan. In the eighteenth century came Wesley, crying out: "I felt my heart strangely warmed!" And to him all England gave heed. The opening up of the nineteenth century was marked by the infidelity of Paine and Voltaire; but ere the morning of that century had passed into noonday, the mighty voice of Roland Hill and Lyman Beecher and others was heard calling the people back to faith and obedience toward God. If the Episcopalians can establish their spiritual connection with the Apostles, they must go back to the revival of Pentecost. The Lutherans date from the revival under Luther, the Quakers from the revival under Fox, the Methodists from the revival under Wesley. Hence, the mightiest agencies for the uplift of man in the world were forged in the fierce heat of revival fires.

"The history of the Church from the beginning is like the map of an undulating country," says the late Dr. James Burrell. "It presents seasons of spiritual apathy, followed by visitations of power. After four centuries of dark, unbroken night, in which no voice of prophet was heard in Israel, the great revival under John began at Bethabara. This revival was a prophetic type of all subsequent outpourings of the heavenly grace. For, though it occurred in the lingering twilight of the Old Economy, and though its great moving spirit was in point of privilege less than the least in the kingdom of God, yet his message, 'Repent and believe in the Coming One,' was the same as that which moves the hearts and consciences of men to-day. And then came the period of the earthly ministry of our Lord, marked by no very great ingathering of souls, and then the Pentecostal baptism of power upon the Apostles, with the multitude pricked to the heart, and crying out: 'What shall we do?' and then the scattering abroad with the alternating periods of victory and defeat that have marked the history of the Church since the days of the Apostles.

The evangelism needed of the times in which we live must emphasize the reality of the redemptive work of Jesus Christ. About the person of Christ men of the most diverse views gather with reverence and devotion. And this reverence is in recognition of those God-like and moral qualities of character by which he has bowed down the world before him, and which constitute the marrow and essence of his divine nature.

The glory of our holy faith is seen in the fact that all its divine principles gather around and emanate from a person. It is the personal history of one, the simple record of whose short earthly career has done more to regenerate society and transform human life than all the disquisitions of philosophers and the exhortations of moralists and the might of conquerors with which the history of the world is replete.

But, strange to say, this profound reverence centers about the cross on which this life was ended. Our Lord, in order to gain universal conquest in the world of mind and spirit, voluntarily took the way of the dying, and has made the emblem of a slave's degradation the symbol of universal conquest and triumph, and of the highest honor and dignity known to the annals of time and eternity. For twenty centuries the wisdom and power of earth, and the wondering inhabitants of the world of spirits, have gathered around this emblem of a slave's degradation to adore the wisdom that planned and the love that enacted so stupendous and glorious a scheme of human redemption.

In the story of the cross we have the most splendid exhibition of the divine mind and purpose as they relate to an apostate. For the world's disappointment and disaster, Calvary alone has the message of hope, and the evangelism needed to meet present day wants must be that which emphasizes the cross as God's method of condemnation of sin and the consequent redemption of fallen humanity.

And the evangelism of the present and future must place increasing emphasis upon personal responsibility. We hear much in these latter days about the lapsed masses. And the question is too often asked: "Why have the masses lapsed from the Church and turned from the altar of God to the union, to Socialism, to Christian Science, to Dowism, or to some other wild and wasteful propaganda, with a great deal of economic sugar coating the same old bitter pill?" The truth is, the Church has lapsed from the masses, or, at least, in many instances has attempted no more than an ethical revival which regulates a man's acts, but leaves his heart untouched. The test of discipleship, our Lord plainly declares, is a life rather than a creed—a life of outgoing helpfulness to those in need. Too often we find in the Church "the elder brother," who cares nothing for the poor returned prodigal, who stands ragged and hungry at the door, yearning for a more perfect vision of the Savior's face, and for a closer fellowship with the saints in Christ. And the irresponsibility of men sunk deep in vice, with apparently no disposition or desire for better things, cannot always be laid upon heredity or environment. Rather, the cause is to be found in a Church that knows no heart-breaking because of the lost. The evangelism of the present and future, in order to meet the tremendous needs of lost men, must bring Christian men face to face with their own conscience, and compel them to pass verdict upon themselves with respect to their relation to the unsaved, and to recognize that they must stand or fall by these self-sentences.

The evangelism of the present and future must correct the false impression that religion is impractical by bringing the Church into actual conformity with the will of Jesus Christ. In practical, applied Christianity, is found the test of the genuineness of its claims to meet the needs of the world. Not in the profession that men make on Sunday at the altar of the Church is found the final proof of the saving power of our holy religion; but in the practical application of the principles of Christianity in working out the problems of our routine life is found its ultimate proof that it came from God. Christianity has been falsely accused of Antinomianism. Unitarians have repeatedly charged that it is a religion without works. In answer to these false charges, we have only to point to the marvelous material development of the Church from the days of the Apostles until now. All true evangelism must lay the insistence, first, upon the necessity of a heart changed by the power of converting grace, "and then for rectitude of conduct and for the highest ideals of thinking and living."

And in order to gain the ear of the lost, the apostle of modern evangelism must avoid the mystical, the sentimental and the abstract. The sermon must be a message from God to needy human life. Not an argument, but a testimony in which the minister is but the vehicle of its transmission to men. The religion of Jesus Christ speaks deeper than to the human intellect. It was never designed to furnish information merely on Christian topics. "It was not given merely to be intellectually grasped and correctly stated as a close-knit mental scheme in creeds and theologies." Hence, it is not to be defended, but to be stated as God's final and authoritative voice speaking in the realm of mind and spirit.

And the message of modern day evangelism must be plain preaching that will unmask the hideousness of sin. To create a sin-consciousness is the distinct work of the Holy Spirit, and he accomplishes this work mainly through the agency of the truth proclaimed from the lips of living men. Nothing is more needed in this day of ours than honest portrayal of sin and unequivocal calls to repentance.

The great end of evangelical preaching must be the production of living men at the altar of the Church. It is a truism of orthodox Christianity that no Church can substantiate its claim to be apostolic in origin and evangelical in faith and practice when its altars have ceased to be the birthplace for the apostate race of Adam. To build a moral character that will be enduring necessitates, first of all, a spiritual basis upon which to build. The laying deep and broad of this foundation is the end and aim of evangelical preaching.

In conclusion, let us say that each pastor should see to it that the significant resolution adopted at the General Conference, and quoted in the beginning of this paper, be embodied into a working principle for the new year upon which we are about to enter. "It means much for a great Church in its legislative deliberations to give splendid emphasis to its conception of its supreme duty, and to outline a plan for changing its theory into vigorous practice." Following the beckoning hand of Providence, our Methodism has gone round the world with its message of "peace on earth and good will to men." It has been a light shining in the darkness of heathen superstitions. It has overthrown heathen altars and built upon the ruins thereof temples to our God. Baptized afresh with power sent down from above, it will cause the whole round world to "honor him whom to honor is life eternal."

DOCTOR WINTON ONCE MORE.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

Mr. Editor: Returning from the Far East, I find on my table an article published in your paper of October 27th from the pen of Dr. George B. Winton in regard to Vanderbilt University. About that portion of this article which is personal to me, I am not at all concerned. The Doctor may entertain whatever opinion of me he chooses. He is responsible to his Master, as I am to mine. But when he undertakes to deal with facts, he is certainly amenable to criticism, though it is difficult fairly to criticize a man who changes his front with such celerity. When the Vanderbilt Commission made its report in 1906 he commended it in almost extravagant terms, not only for its legal and literary merits, but also for "its Christian high-mindedness," and declared that it was "worthy to rank with the great State papers of our country." Since then he has repudiated his generous praise, and in his last utterance he goes the length of intimating that the commissioners were guilty of suppressing in their finding the essential portion of a Tennessee statute. As a matter of course, he has a right to change his mind, if he wishes; but so complete a change would seem to call for some explanation.

No longer ago than last April, the Doctor, over his own signature in the Western Methodist, asserted that the Church has "an organic right" to confirm the Trustees of the university. In less than six weeks thereafter, he cast this assertion to the winds, and by his voice and vote took the ground that the Church has no right whatever in the matter of confirmation. An "organic right" that can lapse in six weeks is a new discovery under the sun.

Now comes the Doctor once more with categorical affirmation, that "the State of Tennessee, by charter duly granted, did legally vest in the corporation, Vanderbilt University, the right to fill vacancies in its own membership." As a matter of fact, the charter in question does not have a word to say on the subject. If the Doctor will show me one such word—just one—I will acknowledge my error, and promise hereafter to keep absolutely silent. Even if the Church had granted such right to "the corporation," the Doctor's case would not be much improved; for the Trustees are not the corporation. On the contrary, they are expressly, specifically, and repeatedly named in the charter as being the "representatives" of the Conferences who appointed them to procure the charter and who were themselves the members of the corporation. This was the judgment of Chancellor Thomas H. Malone, who drew the charter, and whose reputation as a lawyer will not be seriously hurt, even by the dissenting opinion of Dr. Winton. It was also the unanimous judgment of the commission, who, however, have already been set aside by Dr. Winton, and, for that reason, ought perhaps not to be quoted.

The incorporators, moreover, did not dream that they were the corporation. They promptly took the charter to the Annual Conferences for acceptance or rejection; and these Annual Conferences, each one for itself, named their representatives on the Board of Trust, including some of the incorporators in the list and dropping others. This is not fancy; it is history. If anyone doubts it, let him read the bill recently filed by the Church's lawyers in the Chancery Court of this city, in which the facts are fully set out and reference made to the sources.

The Doctor denies by insinuation that the Tennessee statute of 1895, regulating the appointment of trustees for church schools, has ever been passed upon by the Supreme Court. Well, he knows now, since his recent conversation with Bishop Denny, that under this very statute, the Supreme Court decreed the right of the Presbyterian Synods of Tennessee to elect the Trustees of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, and this, too, in spite of the fact that the university was operated under a charter procured long before the statute was passed. Will the Doctor frankly acknowledge his error, or will he make it necessary for me to go into a detailed statement of the whole case? As a matter of course, the Supreme Court may have been wrong. But for the present, I prefer to accept its formal deliverance, instead of the Doctor's very confident dictum.

The Doctor says that "the best lawyers in Tennessee" agree with him. He does not name them, and forces us, therefore, simply to take his word for it. There are a good many able lawyers in this State. The ones that the Doctor means are simply those who have been employed to sustain the position of the majority of the Board of Trust. It is not very surprising that they should be inclined to earn their fees by doing their best for their clients. The case is now in the courts. Nobody can predict with absolute certainty what the result will be. But some of the best lawyers in Tennessee and other States are sure that the claims of the Church will be vindicated. If it should be decided that the Church has no rights at Vanderbilt that it can enforce, and that it must take simply as a concession what favors the Board in its gracious omnipotence may see fit to grant it, why, it will be high time for the Church to consider what it shall do in the premises.

Dr. Winton repeats the statement which has been made, and corrected more than once on former occasions, that only two of the Trustees withdrew their names from the petition of 1905 for a new charter. I take this occasion to say that Bishops Wilson, Key and Duncan, and Dr. John H. Dye all did so. Three of these gentlemen are still alive, and Bishop Duncan's letter is in my possession. Other withdrawals could have been secured if it had been necessary.

The concluding paragraph of Dr. Winton's letter cannot be answered, for the reason that it is not possible to answer suspicions and insinuations. Whether the College of Bishops, the Committee on Education in the General Conference of 1910, and the vast majority of the General Conference itself, were the victims of "baleful influences," is a matter that cannot be decided by individual beliefs one way or the other. If I were to speak my own mind, I should say that the "baleful influences" were at work in other quarters; but that would be simply my own mind! The intimation that anybody has ever made an "attack" on Bishop Galloway passes the limit of propriety. I shall not dignify it by discussing it or even denying it. Let it go where such things belong.

Nashville, Tenn.

The official representatives of American Methodism were in session in Baltimore November 30, December 1 and 2, for the purpose of discussing the question of further unification of the work of the five or six million Methodists who in various communions and under several names venerate the same spiritual ancestry and hold to the same doctrine, and have many features of polity in common. Of the twenty-seven commissioners only one was absent, he being abroad on the business of the Church.

MISCONCEIVING A TEXT AND MISDIRECTING OUR PRAYERS.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

To read into a passage from the Bible some notion of our own, and then seek to enforce it upon others as a truth of revelation, is an offense against God and man. It is to "handle the Word of God deceitfully," and whether it be done ignorantly or intentionally, it does violence to both divine truth and human conscience.

The offense is all the worse when it is committed in the name of brotherly love and Christian unity. And it reaches the very highest point of wrong when the words perverted are the utterances of the divine Son spoken to the Father in intercession on behalf of his followers. This is to intrude into the very holy of holies and turn to wrong ends the supplications of our High Priest. Yet this has been done with a part of the prayer of our Lord offered to God for the men whom his Father had given him out of the world. Some have misused his words wittingly, while others have been misled by the sound and have missed the sense.

The words which have been oftenest abused are these: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

These words are frequently made the basis of all sorts of appeals for the organic unity of denominations and for that ambitious scheme of ecclesiasticism whose slogan is: "The reunion of Christendom." Attentive consideration of the words themselves must show that they contain no slightest reference to the coalescence of ecclesiastical organizations. The unity for which the Master prayed is characterized by three features, which exclude any such idea. (1) It was to be a unity between one generation and its successors. "Neither pray I for these only, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." If we suppose the words refer to organic unity of any sort, we must be prepared to accept the Romish idea of ecclesiastical succession of a continuous organization down through the ages, and to condemn in the strongest terms all who have broken with that historic succession. (2) It was to be a unity similar to that which subsists between the Father and the Son. "That they all may be one as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be also one in us." Can we degrade that lofty, mystical, heavenly unity to the level of a clumsy system of earthly machinery? Does the dogma of "organic unity" apply to the Father and the Son? (3) The result of the unity for which the Master prayed was to be the convincing of the world. "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Can organic union of any kind be made the premise of any such convincing argument with the world? If mere unity of organization is a proof of a divine origin, Mohammedanism can furnish far better credentials than the Christian Church can supply at any point of its history from apostolic times until the present moment. Moreover, the unified, fettered, and corrupt Church of the Middle Ages by the same argument could prove itself far more divinely commissioned than are the spiritual, purified, free, and energetic Churches of the present era.

It is manifest that no thought of organic unity was in the mind of the Master, nor desire for it in his heart, when he offered his great high-priestly prayer on the night before he died. How must it disappoint him when any of his followers fix their hearts upon such a paltry bauble as organic unity and miss the glorious, divine, world-conquering unity of life for which he prayed so earnestly! The unity for which he cried so fervently, as Dean Alford truly says, "has its true and only ground in faith in Christ through the Word of God as delivered by the apostles, and is therefore not mere outward uniformity, nor can such uniformity produce it."

Attempts at uniformity in outward organization do often hinder it. Witness the effort to absorb the Cumberland Presbyterian Church into another body, an effort which has divided families and communities and filled the courts of several States with irritating litigation. Recall the Romish persecutions by which in former centuries organic unity and outward uniformity were enforced over unwilling souls.

If that impossible and undesirable dream of the "reunion of Christendom" were fulfilled to-day by the absorption of all Churches into one huge ecclesiasticism, the cause of Christ would suffer great harm. Men would continue to think as before. Would the insincere profession of all thinking alike make their Christianity more energetic or fruitful? Some would perhaps drop into vagueness and indefiniteness of belief in order to avoid collision with the beliefs of other members. Would that sort of pulpiness result in greater or more effective Christian effort? Multiplied millions would bow down and worship the colossal structure overshadowing them. Has the adoration of an organization ever helped men to greater faith in God or more love toward their fellow-men? In all likelihood the most spiritual members would soon find it necessary to go out of the obese and apoplectic system in order to preserve a pure faith and to promote holy living; then the work of reunion would have to be done over.

It cannot be that this demand for the organic unity of Christendom is scriptural or reasonable. It probably hinders the growth of that spiritual and vital unity which is important. It is much to be feared that sometimes the Savior's prayer for the oneness of his followers is used to disguise and conceal schemes of ecclesiastical ambition by which certain bodies seek to absorb into themselves some other body or bodies. Such a use of it amounts to a profanity. To simulate the Savior's tones in order to serve a party end is an offense which cannot be too strongly condemned by all who love the Lord Jesus and his Church in sincerity.

If we may have the spiritual unity for which Jesus prayed, we shall not need the "organic unity" to which ambitious ecclesiastics aspire; and if we could secure organic unity without spiritual unity, we could not keep it. In the end we should have fresh divisions with less love, less union, and less unity. Churches which cannot live in peace as brothers would certainly live in strife if penned up together in one huge ecclesiastical camp.

A prayer may sometimes be so mistaken and misdirected as to delay the progress of the cause of God. On one occasion God said to Moses: "Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." May not that be our Father's attitude to-day toward all the untimely praying about the "reunion of Christendom"? May it not be vastly more important and useful to gratefully acknowledge and magnify the real unity which we have already than to be crying and scheming for an undesirable and useless unity of mere organization? When we depreciate the unity of the spirit which God has given us and magnify the unity of mere ecclesiastical organization, we may displease him who prayed that his followers might be one. To hold cheap the great thing we have received from him, as if it were of little worth unless accompanied by something else, may not commend us to his favor. May not our Father be saying to us to-day: "Why criest thou to me for organic unity? Speak to Israel that they go forward to the conquest of the world in the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

A lust for numbers and an ambition for a world encompassing piece of ecclesiastical machinery may be more carnal than spiritual in both origin and aim. Love does not inspire such schemes, nor would the sum of love in the earth be increased by them if they were accomplished.

More union than unity is not an edifying spectacle. It certainly offers no evidence to convince the world that Christ was sent by God, or that the Church is sent by Christ. The organic union of all the Churches was not an aspiration of primitive and apostolic Christianity. It is a mediaeval idea which sprang up when ambitious men and worldly Churches sought to lord it over God's heritage. Its revival in our day is not a mark of high spirituality, but the evidence of a certain loss of faith in divine forces and an over-reliance upon machinery to accomplish spiritual results.

There is a thing to be prayed for which is more important than organic unity of the Churches, and we need much grace to obtain and keep it. It is the disposition to deal fairly and justly and lovingly with sister Churches. If some would try to do this, even for a brief season, they would derive from the effort a much better understanding of what the Lord meant when he prayed that all his followers might be one in him. Even if the reunion of Christendom were desirable and possible, all Christians and all sects would have to attain to this grace of brotherly love before organic unity could be anything else than a subjugation of minorities to domineering majorities. If we cannot maintain a genuine fraternity, observing faithfully all its covenants and agreements, we can never live peaceably together in one organization.

"ANOTHER LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT."

(A statement issued by a lay Conference on Evangelism held in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Findlay, Ohio, November 18, 1910. We reproduce it for the reason that the conditions in our Church are much the same as theirs.)

We believe that in this day of secularism and materialism our greatest need is pure evangelism. Wall Street Journal, of New York City, representing one of the greatest money centers, if not the greatest in the world, speaking of "What Makes a Great Nation," a few days since said: "We need a revival of pure, old-time religion; we have enough quackery in religions and political cure-alls, but as ever, 'Righteousness exalteth a nation,' and 'The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.' It is apparent that we need a genuine, thorough, all-embracing revival, one purely evangelistic and Methodist; a revival which shall enter all homes, and touch all hearts, and make every church an effective soul-saving institution. Such a work of grace when secured is the result of the wise use of divinely-appointed means, and is as natural as the gathering of the harvest when all the conditions have been complied with. The law governing the kingdom of grace is just as real as the law in the realm of nature.

The most inspiring thought of this day, or any day in the history of man, is the world's evangelization in this generation. We believe in a world-wide evangelism. "Go teach all nations," said the Christ; this takes in America, and save America and you save the world. "If the spirit of evangelism is allowed to die out at home," says Bishop Berry, "what more deadly blow could be struck at the cause of missions abroad?"

The Laymen's Missionary Movement was wisely inaugurated to promulgate world-wide evangelism—a God-given and a God-inspired movement. Should there not be another laymen's movement inaugurated—a movement for the evangelization of the home land? It is our faith that such a movement should be set in motion, and the men of the Church inspired to take it up, and God is surely speaking to us to-day as to Israel of old, "that we go forward." "There is a time in individual experience and in the history of movements and organizations when God seems to say, 'Stand still, and see my salvation;' but that time is not; as long as there is a possibility of advance, the command is 'Go forward,' and there is the assurance that the pillar will lead the movement."

We are confident that the time is here for another Laymen's Movement, a movement for home evangelism, and that the men of the Church should be inspired to take up this movement. The men are in evidence to-day in the Church, in her legislative councils, interested alike in her benevolent and educational institutions, and their vision reaches the point of their enthusiasm for the evangelization of the world in this generation; and the greatest factor in this hope is America, because for this work America more largely prepares the way and provides the equipment than any other agency.

AN APPRECIATION.

It is with peculiar pain, and yet with peculiar pleasure that I offer this brief testimony to the worth, the simplicity, the beauty of the character of Mrs. Addie Johnson who recently passed from Fayette, Miss., to the heavenly land.

She was born May 10, 1852, in Jefferson County, Miss., near the place where her body now reposes. In early childhood she united with the Methodist Church and during her whole life thereafter she was a consistent and devoted member. She was a quiet, domestic woman, of a retiring nature and without pretension, strong in her attachment, faithful in her friendship, charitable in a way the world knew not of, loyal to her Church and true to her pastor. Of such is the kingdom of heaven.

She was married to Mr. Bolls Johnson, Dec. 20, 1870, and had she lived but four more days she would have seen her fortieth anniversary of that event. Her illness dated back some weeks, and as the disease advanced her condition became more serious each day. Her last lucid moments were spent in speaking of heaven and of her Savior. The end came as peacefully and as quietly as the dawning of morning, and those who mourn her departure are comforted with the assurance of her having gained the home in the house of many mansions.

Twelve years ago the last thing I did before I was admitted to Conference on trial was to lay away the body of a special friend; and this year the first thing I did after taking the local relation was to perform a like service for another special friend. Life seems full of contradictions and disappointments, but beyond the dark and mysterious, a loving Father knows and cares.

Sister Johnson is at rest. God bless and guide the sorrowing ones is the prayer of their late pastor.

A LITTLE BOY'S CHRISTMAS WISH.

Francis McKinnon Morton, in December St. Nicholas.

I like to be a little boy
Almost all of the year,
And all the joys of other boys
To me are very dear;
And one pair of shoes and stockings
Can bother one a sight
If they're put on every morning
And taken off at night,—

But, ah! when Christmas comes along
With all its cold and snow,
And good Santa fills our stockings
All hanging in a row,
I'd love to be a centipede;
'Twould sure be jolly fun
To hang a hundred stockings up
Instead of only one!

THE DOLL.

By Edith Havens.

There was much excitement in Tot-Town, the land of a thousand children, because it had been advertised that Prof. Kindheart, the great man who loved children, was coming to town.

The little folks from far and near were delighted because they had often heard great stories about him, and now that they were really going to see him—why it seemed almost too wonderful to be true. The day before his arrival a big platform had been built in the center of the public square, for he was to make an address to the children and wanted a place so as all could hear him talk. And then came the long expected day.

For miles around the little boys and girls poured into the center of the town, and when the big, smiling-faced man alighted from the train at the Tot-Town depot he was greeted by hundreds of little people.

Amid cheers he was carried away to the platform in the Square, where thousands of boys and girls were gathered.

How they cheered him!

And then the professor came forward to the edge of the platform with a large bundle in his hand, and suddenly that little army of people became hushed.

The good man began to speak.

"I am very happy to be able to talk to all you little folks," he began, "because I love you all very much. Some little boys and girls are really and truly very good children, only they are apt to be just a bit careless and they forget sometimes. I am going to talk especially to those children."

He paused a moment as he began to untie the great bundle while all the children waited with wonder. And then off came the paper, and what do you think it was?

It was a great big doll, dressed as beautifully as you ever saw.

"Now you see here I have a very wonderful doll," resumed the professor. "It is just as pretty as possibly could be, and her dresses are the finest that can be bought. But now I want all you children just to think hard with me for a moment. You can all see this doll and you can all see how pretty she is. And yet you know she has no feelings; that she is no use in the world other than to look pretty and to amuse children a bit. She has no heart. She can perform no kindness. She can do nothing for other people. Now I wonder how many little folks standing all about me are really very much like this doll?"

"Just to be pretty and to wear fine dresses isn't very much of a life to live—do you think so?"

Not a sound was heard among the children, for they had suddenly realized that what the man said was true. A great many of them were just like the doll.

From that famous day when Prof. Kindheart came to town things changed in Tot-Town, and to-day every child who lives there is just as kind and thoughtful to his little neighbor as possibly could be.—Times-Democrat.

THE BURNING DECK BOY.

Few people know that the "Boy on the Burning Deck" is not a myth, but an actual fact, and still fewer know that the man who gave the order for the destruction of the vessel, on whose deck the aforesaid boy stood, was born in Jamaica Plain, and lived there till his royalist father, who objected strenuously to the American Revolution, transplanted him to England, where he served under Nelson in the battle of the Nile.

The boy was French, son of the admiral of the French ship l'Orient, and that was the vessel that blew up with the immortal boy standing by the mainmast.

The boy's unconscious destroyer, Captain Benjamin Hallowell, was born in the old Boylston house, still standing at the corner of Boylston and Center streets in Jamaica Plain. The house was built in 1726 by the Boylsons, and afterward passed to the rabid royalist, Benjamin Hallowell, after whom the captain was named.

The old man lived in Jamaica Plain long enough to make himself unpopular when the American Revolution broke out. The son had been early sent to England for his education, and he became one of the seven American-born men to attain distinction in the British navy.

In the battle of the Nile Captain Hallowell had command of the ship Swiftsure, which ran down the luckless l'Orient. When Captain Hallowell gave the command for the French vessel to be blown up he knew nothing of the 13-year-old son of the French admiral, who, foolishly but heroically, obeyed his stern father's order, "Don't leave the vessel till I give you permission," and his "proud, though child-like form," graced the doomed vessel when she "with fragments strewed around the sea."

Captain Hallowell afterward heard the sad tale and was much moved by it. The boy called out three times in agony to his father, he learned, but stood resolutely by the mainmast, though his father lay cold in death.

So much moved was the captain that he had a coffin made in the boy's honor out of the floating fragments of the l'Orient and sent it to his friend and patron, Lord Nelson, with the story of the boy's bravery, and expressing deep regret for the young hero's untimely end.

Nelson had the coffin placed in the cabin in remembrance of the boy, and Captain Hallowell himself told the tale to the then widely known poet, Felicia Hemans. Her sympathies were immediately excited and she immortalized the boy in her sentimental but immortal verses, and she named him wisely, "Casabianca, White Soul."—Newburyport News.

HOW DOROTHY UNDERSTOOD.

"But Miss Cummings was so kind to me when school first began, and I was so—so afraid of the other children."

Dorothy, leaning against her mother's shoulder in the twilight, choked back a sob, and then went on:

"She always used to stop and say, 'How is Dorothy this morning?' or something like that, but now it seems as if she loves every other little girl better than me. Someway I can't understand it. I've been trying so hard to make my lessons good, but I don't care now." And Dorothy's tale of woe ended in a real sob.

Mrs. Hart kept silence for a moment. Eight-year-old Dorothy had been a hero-worshiper ever since babyhood, and the sensitive, imaginative child, grieved to school this autumn for the first time, had taken a great liking to the sympathetic, charming young teacher who had instantly won her shy confidence. Probably, as the term's work grew more taxing, the teacher did not have so much time in which to pay attention to the little girl.

"Let me tell you a story, Dorothy," said Mrs. Hart, stroking back the soft, fair hair from the heated forehead. "It will perhaps help you to understand why you ought to keep on doing your lessons well, even though the teacher seems to forget you."

"It is a story about the king's garden," continued Mrs. Hart, when Dorothy had grown quiet enough to listen. "There was once a princess who worked every day in the beautiful garden of her father, the king. All the plants loved her and blossomed under her care. One day the king sent to the princess a little, timid plant, which had known only a quiet home garden. The princess placed it in a corner of the great garden, and took care of it tenderly, for the king's sake. The little plant learned to love the princess and to watch for her coming. At length, growing brave-hearted in this happy garden, it put forth some fragrant blossoms which made the heart of the princess glad.

"One morning, just as the little plant had raised its face to meet the sunshine, the princess came into the garden, and, catching sight of some delicate things that needed her care, she hurried to help them, and in her haste unconsciously broke the little plant's blossom from its stem. Bowed down almost to the ground in sorrowful thought, the little plant grieved the whole day long. But at evening, when the quiet garden came to give the nightly care which the princess had not time to give, the little plant raised its broken blossom and said, 'The princess helped me, freely with her care and kindness in my time of need; now that she must watch over other plants in the king's garden I must blossom for the king's sake.'"

In the silence that followed, Dorothy leaned forward and kissed her mother.

"Do you understand the story, Dorothy?" asked Mrs. Hart.

"Yes, mother, I understand," said Dorothy in a voice from which the grief and hurt had vanished.—Edith A. Sawyer, in The Congregationalist.

THE APPEAL OF THE PASSING YEAR.

The year nineteen hundred and ten is drawing to a close. A few hours more and it will have vanished into the past—"that mighty reservoir of men and things." How fast the fleeting seasons come and go! In youth they seem long, but as age advances, they seem to flit by on lightning wing. And every year that passes swings us forward toward the grave, the judgment, and eternity. Even when longest, brief indeed is human life. Inside of the century-mark man must live, achieve, and fix his destiny.

Time is not an arbitrary thing, marked off by human beings to suit their convenience. It is measured by the flight of worlds. The seasons are of divine appointment, and most strikingly do they symbolize human life. The joyous springtime corresponds to youth; the summer with its golden beauty, to manhood's early prime; the autumn, to the period when strength begins to wane and the first footprints of time become visible on the face and brow; and winter, to old age, whose white locks are akin in color to the hoar frost of the vale and the snow upon the heights. And the seasons also teach lessons that we may well lay to heart. The most important of them is that a bountiful harvest in the autumn and peace and plenty in the winter can only be enjoyed by him who has faithfully sowed and cultivated in the springtime and summer. A glorious old age, rich in love, inspired by hope, and radiant with supernal light is possible only when the antecedent years have been worthily spent. Everyone is in an important sense self-made: he stands at the close of his earthly pilgrimage the finished product of his own prior thoughts, beliefs, feelings and actions.

The closing year calls for thankfulness and gratitude. Rich and unfailing have been the mercies and blessings of God. They have been new every morning and fresh every evening. To number them would be like counting the sands upon the seashore, or the stars in the blue depths of the sky. For food, drink, raiment, and shelter, for all of the things which have fed the intellect and the soul, for the innumerable influences that have brightened and enriched our lives, we should render sincere and heart-felt praise to the bountiful dispenser of every good and perfect gift. Nor should we be cast down by the sorrows that have chilled us and thrown their dark shadows across our way. The path of suffering is the path the Master trod, and the only one that leads to perfection. Moreover, the clouds will soon lift and we shall behold the beauty and glory of the perfect day. "Weeping may tarry for a night; but joy comes with the morning."

The end of the year is also a fitting occasion for taking our reckonings. No sailor dares to navigate the sea without now and then ascertaining his latitude and longitude. He wants to know if he is headed for the port and if he is making progress. So we should desire to know as the years come and go whether our voyage across life's solemn main is bringing us nearer the heavenly harbor. Is our faith stronger than it was twelve months ago? Do we love God and humanity more? Is the peace in our souls deeper and fuller? Is our passion to save the lost more consuming? An old Scotchman was once asked if he expected to go to heaven at his death. "Why, man," he said in reply, "I already live there." So every saint should have more of holiness and heaven in his heart with every passing year.

The death of the old year and the birth of the new one is also a trumpet call to quicken our flagging energies. It proclaims that time is swiftly flying, and that what we do for the Master must be done quickly. An hour lost, is lost forever. It is so much subtracted from our opportunity to serve God and mankind. No matter what may be one's capacity, without time in which to exercise it he can achieve nothing. Surely as Christians we need to be tremendously in earnest: we need to make every fleeting moment count. Those whom we are commissioned to reach with the gospel are fast going down to the grave. They are the same no two years in succession. Inactivity indicates a low state of spiritual life or of rest. You are zealous in the Lord's work, desiring to have your own share. A heart on fire with the love of God is not fit to make one a flannel-bearer for the masses. The workers are the rich of this life, the breadwinners. Jesus walks and co-operates with the multitude who possess "ever on in duty's path."

tarian purposes as will best contribute to the glorious ascendancy of our land, by a consolidation of the evils that may be made into seriously hindering his progress. The administration of this fund Mr.
Carnegie has committed to fifteen trustees among whom are the following: United States Senator Elihu Root, ex-Secretary of the War, ex-Secretary of War, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, Dr. James S. Pillsbury, President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, Joseph H. Choate, lawyer and ex-Ambassador to Great Britain, and Adm. R. S. Sully, ex-Lake Mohawk, Commander of the Navy, Dr.
Charles W. Eliot, President of University of Harvard University, Gen. J. Brown Scott, Soldier of the State Department, John W. Foster, lawyer and ex-Secretary of State, Wm. M. Howard, lawyer and ex-Senator, Lexington, Ga., James L. Thompson, Congressman, San Antonio, Texas, Arthur D. Wilson, ex-Ambassador to Germany, and Russian, ex-Ambassador, Ambassador to Turkey, Gen. S. S. Williams, Senator-elect from Mississippi, C. L. Tamm, of Pittsburg, Chairman of the Carnegie Endowment Commission, and George A. Hays, of New York, Financier and Philanthropist. The trustees have created an organization of the character of Senator Elihu Root, President and James Brown Scott, Soldier of the State Department, Secretary.

Mr. Carnegie's address in allocating this trust fund into the hands of the man whom he has selected to administer it was a touching utterance. The following are a few of the words he uttered: "Although we no longer carry out the policy of 'indiscriminate' and 'torture' prisoners, nor sack of cities, killing of the inhabitants, we still kill each other and live in blood. Only wild beasts are excusable for doing fear to this twentieth century of the Christian era for the crime of war is heinous. Since I have no more in favor of the right, but always of the good of the nation is criminal which refuses arbitration and strikes its adversary to death, I can only, trusting a righteous judgment."

It is estimated that the annual income of Mr Carnegie's donation will be $250,000. Just how he wants this money to be expended is not yet known. He is expected to make later a more detailed statement as to what steps he thinks advisable to take in seeking to promote the cause of peace. The great philanthropist has aided many worthy enterprises with his money, but none which is more deserving, or which promises to bring greater blessings to humanity, than this last endeavor in which his generosity has set on foot. War is an undeniably evil. The expense of it alone is appalling in magnitude. The Napoleonic wars are being said to have cost France more than a billion dollars. The Civil War in the United States is said to have cost it in the Federal Government a loss of $100,000,000. To say nothing of the wreckage and suffering wrought in the South. It is recognized that the seven hundred millions of the world's population spend over a billion dollars in France, Russia, China, and Japan, made for the last 100 years and made during the year of 1910 in the case of Great Britain alone $1,000,000,000. As they are now considerably more inclined to build a battleship as if it were a cathedral and endow a university. And they seem to wage wars and maintain the rivers of blood flowing is wrong by taxation, from the tolling masses of mankind. Left in their pockets. It would do much toward lightening their burdens and lessening their struggles, if all collected and used for the cause of education, or religion, or the promotion of the industrial arts, it would richly speed the march of human progress. But the expense of war is the least of the evils that follow in its wake. The men sacrificed, the widows and orphans made, the millions orphaned, the wounds inflicted, and the hatreds that live after the heat of the passion has cooled, are some of the more serious and far-reaching consequences of an appeal to arms. Indeed war is the only rival curse of war is intemperance. And now that Mr. Carnegie has provided for a movement to aid in destroying the former, it is to be hoped that some rich humanitarian will establish a foundation that will make possible an organized and world-wide propaganda against the latter. With the nations permanently at peace and the millions of mankind sober, surely the race would be far on the way in its march toward redemption.

Mr. Carnegie is right in observing that the sentiment against strife and bloodshed is stronger and more widespread to-day than at any former period of the world's history. This is due to the widening influence of the gospel of the Prince of Peace. Hundreds of years before he was born in the manger at Bethlehem and the angels sang their peace-song to the listening shepherds, the Prophet Isaiah, in describing the Messiah's expanding kingdom, said: "and he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Such a state of society at the time of this prophetic utterance seemed utterly impossible, but it is now so regarded. Indeed, men who are not Christians now believe that the time is not far distant when wars will cease. But let it not be thought that any mere external influence, like that of money, can alone bring this to pass. Money can be of valuable assistance, but the power that really effects this result must reach below the surface and have to do with the inner natures of men. In other words, it can only be accomplished by the regenerating forces of Christianity. Not until we have in larger measure the reign of justice, equity, and righteousness, may we hope to have the reign of peace.

BISHOP NEELY'S INTERVIEW.

The Times-Democrat of December 21 contained a characteristic interview with Bishop T. B. Neely, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who after presiding at the Gulf Conference of that denomination, held at Vicksburg, La., was passing through New Orleans on route East. The Bishop was in an optimistic frame of mind and discoursed at some length upon the work of his Church in this section, contending that it has a remarkably bright outlook. He dealt, however, chiefly in glittering generalities, and gave no specific figures indicating the percentage of growth. That the Methodist Episcopal Church is doing a good work among the negroes of the South is undoubtedly true, but that it is having large success in seeking to establish itself among the white people of this territory, is an assertion which we do not think the facts will sustain. The Alabama Christian Advocate of April 7, 1910, contained an editorial in which it was shown that the Northern Church, notwithstanding the lavish manner in which it is given to spending money to promote its work in the South, had in that State in the eleven years from 1899 to 1910 a net gain among the whites of 325. While our Church in the same territory had during the same period a gain of more than 30,000. It also estimated that during the same eleven years the eleven white Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South had a gain of only 9,000, while the Southern Church had in the same field a gain of more than 300,000—an increase about four times as great as the present total white membership of the M. E. Church in the eleven Southern States. We regret that we have not available the statistics showing separately the progress made within the bounds of the Gulf Conference, but we dare say they would differ little from those given above. The truth is the Northern Church finds it difficult to reach the white people of the South, and we find it difficult to reach those of the North. So true is this that men of fraternal spirit in both denominations have not hesitated to express the conviction that it is unwise for either Church to seek to invade the territory of the other. It has been but a short time since Zion's Herald, one of the most ably edited periodicals in American Methodism, strongly advocated this view, as have also some of the leading papers of the Church South.

But Bishop Neely says that the suffix, "North," does not belong to his Church, that the bitter memories of the Civil War are dying out, that "many people have changed or modified their views," and that nearly all of the ministers in the Gulf Conference are the sons or grandsons of Confederate soldiers. Technically, the Bishop is correct as to the name of his denomination, but so far as history and sentiment are concerned it is just as much the Church of the North as ours is of the South. Their membership among the white people is almost wholly in the North and West. They have a mere handful in the States commonly spoken of as Southern—considerably less than 100,000 in the eleven white Conferences before referred to, and these are chiefly in East Tennessee and along the border. The Bishop speaks of "many people having changed or modified their views" in the South. In what way have they changed or modified them? Does he mean that any considerable number of Southern people have repudiated the principles for which their fathers stood either in Church or State? Is membership in the Church which he represents to be construed as having that significance? We are informed that the ministry and laity of the Gulf Conference are as the Bishop has stated, largely composed of Southern people, but this fact is due to causes quite different from that which he has suggested. The explanation of it is that there was a division of the Methodists of this immediate section some years ago upon the holiness question, and that the "second-blessing" wing drifted very largely into the Methodist Episcopal Church. This is the influence which has given Bishop Neely his "sons and grandsons of Confederate soldiers."

The Bishop states that he expects his Church to grow rapidly in the South as a result of the swelling tide of immigration from the North and East. Undoubtedly any growth that it may have will come chiefly from that source; but our observation is that many of the Northern people coming to this section prefer to unite with the Southern Church. We have congregations in Louisiana which are very largely composed of them, some of them in towns where the Methodist Episcopal Church also has an organization. When transplanted to Dixie, people coming from Northern States usually soon come to see the wisdom of the attitude of our Church toward the large negro population of this section, and give it their hearty endorsement.

Bishop Neely calls attention to the fact that his Church has kept control of the negroes, while the Church, South, has set them off as an independent body, and affirms that their way is the better and wiser one. His affirmation to this effect is, however, by no means conclusive. The Government statistics show that the negro has achieved his largest success religiously in the independent bodies. Thus the negroes in the Methodist Episcopal Church number 308,551; and own property valued at $6,104,379; those in the African Methodist Episcopal Church number 494,777, and own property valued at $11,307,489; those in the African Zion Church, number 184,542, and own property to the amount of $4,833,207; those in the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church have 172,996 communicants, and property valued at $3,017,849. For our part, we think it is vastly better for both the white man and the black man that their church organizations should be separate and distinct. And we predict that the time will come when the Methodist Episcopal Church will take this view of the matter, notwithstanding Bishop Neely's hearty commendation of the present arrangement. Already more or less friction exists between the races in the administration of government in that denomination, and it is not a little amusing to see how the white delegates at one of their General Conferences manage to keep their colored brethren out of the episcopacy. Such a condition of things cannot, in our judgment, be long continued. As they become better informed and more self-reliant, the negroes will not be content to remain in an organization which excludes them from its highest honors and privileges.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. L. Nabors has begun his work enthusiastically on the Starkville Circuit. It is his habit to spend himself freely to promote the Master's cause.

Dr. H. G. Henderson, the new pastor at Columbus, Miss., is the author of a valuable pamphlet on "Christian Giving," which has been highly commended by Bishop Fitzgerald, Dr. F. S. Parker, Dr. S. A. Steel, and others.

Rev. G. S. Harmon, the faithful pastor of East End Church, Meridian, has brought us under obligations for a number of subscribers. He serves a choice congregation, and God is honoring and blessing his ministry.

The new Conference year has opened encouragingly at Tupelo, where the Rev. W. L. Duren is the popular pastor. This generous congregation sent filled stockings to all of the children and helpers in the Orphans' Home at Jackson.

We are indebted to Rev. J. T. Lewis for Christmas greetings and seven subscribers. We can always count on Clarkdale and its capable pastor. When he wrote Brother Lewis was planning to attend the Mid-winter Missionary School at Nashville.

Rev. S. M. Thames and family reached their new home at Carrollton, Miss., on Friday, December 16, and were given a warm welcome. Brother Thames was in his pulpit on the 18th inst., morning and evening, and preached to large congregations.

Rev. John P. Lowry, the well known evangelist of Little Rock, Arkansas, desires us to state that he is still giving himself to revival work and is open to engagements. He has held a number of interesting and successful meetings in Mississippi within the past few years.

Rev. W. W. Graves was returned to Homewood at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, where he is doing a notably good work. He evidently is a man who wears well with his people, for this is the beginning of his third year. The Advocate counts Brother Graves as one of its best friends.

In a personal note to the editor, Rev. W. W. Woollard, the presiding elder of the Greenville District, says: "All of our men are at work, and those I have heard from are doing well." Brother Woollard has his charges splendidly manned, and we expect to hear good things of our Delta Methodism throughout the year.

Rev. J. E. Stephenson did much for the circulation of the Advocate in the Jonesboro charge last year. He has our hearty thanks for his faithful work in behalf of our paper. Bishop McCoy saw fit to change him from the Corinth to the Oxford District and station him at Abbeville, where we dare say he will give a good account of himself.

A card from Rev. Eugene Johnson, of the North Mississippi Conference, states that he has reached his new field of labor at Ripley, and is pleased with the outlook. We dare say that the people will be delighted also when they have learned to know Brother Johnson. There is no truer and more dependable man to be found in the itinerant ranks.

We acknowledge the reception of a beautiful card, bringing Christmas greetings from the famous Young Men's Bible Class of the First Methodist Church, of Corinth, Miss. It bears the signature of Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, the accomplished teacher of the class, whose reputation as a Sunday school worker extends far beyond the boundaries of her own State.

Rev. John William Price and Miss Bernice Anderson were married at the residence of the bride's parents in Leake county, Miss., on December 18. Rev. W. J. Dawson officiating. Brother Price is a member of the Mississippi Conference, and is stationed at Wilkinson, in the Port Gibson District. The Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. D. E. Vickers, of Trenton, Miss., is laying his plans to circulate the Advocate more largely among his people. He already has 25 subscribers in his charge, but wants to increase the number to fifty. We appreciate his efforts in behalf of the Conference organ, and hope to make it an efficient co-worker with him in building up the interests of the Church in his community.

Dr. A. F. Smith, the genial and popular pastor of the First Methodist Church, of Jackson, Miss., was in the city last Thursday and honored the Advocate office with a call. It has been only a few months since he was transferred from the Oklahoma Conference, but he has been in his new field long enough to win the admiration and high regard of his parishioners. He is doing a great work in the capital city of Mississippi.

A dispatch from Gnydan, La., to the New Orleans States on the 23d inst. says: "The Rev. A. J. Gearheard, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was badly burned about the face yesterday while attempting to light a fire in the stove at the church. Mr. Gearheard's spectacles were broken, his eyelashes and hair singed and his face blistered. The burn is painful but not dangerous."

In a note to this office dated Dec. 22, 1910, Rev. J. R. Jones says: "The many who love Brother R. B. Downer, an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, will be pained to learn that he is ill at the home of his daughter, in Jackson, Miss. He is a scarred veteran of the cross, and now confined to his bed, is patient, trustful and happy. When we go to prayer, brethren, let this dear father in Israel be remembered."

After a year of substantial service, Rev. R. J. S. Worley was returned to the Winstonville charge, in the Columbus District. He is laying himself out for Methodism in that section, and his influence is telling for good. The Advocate a number of times has been the beneficiary of his zealous efforts, for which we make grateful acknowledgment. We are pleased to have our paper circulate among the people to whom our Brother so acceptably ministers.

Rev. T. B. Clifford is entering upon his third year at Yazoo City, where marked success has attended his labors. The summary of his work for the past twelve months which he submitted at Conference attested his diligence and efficiency. Ever since we have known him he has been a tireless toiler. He puts his whole heart into his efforts to extend the Master's kingdom, and that is what we believe in. If the world is ever saved, zealous men will have to do it.

Rev. J. W. Booth, the new Alziers pastor, has reached the city and taken up his work. He labored at De Ridder for the past two years, doing much to establish Methodism in that town and the surrounding country. Brother Booth is an ex-Mississippian, hailing from the famous county of Carroll in that commonwealth. He is also one of the noble band of young ministers that Millsaps College has sent out to bless the Church and world. We predict success for him in his new charge.

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, the new manager of the Louisiana Orphans' Home, writing from Ruston on the 17th inst. says: "We reached our new work Wednesday. Our Orphanage is a great institution."

We like the work and this busy city." A door to large usefulness has been opened to Brother Lipscomb, and he has an inspiring opportunity to perpetuate his influence in the lives of the little ones entrusted to his care. May God strengthen his arm for the tasks which lie out before him!

One of the strongest men in the Mississippi Conference is the Rev. T. W. Adams, who holds sway in the interesting town of Lumberton. He has a fine record behind him, and his powers are yet undiminished. He stood high in the regard of Bishop Galloway, whose estimate of the gifts and graces of preachers was almost unerring. It would be superfluous to state that Brother Adams made a good report at Hattiesburg. It is his habit to give a good account of himself, no matter where his field.

Few men in the modern Church have been so highly commended by persons of distinction and power of discrimination as the great Methodist layman and missionary leader, Dr. John R. Mott. Of him it has been said by Rt. Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd: "When the history of this generation has been written, Mott is going to stand at the top." By President Northrup, of the University of Minnesota: "I consider John R. Mott the greatest young man in the world to-day. He is a sane, broad-minded, cultured man, and one cannot hear him without being inspired." By President Edwin A. Alderman, of the University of Virginia: "No man in modern American life has touched young men to finer issues of conduct and life than John R. Mott," and by Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court: "Two of the greatest diplomats the country has ever seen are the late John Hay and John R. Mott."

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan has begun his work at Starkville, Miss., in a happy frame of mind. In a letter received on the 20th inst. he thus expresses himself: "A more splendid people it has not been my lot to know and serve. Sympathetic in the hour of affliction, patient with my shortcomings in the pulpit, and loyal to the pastor as the accredited representative of the Church, they have won a place in my affections that will abide through all the years to come. The help rendered this pastor by those noble saints of God, Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. S. Harrison, can never be measured in human terms. With records stretching through more than fifty long and eventful years, they await the Master's summons in the blessedness of perfect peace." A beautiful tribute is this, and we do not doubt that it is well merited. The editor wrought in that field for three years, and counts them among the happiest of his life.

FROM BISHOP MCCOY.

To the Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents, North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: I take pleasure in commending to you Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, who has been employed by the Sunday School Board of your Conference as Sunday School Field Secretary. I know Miss Kilpatrick's capabilities as a worker in this particular field, having been her pastor for three years, during which time she was at the head of a large class of university students in my Sunday school. She is a woman of wonderful gifts and of genuine piety. I feel sure that her visitation amongst the pastoral charges of the North Mississippi Conference will be of tremendous inspirational and instructive values. She is thoroughly informed as to modern methods of Sunday school work and has the true gift of imparting her knowledge. Very truly,

J. H. MCCOY.

Mrs. EUGENIA CATHERINE SMITH (nee Davis) was born in Jasper County, Miss., January 31, 1885, and died at McNeill, Miss., September 20, 1910. Genie, as she was called, was a Christian from childhood. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when a small girl, and was converted at Rose Hill, Miss., under the services of Rev. P. D. Harden. She was happily married to James C. Smith December 20, 1903, and to them was born three children—Otha, Myrtle and little Eugene. Farewell, husband and children! This good wife and mother has gone to rest where "troubles are all o'er and trials come no more." She was a good girl, always obedient to parents when a child, and remained obedient until death. She loved her husband and children as no one but a true wife and mother could. She lived her religion at home. In no way was her nobility of soul more markedly shown than in her home and talking with her husband. She conversed with him several hours after knowing death was at hand, with a strong faith that she was ready to meet her dear Savior in the skies above. She suffered several months with that dreadful disease pellagra, knowing that hands of papa or mamma, husband or doctor could not do anything for her relief. O how sad! But weep no more loved ones, for our loss is heaven's eternal gain. We hope to see her again when it is God's will to call us home. A-SISTER.

On September 27, 1910, at Pine Grove, St. Helena Parish, Louisiana, Mr. ELIAS MONROE POWERS, aged sixty-six years, eight months and thirteen days, died after an illness of 18 months, during which his suffering was very great. But amid the varied pain which came to him, he bore it all with patience and Christian fortitude, and, surrounded by loving, heart-broken members of his family, he breathed his last and went to meet his God. Bereft of a mother at an early age, he had but little Christian training in youth, but in after years, when surrounded by a Christian wife and children, he joined the Methodist Church and ever after lived a consistent member. He did his own thinking—did it honestly, and lived as he thought. In his last years he made a daily study of his Bible, took it for his guide, and showed his love and veneration for it. As a friend, he was unaffected, unselfish and warm-hearted. His wife, who was Sarah Brown, preceded him to that heavenly land eight years ago. He leaves twelve children, one brother and one sister, with a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his death. All was done for him that loving hands could do, but God had sent for him, and calmly, peacefully he went to sleep in the arms of Jesus, to await the resurrection morn. Would we call him back? No; by faith we see him standing on the shores, awaiting the dear ones left behind. In such an hour how unspeakably precious are the glorious promises of the gospel! Dear one, reluctantly we give thee up; yet feel that God knows best. Thy labors and sufferings are over and with Christ in glory thou dost await our coming.

For awhile we must be parted,
And I will try to think it best;
Although so broken-hearted
I'll go to God for rest;
And when, at last, my life is ended,
I'll greet thee on high,
Where broken hearts are mended,
And will never say good-by.
SISTER.

W. A. FORD was born in Marion County, Miss., November 26, 1839, and died at Balltown, near Angie, La., October 20, 1910. He was married three times. First, to Miss Martha H. Warren; second, to Miss Martha A. Ball, and third to Miss Martha E. Ford. His last wife and ten children survive, and five preceded him to the home above. Brother Ford was a tender, loving husband, and a devoted father. He was honest, industrious, and successful in business affairs. In early life he professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church, in which communion he lived till God said it is enough, come up higher. He was quiet and unassuming in his religious life, but his family and intimate friends knew and appreciated his many Christian virtues, and had no doubt as to his readiness when the summons came. He often told his companion that he was ready and willing to go, and for some time before his death he felt that the end was near, although his health seemed to be perfect up to a few minutes before his death, when he was stricken with heart failure. Sister Ford and the children are sad and lonely since husband and father went away, but they expect to meet him in that home where death and partings never come.

L. C. WILSON, Pastor.

JOHN SINGLETON CARSON was born Sept. 25, 1887; died in the home of his sister, Mrs. James Bishop, one mile south of Conehatta, Miss., Oct. 8, 1910. He had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for years. Though a young man, and by nature timid, he was frequently heard in testimony and public prayer. The writer was intimately acquainted with him for nearly two years just before his death, and in all that time never heard a word or thought expressed that would have been out of place in the company of women, or which would have jarred the most sensitive and refined natures of our best Christian men and women. He was regular in his attendance at church, Sunday school and prayer meeting. He was buried from the Methodist Church at Conehatta on Sunday, October 9, the young men of his class acting as pallbearers and the young ladies acting as honorary pallbearers. The Sunday school marched in a body from the hall to the church, following just behind the body of him who had been a brother and helper to them all. After the sermon by his pastor, his body was laid to rest in the cemetery just back of the church, the grave being filled by the male members of his Sunday school class. At the close of the burial service the school in two columns divided and marched on either side of the grave, each member leaving a beautiful floral tribute, literally burying the mound in flowers. One week later, a memorial service was held in the Sunday school, where tears and eloquent words flowed freely from many as Brother John's past was recounted. I have before me as I write more than a score of beautiful tributes of love and sympathy, praise and commendation, sent to the memorial service by his friends (many of them away from home at school), who wanted to add their tribute of love to the many being given at this time. The good father and mother, brothers and sisters of Brother John do not weep alone. His death was not their loss only, but of the entire community. We pray God's richest blessing to rest on each sorrowing friend and loved one. And may we all live so close to our Master that, when the time comes for us to leave this world, our lives will not have been spent in vain, but men will be able to say of us as they do of Brother John: "He was a blessing to me; my life is richer for having known him." Obituaries.

Mrs. ELIZA ARNOLD, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. A. McKey, was born near Centerville, Miss., Nov. 26, 1890, and died February 23, 1910. She was married to Mr. Will E. Arnold in August, 1908. She was taken seriously ill with appendicitis while on a visit to her husband's parents at Valdosta, Ga., and only lived a few days. Her dear mother was called to see her just a little while before she went to sleep. Oh, it is sad, so sad, to have our loved ones taken from us! But weep not, loved ones; our darling is not lost. She has only gone to be with Jesus and her precious little babe, which preceded her to the heavenly home about a year ago. She joined the Methodist Church at Woodville, Miss., in girlhood and lived a Christian life until her death. Eliza was a good girl and was loved by all who knew her. Her dear father was taken from them about three years ago. She leaves behind to mourn her departure a loving mother, a kind husband, two sisters, one brother and a host of relatives. Our loss is her eternal gain. A cousin, NETTIE.

Mrs. S. E. Smith (nee Pulliam) was born Nov. 11, 1838. Soon after her graduation from old Bascomb Seminary at Grenada, Miss., she was happily married to Dr. E. W. Smith, Sept. 3, 1857, and died at her home in Water Valley, Miss., Sept. 23, 1910. Within these dates is encompassed a life whose acts were never brought to the world's gaze by blast of trumpet or sound of drum. She lived in an unostentatious way; the religion she professed—always true to her Church, her family and her God. She did not wait for worldly pleasures to cease their charm before seeking real permanent joy. Even while the bloom of childhood glowed upon her cheek she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Church, and developed a Christian character that embodied both strength and beauty. She was in feeble health for several years, but amid all her sufferings she was never known to murmur at the providence of God. Like a placid streamlet refreshing and beautifying field and forest, her life flowed onward, ever blessing those it touched, and resting like a benediction upon all that came under its influence. We shall ever remember her true friendship, her generous hospitality, and the calm serenity of her faith in every stormy crisis of her life. Truly she walked with God, and, as her pure soul passed death's portal, it seemed only that "she was not, for God took her." May the kind, loving Father comfort her children and all the sorrowing ones. We shall see her loved face again in that city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

"Tis sad to think her voice no more will mingle with our own, But joy to know she's praising God around the great white throne."
MRS. S. M. THAMES.

On Wednesday evening, November 23, 1910, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. P. Harper, Star, Miss., the spirit of Mrs. MARTHA CORLEY left the aged and worn body for the "mansions not made with hands." "Grandma Corley," as she was called by friends and loved ones, lived a long life of usefulness, marked specially by unselfishness. She was spared to pass a number of years beyond the "three score and ten," lacking a few months of being eighty-eight years old when our Father took her home. For the last few years of her life she was literally in her second childhood. With the giving away of physical strength her mind lost its vigor, leaving her as innocent as a child. Her two daughters, cared for her tenderly during these years of physical and mental infirmities. They were by her bedside, ministering to her when her spirit took its homeward flight. Grandmother's life was marked by some of the most beautiful characteristics of our Lord—namely, meekness, service and love for all humanity. She was modest and unassuming in disposition, but her saintly, guileless life touched every one of her descendants. She joined the Methodist Church in early girlhood, and all her life exemplified its teachings. To-day her influence lives in the lives of her children and "children's children," for all are adherents to the Christian faith. As long as she was able she read the "good old Book," and even in her last days, when she was not at herself, she still manifested the Christian virtues. She is survived by three children, fifteen grandchildren and fourteen great grandchildren, all of whom loved and honored her. She was one of the "old landmarks," having spent most of her long life in this (Rankin) county. And some day—'twill not be long—all of us will put out to sea and there meet our Pilot face to face, with those of our loved ones gone on before. In the "home over there" they will be unincumbered by physical infirmities, and among those loved ones I expect to greet my dear grandmother. Her granddaughter, (Mrs.) LESLIE H. PURCELL.

Mrs. IRENE SARGENT FRANCIS was born July 28, 1873, in Itawamba County, Miss., and died Sept. 5, 1910, in Lee County, Miss. She was the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. L. T. Sargent. Brother Sargent has been a local preacher and an honored "supply" in the North Mississippi Conference for many years. The subject of this sketch in her young womanhood was happily married to Prof. M. W. Francis. As a result of this union six children—four girls and two boys—were born, who, with the husband and father, survive her. Well does the writer remember the year when he was a young pastor on his first (the Fulton) circuit, where Brother Sargent with his good family lived; and how they gave courage and strength to a struggling young preacher. Miss Irene was then a lovely young woman, beautiful in face and form. Even more than that, she was beautiful in her life—admired and loved by all who knew her. She was always to be relied upon to meet her obligations to God and the Church. She systematically declined to accept invitations to attend any place of amusement where any form of worldliness was to be indulged in. She was always obedient to and thoughtful of her parents. Being an ideal daughter, it was but natural that she should become an ideal wife and mother. She was, indeed, a helpmeet to her husband. She "looked not upon her own things, but upon the things of another." Her chief pleasure was found in serving others. She was faithful to God and duty to the end. When her physician realized that there was no chance for her recovery as a result of medical skill, suggested that it would be well to look to God for help, her reply was: "I have never known anything else in my life." Having finished the work which was given her to do, she has laid aside the implements with which she labored and has entered into that rest forever, where she shall wait for the homecoming of those whom she loved and those who loved her.

INDISPENSABLE IN THE HOME.

There are lots of things that are indispensable in the home, among them the old medicine chest, especially in those sections of the country where the Doctor is miles away, and it takes hours to get him. Take, for instance, little Willie, who stuck a nail in his foot, and all at once it begins to pain awfully, and looks like blood poison. Then mother runs to the faithful old medicine chest, gets a box of "Gray's Ointment," makes several applications, and Willie is well again. No blood poison and no Doctor's bill. "Gray's Ointment" also cures cuts, bruises, boils, insect bites, burns, sores, frost bites and skin eruptions of every description. Now, isn't it a household necessity? If you want a free sample, send your name and address to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 804 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., or you can get "Gray's Ointment" from any druggist at 25c per box.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 1, 1911.

WHENCE OUR LIFE DERIVES ITS CHARACTER.

(John xv, 1-7; I John iii, 24; v, 12; cf. Ps. v, 1-3.)

More than most people are thoughtful enough to recognize, character is shaped by companionships. Thus a nobleman of God's own making explained the qualities which caused men to marvel at his goodness by the simple remark: "I had a friend." Thus also we are admonished in Holy Writ that "evil communications corrupt good manners." It is certainly true that the persons with whom we keep company, even more than the books we read or the sermons we listen to, have the power to give our lives their permanent direction. It is true also that many persons live a kind of life which never attains to any distinctive character. That is an appallingly sad fact in human experience. And it is easy to note that the characterless individual is in the most cases the companionless individual. Seclusion, isolation, selfishness were never at so low a discount as they are today. Hencein do we find a hint of

The Chief Reason for Keeping the Morning Watch.

The highest form of association is friendship. The highest friendship is friendship with Jesus Christ. This friendship must begin in the same normal way in which every personal friendship begins. There must be a first meeting between the two persons which results in an acquaintance. Then the acquaintance must be improved by frequent association, which develops intimacy. Intimacy yields the subtly sweet experience of companionship. Permanent friendship crowns the oft-indulged companionship. This study on the Morning Watch may be to you a challenge to meet Christ for the first time. It may be just the meditation you have needed to make you thirst for a closer relationship with him, who is full of honesty and kindness.

Where?

Where do lovers keep tryst? Where are plans of benevolent import unfolded? Where are business affairs of mighty significance deliberated? In the secret place. It may be at the end of the lane that the lovers meet, or it may be in the shuttered drawing-room. But when the two are alone together, they are thoughtful of rustling leaf, of folded tapestry. Affairs sacred to the heart will not endure the eye of garish day. And weighty matters of soldiering or commerce must be determined in the seclusion of an appointed conference.

Friendship with Jesus cannot be developed by meeting him only in the crowd. Public worship is a fine and very necessary soul exercise. And a man may be a Christian if he know only the blessedness of this social ministrations. But when the Master would tell anything "in the ear," he will have the advantage of a quiet and direct approach. There are many thousands in the "inner circle" of his friendship to-day where there were at one time only three. The inner circle is formed of those who habitually "enter into the closet and shut the door."

When?

When the mind is least crowded and jostled with commanding cares; when the heart is freest from the pull of the things which easily satisfy for the moment; when the will is in healthful poise and can consciously take its bearings by the Guiding Star of highest destiny before committing itself to a fateful course of action. Now when this "when" is for every man cannot be determined by rule, because occupation shapes habit and interruptions disappoint expectations. For the most part, nevertheless, it may reasonably be urged that the first employment of the early morning should be nothing less than the conscious seeking for the intimacy of his friendship. Consider how nature has exerted herself to freshen the mind and invigorate the body. Nerves are not faded, thought is not confused, and the moral strength of a man is unwearied. It must have been at dawn that the Psalmist first felt the thrill of the consciousness: "Thou restoreth my soul." Consider, too, the quiet of the first hour of the day. The machinery of the "sounding labor-house" of the working world has not yet gathered the momentum that rattles the bolts and makes the building tremble. Discordant voices are absent; shouts of competing laborers are hushed. Surely the time of all times to accustom one's self to his presence is, "In the calm dew and freshness of the morn."

It is very likely also that it will be difficult to find a more convenient time to cultivate this friendship than the first hour of the day will prove to be. Unhampered by engagements, delivered from annoying interruptions, unoppressed by the weight of burdens taken up and impossible to lay down, the soul can freely give itself to the charm and expansive power of this high affection. And if any one is moved to plead that there are not minutes enough in his morning to permit this practice, will he not receive the suggestion that he might rise from his bed fifteen minutes earlier than he has been accustomed to rising? The friendship is worth it.

How?

First, with a definite and large purpose actually to enter into the circle of Christ's friendship. This purpose would give every succeeding conversation with the Master an ever-freshening and enlarging significance. Think how your determination to win a human friendship has brightened and sweetened each repeated interview, discovered to your eager heart subjects of conversation which drew you closer and closer to the region of the intimate, at last yielding to your ardent quest the gift of a devoted personality. "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard from my Father I have made known to you." Can you imagine an interchange of conferences like that suggested here under any other condition than that of regular and constant association?

Such association may be ordered and enriched by the choice of a certain definite plan of contact with the Master's spirit. Not to read his message at random and piecemeal should be the aim. There are too many excellent preparations of portions of his Word for daily devotional study to permit of such an unprofitable practice as that. To follow the assignments in one of these specially arranged works gives an orderly direction to private devotions that makes study and prayer cumulative in their value to the soul. To consider the suggestions written in these volumes by their authors constantly multiplies the windows through which sunbeams of truth shine into the chambers of the heart. To secure the observance of this plan by a number of persons means a natural and effective preparation for group Bible study, which, in turn, will be found to react favorably upon the practice of keeping the Morning Watch.

Character Books.

Next to living with great personalities, and indispensable aids to understanding great personalities when you meet them, are the character books which are so easily available to-day. I mean such books as King's "Laws of Friendship," Peabody's "Jesus Christ and the Christian Character," Gordon's "Quiet Talks on Prayer," Speer's "The Marks of a Man," and Brooks' "The Influence of Jesus." These treasures of devotional

CAMPAIGN FOR GREAT GATHERING IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF LOUISIANA.

With the beginning of the new year the Louisiana Sunday School Association will open a strenuous campaign for ingathering in the Sunday schools. On January 25th, a State-wide tour on Sunday School Evangelism will be opened and will run through February 20th. Rev. John C. Carman, General Secretary of the Colorado Sunday School Association, and the most consecrated and beloved

General Secretary in the International Field, will take the leading part on this tour. Mr. Carman is a Baptist minister and has done wonderful things for the Sunday schools of Colorado through the organized work. The General Secretary of Louisiana, and, perhaps other State workers, will be associated with Mr. Carman on this tour.

Special plans are being made to make the 25th Annual State Convention the greatest convention in the history of the Louisiana Sunday School Association. This convention is to be held at Monroe, La., March 15th, 16th, and 17th, 1911. The strongest corps of speakers that can be had in North America will participate in the program. Watch this paper for program and announcements in details.

DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING, GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

The District Stewards and Preacher's Meeting of the Greenville District will meet in Cleveland, Thursday, at 2 p. m., Jan. 12, and adjourn at noon of the following day. The first matter of the program will be the business of the District Stewards. After this is concluded, we will have such discussions of the work before the pastors and laymen as may be outlined in the full program. It is very important that each charge in the district be represented by its district steward, and in default of this, I hope that the pastor will have some other member of his church to attend the meeting. Of course, we will expect each pastor of the district to be present.

W. W. WOOLLARD, P. E.

FIRST AID TO THE INJURED EYE.

Foreign bodies in the eyes.

These usually consist of cinders, sand, dust, small insects, and sometimes small particles of steel or emery. First Aid treatment—never rub the eye. If this is done the delicate membrane of the eye may be scratched and severe inflammation result. Allow the tears to accumulate in the eyes. This frequently washes out the foreign body. Sometimes blowing the nose will be sufficient to start the particle loose. If the foreign body is on the lower lid, pull lid down and have the patient roll eye up. In this way the foreign body can be easily seen and readily removed by the corner of a handkerchief, camel's hair brush or a small spud made by wrapping a small piece of absorbent cotton around the end of a match. If the foreign body is under the upper eyelid, grasp the lid between the thumb and index finger of the left hand, place a match, tooth-pick or lead pencil over the middle of the upper eyelid and turn the eyelid over. This exposes the inside of the upper lid and the foreign body can be easily brushed off. When pieces of steel or emery become embedded in the eye-ball, never attempt to remove them by a needle or knife, as is sometimes done by unskilled people. Such a procedure might injure the eye badly, so that the sight might be lost. Such cases should always be attended to by a skilful eye-specialist.—National Magazine.

TENTING.

By Mrs. A. J. Coburn.

(Dedicated to the "tent-folders" of the Louisiana Conference.)

At God's command we pitched our tent,

We've had a pleasant stay;
But the pillar of cloud is rising high—
Look! look! it floats away—
We must fold our tent and go.

We know not where we next may rest
To work for another year;
But by faith we'll up and follow on,
With never a thought of fear
As we fold our tent to go.

May he who comes to take our place
Reap many golden sheaves;
Dear Lord, forbid, when our cloud moves out
We'll have naught but withered leaves,
When we fold our tent to go.

We fear our work was not complete—
There's more we might have won—
But we leave it all with thee, dear
Lord,
And say: "Thy will be done"—
Then fold our tent and go.
Farmerville, La.

Lake Arthur, La.:

Dear Advocate: We are glad to say that we were received with a hearty welcome on our return from Conference to serve these people for the fourth year. They treated us by their fine reception just like this was our first year on the work. The first thing they did was to get together, come to the parsonage and give us an old-fashioned pounding, enjoying themselves for the evening, as well as to make the preacher and family feel like they were among friends. The next good thing that happened, Dr. V. A. Miller, the president of the board of stewards, called the board together and raised the pastor's salary $100. Then the good women of the Home Mission Society furnished the parsonage with a good many things that were needed in the dining room and kitchen. We fully believe that this will be one of the best years for Lake Arthur Methodism, because of the faithful board of stewards that the pastor has to back him up and pray for him while he visits and preaches, and not in serving tables. Everything for three years has been in full, and by the help of God and the people, we will try to make this the best. Pray for us.—Lastie N. Hoffpauir, P. C.

A BEAUTIFUL LEAVE TAKING.

Friday, Dec. 9, 1910, will long linger as a red-letter day in the memory of Rev. S. M. Thames and family. Having for several months conducted a weekly Bible study, his people begged for one more lesson before his departure to another charge. At an early hour friends of our own and other churches (notably the Baptists), began to gather, and continued, until the parsonage parlor was taxed to its limit. These friends brought substantial tokens of goodwill in the form of fine fruits and other nice gifts, including varying sums of money. Lastly, to the pastor was presented a paper containing a list of friends with subscriptions toward a handsome overcoat which had been ordered. In tones tremulous from mingled emotions, Mr. Thames voiced the sentiment of his family in thanks for the manifold kindness shown them during the two years of his pastorate here, culminating in the beautiful tributes presented this evening. He then took up the lesson, first, urging a continued study of God's Word, giving reasons why.

The crucifixion was presented in a vivid manner. Christ's voluntary surrender of himself for the world's redemption was emphasized in the talk which followed. Closing, he called on a Baptist friend to lead in prayer.

This prayer touched all hearts, as thanks were rendered to God for what the preacher had done, for the sowing of good seed which will bring forth fruit that must abide. He prayed that his work might not fail, but go on accomplishing results that will last forever. Rising from our knees, we entered into a veritable love feast, where friend vied with friend in expressions of esteem and love and gratitude that God had permitted us to be together even these two short years. A wish was also expressed that, should the time come when Mr. Thames cannot continue actively in the Lord's work, we may make our home among these friends who know, appreciate and love us. May God's richest blessings be showered upon them.

Cause and Effect

On account of its economy, as well as superior baking results, Snowdrift Hogless Lard is universally used by Bakers, Hotels and all who use great quantities of shortening. Snowdrift is the most healthful article known for taking the place of hog-lard. It is composed of highly refined cotton seed oil, and a slight proportion of beef fat. Snowdrift Hogless Lard is sold by all progressive dealers, and imitated by many unprogressive manufacturers. Beware of these impositions, named to sound like it, and put up in packages to look like the ORIGINAL STANDARD SHORTENING—Snowdrift Hogless Lard!

LESSON FOR JANUARY 1, 1911.

THE KINGDOM DIVIDED.

I Kings. xii, 6-16.

Golden Text: Walk with wise men, and thou shalt be wise; but the companion of fools shall smart for it.

Good Government and the Bible. The chief problem of the Bible is the problem of good government. Abraham went out into the unknown West with this promise of Jehovah, "I will make of thee a great nation." Joseph became prince in Egypt, and was able to do his great work as ruler of that rich and powerful country. Moses gave his life for the freeing of his people from the bondage of a cruel monarchy. His name is associated with the Ten Commandments, laws underlying and conditioning all good governments in every land. During the long history of the people of Israel, government was the central issue, and the problem of good government was the pivotal point about which their whole history swung. Our divisions of the history are based on political distinctions, e. g., the united kingdom and the divided kingdom. The kings and the prophets shaped the destinies of the tribes, and the prophets were almost always political in their interest and in their influence. As for the New Testament, we are just beginning to see the transforming character of Jesus' social teaching, and to appreciate what he really meant by the kingdom of God. Especially, we are coming to see that the Old Testament is not made up of dreamy, old-fashioned tales. It is a book for to-day. The greatest and gravest problem before our country at this hour is the problem of good government. We may learn lessons of vast importance from this grand Old Book of ours.

The Old Testament as Modern History. All authentic history is modern history. The ancients are all but our contemporaries. The life of man on this planet is so inconceivably great that the last three or four thousand years make up the history of to-day. The doings of the tribes of Israel concern us intimately. They are near us in time. We can almost touch them and feel the throb of a national life which has not yet grown cold. What a childish notion it is that in the Old Testament we forsake all living thought and penetrate back to a distant and different age! This notion is a bit of provincialism. It is a narrow prejudice which is of a piece with the many superstitions that make a man more isolated than if he lived on an uninhabited island in mid-ocean. There he would have at least the out-reaching prospects of the great sea.

Life in Old Testament Times. The men who hated oppression and fought for their rights and sought to establish justice in the gates are very near to our own times. Of course it needs no argument to prove this. The Bible has always had its true lovers. Its popularity through the centuries shows its power. Its life is real life. It tells of bad men and selfish men. It tells how the common people were trodden upon, and again how they rose up against their cruel oppressors. It tells of patriots who saw visions, and then struggled to achieve their own and their country's freedom. And through it all runs a consciousness of the presence of God. The people of Israel were chosen to bear a revelation of Jehovah. They were his people and he was their God. So the Bible may enlighten us and encourage us. God knows that we need enlightenment and encouragement! In this day and generation its message will help to bring the kingdoms of this world more nearly into harmony with the ideals of the divine kingdom.

A Divided Kingdom. The real cause of the division of the kingdom lay back of Rehoboam. The phrase that we have used is more appropriate than "The Kingdom Divided." The point is that the natural state of things apparently was division. The union of the tribes was only for a short time, and a really close union for a very short time. There is no indication (from the oldest of the records) that during the period of the judges the North and the South were ever united against an enemy. The union under Saul was weak. Fierce rivalry broke out in David's reign. Only the genius of a David could have kept together the warring elements. Solomon tyrannized over the Northern tribes, as he dazzled them all with his splendor. But to the North the splendor of the Southern capital was gall and bitterness. The Northern tribes were watching a chance to rebel. Ahijah's prophecy (in I Kings 11) shows the hostile attitude of the prophets toward the policy and reign of Solomon. Dissimilarity of interest, jealousy between the North and South, the oppression of Solomon—all these prepared the way for the break that occurred on the death of the king.

The King as Servant of His People. It was a beautiful thought that the wise old men gave to the reckless Rehoboam, "If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day * * * then they will be thy servants forever." Here is a conception of kingliness worthy of the New Testament revelation.

A Companion of Fools. A companion of fools and a fool are practically the same individual. A man is indeed known by his companions. Rehoboam followed the counsel of those "that were grown up with him." The old men who had stood before Solomon, his father, could speak their words of wisdom, but they were of no avail. For Rehoboam was a companion of fools.

A Look Into the Future. In the story of this chapter we read two sayings which may astonish us. "It was a thing brought about of Jehovah," and, "This thing is of Me." Of course, this excuses no actor in the strange scene of the lesson. But it shows the over-ruling providence. As we continue our study we shall see that as the result of the separation of the tribes it was forever rendered impossible that Israel should become a world-power; foreign culture ceased to dominate the life of the Hebrews. The religion of Jehovah, as a consequence, was maintained in its strength, and finally the captivity and sufferings of the conquered tribes purified the people, and taught them, through affliction, the universality of their spiritual religion.—Western Christian Advocate.

Costs Little. But Does the Work Quickly. or Money Refunded.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with $\frac{1}{2}$ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep-seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough. This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada, that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equalled.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 256 Main St., El Wayne, Ind.
